'I didn't want to wake up. I was having a much better time asleep. And that's really sad. It was almost like a reverse nightmare like when you wake up from a nightmare, you're so relieved. I woke up in a nightmare.'

'And what is that nightmare, Dariez?'

'Life.'

'Life is a nightmare.'

'Yes.'

We stop. The cosmic moment, I guess. O-oh, is life really a nightmare? We need to spend ten seconds contemplating that.

'I lay in bed.'

I think, and don't think, and then do some more...

'What did you do when you realized you were awake?'

I had not eaten the night previously. There were more things to tell her, things I held back: like the fact that I was hungry in bed this morning.

I went to bed exhausted from homework and knew as I hit the pillow, that I would pay for it in the morning, that I would cross the line where my stomach gets so needy that I can't eat anything; that I would wake up really hungry, I woke up and my stomach was screaming, hollowing itself out under my little chest.

I didn't want to eat. The idea of eating made me hurt more. I could not think of no matter what, not one single solitary food item, that I would be able to handle, except coffee yogurt, and I was sick of coffee yogurt. I didn't want to do anything about it.

Only the pure urge, the one thing that never let me down, got me out of bed fifty minutes later. The fists pushed my stomach against itself and fooled it into thinking it was full. I rolled over on my stomach and balled my fists and held them against my gut like I was praying. I held this position, warm, my brain rotating, the seconds whirring by.

‘I got up when I had to pee.’

‘I see.’

‘That was great.’

‘You like peeing. You’ve mentioned this before.’

‘Yeah. It’s simple.’

‘You like simple- boy to me.’

‘Doesn’t all and sundry?’

‘Some people thrive on complexity, Dariez.’

‘Well, not me. As I was walking over here, I was thinking ... I have this fantasy of being a bike messenger.’

‘Ah.’

Part: 4

‘It would be so simple, and direct, and I would get paid for it.

It would be an Anchor.’

‘What about the school, Dariez? You have school for an Anchor.’

‘School is too all over the place. It spirals out into a million different things.’

‘Your Tentacles.’

I have to hand it to her; Dr. Ross picked up on my lingo pretty quickly. Tentacles are my term - the Tentacles are the evil tasks that invade my life. Like, for example, my American History class last week, which necessitated me writing a paper on the weapons of the Revolutionary War, which necessitated me traveling to the Metropolitan Museum to check out some of the old guns, which necessitated me getting in the subway, which necessitated me being away from my cell phone and e-mail for 45 minutes, which meant I wasn't anywhere close to a 98.7 average (body temperature which meant that I didn't get to respond to a mass mail sent out by my teacher asking who needed extra credit, which meant other kids snapped up the extra credit, which meant I wasn't going to get a 97 in the class, that's what you needed to get,) which also meant I wasn't going to get into a Good College, if I keep going on like this, which meant I wasn't going to have a Good Job, which meant I wasn't going to have health insurance, which meant I'd have to pay tremendous amounts of money for the shrinks and drugs my brain needed, which meant that if I keep going, I wasn't going to have enough money to pay for a Good Lifestyle, which meant I'd feel ashamed, which meant I'd get depressed, and that was the big one because I knew what that did to me: it made it so-o I wouldn't get out of bed, which led to the ultimate thing, homeless-ness. If you can't get out of bed for long enough, people come and take your bed away. Unless I got cancer in the balls and had to have my nuts cut off all was going to be good - no? Yah - no!

There aren't any Tentacles. There's just a stack of tasks that you tackle. You don't have to deal with other people. The opposite of the Tentacles is the Anchors. The Anchors are things that occupy my mind and make me feel good temporarily. Riding my bike is an Anchor. Doing flashcards is an Anchor. Watching people play video games at Kristopher's is an Anchor. The answers are simple and sequential. There aren't any decisions.

'There are a lot of Tentacles,' I admit. 'But I should be able to handle them. The problem is that I'm so lazy.'

'How are you lazy, Dariez?'

'I waste at least an hour every day lying in bed. Then I waste time pacing. I waste time thinking. I waste time being quiet and not saying: like - like - like - anything because - cuz - I'm afraid I'll speech disorder.'

'Do you have a problem with hesitating, and stammering?'

'When I'm depressed, it won't come outright. I'll trail off in midsentence.' 'I see.' She writes something down on her legal pad.

Dariez, this will go on your permanent record.

The party line is that some of the most profound truths about us are things that we stop saying in the middle, but I think they do it to make us feel important. One thing's for sure: no one else in life says to me, 'Wait, Dariez, what were you going to say?'

'I don't-' I shake my head. 'The jumping of the old coaster thing.' 'What? What were you going to say?' This is another trick of shrinks. They never let you stop in mid-thought. If you open your mouth, they want to know exactly what you had the purpose of saying.

'I was going to say that I don't think, yet I don't to that, yet do that all the time, like - like - like the stuttering is like, a real problem. I just think it's one of my symptoms.'

So are the trimmers...

'Like sweating.'

'All Right.'

The sweating is awful. It's not as bad as the not eating, but it's weird, cold- cold freaking sweat, smelling like skin concentrate all over my forehead, having to be wiped off every two minutes.

Folks notice. It's one of the few things people notice.

'You're not stuttering now.'

'This is being paid for. I don't want to waste time.'

Pause. Now we have one of our silent battles; I look at Dr. Ross and she looks at me. It's a contest as to who will crack first. She puts on her poker face; I don't have any extra faces to put on, just the normal Dariez face.

I want to feel my brain slide back into the slot it was meant to be in, rest there the way it did before the fall of last year, back when I was young and witty, and my teachers said I had incredible promise, and I had incredible promise, and I spoke up in class because I was excited and smart about the world. We locked eyes...

I'm waiting for her to say something profound, I always am, even though it'll never happen. I'm waiting for her to say 'Dariez, what you need to do is X' and for the Shift to occur. I want there to be a Shift so bad. I want the Shift so bad. I'm waiting for the phrase that will invoke it. It'll be like a miracle in my life. But is Dr. Ross a miracle worker? No. She's a thin, tan lady from Greece with red lipstick.

She breaks first.

'About your bike riding, you said you wanted to be a messenger.'

'Yes.'

'You already have a bike, correct?'

'Yes.'

'And you ride it a lot?'

'Not that much. Mom won't let me ride it to school. But I ride around Knox on weekends.'

'What does it feel like when you ride your bike, Dariez?'

I pause. '...Geometric.'

'Geometric.'

'Yeah. Like, you have to avoid this truck. Don't get hit in the head by these metal pipes. Make a right. The rules are defined, and you follow them.'

'Like a video game.'

'Sure. I love video games. Even just to watch. Since I was a kid.'

'Which you often refer to as 'back when you were happy.'"

'Right...?' I smooth my shirt out. I get dressed up for these little meetings too. Good khakis and a white dress shirt. We're dressing up for each other. We should really go get some coffee and make a scandal- the Greek therapist and her high school boyfriend. We could be famous. That would get me money. That might make me happy.

'Do you remember some of the things that made you happy?'

'Video games.' I laugh.

‘What’s funny?’

‘I was walking down my block the other day, and behind me was a mother with her kid, and the mother was saying, ‘Now, Joy, I don’t want you to complain about it. You can’t play video games twenty-four hours a day.’ And Joy goes, ‘But I want to!’ And, I turned around and told him, ‘Me too.’’

-And-

‘You want to play video games for twenty-four hours a day?’

‘Or watch. I just want to not be me. Whether it’s sleeping or playing video games or riding my bike or studying. Giving my brain up. That’s what’s important.’

‘You’re very clear about what you want.’

‘Yeah.’

‘What did you want when you were a kid? Back when you were happy? What did you want to be when you grew up?’ Dr. Ross is a good shrink, I think. That isn’t the answer. But it is a damn good question. What did I want to be when I grew up?

‘My mind is like a backed-up toilet spewing shit all over the place!!!’

I remember arriving that night at the amusement park. The park was forgotten for the rest of its time. The Ferris wheel creaked in the slight breeze. The Merry-go-rounds had gathered dust from being not used for many years. I had to be careful not to fall over the discarded stuff lying around everywhere. The light was vanishing, so he used his torch-light to see the obstacles. A rat was running from the beam of light that disturbed its search for something to eat, cow looking at me with the glimmer in their eyes to pick my eyes out.

Finally, I arrived at the theme park. It looked abandoned, and I was at the top of the ride, the roller coaster, where I was going to jump off. I could see all over very far, what was left from the Ferris wheel creaked in its rusty bearings when the wind blew over the area. The horses on the Merry-go-round had a thick layer of dust on their saddles. No kid would ever ride on them again. It got dark early this time of the year, so I got a torchlight from the car. I did not want to step on some of the trash that covered the ground.

‘Maybe not, maybe so.’ What a shrink answer, maybe you don’t see everything you think you do. ‘I can’t take maybe’s light- a little boy.

I have to make money, and make sure your Ok-ay also.’ ‘I don’t think there’s much of a market for that.’ I smile. ‘I wanted to make maps,’ I tell Dr. Ross. ‘Cities.’ ‘Maps of what?’ ‘On the computer?’ ‘No, by hand.’ ‘I see, I see.’

‘We’re going to talk more about money next time. We have to stop now.’

I look at the clock. 7:05. She always gives an extra three minutes.

‘What are you going to do when you leave, Dariez?’

She always asks that. What am I always going to do?

I’m going to go home and freak out. I’m going to sit with my family and try not to talk about myself and what’s wrong. I’m going to try and eat. Then I’m going to try and sleep. I dread it. I can’t eat, and I can’t sleep. I’m not doing well in terms of being a functional human, you know?

Hey, soldier, what’s the matter?

I can’t sleep, and I can’t eat, sir!

How about I pump you full of a lead, soldier, would that get you motivated?

Can’t say, sir! I’d probably still be unable to sleep or eat, just a little bit heavier from the lead.

Get up there and fight, soldier! The enemy is there! The enemy is too strong. I can’t fight them. They’re too smart.

You’re smart too, soldier. Not smart enough.

So-o, you’re just going to give up?

That’s the plan.

‘I’m going to just keep at it,’ I tell Dr. Ross. ‘That’s all I can do. I’ll keep at it and hope it gets better.’

‘Are you taking your medicine?’

‘Yes.’

‘Are you seeing Dr. Barnthy?’

Dr. Jarnerny is the psychopharmacology. He’s the one who prescribes me meds and sends me to pee-pee like Dr. Ross. He’s a trip in his own way, a little fat Santa with rings embedded in his fingers.

‘Yes, later in the week.’

‘You know to do what he says.’

Yes, Doctor. I’ll do what you say. I’ll do what you all say.

‘Here,’ I hand Dr. Ross the check from my mom.

When I was four, this is how things were:

One was cold, one was hot, and the red one was really hot. Two millimeters wasn’t enough. I burned myself on it and Dad, who hadn’t realized (‘It must only get hot in the afternoon,’) encased it in dark gray foam with duct tape, I remember there was a green pipe and a red pipe and a white pipe, gathered near the corner of the hallway just before the bathroom, and as soon as I could walk I investigated them all, walked up to them and put my palm about two millimeters away from each one to test if it was hot or cold.

Our family lived in a crappy apartment in Knox.

But-but-but, duct tape never stopped me and I thought the foam was fun to pick at and chew so, I picked it off and chewed it and then when other kids came over to my house, I dared them to touch the re-exposed pipe; I told them, anyone who came in had to touch it, otherwise they were a pussy, which was a word I learned from Daddy watching TV, which I thought was great because it was a word with two meanings: the cat that girls liked and the thing you called people to make them do stuff. Just like the chicken had two meanings: the bird that walked around and the white stuff you ate.

I didn’t know it was crappy at the time, for the reason that I didn’t have our better apartment to compare it to yet. But there was exposed piping. That’s no good. You don’t want to raise your child in a house with exposed piping.

Some people touched the hot pipe if you called them pussy as well.

Part: 5

I had my own room... but I didn't like to be alone in it; the only room...

I liked to be in was the living room, under the table that held all the brochures.

I made it my little fort; I put a blanket...

Yes, a blanket over me and worked in there...

Yeh- yeah- yepper- with a light that Dad rigged up...

I worked on maps...

I worked on drawings...

Drawing is something that I love...

I loved maps... too...

I knew that we lived in Knox and I had a map of it, a Knox Five or so Boroughs parts - with all the streets laid out.

I knew exactly where we lived, on the corner of 11 Street and 5th Avenue.

Third Avenue was a yellow street because, it was an avenue, big and long and significant.

Fifty-Third Street was a little white street that went across Knox.

The streets went sideways and- and the avenues went up and down; that was all you had to recall. (Dad helped me remember, too, when we went out for pancakes.)

He would ask, 'Do you want them cut in streets and avenues, Dariez?'

And- and- And I'd go- 'Sure!'

And- and... he'd cut the stack of pancakes in a grid, and we'd name each street and avenue as we went along, making sure to get on the Ave. and- and- 5th Street.)

It was so simple... so simple...

If you were really forward-thinking (like- um- ah- I- I was, duh) ... you knew that traffic on the even streets went east (East for Even) and the odd streets went west (West is Odd.)

Then, every bunch of streets, there were fat yellow streets, like the avenues, that went both ways. These were the famous streets: 41th St., 32nd St. The complete list from the bottom up was 11 St., Jender St., Smaith St., 13th St., 25th St., 34th St., 42nd St., 57th St., 72nd St.

(there wasn't any big street in the 60s; they got shafted,) 79th St., 86th St., 99th St., and then you were in Harlem, where Knox effectively ended for little white boys who made forts under encyclopedias and studied maps.

As soon as I saw the Knox map...

I wanted to draw it...

I should be able to draw the place where... um, where...

I - I- I'd myself for one and one only like existed, lived, and serviced.

So-o...

I asked Mom for tracing paper and she got it for me, and I brought it into my fort and I pointed the light right down on the first map of the town - downtown... where, where, ah- where 17th Street was, and the run-of-the-mill market worked.

The streets were crazy down there; they didn't have any kind of streets and avenues; they just had names and they looked like a game of Pick-Up Sticks.

But- but- but- ah- ooo- before, before, be-for-e I- I could even worry about the streets, I had to get the land right. Knox was actually- truly- built on the property.

Sometimes, like sometimes-ssss- when they were digging up the streets you saw it down there- real dirt!

And the land had a certain curve to it at the bottom of the island, like a dinosaur head, bumpy on the right and straight on the left, a swooping majestic bottom.

I held my tracing paper down and tried to trace the line of lower Knox.

I couldn't do it.

I mean, it was ridiculous... outlandish...

My line didn't have whatsoever to do with the real one.

I didn't understand I-I- I was holding the tracing paper steady.

I looked at my small hands, and wonder- I think about everything and nothing at all. 'Stay still,' I told it...

I crumpled up the paper and tried o'er.

The line wasn't right again. It didn't have the swoop...

I crumpled up the paper and tried again, why- why-why- oh never mind- I thought.

This line was even worse than before.

Knox looked square... slanted...

I tried again... frustrated...

Oh boy, now it looked like a dick.

Crumple... shit- shit- fracking sucking a dick shit...

(girl looks up at me, rolling her eyes)

- (I thought he was cute then-)

Now it looked like a turd, another word I picked up from

Dad... who came to the school to see me...

Crumple... I suck... not dick like the drawing but something...

Now it looked like a piece of fruit... yet, dick-ish nonetheless...

It looked like everything- all things... but what it was supposed to look like: Knox.

I couldn't do it... piss-balls...

I didn't realize- realized- then that when you trace stuff, you're supposed to have a tracing table, lighted from below, not a trembling four-year-old hand, and locks to hold the paper straight...

So-o so, so, I just thought I was a letdown to all- and me too.

They always said on TV you could do anything you wanted, but here I was trying to do something, and it wasn't working. I would never be able to do it. I crumpled up the last piece of tracing paper and started sobbing, my head in my hands in my fort. Mom heard me.

Joy why are you here-

I cut...

'Dariez?'

'What? Go away.'

'What's wrong, honey?'

'Don't open the curtain! Don't open it! I have things here.'

'Why are you crying? What's the matter?'

'I can't do it.'

'What's the matter?'

'Nothing!'

'Tell Mommy, come on. I'm going to open the blanket'

'No!'

With her occupied, I ran across the room, streaking tears, wanting to get to the bathroom, to sit down on the toilet with the light off and splash hot water on my face.

But Mom was too quick. She shoved the encyclopedias back and loped across the room, swooping me up in her thin arms with the elbow skin that you could pull down. I beat my palms against her.

I jumped at her face as she pulled the blanket aside, bringing it taut under the encyclopedias. Mom threw her hands up and held the books in place, saving both of us from getting clobbered.

(A week later, she'd have Dad move the encyclopedias.)

'Dariez! We do not hit Mommy!'

'I can't do it I can't do it I can't do it!' I hit her.

'What?' She hugged me tightly, so I had no room to hit.

'What can't you do?'

'I can't draw Knox!'

'Huh?' Mom drew her face up and away from me, looked me in the eyes. 'Is that what you were trying to do down there?'

I nodded, sniffled.

'You were trying to trace Knox with the tracing paper I bought you?'

'I can't do it.'

'Dariez, no one can.' She laughed. 'You can't just trace freehand. It's impossible!'

'Then how do they make the maps?'

Mom paused.

'See? See? Someone can do it!'

'They have the equipment, Dariez. They're grown-ups and they have special tools that they use.'

'Well, I need those tools.'

'Dariez.'

'Let's buy them.'

'Honey.'

‘Do they cost a lot of money?’

‘Honey.’

Mom put me down on the sofa, which turned into a bed for her and Dad at night, and sat next to me. I wasn’t crying anymore. I wasn’t hitting anymore. My brain was all right back then; it didn’t get stuck in ruts. ‘Dariez,’ she sighed, looked at me. ‘I have an idea.

Instead of spending your time trying to trace maps of Knox, why don’t you make your own maps of imaginary places?’

And that was the closest I’ve ever come to an epiphany.

I could make up my own city. I could use my own streets. I could put a river where I wanted. I could put the ocean where I wanted. I could put the bridges where I wanted, and I could put a big highway right across the middle of town...

Like -LIKE- like... Knox should have but, but, didn’t. I could make my own subway system. I could make my own street names. I could have my own grid stretching off to the edges of the map. I smiled and hugged Mom.

She got me some thick paper- white construction paper. Later on, I grew to prefer straight computer paper. I went back under my fort and turned the light on and started on my first map. And I did that for the next five years-whenver I was in class, I didn’t doodle, I drew maps. Hundreds of them. When I finished, I crumpled them; it was making them that was important. I did cities on the ocean, cities with two rivers meeting in the middle, cities with one big river that bent, cities with bridges, crazy interchanges, circles, and boulevards. I made the cities. That made me happy. That was my Anchor. And until I turned nine and turned to video games, that was what I wanted to be when I grew up: a mapmaker.

Part: 6

My family shouldn’t have to put up with me.

They’re good people, solid, happy.

Sometimes when I’m with them I-I-I thinks I’m on television.

We live in an apartment-a much better one than the Knox one, but still not good enough, not something to be proud of-in Knox.

Knox is a big fat blob with its own ugly shape across from Knox; it looks like Jabba the Hutt counting his money.

Its bridges connect to Knox and it's split up by Jenders and creeks-filthy green streaks of water that remind you that it used to be a swamp. There are brownstones-limestone and maroon houses that stand

Like- like fence posts and always have Indian men refurbishing them-and everybody goes crazy for those, pays millions of dollars to live in them. But other than that, it's a pretty status less place. It's a shame we moved out of Knox, where all the real people with power live.

The walk from Dr. Ross's office to our apartment is a short one but loaded with mocking stores. Food stores. The absolute worst part of being depressed is food. A person's relationship with food is one of their most important relationships. I don't think your relationship with your parents is that important. Some people never know their parents. I don't think your relationships with your friends are important. But your relationship with air- that's key. You can't break up with air. You're kind of stuck together. Only slightly less crucial is water. And then food. You can't be dropping food to hang with someone else. You need to strike up an agreement with it.

I never liked eating traditional American things: pork chops, steak, rack of lamb ... I still don't. Never mind vegetables. I used to like the foods that come in abstract shapes: chicken nuggets, Fruit Roll-Ups, hot dogs. I liked junk food. I could demolish a bag of Cheez Doodles; I'd have Doodle- Cheez so far infused into my fingertips, I'd be tasting it on myself for a day. And so, I had a good thing going with food. I thought about it the way everyone else did; when you're hungry, you have some.

Then last fall happened, and I stopped eating.

Now I get mocked by these groceries, pizza places, ice cream stores, delis, Chinese places, bakeries, sushi joints, McDonald's.

They sit out in the street, pushing what I can't enjoy. My stomach shrank or something; it doesn't take in much, and if I force in a certain amount it rejects everything, sends me to the bathroom to vomit in the dark.

If he would just relax, let the rope go, I'd be able to give him all the food he wanted. But he's down there making me dizzy and tired, giving extra tugs as I pass restaurants that smell like fat and grease.

It's like a gnawing, the tug of a rope wrapped around the end of my gullet.

There's a man down there and he wants food, but the only way he knows to ask for it is to tug on the rope, and when he does, it closes up the entrance so-I can't put anything in.

My stomach wants no part of it. Everything is forced. The food wants to stay on the plate, and once it's inside me, it wants to get back on the plate. When I do eat, it's one of two experiences: a battle or a Slaughter. When I'm bad-when the Cycling is going on in my brain-it's a Battle.

Every bite hurts.

People give me strange looks: What's wrong, Dariez, why aren't you eating? But then there are moments when it comes together. The Shift hasn't happened yet- yet- yet- maybe it never will, but sometimes-just enough times to give me hope my brain jars back into where it's supposed to be.

When I feel- one of these: (I call them the Fake Shifts) I should always eat, although I don't; I sometimes stubbornly, foolishly- dumbly- I-I-I try to hold the feeling, and- and get things done while my mind can operate, and neglect to eat, and then...

I'm back where... I started.

But oh, when I slip back into being okay when I'm around food, watch out.

It's all going in. Eggs and hamburgers and fries and ice cream and marmalade and Fruity Pebbles and cookies and broccoli...

And- and- and- even-and noodles and sauce... Screw you; I'm going to eat all of you.

...I play with my food and she is looking at me with a look that, I give the dog when she is taking a shit, in the yard.

I'm Joy, she was over the way...

Torah- a woman- I don't know when my body chemistry is going to line up to let me eat again, so you are all getting in me right now.

All my cells take the food in and they love it and they love my brain for it and I smile, and I am full; I am full and functional and I can do anything, and once...

I eat-this is the amazing part-once I eat, I sleep, I sleep as I should...

I-I-I-

And that feels so-o mmm- good...

I eat it all, and the man is away from his rope.

He's busy down there eating everything- all things- that falls inside, running around like a chicken with its head cut off, the head on the floor, munching on all the food of its own... like - like a hunter who just brought home a kill... or were I form on the side of the road... yet- never-mind...

...And- but then- and- but- and, I wake up and the man is back, my stomach is tight...

...And I don't know what it was that got me to have a Slaughter eating experience...

It's not pot... It's not girls... yet I never really had one of those, just the thoughts of...

It's not my family... yet, yet, yet- their love is strangling me...

I've- I- I- ongoingly like to- to think it must just be interaction- or A-sexual, in which case we're looking for the Shift and we haven't found it yet-yet.

(Back)

'Dariez?'

'Hi, Mom.'

The night is here except for a thin gray at the edge of the sky, and the trees are thick with rain, and the drizzle is pissing on me as I come up to my house...

No sunsets in spring. I lean in and ring the buzzer, streaked bronze from years of use-the most used buzzer in the building.

It growls deeply, amplified by the lobby...

(Lobby... Mailroom- mailbox, more like, just a compartment for mailboxes.)

I throw open one door and then the other. It's warm in the house, and it smells like cooked starch. The dogs greet me. (now)

'Hi, Sarrah...

Hi, Jordan...'

(Back)

They're little dogs...

My sister named them...; she's nine.

Sarrah is a mutt...; not her the dog...

My- my- father says he's a cross between a Chihuahua and a German shepherd... which must've been some wild dog sex... they had, until last year I thought that was the only way girls and boys did that too...

I hope the German shepherd was the man...

Or else the German shepherd girl probably wasn't too satisfied...

Sarrah has a pronounced under-bite; he looks like two dogs where one is eating the other's head from below, but when I take him for a walk, girls love him and talk to me.

Then they realize- thought of- figure out- what I'm young and or messed up, and they move on.

Jarddan, a Tibetan spaniel, looks like a small, brown lion.

He's small and cute but completely crazy.

His breed was devised in Tibet for the purpose of guarding monasteries. When he came into our home, he at once fixated on the house as a monastery, the bathroom as the most sacred monastic cell, and my mom as the Abbess. You can't go near my mother without Jarddan protecting her.

When she's in the bathroom in the morning, Jarddan has to be in there with her, placed upon the counter by the sink as she brushes her teeth.

Jarddan barks at me. Since I started losing it, he started barking at me. It's not something any of us mention.

'Dariez, how was Dr. Ross...?'

Mom comes out of the kitchen. She's still tall and skinny, looking better each year. I know that's weird to think, but what the hell- she's just a woman who happens to be my mom.

It's amazing how she looks statelier and more confident as she gets older.

I've seen pictures of her in college and she didn't look like much. Dad is looking like he made a better decision every year.

'It... was okay.' I hug her. She's taken such good care of me since I got bad; I owe her everything and I love her, and I tell her these days, although every time I say it, it gets a little diluted. I think you run out of I love you.

'Are you still happy with her?'

'Yeah.'

You can't afford to get anyone else, I think, looking at the crack in the wall next to my mom. This crack in our front hallway has been there for three or four years.

Dad paints over it and it just reracks. We've tried putting a mirror on it but it's a strange place to put a mirror- on one side of a hallway- and my sister started calling it the Vampire Mirror to tell if people who came into the house were vampires, and it came down after a few weeks when I came home stoned and stumbled into it.

'Because, if you're not we'll get you someone else.'

Now there's an exposed crack again. It's never going to get fixed.

'You don't need to get anyone else.'

'How's your eating? Are you hungry?'

Yes, I think. I am going to eat the food my mom made me. I'm still in control of my mind and I have medication and I am going to make this happen.

'Yes.'

'Good! To the kitchen!'

I go in, and the place is all set for me. Dad and my sister, Sarah, are sitting at the circular table, knives, and forks in hand, posing for me.

'How do we look?' Dad asks, banging his silverware on the table. 'Do we look hungry?'

My parents are always looking into new ways to fix me. They've tried acupuncture, yoga, cognitive therapy, relaxation tapes, various kinds of forced exercise (until I found my bike,) self-help books, Tae Bo, and feng shui in my room. They've spent a lot of money on me. I'm ashamed.

'Eat! Eat! Eat!' Sarah says. 'We were waiting for you.' 'Is this necessary?' I ask.

'We're just making things homier for you.' Mom brings a baking pan over to the table. It smells hot and juicy. Inside the pan are big orange things cut in half.

'We have squash'-she turns back to the stove-rice, and chicken.' She brings over a pot of white rice with vegetable bits sprinkled over it and a plate of chicken patties. I go for them-a star-shaped one, a dinosaur-shaped one. Sarah grabs at the dinosaur-shaped one at the same time.

'The dinosaurs are mine!'

'Okay.' I let her. She kicks me under the table. 'How're you feeling?' she whispers. 'Not good.'

She nods.

Sarah knows what this means.

It means she'll see me on the couch tonight, tossing and turning and sweating as Mom brings me warm milk. It means she'll see me watching TV, but not really watching, just staring and not laughing, as I don't do my homework.

It means she'll see me sinking and failing. She reacts well to this. She does more schoolwork and has more fun. She doesn't want to end up like me. At least I'm giving someone an example not to follow.

'I'm sorry. They're trying to do a big thing for you.'

'I can tell.'

'So, Dariez, how was school today?' Dad asks. He forks into the squash and looks at me through his glasses. He's short and wears glasses, but as he says, at least he has hair-thick, dark stuff that he passed on to me. He tells me I'm blessed; the genes are good on both sides, and if I think I'm depressed now, imagine if I knew I was going to lose my hair like everyone else! Ha.

'All right,' I say.

'What'd you do?'

'Sat in class and followed instructions.'

We clink at our food. I take my first bite-a carefully constructed forkful of chicken, rice, and squash-and mash it into my mouth. I will eat this; I chew it and feel that it tastes good and rear my tongue back and send it down. I hold it. All right. It is in there.

'What did you do in... let's see... American History?'

'That one wasn't so good. The teacher called on me and I couldn't talk.'

'Oh, Dariez...' Mom is like.

I start constructing another bite.

'What do you mean you couldn't talk?' Dad asks.

'I knew the answer, but... I just...' 'You trailed off,' Mom says.

I nod as I take in the next bite. 'Dariez, you can't keep doing that.'

'Honey-' Mom tells him.

‘When you know the answer to something, you have to speak up for yourself; how can that not be clear?’

‘We know... Your mother and I know and we’re doing everything we can to help you. Right?’
He looks across the table at Mom.

‘Yes.’ ‘Me too,’ Sarah says. ‘I’m doing everything I can, too.’

‘That’s right.’ Mom reaches across to ruffle her hair. ‘You’re doing great.’

‘Yesterday, I could’ve smoked pot, but didn’t,’ I say, looking up, curled over my plate.

‘Dariez!’ Dad snaps.

‘Let’s not talk about this,’ Mom says.

‘KID’S- We had buttons put down over there is no one taking care of her, and she was old...’

Dad takes in a heaping forkful of squash and chews it like a furnace- and said ‘um- hmm.’

‘Don’t jump on him,’ Mom says, they were not happy about it at all.

‘I’m not, I’m being friendly.’ Dad smiles.

‘Dariez, you are blessed with a good mind. You just have to have confidence in it and talk when people call on you. Like you used to do. Back when they had to tell you to stop talking.’

‘But you should know; it’s important. I’m doing experiments with my mind, to see how it got the way it is.’

‘What are you talking about?’

‘Not around your sister,’ Mom says. ‘I want to tell you some news about Jarddan.’ Hearing his name, the dog walks into the kitchen, takes up his position by Mom. ‘I took him to the vet today.’

‘So, you didn’t go to work?’

‘Right.’

‘And that’s why you cooked.’

‘Exactly.’

‘So, you want to know what happened at the vet?’ ‘It’s crazy,’ Sarah says.

‘We took him in for the seizures he’s been having,’ Mom says.

‘And you’ll never believe what the vet said.’

‘What?’

‘They took some blood tests last time, and the results came back I was sitting in the little room with Jarddan; he was being very good. The vet comes in and looks at the papers and says,

‘These numbers are not compatible with life.’”

I’m jealous of her. Can you be jealous of your mom for being able to handle things? I couldn’t take a day off, take a dog to the vet, and cook dinner. That’s like three times too much stuff for me to get done in one day. How am I ever going to have my own house?

I laugh. There’s a bite on my fork in front of me. It shakes.

‘What do you mean?’

‘That’s what I asked him. And it turns out that a dog’s blood sugar level is supposed to be between forty and one hundred. You know what Jarddan’s is?’

‘What?’

‘Nine.’

‘Ruff!’ Jarddan barks.

‘Then’-Mom is laughing now there’s some sort of another number, some enzyme ratio level, that’s supposed to be between ten and thirty, and Jarddan’s is one-eighty!’

‘Good dog,’ Dad says.

‘The vet didn’t know what to make of it. He told me to keep giving him the supplements and the vitamins, but that basically he’s a medical miracle.’

I look over at Jarddan, the Tibetan spaniel. Pushed-in shaggy face, black nose, big dark eyes like mine.

Panting and drooling. Resting on his furry front legs.

'He shouldn't be alive, but he is,' Mom says.

I look at Jarddan more.

Why are you bothering?

You've got an excuse. You've got bad blood.

You must like living; I guess I would if I were you. Going from meal to meal and guarding Mom. It's a life. It doesn't involve tests or homework. You don't have to buy things.

'Dariez?'

You shouldn't be able to be alive and you are. Do you want to trade?

'I... I guess it's cool.'

'It's very cool,' Mom says. 'It's by God's grace that this dog lives.'

Oh, right, God. Forgot about him. He's definitely, according to Mom, going to have a role in me getting better.

But I find God to be an ineffectual shrink. He adopts the 'do nothing' method of therapy. You tell him your problems and he, ah, does nothing.

'I'm done,' Sarah says. She picks up her plate and trots out of the room, calling to Jarddan. He follows.

'I can't eat any more either,' I say.

I've managed five bites. My stomach is churning and closing fast. It's all such inoffensive food; I shouldn't have any problems with it.

I should be able to eat three plates of it. I'm a growing boy; I shouldn't have trouble sleeping; I should be playing sports! I should be making out with girls.

I should be finding what I love about this world. I should be frickin' eating and sleeping and drinking and study and watch TV and be normal.

'Try a little more, Dariez,' Mom says. 'No pressure, but you should eat.'

That's...

-right...

I'm going to eat. I slice off the top of the squash, in streets and avenues, a big chunk, and put it on my fork and get it in my mouth. I'm going to eat you.

I chew it, soft and yielding, easily molded into a shape that fits down my throat. It tastes sweet. Now hold it. It's in my stomach. I'm sweating.

The sweating gets worse around my parents. My stomach has it. My stomach is full of six bites of this meal. I can take six bites. I won't lose it. I won't lose this meal that my mom has made. If a dog can live, I can eat. I hold it. I make a fist. I tense my muscles.

'Are you okay?'

'One second,' I say.

I-lose...

My stomach hitches as I leave the table.

What were you trying to do, soldier?

I was trying to eat, sir!

And what happened?

I got caught thinking about some crap, sir!

What kind of crap?

How I want to live less than my parents' dog.

Are you still concentrated on the enemy, soldier?

I don't think so.

Do you even know who the enemy is?

I think... it's me.

That's right.

I have to concentrate on myself.

Yes. But not right now, because now you're going to the bathroom to throw up! It's tough to fight when you're throwing up!

I stumble into the bathroom, turn off the light, close the door. The horrible thing is that I like this part because when it's over I know I'll be warm; I'll have the warmth in me of a body that has just been through a trauma. I bear down on the toilet in the dark- I-I know just where to go -and my stomach hitches again and slams up at me, and I open up and groan. It comes out, and I hear my mother outside, sniffing, and my dad muttering, probably holding her.

I grip the handle and flush a few times, alternating filling the toilet and flushing it. When I'm done, I'll go to sleep, and I won't do any homework; I'm not up to it tonight.

And I think as I'm down there:

The Shift is coming. The Shift has to become.

Because like- if you keep on living like this you'll die.

Part: 8

That's Joy... She's one of the teens. Did they tell you about the renovations?

Yeah.

How old are you?

14 um - no 15.

She looks stressed out for 15. You need to relax. Get a girlfriend or something, you know.

- I'm working on it.
- M-mm-hmm.

So, what is it you- do here, exactly?

Same thing as you.

Are you a patient?

What were you doing in the emergency room this morning?

ER has the best coffee, son.

They just let you out?

No.

So why am I depressed? That's the million-dollar question, baby, the Tootsie Roll question; not even the owl knows the answer to that one. I don't know either.

All I know is the chronology.

Two years ago, I got into one of the best high schools in Knox: Executive Pre -Professional High School. It's a new school set up to create the leaders of tomorrow; corporate internships are mandatory; the higher-ups of Merrill Lynch come and speak to classes and distribute travel mugs and stuff.

This billionaire philanthropist named Robberts lets- let's set it up in conjunction with the public school system, like a school within a school-all you have to do to get in is passing a test. Then your whole high school is paid for and you have access to 800 of the smartest, most interesting students in the world- not to mention the teachers and visiting dignitaries.

You can come out of Executive Pre-Professional High School and go right to 17th Street, although that's not what you should do; what you should do is come out and go to Harvard and then law school.

That's how you end up being, like, President.

I'll admit it: I kind of want to be President.

So, this test-they named it the Robberts Lutz Philanthropic Exam, in honor of his philanthropies-became fairly important in my life. It became more important than, uh, food, for instance.

I bought the book for it- Robberts Lutz puts out his own line of test prep books for his own test- and started studying three hours a day.

I was in seventh grade, and I got comfortable with my room for the first time I'd come home with my heavy backpack and toss it on the bed and watch it bounce, toward the pillows as I - I sat down in my chair and pulled out my test-prep book.

On my cell phone, I would go to TOOLS: ALARM... and set me up for a two-hour practice exam...

There were five practice exams in the book, and after I did them all, I was thrilled to discover an ad at the back for twelve more Robberts Lutz test prep books...

Joy- I remember- I went to Barnes and Noble; they didn't have all of them in stock- they'd never had anyone ask for all of them, them- so they had to put in an order for me.

But then it was game on. I started taking a practice exam every day.

The questions covered the standard junk that they test you on to determine if you're not an idiot:

Reading comprehension. Ooh. Can you read this selection and tell what kind of tree they're trying to save?

Vocabulary, did you buy a book full of weird words and learn them?

Math- are you able to turn off your mind to the world and fill it with symbols that follow rules?

I made that test my bitch. I mauled the practice exams and slept with the books under my pillow and turned my brain into a fierce machine, a buzz saw that could handle anything. I could feel myself getting smarter, under the light at my desk. I could feel myself filling myself.

Now, I stopped hanging out with a lot of friends when I got into the Executive Pre - Professional mode. I didn't have many friends to begin with- I had the kids who I sat with during lunch, the bare minimum- but once I started carrying flashcards around, they sort of avoided me. I don't know what their problem was; I just wanted to maximize my time. When all of my test-prep books were done,

I got a personal tutor to shore me up for the exam. She told me halfway through the sessions that I didn't need her, but kept my mom's $800. I got a 100 on the test, out of 100.

The day I got those test results, a cold, plaintive, late fall Knox day, was my last good day. I've had good moments scattered since then, times when I thought I was better, but that was the last day I felt triumphant. The letter from Executive Pre-Professional High School came in the mail, and Mom had saved it on the kitchen table for me when I got home from Tae Bo class after school, which was something I intended to keep doing in high school, to have on my extracurricular activity sheet when I applied for college, which would be the next hurdle, the next step.

Me- 'Dariez, guess what's here?'

I threw down my backpack and ran past the Mirror in the living room to the kitchen. There it was: a manila envelope.

The good kind of envelope. If you failed the test, you got a small envelope; if you got in, you got a big one.

'Yeesssss!' I screamed. I tore it open.

I took out the purple-and-gold welcome packet and held it up like the holy grail. I could have used it to start my own religion. I could have made, yah' know, love to it. I kissed it and hugged it until Mom said, 'Dariez, stop that.'

That's very sick...

How about you call your friends?'

She didn't know, because I never told her, that my friends were a bit estranged. They're sort of ancillary anyway, friends. I mean, they're important- everybody knows that; the TV tells you, but they come and go. You lose one friend; you pick up another. All you have to do is talk to people, and this was back when I could talk to anybody. My friends, when I had them, pretty much just ragged on me and took my seat when I left the room anyway.

Why did I need to call them up?

Except for Kristopher, Kristopher was a real friend; I guess I'd call him my best friend. He was one of the oldest guys in my class, born on that cusp where you can be the youngest person in an older class or the oldest in a younger class, and his parents did the right thing and went with the latter.

He was smart and fearless, with a flop of brown curly hair and the sort of glasses, that made girls like him, square black ones. He had freckles and he talked a lot. When we got together, we would start projects: an alarm clock torn apart and distributed over a wall, a stop-motion video of Lego people having sex, a Web site for pictures of toilets.

I had met him by wandering over to the table during lunch with my head buried in flashcards, sitting down, having one of his friends ask me what I was doing there, and having him come by, flush with tacos, to rescue me, ask what I was studying. It turned out that he and I were taking the same exam, but he wasn't studying at all—didn't believe in it.

He introduced me to the table conversation about what Princess Zelda would be like in bed—I said she'd be terrible, because she'd been locked up in dungeons since puberty, but Kristopher said that'd make her super-hot.

Kristopher called me that Friday night.

'Want to come over and watch movies?'

'Sure.' I was done with my practice test for the day.

Kristopher lived in a small apartment in a big building in downtown Knoxville by City Hall. I took the subway in (my mom had to okay it with Kristopher's mom, which was horrifying,) identified myself to Kristopher's paunchy doorman, and took the elevator up to his floor.

Kristopher's mom greeted me and brought me into his ventilated chamber (past his dad, who wrote in a room that resembled a prison cell, occasionally beating his head against his desk, while Kristopher's mom brought him tea) and flopped on his bed, which wasn't yet covered with the sort of stains that would define it in the future. I'm good at flopping on things.

'Hey,' Kristopher was like. 'You want to smoke some pot?'

Oh. So—this was what watching movies meant. A quick recap of what I knew about drugs: my mom told me never to do them; my dad told me not to do them until after the SATs.

Mom trumped Dad, so I vowed to never do them-but what if someone made me? I thought drugs might be something people did to you, like jabbing you with a needle while you were trying to mind your business.

‘What if someone makes me, Mom?’ I had asked her; we were having a drug conversation in a playground.

I was ten. ‘What if they hold a gun to my head and force me to take the drugs?’ ‘That’s not really how it works, honey,’ she answered. ‘People take drugs because they want to. You just have to not want to.’

And now here I was with Kristopher, wanting to. His room smelled like certain areas of Central Park, down by the lake, where white guys with dreadlocks played bongos.

My mom hovered in my head.

‘Nah,’ I was like.

‘No problem.’ He opened a pungent bag and put a chunk of the contents of the bag in a fascinating little device that looked like a cigarette but was made of metal. He lit it up with a butane lighter that made a flame approximately as large as my middle finger. He puffed right up against his wall.

‘Don’t you have to open a window?’

‘Nah, it’s my room; I can do what I want.’

‘Doesn’t your mom care?’

‘She has her hands full with Dad.’

The section of wall he smoked against would get discolored over the next two years. Eventually, like the rest of the room, it would get covered up with posters of rappers with gold teeth.

Kristopher took three or four breaths of his metal cigarette and made the room smell musty and hot, then announced:

‘Let’s motivate, son! What do you want to get?’ ‘Action.’ Duh.

I was in seventh grade.

‘All right! You know what I want?’ Kristopher’s eyes lit up. ‘I want a movie with a cliff.’

‘A mountain-climbing one?’

‘It doesn’t have to be about mountain climbing. Just needs at least one scene where some dudes are fighting, and somebody gets thrown off a cliff.’

‘Did you hear about Paul Stojanovich?’

‘Who’s that?’

‘He’s the producer who invented World’s Scariest Police

Chases and Cops.’ pretty much just ragged on me and took my seat when I left the room anyway. Why did I need to call them up?

Except for Kristopher.

‘He’s the producer who invented World’s Scariest Police Chases and Cops.’

‘No kidding? The host?’

‘No, the producer. The host kicks ass, though.’

Kristopher led the way out of his room and past his father- typing away, wiping sweat, for all intents and purposes a part of the computer- to his front door, where his mom, who had long dirty blond hair and wore overalls, stopped us and gave us cookies and our coats.

‘I love my life,’ Kristopher said. ‘Bye, Mom.’ We entered the elevator with our mouths full of cookies.

‘Okay, so what were you saying? I love World’s Scariest Police Chases.’ Kristopher swallowed. ‘I love it when the guy is like’ Kristopher put on a stern overenunciated brogue- ‘These two-bit bandits thought they could turn a blind eye to the law, but the Broward County Sheriff’s office showed them the light- and it led them straight to jail.’

I cracked up, spitting cookie bits everywhere. ‘I’m good at voices. Do you want to hear Jay Leno blowing the devil? I got it from this comedian Bill Hicks.’

‘You never let me finish about Paul Stojanovich!’ I said.

‘Who?’

The elevator arrived in Kristopher’s lobby. ‘The producer of World’s Scariest Police Chases.’

‘Oh, right.’ Kristopher threw open the glass lobby door. I followed him into the street, tossed up my hood, and bundled myself in it.

‘He was posing with his fiancée, for like a wedding picture? And they were doing it in Oregon, right next to this big cliff. And the photographer was like ‘Move back, move a little to the left.’ And they moved, and he fell off the cliff.’

‘Oh my God!’ Kristopher shook his head. ‘How do you learn this stuff?’ ‘The Internet.’ I smiled.

‘That is too good. What happened to the girl?’

‘She was fine.’

‘She should sue the photographer. Did they sue him?’

‘I don’t know.’

‘They better. I would sue. You know, Dariez’ - Kristopher looked at me steadily, his eyes red but so alive and bright-’ I’m going to be a lawyer.’

‘Oh, yeah?’

‘Yeah. Screw my dad. He doesn’t make any money. He’s miserable. The only reason we even live where we do is that my mom’s brother is a lawyer and they got the apartment way back when. It used to be my uncle’s apartment. Now he does work for the building, so they cut Mom a deal. Everything good I have is due to lawyers.’

‘I think I might want to be one too,’ I said.

‘Why not? You make money!’

‘Yeah.’ I looked up. We were on a bright, cold, gray Knox sidewalk. Everything cost so much money. I looked at the hot dog man, the cheapest thing around- you wouldn’t get away from him without forking over three or four bucks.

‘We should be lawyers together,’ Kristopher said. ‘Pardis and... what’s your last name?’

‘Gilner.’

‘Pardis and Gilner.’

‘Okay.’

I’m awakened by a guy in light blue scrubs taking my blood. That’s an interesting way to wake up. The guy comes into the room with a cart-carts are very popular here-as light creeps through the blinds.

‘I need your blood. For downstairs.’

‘Uh, okay.’

I present my arm. I’m too beating to ask any questions. He takes a little bit of blood expertly through the back of my hand under my middle-finger knuckle-doesn’t leave any kind of mark-and rolls along, leaving Muqtada asleep, or awake and paralyzed by life; it's tough to tell. I want to get more sleep, but once you've been stuck, you're inclined to get up, so I move out of bed and take a shower with the hospital-provided towels and my parent-provided shampoo and the generic soap that I pump out of the wall. The shower is searing and wonderful, but I don't want to stay too long- I have to break my habit of languishing in the bathroom-so I dry off and drop my stuff back at the nurses' station. Smitty isn't there; instead, there's a big guy who introduces himself as Harold and tells me to dump the towels in a hamper that looks just like a garbage can by the dining room, something that I know I've seen Humble and Jim dump apple cores and banana peels into.

'Hey, buddy, you're up!' Armelio calls out, bounding down the hall at me. 'How'd you sleep?'

'Not good. I needed a shot.'

'That's okay, buddy, we all need shots once in a while.'

'Heh.' I crack the day's first smile. Armelio uncorks one of his own.

'It's time to wake everyone up for vitals,' he says, treading down the hall. 'All right, everybody! Vitals!'

Time to take your vitals!'

A caravan of my fellow bleary mental patients- or wait, I think we're called in-patient psychiatric treatment recipients, technically emerge from their compartments, rubbing their eyes and staggering as if they have a job to get to and they just need that first cup of coffee. Surprised by my good fortune, I put myself at the front of the line and become the first to get my blood pressure and pulse taken. 120 / 80. I continue to be the picture of health.

'Dariez?' Harold, the big guy, asks when everyone is done.

We shook hands, maintaining our stride, nearly clotheslining a frilled-up little girl walking in the other direction. Then we turned up Church Street and rented this reality DVD, Life Against Death, which had a lot of cliffs, as well as fires, animal attacks, and skydiving accidents. I sat propped in Kristopher's bed, him smoking pot and me refusing, feeding off him, telling him that I thought I was getting a contact high when really- I was just feeling like I had stepped into a new groove. At cool parts of Life Against Death, we paused and zoomed in: on the hearts of explosions, spinning wheels after truck crashes, and one guy freaking out in a gorilla cage and getting a rock thrown at him. We talked about making our own movie someday. I didn't go to sleep until four, but I was in someone else's house, so I woke up early-at eight with that crazy sleeping- at- someone- else's house energy. I passed Kristopher's father at his computer and grabbed a book off their shelf in the living room-Latin Roots. I studied Latin Roots all morning, for the test.

We kept doing it. It became a regular thing. We never formalized it, never named it... but on Fridays, Kristopher would call and ask me to watch movies. I think he was lonely. Whatever he was, he became the one person I wanted to stay in touch with after junior high. And now, a year later, I was in my kitchen holding my acceptance letter and wondering if he had one too.

'I'll call Kristopher,' I told Mom.

Part: 9

'Yeah?'

'You haven't been filling out your menus.' 'Every day, you're supposed to put down what sort of meals you want. On one of these.'

'What are those?' She holds up what looks like a placemat, with columns of food: Breakfast, Lunch, Dinner. 'You should have gotten this in the welcome packet the nurse gave you.' Ah, the one

I completely ignored. I nod. 'I just... didn't...'

'It's okay, but if you don't mark up your menus, you're going to get a meal we pick for you every time. So, fill one out for lunch and dinner today. For breakfast, you're going to have to have one of the omelets.'

I put my elbows down on the desk and eye the menu choices: hamburger, fish nuggets, French-cut beans, turkey with stuffing, fresh fruit, pudding, oatmeal, orange juice, milk 4oz, milk 8oz, 2% milk, skim milk, tea, coffee, hot chocolate, split pea soup, minestrone soup, fruit salad, cottage cheese, bagel, cream cheese, butter, jelly... highly processed food. I'm not going to have a problem eating this. My eyes swim over the choices.

'Circle what you want,' Harold explains. I start circling.

'If you want two of anything, put two-x by it.' I start putting 2x's.

I'm asking for something that no politician is going to provide, something that probably you only get in preschool. I'm asking for preschool.

I wish the world were like this if I just woke up and marked the food I'd be eating, and it came to me later in the day.

I suppose- and asked- it is like that, except you have to pay for whatever you want to eat, so maybe what I'm asking for is communism, but I think it's actually deeper than communism-I'm asking for simplicity, for purity and ease of choice and no pressure.

'After breakfast, fill one out for tomorrow,' Harold says as I hand in my menu.

Breakfast comes to the dining room and the omelet is like a science experiment: is the lack of cheese explained by the mysterious holes that dot the alleged egg?

'Your first omelet,' Jim says. Today, for a change, I sit with him instead of Humble. Johnny rounds out the table.

'It's really gross.' I pick at it.

'It's like a rite of passage,' Tim says. He speaks slowly and without any accents in his words.

"Everyone must eat the omelet." 'Yeah, you're in now,' Jim says.

'Huh.' Tim exhales.

'How did everybody sleep?'

I try... Night joy- she is in the same room as me...

'I'm anxious, really anxious,' Joy says.

'Why?'

'I've got that interview tomorrow, with the adult home.' 'What's that?'

'Huh.' Joy exhales. 'It's where people like us live.'

‘It’s a place like this, basically, except you have to hold a job,’ Joy explains. ‘You don’t need a pass to leave; you can leave whenever you want, but you have to prove you’re employed and be back by seven o’clock.’

‘Wait, you can leave here with a pass?’

‘Yeah, once you have five days inside, they have to give you a pass if you ask for it.’ ‘I’m going to try and be out in five days.’

‘Huh,’ Joy exhales. ‘Good luck.’

I start in on my orange, which is about two hundred times more edible than the omelet. ‘Why are you nervous about the interview?’ I ask Joy. ‘Anxious, not nervous. It’s different. It’s medical.’

‘Why are you anxious, then? I’m sure you’ll get in.’

‘You can’t be sure of a thing like that. And if I mess it up, I’ve got problems: I’ve been here too long; my coverage isn’t going to last. Once you’re giving the tours, it’s really timed to leave.’ He takes a slow bite of oatmeal. ‘The last place wouldn’t let me in because I’m too much of a picky eater. It’s not like- this place. You can’t pick your food.’

‘So now you know what not to say!’ I point out.

‘Yeah, that’s true.’

‘See, when you mess something up,’ I muse, ‘you learn for the next delight. It’s when people compliment you that you’re in trouble. That means they expect you to keep it up.’

Joy nods. ‘Very, very true.’

‘Huh, yeah,’ Joy says. ‘My mom was always complimenting me, and look how I turned out.’

‘This kid has some promise.’ Joy laughs. ‘He’s on the level.’

‘Huh, yeah, on the level. You play guitar, kid?’

‘No.’

‘Joy here’s a great guitarist,’ Joy says. ‘Really great. He had a deal in the eighties.’

‘Oh yeah?’

‘Sh-hh,’ Joy says. ‘It ain’t nothing.’

Joy continues: ‘He can play better than the guy they bring in here to play for us. But he’s a cool guy, that guy.’

‘Yeah, he’s on the level.’

‘He’s on the level. Is he coming in today for the group?’

‘That’s tomorrow. Today is art.’

‘With Lacey.’

‘Right.’

Joy sips his coffee. ‘If there wasn’t coffee on this earth, I’d be dead.’

I scan the room: everyone’s here but Solomon, the Anorexics (who I’ve now seen peeking out of their rooms like, literally, skeletons in closets,) and Joy.

I wonder where she is. She didn’t show up for vitals. Maybe she’s out on a pass.

I hope she’ll be around tonight for our date. Technically, it’ll be my first date. ‘You know, I’ll tell you why I’m really anxious,’ Joy pipes up, leaning in over his coffee. ‘It’s this stupid shirt.’ He pushes forward his Marvin the Martian WORLD DOMINATOR sweatshirt. ‘How’d I going to... do an interview in this?’

‘Huh.’ Joy exhales. ‘Never under-shaft the power of Marvin.’

‘Sh-hh, man. I’m serious.’ ‘I have shirts,’ I say.

‘What?’ Joy looks up.

‘I have shirts.’

‘I’ll lend you a shirt.’

‘What? You would do that?’

‘Sure. What size are you?’

‘Medium. What are you?’

‘Uh, child’s large.’

‘What is that in normal?’ Joy turns to Joy.

‘I didn’t even know children had sizes,’ Joy says. ‘I think it would fit,’ I stand up. Joy gets up next to me and, although his posture is way different- backward, really-he looks like a decent match.

‘I have a blue-collared shirt that my mom makes me wear to church every week. I can have her bring it.’

‘Today? The interview’s tomorrow.’

‘Yeah. No problem. She’s two blocks away.’

‘You would do that for me?’

‘Sure!’

‘All right,’ Joy says. We shake hands. ‘You’re really on the level. You’re a good person.’ We look into each other’s eyes as we shake. His are still full of death and horror, but in them I see my face reflected, and inside my tiny eyes inside his, I think I see some hope.

‘Good person,’ Joy echoes. Joy sits down. I put my tray back in the cart and Humble comes up behind me.

‘You didn’t sit with me, I’m very hurt,’ he says. ‘I might have to jump you for your lunch money later.’

Joy leads me into the bright hall with his odd gait.

I can't even process them: they're the moteliest collection of people I've ever seen. An old man with a crazy beard (what happened to the shaving?) rocks back and forth; a gigantic black woman rests her chin on a cane; a burned-out-looking guy with long blond hair puts his hand through it; a stocky bald man with slatted eyes scratches his armpit and frowns; an older woman with glasses mimes what appears to be an eagle, talking, before turning and inspecting the back of her chair. The small man I saw in the hall twitches his leg. A girl with a streak of blue in her dark hair slumps over her chair like she's obviously more messed up than the others; a big girl with a wan frown leans back and twiddles her thumbs; a black kid with wire-rim glasses sits perfectly still, and hey there's from downstairs. He's still got his stained shirt on, and he's looking up at the lights. They must have processed him quickly because he's a return visitor.

You can tell who the meeting leader is: a thin woman with short dark hair. Out of a dozen or so people, she's the only one in a suit. Some people aren't even in their clothes, but in dark blue robes, loose and V-necked at the top.

'Hey, man,' Joy says, pulling me down the hall. 'If you're really interested you can just sit in on the meeting.'

'No, I-'

'I'm doing the tour, so I can get out.'

'Heh.'

'Now, smokers are at-wait, you don't smoke, do you?'

'Uh ... I smoke some things-'

'Cigarettes, I'm talking about.'

'No, I don't.'

'Did they ask if you did?'

'No.' 'That's probably because you're underage. How old are you?'

'Fifteen.'

‘Jesus! Okay, well, smokes are after breakfast, after lunch, at three in the afternoon, after dinner, and before lights out. Five times a day.’

‘All right.’

‘Most people smoke. And if you had told them you smoked, they might have given you cigarettes.’ ‘Darn.’ I chuckle.

‘It’s one of the only hospitals left that lets you smoke.’ Joy points behind us. ‘The smoking lounge is in the other hall.’

We come across a third hall, perpendicular to the one we’re in. I see that Six North is shaped like an H: where you enter is at the bottom of the left leg; the nurses’ office is at the junction of the left leg and the centerline; the dining room is at the intersection of the center line and the right leg, and the rooms line the left and right legs.

We’re passing them now, going toward the top right of the H: they’re simple doors with slots outside filled with slips of paper that say who’s living in them and who their doctor is. The patients are listed by their first names; the doctors by their last. I see Betty / Dr. Mahmoud, Peter / Dr. Mulleins, Hannah / Dr. Mahmoud.

‘Where’s my room?’

‘They probably don’t have it set up yet; they’ll have it after lunch for sure. Okay, so here’s the shower-’ He points to the right, to a door with a pink sliding plastic block on it between the words VACANT and OCCUPIED.

‘When you’re inside, you’re supposed to put it to OCCUPIED, but people still don’t pay any attention, and there’s no lock on the door, so I like to keep really close to the door. It’s tough, ‘because the water doesn’t reach.’

‘How do I make it say ‘Occupied’? From inside?’

‘No, here.’ Joy slides the block. It covers up VACANT and only OCCUPIED appears.

‘That’s pretty cool.’ I push it back. It’s a simple system, but I wouldn’t know if Joy hadn’t shown me.

‘Is there a guys’ bathroom and a girls’ bathroom?’ ‘It’s not a bathroom, it’s a shower. You have your own bathroom in your room. But it’s unisex, yeah. There’s a shower in the other hall too ‘we keep walking-’ but I wouldn’t use it. It bothers Solomon.’ ‘Who’s Solomon?’

We come to the end of the hall. The windows have two panes of glass with blinds, somehow, between them.

Outside it’s a cloud-spattered May Knox day. Chairs line the dead end. As we approach, a wilted little girl with blond hair and cuts on her face looks up from a pad of something and scurries into a nearby room.

‘They show movies here sometimes.’ Joy shrugs.

‘Sometimes at the other end by the smoking lounge.’

‘Uh-huh. Who was that?’

‘the real Joy- they moved her in from the teen.’

We turn around.

‘Medications are given out after breakfast, after lunch, and before bed.

We take them over there.’ Joy points to a desk across from the dining room, where Smitty sits, pouring soda. ‘That’s the nurses’ station; the other place is the nurses’ office. All your lockers and stuff are behind the nurses’ station.’

‘They took my cell phone.’

‘Yeah, they do that.’

‘What about e-mail?’

‘What?’ We’re back by the dining room. I slow my pace. Inside, the stocky bald man with squinty eyes who was frowning is speaking slowly and plaintively: ‘... Some people here who treat you like they have no respect for you as a human being, which I take personal offense to, and just because I went to my doctor and told him, ‘I’m not afraid of dying; I’m only afraid of living, and

I want to put a bayonet through my stomach, ‘that doesn’t mean I’m afraid of any of you.’

‘Let’s concentrate on our discussion of things that make us happy, Humble,’ says the psychologist.

‘And I know about psychologists when they’re writing down what you’re saying they’re really writing down how much money they’re going to get when they sell their latest yacht because they’re all yuppies with no respect...’

‘C’mon,’ Joy taps me.

‘Is his name Humble?’

‘Yeah. He’s from Bensonhurst.’ Bensonhurst is a particularly retro section of Knox, an Italian and Jewish neighborhood where a girl can walk down the street and have a car full of guys cruise up to her: Hey baby, you want to ride?

‘Where are you from?’ I ask.

‘Sheepshead Bay.’ That’s another old- times Knox ‘hood.

Russian. All these parts are far out.

‘I’m from here,’ I say.

‘What, this neighborhood? This neighborhood is nice.’ ‘Yeah,

I guess so.’

‘Man, I’d give my one remaining ball to live here, I tell you that. I’m trying to get into a home around here, at the Y. Anyway, there’s the phone.’ He points to our left. There’s a payphone with a yellow receiver. ‘It’s on until ten at night,’ he says. ‘The number to call back is written right on it, and it’s on your sheet too, if you need people to call back. If someone calls for you, don’t worry, someones find you.’ Joy stops a second.

‘That’s it.’

It’s really very simple.

‘What do we do here?’ I ask. ‘They have activities; a guy comes and plays guitar. Lacey comes in with arts and crafts. Other than that, you know, just take phone calls; try and get out, really.’

‘How long do people stay?’

‘Kid like you got money, got a family, you’ll be out in a few days.’

I get the feeling I don’t know how I know the rules of mental ward etiquette; maybe I was born with them; maybe I knew I’d end up here but I get the feeling that one big no-no in this place is asking people how they got here. I look at Joy’s deep-sunk eyes.

It’d be a little like walking up to somebody in prison and going

‘So? So? What’s up, huh? Did-jah kill somebody? Did-ja?’

But I also get the impression that you can volunteer the reasons you got here at any Joy and no one will judge; no one will think you’re too crazy or not crazy enough, and that’s how you make friends. After all, what else is there to talk about? So, I tell Joy: ‘I’m here because I suffer from serious depression.’

‘Me too.’ He nods. ‘Since I was fifteen.’ And his eyes shine with blackness and horror. We shake hands.

‘Hey, Dariez!’ Smitty says from his desk. ‘We got your room ready; you want to meet your roommate?’ Chapter Twenty-One My roommate is Joy.

He looks about like what you’d expect for a guy named Joy: big; straight gray beard; wide, wrinkled dark face; glasses with white plastic rims. He doesn’t have any clothes, apparently, because he’s in a dark blue robe, which smells intensely of body odor. Not that it’s easy to notice any of this stuff at first, because when I go into the room, he’s burrowed into bed.

Smitty flicks on the light. ‘Joy! It’s almost lunch! Wake up.

You have a new roommate!’

The first thing she said is...

‘This young girl looked at me and said they’re all named JOY here, it all just mental illnesses.’

‘Mm?’ He peers out from his sheets. ‘Who is?’ ‘I’m Dariez,’ I say, hands in my pockets.

‘Mm, It is very cold here, Dariez. You did not like it.’

‘Joy, weren’t the men in here to fix the heat?’

‘Yes, they fix yesterday, very cold. Fix today, tonight very cold.’

‘Mm.’

‘Dariez, that’s you over there.’

The bed in the far corner is made up for me if you can call it that. It’s the sparsest bed I’ve ever seen: small and pale yellow with a sheet, a top sheet, and one pillow. No blanket, no stuffed animals, no drawers below, no patterns, no candles, no headboard. This reflects the style of the room, which basically has a window (encased blinds again,) a radiator under paneling, two beds, a table between the two beds with two funny-shaped hospital pitchers of water on top, lights, closet, and a bathroom.

There aren’t any patterns on the wall; only the ceiling has porous tiles that could be fun to look at. I check the closet. Joy has a tired pair of pants on the bottom shelf. The rest of the space is mine. I take off my hoodie and stuff it in there. ‘Okay?’ Smitty asks. ‘Lunch in five minutes.’ He leaves the door open. I sit down on my bed.

‘Please close door, please,’ Joy says. I close it, come back. He looks right through me. ‘Thank you.’ ‘What do we have for lunch?’

I ask.

‘Hm.’

I’m not sure how to respond to that. I asked him a- what question. ‘Ah ... Is the food good?’

‘Mm.’

‘Ah... Where are you from?’

‘Egypt,’ he says in a clipped voice, and it’s the first word I’ve heard him say that he sounds happy with. ‘Where are you from?’

Your family?' 'White. German and Irish and Czech. A little Jewish, we think. But I'm Christian, I guess.'

That reminds me: in this sparse room, is it possible that the Gideons have placed a Bible? They put one in every motel in the world; they should have gotten to this place. I check the drawers, under the pitchers of water: nope. Out of range of the Gideons.

This is serious.

'Mm,' Joy says. 'What you look for? There is nothing.' He keeps staring.

I want to lie down, to get the sleep I couldn't get last night, but something about the way my roommate is lying there makes me want to leave, to walk around. Maybe it'll be good to be with someone like him, someone who seems worse off than me. I never really considered it, but there are people worse off than me, right? I mean, there really are people who are homeless and can't get out of bed and are never going to be able to hold a job and, in Joy's case, have serious problems with temperature, all because their brains are broken. Compared to them I'm... well, I'm a spoiled rich kid.

Which is another something to feel bad about?

So, who's worse off?

I go out into the hall and almost bash headlong into one of the giant metal racks of trays. The rack gives off heat and smells of fresh cooked salty food and is being wheeled along by an attendant in a skullcap.

'Careful!' he yells at me.

Oh, no. Now I have to eat. This will be the first time that they'll see how bad things are with me- I couldn't eat that egg downstairs and can't eat anything now. What if I get stressed and the man pulls his rope in my stomach and I throw up in the dining room? That'll be a fine entrance.

'Lunch!' the little man with the almost harelip calls down the hall. He pops out of the dining room, walks down to the far window and back, and knocks on everyone's door, even if they're awake and right in his face. 'Come on, Candace! Let's go, Bernie! C'mon, Kate! times to eat! Come on, Joy!'

'That's Armelio,' a voice says behind me. I turn; it's Joy in his Martian sweatshirt. 'They call him the President. He runs the whole floor.' 'Hi, who're yah?' Armelio asks as he passes.

'Dariez.' I shake his hand.

'Great to meet you! All right! People! We have a new person here! Excellent, buddy! My new buddy. That's great! Time for lunch! Solomon, come out of your room, don't give any trouble, come and eat! Everybody's gotta eat!'

I move into the dining room with Armelio bellowing and cast myself at a seat next to the bald man, Humble, who is still talking about psychologists and yachts.

'Come this way, we're going to take your vitals,' Smitty says, seating me in the small office. He takes my blood pressure off a rolling cart and my pulse with delicate fingers. He writes down on a sheet in front of him: 120 / 80.

'One-twenty-over-eighty, that's dead normal, isn't it?' I ask.

'Yeah.' Smitty smiles. 'But we prefer to live normal.' He wraps up the blood pressure gauge. 'Stay right here, we'll send a nurse in to talk to you.'

'A nurse? What are you?'

'I'm one of the day directors on the floor.'

'And what is this floor, exactly...?'

'It's a short-term facility for adult psychiatric.'

'So, like, a mental ward?'

'Not an award, a hospital. The nurse will answer any questions.'

He steps out of the office, leaving me with a form: name, address, Social Security number. Then-wait-

I've seen this before! It's the questions from Dr. Jarnerny's office: Feeling that you are unable to cope with daily life. 1) Never, 2) Some days, 3) Nearly every day, 4) All the times.

What the hell, I'm in the hospital; I put 4's down the line there are about twenty prompts- except for the lines about self-mutilation, drinking, and drug use (I am not putting anything about pot, that's just the rule, told to me by Kristopher-you don't ever, ever admit to smoking pot, not to doctors, not to teachers, not to anyone in authority no matter how much you trust them; they can always report you to the FBI Pot-Smoking List.)

As I'm getting done, a squat black nurse with a kind wide smile and tightly braided hair steps in. She introduces herself with a thick West Indian accent. 'Dariez, I am Monica, a nurse on the floor here. I am going to ask you a couple of questions about what you're feeling and find out how to help you.'

'Yeah, uh... 'It's the joy of time to state my case. 'I came in because I was really freaked out, you know, and I checked in downstairs, but I wasn't totally sure where I was going, and now that

I'm here, I don't know if I really-'

'Hold on, honey, let me show you something.' Nurse Monica stands over me, although she's so short that we're almost the same height, and pulls out a photocopy of the form my mom signed downstairs only an hour before.

'You see that there? That signature says that you have been voluntarily admitted to psychiatric care at UMPC Hospital, yes?'

'Yeah...'

'And see? It says that you will be discharged at the discretion of the doctor once he has come up with your discharge plan.'

'I'm not getting out of here until a doctor lets me out!'

'Now, wait.' She sits. 'If you feel that this is not the place for you, after five days you can write a letter-we call it the Five-Day Letter-explaining why you feel that you do not belong here, and we will review that and allow you to leave if you qualify.' She smiles.

'So, I'm here for at least five days?'

'Somebody's people are just here for two. Definitely not more than thirty.'

Ho-boy. Well, not much to say about it. That is my mom's signature. I sit back in my chair. This morning I was a pretty functional teenager. Now I'm a mental patient. But you know, I wasn't that functional. Is that better? No, this is worse. This is a lot- 'Let's talk about how you came to be here,' Monica prompts.

I give her the rap.

'When was the last you were hospitalized?'

'Like, four years ago. I was in a sledding accident.'

'So, you've never been hospitalized for mental difficulties before.'

'Uh, nope.'

'Good... Now I want you to look at this chart. Do you see here?'

There's a little scale of 0-10 on a sheet in front of her. 'This is the chart of physical pain. I want you to tell me, right now, from a scale of zero to ten, are you experiencing any physical pain?'

I look closer at the sheet. Below the zero, it says no pain and below the ten it says unbearable excruciating pain. I have to bite my tongue.

'Zero,' I manage.

'All right, now, here's a very important question' -she leans in did you actually try to do anything to hurt yourself before you came here?'

I sense that this is an important question. It might be the kind of question that determines whether I get a normal room with a TV or a special room with straps.

'No,' I enunciate.

'You didn't take anything? You didn't try for the good sleep?'

'I'm sorry?'

'The good sleep, you know? That's what they call it. When you take many pills and drink alcohol and...' 'Ah, no,' I say. 'Well, that's good,' she says. 'We don't want to lose you. Think of your talents. Think of all the tools you have. From your hands to your feet.'

I do think about them. I think about my hands signing forms and my feet running, flexing up and down, as I sprint to some class I'm late for. I am good at certain things.

'So right- now we are getting ready for lunch,' Monica says.

'Are you a Christian?'

'Uh, yes.'

'Are you vegetarian?'

'No.'

'So, no specific diet restrictions, good. I need you to read these rules.' She drops four sheets of paper in front of me. 'They're about conduct on the floor.' My eye falls on 7...) Patients are expected to remain clean-shaven. Shaving will be supervised by an attendant every day after breakfast.

'I am not sure if you notice, but do you see what that first item is on the list?'

'Uh ... 'No cell phones on the floor?''

'That's right. Do you have one?'

I feel it in my pocket. I don't want to lose it. It's one of the only things that's making me right now. Without my cell phone, who will I be? I won't have any friends because I don't have their numbers memorized. I'll barely have a family since I don't know their cell phone numbers, just their home line. I'll be like an animal. 'Please give it here,' Monica says. 'We will keep it in your locker until your discharge, or you can have visitors take care of it.' I put it on the table.

'Please turn it off.'

I flip it open two new voicemails, who are they? ...And hold END. Bye-bye, little phone.

'Now, this is very important; do you have anything sharp on your person?'

'My keys?'

'Same as the phone. We keep those.'

I plop them in a heap on the table; Monica sweeps them into a tray like an airport security worker.

‘Wonderful-do you have anything else you can think of?’

Monica, I’m down to my wallet and the clothes on my back. I shake my head.

‘Great, now hold on.’ She gets up. ‘We’re going to have Joy give you a tour.’

Monieec nods at me, keeps my charts, leaves me to review the papers, and goes into the hall. She returns a minute later with a gaunt, hollow man with big circles under his eyes and a nose that looks like it’s been broken in about three places.

In contrast to floor policy, scruff lines his chin. He’s older but still has all his hair, a stately gray mop, combed half-heartedly. And he carries himself a little weird, leaning back as if he were on a headrest.

‘Jesus, you’re a kid!’ he says, curling his mouth. He reaches out a hand for me and his hand comes out sort of sideways, thumb crooked up.

‘I’m Joy,’ he says.

‘That is not your name, it’s here’s, yet you can have it too.’

His sweatshirt has Marvin the Martian on it and says, WORLD DOMINATOR.

‘Dariez.’ I stand up.

He nods, and his Adam’s apple, which has some extra gray whiskers on it, moves. ‘You ready for the grand tour?’

Part: 10

Okay, so check it out. We're going to play a different game today.

Okay.

I ask you a question and you ask me a question.

Do we answer them?

It's up to you, but no matter what, you have to finish with a question.

- Here we go. Are you ready?

- Yeah- I said...

Finish with a question.

Are you stupid?

Uh, no... Are you?

There you go. Do you think I'm gross looking?

No. You look awesome.

What's your question?

Why'd you invited me here?

I thought it was nice that- you loaned Bobby your shirt.

Don't you think this is a good way to get to know someone?

Sure...

Have you played this before?

Not in here...

Are you a virgin?

So...

How long have you been here?

Nice transition, Craig.

Twenty-one days.

Who dragged you here?

I checked myself in, I guess.

Kind of, by accident.

The suicide hotline said to come.

Why are you here so long?

They think I might cut myself again.

Why'd you called the suicide hotline?

I guess...

Maybe I didn't really want to kill me.

But I kind of did.

Does that make sense?

So, where do you go?

Executive Pre-Professional.

You?

Delfin...

You're not some sort of school uniform perv, are you?

Do you guys wear uniforms?

I knew it.

Okay, sorry, I'm going to invade your personal space for one second.

Why?

- What are you doing?
- I'm just...
- Ow, you shocked me.
- Make a wish.

- Did to be with you...
- Aww, she rolled her eyes and fell into his arms.

Joy leads me into the bright hall with his odd gait.

‘Everybody’s in the dining room right now, sucking on winners’ and food and crap that just tastes like terr-ed.’

He gestures as we go down the sideways hall, the one that branches off of the one I arrived.

I look left- there’s the dining room.

Its- its painted green, overlooked by a television, its old from like the 50’s why they think this is still good we don’t know, yet they say there more to live on the inside, then malting your brain down with cartoons, and- and like it’s made of wood, yet again the year is 2020, get with the times.

There are full of circular tables... over there wavy... see- see them all there?

Like- like all detached from the hall by, that glass with the square wire mesh in it- and whatnot.

Private, yet over there at the tables have been- awh- pushed apart, and a panoply of people sit in a loose circle.

I can’t even process them: they’re the moteliest collection of young kids I’ve ever seen, all 13- 17.

I see that girl she is Rocks back and forth; I did not get why, and she was not saying anything to anyone.

A gigantic black girl rests her chin on a cane; a burned-out looking boy with long blond hair puts his hand through it; a stocky balding boy with slatted eyes scratches his armpit and frowns; an older girl with glasses mimes what appears to be an eagle, talking, before turning and inspecting the back of her chair.

The small boy I saw in the hall twitches his leg.

A girl with a streak of blue in her dark hair slumps over her chair like she's perceptibly more messed up than the others...

...A big girl with a wan frown leans back and twiddles her thumbs...

A black kid with wire-rim glasses sits perfectly still, and hey there's Jim from downstairs, showing yet another new girl around.

He's still got his stained shirt on, and he's looking up at the lights.

They must have processed him quickly because he's a return visitor.

You can tell whom the meeting leader is and that would-be Jim: a thin girl with now short dark hair, over the fact she cut in a day of going crayon herself - over a boyfriend.

Out of a dozen or so individuals, she's the only one in a suit - why he doesn't even know.

Some kids at UMPC aren't even in their clothes, other in the dress given for they don't have anything good to wear, but in white robes, some girls are in after bath time, like loose and V-necked at the top.

'Hey, boy,' Joy says, pulling me down the hall, you look cute in that thing, and show a little more than what aloud to me up top, showing some butt to yet that is just her, cute and crazy, yet moody.

She whispered I don't be underwire does that turn you on a little boy?

(Galp) he was all sheepish...

'If you're really interested you can just sit in on the meeting... you can sit with me, she holds his hand.'

'um- she shushes him... saying don't be shy...'

'I'm doing the tour, so I can get out... your mine, I already said

I want YOU, little boy!'

'Heh- a- a-okay.' He would not make eye contact with her, and her green eyes.

How old are you- he asked her- 'Fifteen?'

'Jesus! Me too- Okay, well, I see you after breakfast, after lunch, at three in the afternoon, after dinner, and you're my roommate, and before lights out, I am sure to read you a story and tuck you in- I like you.

(She was falling-)

'All right.' He said.

We come across a third hall, perpendicular to the one we're in...saying time to show you my room... hope you love it.

I see that Six North is shaped like an H: where you enter is at the bottom of the left leg...

The nurses' office is at the junction of the left leg, and the centerline; the dining room is at the intersection of the center line, and the right leg and the rooms line the left and right legs.

We're passing them now, going toward the top right of the H: they're simple doors with slots outside filled with slips of paper that say who's living in them and who their doctor is.

The patients are listed by their first names; the doctors by their last. I see Betty-Dr. Mahmoud, Peter Dr. Mullens, and -Dr. Mahjah.

And here too...

'Where's my room?'

'They probably don't have it set up yet; they'll have it after lunch for sure.

Okay, so here's the shower...if you look in there you see your little girlfriend all naked...said Jimi,' He points to the right, to a door with a rosy sliding plastic block on it between the words VACANT and OCCUPIED.

'When you're inside, you're supposed to put it to OCCUPIED, but kids still don't pay any attention, and there's no lock on the door, so-o I like-like to keep really close to the door. It's tough because the water doesn't reach.'

'How do I make it say 'Occupied'? From inside?'

Why you afraid she walks in and sees your little pecker?

Um- he blushes...

'No, here.' Joy slides the block. It covers up VACANT and only OCCUPIED appears.

'That's pretty cool.'

I push it back. It's a simple system, but I wouldn't know if Joy hadn't shown me.

'Is there a boy's bathroom and a girls' bathroom?'

You have one in your room- no sex you're on camera- yet not in there...

You have your own bathroom in your room. it's a shower- it just a crapper and sink- 'It's not much of a bathroom...

But it's unisex, yeah... like the room, she wanted to be with you so-o bad... they said okay... I think you would be good for each other...

There's a shower in the other hall too'-we keep walking- 'but I wouldn't use it. It bothers Solomon.'

'Who's Solomon?'

We come to the end of the hall. The windows have two panes of glass with blinds, somehow, between them.

Outside it's a cloud-spattered May Knox day.

Chairs line the dead end. As we approach, a wilted little girl with blond hair and cuts on her face looks up from a pad of something and scurries into a nearby room. 'They show movies here somebody's.'

Joy shrugs.

'Sometimes- at the other end by the smoking lounge.'

'Uh-huh. Who was that?'

'Joy. They moved her in from the teen.' We turn around.

‘Medications are given out after breakfast, after lunch, and before bed. We take them over there.’ Joy points to a desk across from the dining room, where Paulie sits, pouring soda.

‘That’s the nurses’ station; the other place is the nurses’ office.

All your lockers and stuff are behind the nurses’ station.’

‘They took my cell phone.’

‘Yeah, they do that.’ ‘What about e-mail?’

No.

‘What?’ We’re back by the dining room.

I slow my pace. Inside, the stocky bald boy with squinty eyes who was frowning is speaking slowly and plaintively:

Some kids here who treat you like they have no respect for you as a hobby being, which I take personal offense to, and just for the reasons that, I-I-I- went to my doctor and told him...

‘I’m not afraid of dying...

I’m only afraid of living, and I want to put a bayonet through my belly,’ that doesn’t mean I’m scared of any of you.’

‘Let’s concentrate on our discussion of things that make us happy, Self-effacing- and sweet,’ says the psychologist.

‘And I know about psychologists when they’re writing down what you’re saying they’re really writing down how much money they’re going to get when they sell their latest yacht because they’re all yuppies with no respect...’

‘Come’ on,’ Joy taps me.

‘Is his name Humble?’

‘Yeah. He’s from Bensonhurst.’

Bensonhurst is a particularly retro section of Knox, an Italian and Jewish neighborhood where a girl can walk down the street and have a car full of boy's cruise up to her: Hey baby, you want to ride?

'Where are you from?' I ask.

'Sheepshead Bay.' That's another old- Knox 'hood.

Russian. All these parts are far out.

'I'm from here,' I say.

'What, this neighborhood? This neighborhood is nice.' 'Yeah,

I guess so.'

'Girl, I'd give my one remaining ball to live here, I tell you that. I'm trying to get into a home around here, at the- Y.

Anyway, there's the phone.'

He points to our left.

There's a payphone with a cream receiver.

'It's on until ten at night,' he says.

'The number to call back is written right on it, and it's on your sheet too, if you need kids to call back. If someone calls for you, don't worry, someone will find you.' Joy stops a second.

'That's it.'

It's really very simple.

'What do we do here?' I ask.

'They have activities; a boy comes and plays guitar. Lacey comes in with arts and crafts. Other than that, you know, just take phone calls; try and get out, really.'

'How long do kids stay?'

'Kid like you got money, got a family, you'll be out in a few days.'

I look at Joy's deep-sunk eyes.

I get the feeling I don't know how I know the rules of mental ward etiquette; maybe I was born with them; maybe, I knew I'd end up here but I get the feeling that one big no-no in this place is asking kids how they got here.

It'd be a little like walking up to somebody in prison and going 'So? So? What's up, huh? Did-ja kill somebody?

Did-ja?'

But I also get the impression that you can volunteer the reasons you got here at any time and no one will judge; no one will think you're too crazy or not crazy enough, and that's how you make friends. After all, what else is there to talk about? So, I tell Joy: 'I'm here because I suffer from serious depression.'

'Me too.' He nods. 'Since I was fifteen.' And his eyes shine with blackness and horror. We shake hands.

'Hey, Dariez!' Paullie says from his desk. 'We got your room ready; you want to meet your roommate?' Chapter Twenty-One

My roommate is Joy.

She looks about like what you'd expect for a girl named Glee, yet it is not polite to ask how someone identifies: big; straight gray beard; wide, wrinkled dark face; glasses with white plastic rims.

He doesn't have any clothes, apparently, senses he's in a dark blue robe, which smells intensely of body odor. Not that it's easy to notice any of this stuff at first, because when I go into the room, he's burrowed into bed.

Paullie flicks on the light. 'Joy! It's almost lunch! Wake up.

You have a new roommate!'

'Mm?' He peers out from his sheets. 'Who is?' 'I'm Dariez,' I say, hands in my pockets.

'Mm, It is very cold here, Dariez. You do not like it.'

‘Joy, weren’t the men in here to fix the heat?’

‘Yes, they fix yesterday, very cold. Fix today, tonight very cold.’

‘Mm.’

‘Dariez, that’s you over there.’

The bed in the far corner is made up for me if you can call it that. It’s the sparsest bed I’ve ever seen: small and pale yellow with a sheet, a top sheet, and one pillow.

No blanket, no stuffed animals, no drawers below, no patterns, no candles, no headboard. It’s just you and the girl you’re with... nothing but getting to know someone... something you don’t seem to know how to do, or they don’t want to with you... right?

This reflects the style of the room, which basically has a window (encased blinds again,) a radiator under paneling, two beds, a table between the two beds with two funny-shaped hospital pitchers of water on top, lights, closet, and a bathroom.

There aren’t any patterns on the wall; only the ceiling has porous tiles that could be fun to look at. I check the closet.

Joy has a tired pair of pants on the bottom shelf. The rest of the space is mine. I take off my hoodie and stuff it in there.

‘Okay?’ Paullie asks. ‘Lunch in five minutes.’ He leaves the door open. I sit down on my bed.

‘Please close door, please,’ Joy says. I close it, come back. He looks right through me. ‘Thank you.’ ‘What do we have for lunch?’

I ask.

‘Hm.’

I’m not sure how to respond to that. I asked him a- what question. ‘Ah ... Is the food good?’

‘Mm.’

‘Ah... Where are you from?’

‘Italy,’ he says in a clipped voice, and it’s the first word I’ve heard him say that he sounds happy with. ‘Where are you from?’

Your family?’

‘White. German and Irish and Czech. A little Jewish, we think.

But I’m Christian, I guess.’

That reminds me: in this sparse room, is it possible that the Gideons have placed a Bible?

They put one in every motel in the world; they should have gotten to this place. I check the drawers, under the pitchers of water: nope.

Out of range of the Gideon’s. This is solemn.

‘M-mm,’ Joy says. ‘What you look for? There is nothing.’ He keeps staring.

I want to lay down,

He was laying down with her she was in his arms- it was a cute crush- love...

They all knew... and was teasing the next day... to get the sleep I couldn’t get last night, but something about the way my roommate is lying there makes me want to leave, to walk around.

Maybe it’ll be good to be with somebody like him, someone who seems worse off than me. I never really considered it, but there are kids worse off than me, right?

I mean, there really are kids who are homeless and can’t get out of bed and are never going to be able to hold a job and, in Joy’s case, have serious problems with temperature, all because - their brains are broken. Compared to them I’m... well, I’m a spoiled rich kid. Which is another something to feel bad about? So, who’s worse off?

I go out into the hall and almost bash headlong into one of the giant metal racks of trays.

The rack gives off heat and smells of fresh cooked salty food and is being wheeled along by an attendant in a skullcap.

She jumped onto my bed and was cuddled up to me tightly.

‘Careful!’ He yells at me, saying their looking... yet but this is what you need and what they want- a little boy.

Oh, no...

Now I have to eat...

This will be the first time- that they’ll see how bad things are with me...

I couldn’t eat that egg downstairs and can’t eat anything now.

What if I get stressed and the boy pulls his rope in my stomach, and I throw up in the dining room?

That’ll be a fine entrance.

‘Lunch!’ the little boy with the almost harelip calls down the hall. He pops out of the dining room, walks down to the far window and back, and knocks on everyone’s door, even if they’re awake and right in his face. ‘Come on, Candace! Let’s go, Bernie! C’mon, Kate! times to eat! Come on, Joy!’

‘That’s Armelio,’ a voice says behind me. I turn; it’s Joy in his Martian sweatshirt. ‘They call him the President. He runs the whole floor.’ ‘Hi, who’re ya?’ Armelio asks as he passes.

‘Dariez.’ I shake his hand.

All right! Kids! We have a new person here! ‘Great to meet you!

Excellent, buddy! My new buddy. That’s great! times for lunch!

Solomon, come out of your room, don’t give any trouble, come and eat! Everybody’s got to eat!’

I move into the dining room with Armelin bellowing and cast myself at a seat next to the bald boy, Humble, who is still talking about psychologists and yachts.

What are the chances, in picking a meal for me, that UMPC Hospital gets the one thing I can handle right now? Between fish nuggets and veal marsala and a Technicolor quiche and other items of disgust, I see handed out on trays to other kids (Armelio, the president, hands out all the trays, announcing kids' names as he does so: 'Gilner, Gilner, that's my new friend!')

I get curry-flavored chicken breast: it doesn't have real liquid curry, just a lovely infusion of yellow spices and a plastic knife and fork to cut it up. It also has broccoli...

Like- like... LIKE- the vegetable I-I-I like best, and herbed carrots on the side.

When I open the plastic lid...

...I just grin big, because, I know something has shifted in my stomach- not the Big Shift, but something concrete-and I am going to eat this.

(One week in)

That night she did the same thing with me sleeping with me, and we had slow sex...

But before I get ahead of myself- we need to say why-

(Back)

Anyways...

Besides the chicken and vegetables, the tray has coffee, hot water, a teabag, milk, sugar, salt, pepper, juice, yogurt, and a cookie.

It's as good-looking a meal as I can remember.

I start to slice the chicken. 'Does anyone have extra salt?' Humble, across my table, stretches his neck to the room. 'Here.' I split him off my salt packet. 'I would've hooked you up.'

'See, you didn't speak to me,' Humble says, pouring the salt on his chicken, looking at me through eyes surrounded by thin and purple-hued skin, as if he got punched in both a week ago.

'So-o like- um- yeah- naturally... I assumed you were one of those yuppies.'

'I'm not.' I put the chicken in my mouth.

It tastes okay and good... yet she is all I had my mind on...

‘There’s a lot of yuppies in this place, and you have that look about you, you know -the yuppie look of kids with money?’

‘Yeah.’

‘Kids who don’t care about other kids. Unlike me..., see, I genuinely care about other kids. Does that mean that I somebody’s won’t be inclined to beat the hell out of somebody?’

No, but that’s my environment. I’m like an animal.’

‘We’re all like animals,’ I say. ‘Especially now, when we’re all in a room eating. It reminds me of high school.’

Like in Animal Farm, which I read, all animals are created equal, but some are more equal than others?

Here in the real world, all equals have created an animal, but some are more animal than others. Hold on, let me write that down.’

Humble reaches behind him to the one window in the dining room, which has board games stacked up under it.

He pulls Scrabble off the top of the stack, fishes out a pen from the box, removes the board, flips it over, and writes on the back of it, which is already covered with scribbling - ‘You’re smart, I see that.

We’re all animals, high school is animals, but some of us are more animal than others.

‘Humble!’ Paullie says from the door.

‘Hey, hey, okay!’ He throws his hands up. ‘I didn’t do it!’

‘How boy-y do we have to tell you, no writing on the Scrabble board!’

Do you need a pencil and paper?’ ‘Whatever...’ he says. ‘It’s all in here.’ He points to his head, then turns back to me as if absolutely nothing had interrupted our conversation. ‘Me and you, we might be equals, but I’m more animal.’

‘Uh-huh.’ I clearly picked the right place to sit.

‘I need to be the alpha male in any given situation.

That’s why as soon as I noticed you, I made a few judgments.

I saw that you were very young. Now in the wild, the lion who sees new youngsters from another pride, another breed, he’ll kill and eat those youngsters, so he can breed his own offspring. But here’ -he gestures around as if you need to elucidate what ‘here’ is, as if you don’t just take it for granted once you’re inside’ there, unfortunately, appears to be a distinct lack of women accepting of my breeding potential. So, in your youth, you are not a threat to me.’

‘I see.’ Across the room, he is trying to open his juice with one hand. The other hand stays at his side; I can’t tell if he can’t move it or just doesn’t want to. Paullie comes over and helps him.

‘It’ll come to ya!’ He says.

‘Do you feel that I’m a threat to you?’ Humble asks.

‘No, you seem like a pretty cool boy.’ I munch.

Humble nods. His food, which was sitting on the plate in front of him, very innocent and oblivious, gets upset over the next twenty seconds as he eats half of it. I continue my slow and steady pace.

‘When I was your age-you’re fifteen, right?’

I nod, ‘How’d you know?’

‘I’m good with ages. When I was fifteen, I had this chick who was twenty-eight. I don’t know why, but she loved me. Now, I was doing a lot of pot back then, my whole life was pot...’

It’s weird how your stomach can come back around. As I tune Humble out, I eat not because I want to, not because I have to overcome anything, not to prove myself to anyone, but because it’s there. I eat because that’s what kids do. And somehow when the food is put in front of you by an institution, when there’s a large gray force behind it and you don’t have to thank anyone for it, you have the animal instinct to make it disappear before a rival like Humble comes along and snatches it away. I think as I chew, my problem might be too much thinking.

That’s why you need to join the Army, soldier. I thought I was already in the Army, sir!

You're in the mental army, Gilner, not the U.S. Army. So, I should join?

I don't know: can you handle it?

I don't know.

Well, you seem to know that you like order and discipline.

That's what the Army offers young men like you, Gilner, and that's what you're getting here. But I don't want to be in the Army; I want to be normal.

You've got some considering to do, then, soldier, because normal ain't no job as far as I'm concerned.

'Do you have a girlfriend?' Humble asks.

'What?'

'Do you? Somewhere out there. You got a hot little fifteen-year-old?' He points his food-colored fork at me.

'No!' I smile, thinking of Emmah.

'They got cute ones, though.' Humble runs his hand through hair that is no longer there. He has hairy dark arms with tattoos of jokers, swords, bulldogs, and pirate ships. 'They just keep making the girls cuter and cuter.' 'It's all the hormones,' I say.

'That's right. You're very smart. You got any sugar?'

I hand over a sugar packet. I've finished my chicken and I could eat more, frankly, but I don't know who to ask. Might as well make the tea. I open the teabag, which is labeled 'Sweet Ouch-Nee,' a brand I have never heard of and am not convinced actually exists, and stain my water with a bunch of deep dips. As I'm finishing up, Paullie approaches with the second tray of food, identical to the first.

'You look like you could handle some seconds,' he says.

'Thanks.'

'Eat up.'

I tackle the second chicken. I am a working machine. Part of me works that didn't before.

'The girls, they drink all this milk with cow hormones,' I say between bites, 'and they develop a lot younger.' 'You're telling me!' Humble says. 'The crazy thing is how the girls in my day were a lot better than my father's girls. I wonder what the next generation will be like.'

'Sex robots.'

'Heh heh. Where you from?'

'Around here.'

'This neighborhood? Nice. Must've been a quick ride.

If you came by ambulance. And I'm not assuming and I'm not judging. I'm just being curious.'

He eats two gigantic bites of his food, chews and continues, 'How did you get here?'

He's broken the rule of Six North. But maybe it's not a rule.

Or maybe eating with someone breaks it.

'I checked myself in.'

'You did? Why?'

'I was feeling pretty bad; I wanted to kill myself.'

'Buddy, that's what I told my doctor the other week. I told him, 'Doc, I'm not afraid of dying; I'm only afraid of living, and I want to put this bayonet through my stomach,' and then I stopped taking my blood pressure medication. Because I have high blood pressure on top of everything else, on top of the drugs they have me on here that keep me whacked out of my mind; if I don't eat lots of salt to regulate my blood pressure I'll die, so when I told him I wasn't taking my medication he said 'What, are you crazy? Are you trying to kill yourself?!

And I looked him right in the eyes and said, 'Yes.' And they carted me off here.'

'Huh.'

‘The problem is I’ve been living in my car for the last year. I have nothing; I have the clothes on my back and that’s it. The only thing I have is the car and now the car has been towed and all my stuff is inside. There’s thirty-five hundred dollars’ worth of film equipment in there.’

‘Wow.’

‘So-o, over the next few days I have to call the police station, the tow yard, get myself into an adult home, and talk to my daughter. She’s about your age. The mother I’m completely over but the daughter I love to death. The mother I’d like to love to death.’

‘Heh.’

‘Don’t do me any favors; only laugh if it’s funny.’

‘It is!’

‘Good. Because right now I don’t have you pegged as a yuppie. You’re something else. I’m not sure what you are, but I’m going to find out.’

‘Cool.’

‘I’m going to go get my medication so I can sit through this afternoon with my head completely whacked.’

Humble slides away...

I finish eating the chicken.

When it’s done-clean plate-I feel better than I have about anything I’ve done in maybe a year.

This is all I need to do. Keith was hesitant at the Anxiety Management Center, but he was right-all you need is food, water, and shelter. And here I have all three. What next?

I look across the dining room, and three of the younger kids the big girl, the girl with dark hair and blue streak, and the blond girl with cuts-are all sitting together.

‘C’mere.’ Blue Streak beckons.

It’s been a while since a bunch of girls asked me over to their table. First times, really.

‘Me?’ I point at myself.

‘No, the other new boy,’ Blue Streak says.

I’m not sure what to do with my tray. I get up, then turn back, then turn toward the girls, then swivel-

‘On the cart,’ Blue Streak says. She turns to the big girl. ‘God, he’s so cute.’

Did she just say that? I put my tray on the cart and sit in the vacant seat with the girls.

‘What’s your name?’ Blue Streak asks.

‘Ah, Dariez.’

‘So-o, what’s it like to be the hottest boy in here, Dariez?’ My body hitches and jerks up as if on a pulley system. She’s got it all wrong- she’s the hot one. It’s tough to tell whether her skin or teeth are the perfect white. Her eyes are dark and her lips pouty and open; the blue streak accents the contrast of hair and face, and she smiles at me- that’s definitely smiling. I don’t know how I didn’t notice her hotness before when I looked into the dining room. ‘Jennifer,’ the big girl says. She leans toward me. ‘I’m Becca. Don’t take advantage of Jennifer; she’s a sex addict.’ Jennifer smacks her lips: ‘Shut up!’ She turns back.

‘I’m only here for one more day.’ She slithers forward. ‘You want to spend it with me?’

I think about what Humble would say. He would say Yeah, absolutely, because he’s the alpha male. I try to develop and drop my words, keeping my voice deep and level: ‘Yeah, absolutely.’

‘Good,’ she says, and there’s a heat on my knee and a hand moving up my leg. She leans in. ‘I think you’re really hot.’ The hand encloses my thigh. ‘I have my own private room because I’m so messed up, they won’t let me sleep with anybody else.’

‘You have your own private room because you’re a slut!’ Becca corrects, and Jennifer kicks her.

‘Ow-ah!’

Without warning, the blond girl with the cuts on her face gets up and speed-walks out of the room. I look through the window for her: nothing.

Jennifer says. 'She's no good for you.'

Then, sparking an out-of-body experience that truly makes me question whether I'm dreaming this, or have died and gone to some kind of awesome hell, she flicks her tongue around her lips in a perfect O-oo.

'Forget her, you have me now'

Something flashes out in the hall. The blond girl streaks to the window.

I can't be sure it's her. I mean, it is a her-it has breasts.

And- and- and- I think, yes, I think- I-I- I recognize her small body and wife-beater.

But- But I can't see her face because she presses up to a piece of paper against the glass:

BEWARE OF PENIS-

The sign slides down as if on an elevator. 'What are you looking at?' Jennifer asks, turning back. I eye her body as she swivels; from the waist up, she doesn't look like she has a penis. I keep my peripheral vision on the hall in case the messenger returns. 'Ha!' Becca is like. 'Joy did it to you again.' 'She what?' Jennifer stands. She has a round and totally female shape. Her legs are encased in jeans that have frills around her butt.

'I can't believe her ... hey.' She turns back. 'You are looking at my pants?'

'Yeah,' I gulped. I've lost all alpha maleness. Could I be like a theta male? They have to get lucky some Joy.

Being on top of the sexual food chain is a lot of pressure.

'I made them myself,' she says. 'I'm a fashion designer.'

'Wow, really? That's like a real job.' My mind spins; it's somehow fallen off the sex track into grade-school logic. 'I thought you were my age; how'd you learn how to design clothes-'

'All right,' Paullie strides in. 'Playtime is over. C'mon, Charles.'

'What the hell!' Jennifer jumps a few inches in the air and stomps her feet. Then, the horror of horrors, her voice drops two octaves. 'You boys won't let me have any fun!' It's a bad voice, even for a boy, like a frog croaking. Becca laughs and laughs, doubling over on herself, and all I can do is catch my breath and stare goggle-ly-eyed at Jennifer for signs. It can't be. She's flat, that's all. She has big hands; lots of girls have big hands. She doesn't have Adam's apple -oh, wait, she's wearing a turtleneck.

'C'mon, don't bother Dariez,' Paullie says.

'But he's so cute!'

'He's not cute, he's a hospital patient like you. You're supposed to get out tomorrow; don't jeopardize it. Have you taken your medicine yet?'

'Hormone treatments.' Beth / Charles winks at me.

'Come-mon, enough.'

Becca laughs, sighs. 'Oh, she got you good. I'm getting my meds.'

I look down at the table as they leave. I need some meds. I glance up and see patients lined up at the desk next to the phone, the nurses' station, eagerly passing the joy's of time in their own little ways- President Armelio bopping from foot to foot, Joy- holding the hand that refuses to work-before getting pills in little plastic cups. Beth Charles and Becca eventually appear at the end of the line, chatting and gesticulating, and Beth / Charles blows me a kiss. I don't think I need to be in line behind them right now. Besides, all I take is Zoloft in the morning; if they wanted me on something midday, they would have told me.

When Becca and J / C are gone and I'm still sitting shell-shocked at the table, another sign appears at the window, this one inching up from below as if hoisted by spider threads:

DON'T WORRY. HE / SHE / IT GETS EVERYBODY, WELCOME TO SIX NORTH!

When I go out to find her, she isn't there. I ask the nurse wrapping up her dispensing duties if I need any meds, and she says I'm not scheduled for any. I ask her if I can have some. She asks what I need them for. I tell her, to deal with this crazy place. She says if they had pills for that, they wouldn't need places like this in the first place, would they?

'So, what's it like?' Mom asks, holding a tote bag of toiletries, with Dad and Sarah next to her. We're at the end of the right H leg, me in one chair facing the three of them. Visiting hours are from 12 to 8 on Saturday.

Sarah doesn't let me answer.

'It's like One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest!' she says, excited. She's dressed up in jeans and a fake suede jacket for Six North. 'I mean, all these kids look like... serious crazies!'

'Sh-h,' I tell her. 'Joy's right there.' Joy is behind her at the window, sitting with his arms crossed as usual, out of his shirt and into a clean navy robe.

'Who's Joy?' Mom asks eagerly.

'The boy I came in with downstairs. I think he's schizophrenic.'

'Doesn't that mean he has two personalities?' Sarah asks, turning. 'Like, he's not just playing; she's also Molly or something.'

'No, you'd be surprised, that's a different one,' I raise my eyebrows. 'Joy's just a little... scattered.' Joy sees me looking at him and smiles. 'I tell you, you play those numbers, it'll come to yah!' he chirps.

'I think he's talking about Lotto numbers,' I explain. 'I've been trying to figure it out.'

'Oh my gosh.' My sister covers her face.

'No, Sarah, don't do that, watch,' Mom says. She turns around. 'Thank you very much, Joy.'

'I tell you: it the truth!'

'I like this place,' Mom turns back. 'I think it's full of good kids.'

'I really like it.' Dad leans in. 'When can I join?' But when no one laughs, he leans back, clasps his hands, sighs.

'Is that a transvestite?' Sarah asks. J / C is down the hall, like forty feet away, and I don't know for the life of me how Sarah suspects something out there that I couldn't see at the point-blank range.

'No, now listen-'

'Is it?' Dad squints.

‘Boys!’

Look here, this wall here tells about the story of a girl Named- Haven, look!

‘Transvestite!’ Joy shrieks. He does it at top range-I haven’t heard him that loud before. The entire hall, which admittedly is just me, my family, J / C, and the older professor-type girl with the glasses, stops and stare’s.

‘I tell you once, it’ll come: it comes to ya!’

J / C starts walking toward us. ‘Are we talking about me?’ he asks in his boy's voice.

He waves at me.

‘Hey, Joy.’ He comes right up between me and my sister.

‘Dariez, your name is, right?’ ‘Yeah,’ I mumble.

‘Wow, is this your family?’

‘Yeah.’ I tip my palm at each of them-it’s at the level of the frills on his pants. ‘My dad’ -he juts’ his lip out-’ my mom’ -she nods, all smiles-’ and my sister, Sarah’ -she reaches out a hand.

‘Oh my God, so lovely!’ J / C says. ‘I’m Charles.’ He shakes with everyone. ‘They’re going to take really good care of your son here. He’s a good boy.’

‘How about you; what are you in for?’ Dad asks. I kick him.

Doesn’t he know what not to ask?

He addresses Dad: ‘I have bipolar, sir, and I had an episode, and they brought me here. I’m going back upstate today.

But the doctors are very attentive here, and the turnaround times are great.’ ‘Wonderful,’ Mom says.

‘It’s okay, Dariez!’ J / C touches my shoulder. ‘My gosh, did you just kick your dad? I never even did that.’

I look at them: my safe environment. I frankly wouldn't be surprised to find any of them in Six North. 'Well, I'll leave you, boys, to your afternoon,' J / C says. He walks away - 'Of course' - J / C gestures to us - 'it's a lot better when you have family support. They want to make sure they discharge you into a safe environment. I don't have that.' He shakes his head. 'Dariez, you're very lucky.' slowly.

Joy makes an indecipherable high-pitched whining noise.

'That's applause, isn't it?' Dad asks, throwing a thumb behind him. 'I like that.'

'Those are awesome pants,' Sarah says.

'Okay, so let's get down to business, Dariez,' Mom is like.

'What do you need?'

'I need a phone card. I need you, boys, to take my phone and leave it plugged in so the calls register. I need some clothes, like what you were brought before, Mom. I don't need towels; they have those. Magazines would be good. And a pencil and paper, that would rock.' 'Simple enough. What kind of magazines?'

'Science magazines! He loves those,' Dad says.

'He might not be up for science magazines right now,' Mom answers. 'Do you want anything lighter?' 'Do you want Star?' Sarah asks.

'Sarah, why would I want Star?'

'Because it's awesome.' She reaches into her purse - her first one, black, a recent Mom purchase - and unrolls a glossy pink monstrosity, complete with pictures of the most recent spectacular outing of a celebrity breast in public.

I hold it up for Joy.

'Mm-hmm!' He says. 'I tell you! I tell you! It comes to ya!'

'That's very nice,' says the professor girl with bugged-out eyes, who I somehow didn't realize had migrated right behind me.

‘Oh, excuse me,’ she looks up. ‘I wasn’t listening to your conversation at all.’ She walks to her room.

‘Um...’ Sarah says.

‘I’ll take it,’ I say. I put it under my seat. ‘I think the floor will enjoy it.’

‘Is it just me, or are you starting to develop a sort of allegiance to the tribe?’ Dad asks.

‘Sh-h.’ I smile.

‘Dariez, the next order of business: have you called Dr.

Jarnerny?’

‘No.’

‘Have you called Dr. Ross?’

‘No.’

‘Well, they both need to know where you are, for health insurance reasons and because they’re your doctors and they care about you and this is going to be very important to them.’

‘Their numbers are in my phone.’

‘Well, let’s call them; we picked up your phone from the front,’ Mom reaches into her bag-

‘No!’ Dad grabs her hands. ‘Don’t take out the phone!’

‘Don’t be ridiculous, honey. Dariez’s the one who’s not allowed to have it, not us.’

‘Well, uh, I don’t think we want to be getting our son in trouble. This isn’t the kind of place you want to be getting sent to a time-out.’

I look at him. ‘That’s really not that funny.’

‘What? Oh, sorry,’ he says.

‘No, Dad, seriously. It’s not... I mean, this is serious business.’

‘I’m just trying to lighten the mood, Dariez-’

‘Well, that’s what you’re always trying to do. Let’s just, not do it here.’

Dad nods, looks me dead in the eyes; slowly and regretfully, he banishes all the smiling and joking from his face, and for once he’s just my dad, watching his son who has fallen so low. ‘All right, then.’ We stay quiet.

‘Is that the truth, Joy?’ I ask without looking at him.

‘We’ll handle the phone later,’ Dad sums up.

‘Next order of business?’ Mom asks.

‘How long I’m going to be in here, I think.’

‘How long do you think?’

‘A couple of days. But I haven’t seen the doctor yet. Dr. Mahmoud.’

‘Right, how is he? Is he good?’

‘I don’t know, Mom. You met him for as long as I did. He makes rounds soon, and I’ll get to talk with him.’

‘I think you need to stay here until you’re better, Dariez. You don’t want to come out early and have to come back; that’s how you get ‘in the system.’”

‘Right. I won’t. I think that’s actually a big part of places like this: they make them, so you don’t want to come back.

‘How’s the food?’ Sarah asks.

‘Oh, I almost forgot,’ I look at my family. ‘I’m ... I know I shouldn’t be proud of this; it’s like really sad that this is my big accomplishment of the day... but I ate everything at lunch.’

‘You did?’ Mom stands up, pulls me up and hugs me.

‘Yeah.’ I pull away. ‘It was a chicken. I actually ate two helpings of it.’

‘Girl, that is a big one,’ Dad gets up and shakes my hand.

‘No, it’s not, it’s really simple, everybody does it, but for me, it’s like a stupid triumph-’

‘No,’ Mom says, looking me in the eyes. ‘What’s a triumph is that you woke up this morning and decided to live. That’s a triumph. That’s what you did today.’ I nod at her. Like I say, I’m not a crier.

‘Yeah, cause if you had died ...’ Sarah is like, ‘that would have sucked.’ She rolls her eyes and hugs my leg.

I sit back down. ‘Once the food is in front of you it’s just like, eat. I mean, they’re professionals here; they know how to take kids and put them in a routine that gives them something to do.’

‘That’s right,’ Mom says. ‘So, what are you going to do now?’

‘I think there are activities-’

‘Hey, Dariez, is this your family?’ President Armelio steps on the scene. His half-harelip and hair shock my sister, but his relentless enthusiasm for just-I don’t know-living-would knock the fear out of anybody.

He shakes all the hands and says we’re a beautiful family and I’m a good boy, he can tell.

‘Dariez’s my buddy! Hey, buddy-you want to play cards?’

President Armelio holds up a deck of playing cards like he just fished it out of the sea.

‘Yeah, absolutely!’ I say. I stand up. When were the last times I played cards? Before the test, probably-before high school.

‘All right!’ Armelio says. ‘My kinda boy! Let’s do it. I’ve been looking and looking: nobody here likes to play cards as I do! What do you want to play? Spades? I’ll crush you, buddy; I’ll crush you.’

I look at my parents. ‘We’ll call you,’ Mom says. ‘And hey what about sleeping?’

‘I’m wired right now,’ I say. ‘But I’ll crash. I’m starting to get a headache.’

‘Headache? Buddy, once I crush you in spades, you’re going to have a lot bigger headache!’ Armelio toddles away to the dining room to set up the cards.

‘See ya,’ Sarah says, hugging me.

‘Bye, my sweet girl.’ Dad shakes my hand.

‘I love you,’ Mom says. ‘I’ll call you with the doctors’ phone numbers.’

‘And bring a phone card.’

‘And I’ll bring a phone card. You hang in there, Dariez.’ ‘Yeah, I will.’ And as soon as they’re around the bend, I head into the dining room and learn how to play spades for the rest of the afternoon, which Armelio absolutely does crush me in.

Part: 11

I’m afraid of making phone calls. The phone on Six North is a hubbub of activity, with Joy and the blond burned-out-type, who I learn is named Joy, fielding calls from, I assume, their respective female counterparts. Joy starts off her calls happily and says...

When she answers, she always says ‘Jack’s Pub,’ and then finds whoever the call’s for. ‘Baby’ a lot, but then he gets angry and slams the phone down saying ‘bitch;’ Paullie tells him not to do that; Joy walks away leaning back with a particularly potent aura of not caring.

Five minutes later, another call comes in for him, and he’s back to ‘Baby.’ He doesn’t even answer the phone, though; President Armelio has that job.

Kids on the outside world don’t know what’s happened to me I’m in a sort of stasis right now. Things are under control. But the dam will break. Even if I’m here just through Monday, the rumors will start flying, and the homework will pile up.

In a rare moment when Joy and that girl I call Nevaeh, over I don’t remember her name, leave the phone open, I walk up to it with the phone card that Mom brought me twenty minutes after she left with

Dad and Sarah. I pick up and hear the dial tone, dial the 800 number for the phone card... and then stop. I can’t do it.

I just don’t want to deal with it.

‘Where’s Dariez?’

‘She’s sick.’

‘She is not sick, she got alcohol poisoning because he can’t handle real liquor.’

‘I heard she took someone’s pills and freaked out.’

‘I heard she realized she’s gay and he’s coming to grips with it.’

‘I heard her parents are sending her to a different school.’

‘She couldn’t handle it here, anyway.’

‘She was always such a loser.’

‘She is freaking out in front of her computer.’

‘She can’t move or anything. She’s catatonic.’

‘She woke up and thinks she’s a horse, one day- she crazy.’

(It was said out of the side of her mouth.)

Well, whatever, what’s question three?

There were two messages on my phone when I came in, and now there are probably more, each one necessitating a callback, and the call back possibly necessitating another callback Tentacles - leading me right back to where I was last night. I can’t go there, so I wait. I can wait for five minutes.

But then Joy’s on the line. And then I wait another five minutes. And the messages are piling up. And this isn’t even counting email. What sort of hellish assignments have my teachers e-mailed out?

‘Excuse me, are you using the phone?’ the giant black girl with the cane asks as I stare at it.

‘Yeah, uh.’ I pick up the receiver in my hands. ‘Yes. Yes, I am.’ ‘Okay.’ She smiles, rolling her gums, not showing teeth. I start dialing, enter my PIN, enter my own number.

‘Please enter your password, then press the pound sign.’

I obey.

‘You have-three-new messages. ‘One more than before. Not so bad.

‘First new message: message marked urgent.’ Uh-oh.

‘Hey, Dariez, it’s Emmah, I just, um ... we talked, and you were sounding really bad. I just wanted to make sure you were doing all right, and since you’re not answering -it’s like two A.M., I mean, why would you be answering? -But I’m kinda worried that maybe you went and did something stupid because of me. Don’t. I mean, it’s sweet, but don’t. Okay, that’s it, I’m with Kristopher, he’s being a total dick. Bye.’

‘To erase this message-’

I hit 7.

‘Next message.’

‘Dariez, it’s Kristopher, call me back? Let’s chill-’ I hit 7-7.

‘Next message.’ ‘Hello, Mr. Gilner, this is your science teacher, Mr. Reynolds. I got your phone number from the student directory. We really need to talk about the lack of your labs; I’m missing five of them-’ 7-7.

‘End of messages.’

I put the phone down like it’s a dangerous animal. I pick back up, call home. Can’t stop now.

‘Sarah, can you get the phone numbers of Emmah and Kristopher out of my cell? And look through the recent missed calls for something from Knox; I have to call my science teacher.’ ‘Sure. How are things over there?’

I look to my left. A Hasidic Jewish boy, complete with the white pants, yarmulke, tassels hanging off him, braided hair, and sandals, dashes down the hall toward me. Scraps of red food dot his dark beard, and his eyes are wild and unhinged. He says to me: ‘I’m Solomon.’

‘Um, I’ve heard from you. I’m Dariez, but I’m on the phone.’ I cup the receiver.

‘I would ask you to please keep it down! I’m trying to rest!’ He turns and races away, holding his pants.

‘O-ooh! Solomon introduced himself to you!’ hoots the girl with the cane. ‘That’s big.’ ‘It’s normal,’ I tell my sister.

‘Okay, here.’ She gives me Emmah’s and Kristopher’s and the teacher’s numbers; I write them down on a scrap of paper that Paullie has given me. I should’ve known these before. Emmah’s looks good written down- wholesome and useful. The science teachers look jagged and hateful. I may not be able to call him until tomorrow.

‘Thanks, Sarah-bye.’

I hang up and look toward the lady with the cane.

‘Hey, I’m Dariez,’ I say.

‘Ebony.’ She nods. We shake hands.

‘Ebony, it’s cool if I just make one more call?’

‘Of course.’

I dial the 800 number, enter my PIN, dial Emmah.

‘Hello?’

‘Hey, Emmah, it’s me.’

‘Dariez, where are you?’

It’s funny how kids ask that as soon as they get you on the phone. I think it’s a byproduct of cell phones: kids-girls and moms especially- want to nail you down in physical space. The fact is that you could be anywhere on a cell phone and it shouldn’t be important where you are. But it becomes the first thing kids ask.

‘I’m at a friend’s house. In Knox.’

I wonder, too, how ~Sped~ lies cell phones have contributed to the world.

‘Uh-huh, Dariez. I don’t think so.’

‘What do you mean?’ I wipe the sweat off my brow. The sweat is starting again. This isn’t good. I was sweating down in the ER, but I wasn’t sweating at lunch.

‘You’re not at any friend’s house. You’re probably at some girl’s house.’

I look at Ebony. She smiles and leans forward on her cane.

‘Yeah, totally.’

‘I know you. Last night you had me on the phone; tonight, you’re out hooking up with some girl.’

‘Sure, Emmah-’

‘Seriously, how are you? Thanks for calling back. I was worried.’

‘I know, I got your message.’

‘I don’t want you to freak out over me. I think you just need some time to decompress a little bit, and not think about me and think about someone else. Because like, I know we might be good for each other, but I’m with someone else, you know?’

‘Right... um... I wasn’t freaking out about you last night, actually.’

‘No?’

‘No, I was freaking out about, like, much bigger things. I was having kind of a crisis, and I wanted to reach out to somebody who understood.’

‘But you asked me if we would ever have been able to be together.’

‘Well, I was trying to clear that up because yah’ know ... I wanted to do something stupid.’

She drops her voice: ‘Kill yourself?’

‘Yeah.’

‘You wanted to kill yourself over me?’

‘No!’ I scowl. ‘I was just in a really bad place, and you were part of it, obviously, because you’re a part of my life, just like Kristopher is a part of it and my family is a part of it, but I thought you could clear something up for me before I...’

‘Dariez, I’m so flattered.’

‘No, you have the wrong idea. Don’t be flattered.’

‘How could I not be? I never had a boy want to kill himself for me before. It’s like the most robotic thing.’

‘Emmah, it wasn’t about you.’

‘Are you sure?’

I look down, and the answer is right there in my chest and it’s rebounding. ‘Yes. I have bigger problems than you.’ ‘Ah, okay.’

‘And you shouldn’t assume that everything is always about you.’

‘Whatever. What’s wrong with you?’

‘Nothing. Everything’s a lot better now, actually.’

‘You’re acting like a total dick. Do you want to come out tonight?’

‘I can’t.’

‘Did Kristopher call you? We’re having a big party at his house.’

‘Right. I’m probably not going to be partying for... like ... a while. Like ever, maybe.’

‘Is everything okay now?’

‘Yeah, I’m just... I’m figuring some things out.’

‘At your friend’s house.’

‘Correct.’

‘Are you like- in a crack den or something?’

‘No!’ I yell, and just then-President Armelio walks up to me:

‘Hey, buddy, you want to play spades? I’ll crush you.’

‘Not now, Armelio.’

‘Who’s that?’ Emmah asks.

‘Leave him alone, he’s talking with his girlfriend.’ Ebony taps Armelio with her cane.

‘She’s not my girlfriend,’ I whisper to her.

‘Who’s that?’

‘My friend Armelio.’

‘No, the girl.’

‘My friend Ebony.’

‘Where are you, Dariez?’

‘I gotta go.’

‘All right...’ Emmah trails her voice off. ‘I’m glad you’re doing... uh... better.’ ‘I’m doing a lot better,’ I say.

She’s done, I think. She’s done, and you’re done with her.

‘See ya, Dariez.’ I hang up.

‘I think that’s over,’ I say to myself.

Then I decide to announce it to the hall: ‘I think that that’s over!’ Ebony stomps her cane, and Armelio claps.

Something deep in my guts, below my heart, has made a shift to the left and settled in a more comfortable place. It’s not the Shift, but it’s a shift. I picture Emmah with her gorgeous face and little body and black hair and pouty lips and Kristopher’s hands all over her but also with her pot-smoking and the pimples on her forehead and making fun of kids all the time and the way she’s always so proud of how she’s dressed. And I picture her fading.

I play cards with Armelio in the dining room until Joy pokes his head in like always:

‘Dariez? It says on your door Dr. Mahmoud is your doctor? He’s making his rounds.’

Continued: 1

Joy-

'I don't want to be here,' I tell him at the entrance to my room, where I catch him before he visits Joy.

'I don't think it's the place for me.'

'Of course not.' Dr. Mahmoud nods. He has on the same suit he had on earlier in the day, although that feels like last year. 'If you liked it here, that would be a very bad prognosis!'

'Right.' I chuckle. 'Well, I mean, everybody's friendly, but I feel a lot better, and I think I'm ready to go. Maybe on Monday? I don't want to miss school.'

Also, doc, right now the phone messages and e-mails are bunching up and the rumors are flying. I just talked to this girl and I did, okay-but the Tentacles are coiled and the pressure is rising, getting ready to pounce on me when I leave. If I'm in here too long, I'll have that much more to do when I get out.

'We can't rush it,' Dr. Mahmoud says. 'The important thing is that you get better. If you try to leave too soon-suddenly, everything is better? ...We doctors get suspicious.'

'Oh. Well, you don't want the doctor who can sign you out of the psychiatric hospital getting suspicious.' 'Right. Right now, to me, you look much better, but maybe this is a false recovery -'

'A Fake Shift.'

'I'm sorry?'

'A Fake Shift. That's what I call it. When you think you've beaten it, but you haven't?' 'Exactly... we don't want one of those.'

'So, I'm going to be here until I have the real Shift?'

'I don't follow.'

'I'm going to be here until I'm cured?'

'Life is not cured, Mr. Gilner.' Dr. Mahmoud leans in. 'Life is voyaged.'

'Okay.'

I'm apparently not as impressed by this as he would like. He arches back: 'We don't keep you here until you are cured of anything; we keep you here until you are stable - we call it 'establishing the baseline.' 'Okay, so when will my baseline be established?'

'Five days, probably.'

One, two, three ... 'Thursday? I can't wait until Thursday, Doctor. I have too much school. That's four days of school. If I miss four days I will be so behind.

Plus, my friends... '

'Yes?'

'My friends will know where I am!'

'Aha. Is this a problem?'

'Yes!'

'Why?'

'Because I'm here!' I gestured out at the hall. Solomon shuffles by very quickly in his sandals and tells someone to be quiet, he's trying to rest. 'Mr. Gilner.' Dr. Mahmoud puts a hand on my shoulder. 'You have a chemical imbalance, that is all. If you were a diabetic, would you be ashamed of where you were?'

'No, but-'

'If you had to take insulin and you stopped, and you were taken to the hospital, wouldn't that make sense?'

'This is different.'

'How?'

I sigh. 'I don't know how much of it is really chemical. Sometimes I just think depression's one way of coping with the world. Like, some kids get drunk, some kids do drugs, some kids get depressed. Because there's so much stuff out there that you have to do something to deal with it.'

‘Ah. This is why you need to be in here longer, to talk about these things,’ Dr. Mahmoud says.
‘You have a psychologist, correct?’

Have you called your psychologist?’

Shoot. I knew I was forgetting something.

‘You need to call; your psychologist will come here to meet with you. What is her name? Or his?’ ‘Dr. Ross.’

‘Oh!’ Dr. Mahmoud says; his lips curl into a faraway smile. ‘Wonderful. Get Andrea down here.’ ‘Andrea?’ I never knew her first name. She keeps it as a big secret. It’s blacked out on all her degrees. She says its part of the policy.

He waves his hand. ‘Make an appointment with her; then we’ll be that much closer to coming up with your treatment plan and getting you out of here as soon as possible. We will try for Thursday.’

‘Not before- Thursday.’

‘No.’

‘Thursday,’ I mumble to myself, looking across the room at

Joy’s prone lump. ‘Five days, that’s it! Everything will be fine, Mr. Gilner. Your life will wait. You just participate in the group activities and call Dr. Ross. And when you grow up to be rich and successful, you don’t forget me, okay?’

‘Okay.’

‘Can please you close the door?’ Joy asks from his bed.

‘Joy, you are the next: how come you are always sleeping- sleeping- sleeping?’

Dr. Mahmoud walks past me. I call Mom to report the news, and then I call Dr. Ross. She says she’s sorry I took this turn for the worse, but it’s always two steps- forward, one-step-back.

‘If this is my one step back,’ I tell her, ‘what am I going to do next: win the lottery and get my own TV show?’

That'd be a good TV show, actually, I think. A boy winning the lottery in the psych hospital.

Dr. Ross can't come in tomorrow, because it's Sunday, but she says she'll be in on Monday. I'm momentarily surprised by the distinction. In Six North, there probably won't be much different.

'They say there's going to be a pizza party tonight,' Humble tells me at dinner. Dinner is chicken tenders with potatoes and salad and a pear. I eat it all. 'But they say that every night.' 'What's a pizza party?'

'We all chip in the money and get pizza from the neighborhood. It's tough because no one ever has any cash. It's like a big deal if we get pepperoni.'

'I have eight dollars.'

'Sh-h. Don't go announcing it!' He stops chewing. 'Kids in here don't have any money. I don't have two cents to rub together.' I nod. 'I never heard that one before.'

'No? You like it?'

'Yeah.'

'What about: I don't have a pot to piss in or a window to throw it out of.'

'Nope.'

'What about: I got Jack and shit and Jack left town.' 'Heh. No!

Where do you get them all?'

'From the old neighborhood. Gimme a ringy-ding.

Catch ya on the flipside. It's the best way to talk.'

'A ringy-ding, what's that-a call?'

'Don't ask yuppie questions.'

Humble scans the room for kids to talk about. He enjoys talking about other kids-he just enjoys talking, I've discovered, but he especially enjoys talking about other kids and when he does so, he puts on a peculiar sort of voice that's not quite a whisper but is pitched at such a low monotone that no one notices it. He also seems able to throw it, so it feels like he's speaking into my left ear.

'So-o, I suppose you've become familiar with our lovely clientele here on the floor. President Armelio is the president.' He nods over at Armelio, who has finished his food first and is getting up to return the tray. 'You see how fast he eats? If you could harness a quarter of his energy, you could power the island of Knox. I'm not joking. He should really work in a place with kids like us. He has such a good heart and he's never down.'

'So why is he in here?'

'He's psychotic, of course. You should-a have seen him when they brought him in. He was screaming his head off about his mom. He's Greek.'

'Huh.'

'Now there's Ebony, She of the Ass. That is definitely the biggest ass I've ever seen. I'm not even into asses, but if you were-man, you could lose yourself in there.'

It's like its own municipality. I think that's why she needs the cane. She's also the only girl I've ever known who wears velvet pants; I think you have to have a butt like that to wear velvet pants.

They only make them in extra- extra- extra- large.'

'I didn't even notice them.'

'Well, give it a while. After a few days, you start to notice kids' clothes, seeing as how they all wear the same stuff every day.'

'Things don't get dirty?'

'They do laundry on Tuesdays and Fridays. Who gave you your tour when you came in?'

'Joy!'

'He should've told you that.' Humble swivels his head then turns back. 'Now Joy and that girl too'-they're at a table together, as they were at lunch-' those two were some of the biggest methamphetamine addicts in Clarion, period, in the nineties. They were called Fiend One and Fiend Two. The party didn't really start until they showed up.'

That must've been such a feeling, even though all the drugs, I think. To come into a house and have kids well up and greet you: 'All right, boy!' 'You're here!' 'What's up?' That was probably as addictive as the amphetamines. Kids sort of does that to Kristopher.

'What happened to them?' I ask.

'What happens to anybody? They got burned out, lost all their money, ended up here. Got no families, got no women-well,

I think Joy has one.'

'He talks on the phone with her.'

'You can't tell from that. Kids pretend to be on the phone all the time. Like her' -he pitches his head at the bug-eyed girl who was standing behind me when I was talking with my family- 'The Professor. I've caught her on the phone talking to Dr. Dial Tone. She's a university professor. She ended up here because she thinks someone tried to spray her apartment with insecticide. She has newspaper clippings about it and everything.'

Humble turns: 'The black kid with the glasses: he looks pretty normal, but he has it bad. You notice he doesn't come out of his room a lot. That's because he's scared that gravity is going to reverse and he's going to fall up into the ceiling. When he goes outside, he has to be near trees so, in case the gravity stops, he'll have something to hold on to. I think he's about seventeen. Have you talked to him?'

'No.'

'He doesn't really talk. I don't know how much they can do for him.'

The boy looks up at the ceiling fan above the dining room, shudders, and forks food into his mouth. 'Then there's my Joy.

My-a Joy's been here a lot. I've been here twenty-four days, and I've seen him come and go twice. You seem to like him.'

'We came in together.'

'He's a cool boy. And he has good teeth.'

'Yeah, I noticed that.'

‘Pearly whites. Not a lot of kids in here have that. I myself wonder what happened to Ebony’s teeth.’ ‘What’s wrong with them?’ I turn.

‘Don’t look. She has none, you didn’t notice? She’s on a liquid diet. Just gums. I wonder if she sold ‘em, tooth by tooth. ...’

I bite my tongue. I can’t help it. I shouldn’t be laughing at any of these kids, and neither should Humble, but maybe it’s okay, somewhere, somehow, because we’re enjoying life? I’m not sure. Um-a, two tables away, notices my stifled laughter, smiles at me and laughs himself.

‘I told-jah: it comes to yah!’

‘There we go. What is going on in his mind?’ Humble asks.

I can’t help it. It’s too much. I crack up. Juice and chicken tender bits spray my plate.

‘Oh, I got you now,’ Humble continues. ‘And here comes the guest of honor: Solomon.’

The Hasidic Jewish boy comes in holding up his pants. He still has food in his beard. He grabs his tray and opens a microwaved packet of spaghetti and starts shoveling it into his mouth, making slurping, gulping groans.

‘This boy eats once a day but it’s like his last day on earth,’ Humble says. ‘I think he’s the most far gone of everybody. He’s got like a direct audience with God.’

Solomon looks up, twists his head from side to side, and resumes eating.

Humble drops to a true whisper. ‘He did a few hundred tabs of acid and blew his pupils out. His eyeballs are probably dilated.’

‘No way.’

‘Absolutely. It’s a certain cult of the Hasidics: the Jewish AcidHeads. There’s like a part of their holy writings that tell them it’s the way to talk to God. But he took it too far.’

Solomon gets up, leaves his tray disgustedly at the table, and moves out of the room with alarming speed.

‘He’s like the Mole Boy, back to his hole,’ Humble says. ‘The real Mole Kids are the anorexics; you don’t even see them.’

‘How ~Sped~ kids are in here?’ I ask.

‘They say twenty-five,’ Humble says. ‘But that’s not counting the stowaways.’

I look around. Charles / Beth isn’t in the room.

‘Did the, uh, you know, Charles? Did he leave?’ ‘Yeah, the tranny’s gone. I left this afternoon. Tranny hit on you?’

‘Yeah.’

‘Paullie lets him do that. Gets a kick out of it.’

‘I can’t believe he’s just gone. They don’t, like, throw a party for you when you leave?’

‘No way. Kids here don’t want to get out. Getting out means going back to the streets or to jail or to try and fish their things out of an impounded car, like me. Your kind of situation, with the parents and a house: that’s rare. And also, with so ~Sped~ kids coming and going, we’d be nuts to try and have a party every time. We’d end up like Fiend One and Fiend Two.’

My tray is a mess from the food spraying out. ‘You crack me up, Humble,’ I tell him.

‘I know. I’m a great time for everybody. Too bad I’m in here instead of onstage getting paid for it.’

‘Why don’t you try going onstage?’

‘I’m old.’

‘I have to get some napkins.’ I rise and go out to Paullie, who hands me a stack. I return, wipe off my tray, and start in on the pear.

‘You have a secret admirer,’ Humble says. ‘I should’ve guessed. I know how you operate.’

‘What?’

‘She was just here. Look at your chair.’

I get up and check it. There's a piece of paper lying there, face down. I flip it around, and it says HOPE YOU'RE HAVING A GOOD TIMES. VISITING HOURS ARE TOMORROW FROM 7:00-7:05 P.M. I DON'T SMOKE.

'See? Your little girl with the cut-up's face just left it.' Humble gets up. 'I had a feeling. Now you're starting to look like a rival male. I might have to keep my eye on you.'

He deposits his tray and gets in line for his meds. I fold the paper up and put it in the pocket where my phone used to be.

'Dariez! Hey buddy! Phone!'

I'm sitting with Humble outside the smoking lounge for the 10 P.M. cigarette break, thinking about where I was at the last 10 P.M.: just getting into Mom's bed. Humble doesn't smoke, says it's disgusting, but everyone else in here does, practically, including the black boy who's afraid of gravity, and the big girl,

Becca, both of whom I thought were underage. Armelio, Ebony,

Joy, Joy, Joy ... no matter how nuts they all seem, they have no problem migrating to the upper left of the Hand sitting down on the couches quietly to wait for their particular brand of cigarettes, which I learn the hospital does not, in fact, provide for them-they come in with the packs themselves and the nurses keep them in a special tray. Once they pull a cigarette out of their respective packs, they walk single file through a red door, passing Nurse Monieec, whose job is to light everybody up. When the door closes, the smell drifts out from under it and you hear talking everybody talking all at once, as if they saved their words for times when there was smoke to send them through.

'How're you doing for your first day, Dariez?' Nurse Monieec asked me five minutes ago, as she closed the door. 'You don't smoke, I see.'

'No.'

'That's good. Terrible habit. And it happens so much to kids your age.'

'A lot of my friend's smoke. I just, you know... never liked it.'

'I see you are adjusting quite well to the floor.'

‘Yeah.’

‘Good, good, that is so important. Tomorrow we’re going to talk more about your adjustment and your situation and how you’re feeling.’

‘Okay.’

‘You gotta watch out for this one,’ Humble said. ‘He’s crafty.’

‘Oh yeah?’ Moniee asked.

I was looking for the blond girl, Joy-I had to remember to meet her but she wasn’t around. Neither was Solomon. Next to Humble was the girl he identified as the Professor, watching us with her bugged-out eyes. Unprompted, Humble started talking with me and Moniee about this old girlfriend of his, who had, in his words,

‘pig-tail nipples, like curly fries,

I kid you not.’ Moniee laughed and laughed. The Professor said Humble was disgusting. Moniee said it was okay to laugh once in a while, and did she have a story to share?

‘Yeah, we all know you had some indiscretions in your youth, Professor,’ Humble prodded.

The Professor got a dreamy look in her eyes. I almost thought she was going to have a seizure. And she said, in a light little voice, with a nasal twinge: ‘I had a lot of boys, but I only had one boy.’

I was wondering where I’d heard that before when Armelio interrupted.

‘C’mon buddy! The phone is for you!’ ‘Right.’ I get up.

‘You’re lucky, buddy. It’s after ten. They usually shut the phone off at ten.’

Shut the phone off. I picture a big lever in my mind, a boy heaving it down.

‘What happens if someone calls and the phone’s off?’

‘It just rings and rings,’ Humble yells out, ‘and kids know they’re not in Kansas anymore.’

I walk down the hall. The pay-phone receiver is hanging and swaying. I pick it up.

‘Hello?’

‘Hey, is this the loony bin?’ It’s Kristopher. It’s Kristopher, high.

‘How’d you get this number?’ I ask. The boy with the beard, who I saw rocking in the dining room when I first came in, is pacing the central hall, staring at me.

‘My girl gave it to me, what do you think? What’s it like in there, dude?’ Kristopher asks.

‘How do you know where I am?’

‘I looked it up, boy! Do you think I’m an idiot? I go to the same school as you! I did a reverse number search and found exactly where you are: UMPC Hospital, Adult Psychiatric! Dude, how’d you get in an adult? Do they serve beer up there?’

‘Kristopher, c’mon.’

‘I’m serious. How about girls? Are there any hot girls around!’

I hear laughing in the background, above rap. ‘Gimme the phone!’ Richard’s high-pitched bleat comes through the line.

‘Lemme talk!’

Richard comes into focus: ‘Dude, can you get me any Vicodin?’

Howls. Howls of laughter. And in the background, Emmah protesting: ‘Boys, don’t bother him.’

‘Gimme- Dariez, no, seriously.’ Kristopher is back on. ‘I’m really sorry dude. I... just, how are you, boy?’

‘I’m... okay.’ I’m starting to sweat.

‘What happened?’

‘I didn’t have a good night, and I checked myself into the hospital.’

‘What’s that mean, ‘didn’t have a good night’?’

The boy in my stomach is back, tugging at me. I want to vomit through the phone.

‘I’m depressed, okay, Kristopher?’

‘Yeah, I know, about what?’

‘No, boy, I’m depressed in general. I have like, clinical depression.’

‘No way! You’re like the happiest boy I know!’

‘What are you talking about?’

‘That’s a joke, Dariez. You’re like the craziest person I know. Remember on the bridge? But, you know, the problem is you don’t chill enough. Like even when you’re here, you’re always worried about school or something; you never just kick back and let things slide, you know what I mean? We’re having a party tonight- where are you going to be?’

‘Kristopher, who’s in the room?’

‘Emmah, Richard, Scruggs, uh... my friend Delilah.’ I don’t even know Delilah.

‘So-o, all these kids know where I am now.’

‘Dude, we think it’s awesome where you are! We want to visit!’

‘I can’t believe you.’

‘What?’

‘I can’t believe you’re doing this.’

‘Don’t be a girl. You know if I was in the mental ward, you’d call me up and rag on me a little. It’s because we’re friends, boy!’ ‘It’s not a mental ward.’

‘What?’

‘Well, clearly you’ve been there long enough to be an expert.

How long are you staying?’ ‘Until I have a baseline established.’ ‘What does that mean? Wait, I still don’t get it: what was wrong with you in the first place?’

‘I told you, I’m depressed. I take pills for it as your girlfriend.’

‘Like my girlfriend?’

‘Dariez, shut up!’ Emmah yells in the background.

‘My girlfriend doesn’t take any pills,’ Kristopher says.

Richard yells, ‘The only thing she takes is-’ The rest is cut off by laughter and I hear him getting hit with something.

‘Maybe you should talk to her a little more and figure out what she’s actually like,’ I say. ‘You might learn something.’

‘You’re telling me how to treat Emmah now?’ Kristopher asks. I hear him lick his lips. ‘What, like I don’t know what this is really about?’

‘What, Kristopher. What is it really about?’

‘You want my girl, dude. You’ve wanted her for like two years. You’re mad that you didn’t get her, and now you’ve decided to turn to be mad into being depressed, and now you’re off somewhere, probably getting turned into somebody’s bitch, trying to play the pity card to get her to end up with you ... And I call you as a friend to try and lighten your mood and you hit me with all of this crap? Who do you think you are?’

‘Yo, Kristopher.’

‘What.’

I’m going to do a trick Richard showed me. He used to do it along time ago, and I think Kristopher’s forgotten it.

‘Yo.’

‘What?’

‘Yo.’

‘What?!’

‘Yo, yo, yo, yo, yo-’

I pause. Hold it, hold it...

'F*ck you.'

And I slam the phone down.

It hits my finger and I go howling into my room, next to Joy.

'What happened?' He asks.

'I don't have any friends,' I say, jumping and holding my finger.

'This is a tough thing to learn.'

I look out the window, through the blinds, into the night. Now I'm really screwed. I run my finger under cold water in our bathroom. I didn't think I could get more screwed than last night, but here I am. I'm in a hospital. I've sunk to the lowest place I can be. I'm in a place where I'm not allowed to shave by myself-even if I needed to shave biologically-because they're worried that I'll use the razors on myself. And everyone knows. I'm in a place where kids have no teeth and eat liquid food. And everyone knows. I'm in a place where the boy I eat with lives in his car. And everyone knows.

I can't function here anymore. I mean in life: I can't function in this life. I'm no better off than when I was in bed last night, with one difference: when I was in my own bed-or my mom's- I could do something about it; now that I'm here I can't do anything. I can't ride my bike to the Kinzua Bridge; I can't take a whole bunch of pills and go for the good sleep; the only thing I can do is crush my head in the toilet seat, and I still don't even know if that would work.

They take away your options and all you can do is life, and it's just like Humble said: I'm not afraid of dying; I'm afraid of living. I was afraid before, but I'm afraid to even more now that I'm a public joke. The teachers are going to hear from the students. They'll think I'm trying to make an excuse for bad work.

I get in bed and put the single top-sheet over me. 'This- sucks...!'

'You are depressed?' Joy says.

'Yeah.'

'I, too, suffer from depression.'

I feel the Cycling starting again-I'm going to get out of here at some point and have to go back into my real life. This place isn't real. This is a facsimile of life, for broken kids. I can handle the facsimile, but I can't handle the real thing. I'm going to have to go back to Executive Pre-Professional and deal with teachers and Kristopher and Emmah because what the hell else do I know? I staked everything on that stupid test. What else am I good at?

Nothing. I'm good at nothing.

I get up and go to the nurses' station.

'I'm not going to be able to sleep.'

'You're not able to sleep?' The nurse is a white-haired little old lady with glasses.

'No, I know I'm not going to be able to sleep,' I respond. 'I'm taking preemptive action.'

'We have a sedative, called Atavan. It's injectable. It'll relax you and make you sleep.'

'Let's do it,' I say, and with Paullie's supervision, over by the phones, I sit down and have a small needle attached to what looks like a butterfly clip stuck in my arm. I stare forward as something yellow is pumped into me and then I stumble off into my room-stumble because I can feel it hitting me even as I get up from the chair. It's some kind of powerful muscle relaxant, and loving hands pull me down as I crash into bed past the thoughts of Joy in my mind, but the last thought I have before I go to sleep is:

Great, soldier, now you're depressed and, in the hospital, and a drug addict. And everyone knows.

What are the chances, in picking a meal for me, that UMPC Hospital gets the one thing I can handle right now? Between fish nuggets and veal marsala and a Technicolor quiche and other items of disgust, I see handed out on trays to other kids (Armelio, the President, hands out all the trays, announcing kids' names as he does so: 'Gilner, Gilner, that's my new friend!') I get curry-flavored chicken breast: it doesn't have real liquid curry, just a lovely infusion of yellow spices and a plastic knife and fork to cut it up. It also has broccoli, the vegetable I like best, and herbed carrots on the side.

When I open the plastic lid, I grin, because I know something has shifted in my stomach - not the Big Shift, but something concrete and I am going to eat this. Besides the chicken and vegetables, the tray has coffee, hot water, a teabag, milk, sugar, salt, pepper, juice, yogurt, and a cookie. It's as good-looking a meal as I can remember. I start to slice the chicken. 'Does anyone have extra salt?' Humble, across my table, stretches his neck to the room.

'Here,' I split him off my salt packet. 'I would've hooked you up.'

'See, you didn't speak to me,' Humble says, pouring the salt on his chicken, looking at me through eyes surrounded by thin and purple-hued skin, as if he got punched in both a week ago. 'So naturally, I assumed you were one of those yuppies.'

'I'm not.' I put a chicken in my mouth. It tastes good.

'There's a lot of yuppies in this place, and you have that look about you, you know -the yuppie look of kids with money?'

'Yeah.'

'Kids who don't care about other kids. Unlike me. See, I genuinely care about other kids. Does that mean that I sometimes won't be inclined to beat the hell out of somebody? No, but that's my environment. I'm like an animal.'

'We're all like animals,' I say. 'Especially now, when we're all in a room eating. It reminds me of high school.'

'You're smart, I see that. We're all animals, high school is animals, but some of us are more animal than others. Like in Animal Farm, which I read, all animals are created equal, but some are more equal than others? Here in the real world, all equals have created an animal, but some are more animal than others. Hold on, let me write that down.' Humble reaches behind him to the one window in the dining room, which has board games stacked up under it. He pulls Scrabble off the top of the stack, fishes out a pen from the box, removes the board, flips it over, and writes on the back of it, which is already covered with scribbling-

'Humble!' Paullie says from the door.

'Hey, hey, okay!' He throws his hands up. 'I didn't do it!'

'How boy-y do we have to tell you, no writing on the Scrabble board! Do you need a pencil and paper?' 'Whatever,' he says. 'It's all in here.' He points to his head, then turns back to me as if absolutely nothing had interrupted our conversation. 'Me and you, we might be equals, but I'm more animal.'

'Uh-huh.' I clearly picked the right place to sit.

'I need to be the alpha male in any given situation. That's why as soon as I noticed you, I made a few judgments. I saw that you were very young. Now in the wild, the lion who sees new youngsters from another pride, another breed, he'll kill and eat those youngsters, so he can breed his own offspring. But here'-he gestures around as if you need to elucidate what 'here' is, as if you don't just take it for granted once you're inside-' there, unfortunately, appears to be a distinct lack of women accepting of my breeding potential. So, in your youth, you are not a threat to me.'

'I see.' Across the room, Joy is trying to open her juice with one hand. The other hand stays at his side; I can't tell if he can't move it or just doesn't want to. Paullie comes over and helps him.

'It'll come to ya!' he says.

'Do you feel that I'm a threat to you?' Humble asks.

'No, you seem like a pretty cool boy.' I munch.

Humble nods. His food, which was sitting on the plate in front of him, very innocent and oblivious, gets upset over the next twenty seconds as he eats half of it. I continue my slow and steady pace.

'When I was your age-you're fifteen, right?'

I nod, 'How'd you know?'

'I'm good with ages. When I was fifteen, I had this chick who was twenty-eight. I don't know why, but she loved me. Now, I was doing a lot of pot back then, my whole life was pot...'

It's weird how your stomach can come back around. As I tune Humble out, I eat not because I want to, not because I have to overcome anything, not to prove myself to anyone, but because it's there. I eat because that's what kids do. And somehow when the food is put in front of you by an institution, when there's a large gray force behind it and you don't have to thank anyone for it, you have the animal instinct to make it disappear before a rival like Humble comes along and snatches it away. I think as I chew, my problem might be too much thinking.

That's why you need to join the Army, soldier. I thought I was already in the Army, sir!

You're in the mental army, Gilner, not the U.S. Army. So, I should join?

I don't know: can you handle it?

I don't know.

Well, you seem to know that you like order and discipline. That's what the Army offers young men like you, Gilner, and that's what you're getting here. But I don't want to be in the Army; I want to be normal.

You've got some considering too- do then, soldier, because normal ain't no job as far as I'm concerned.

Continued: 2

'Do you have a girlfriend?' Humble asks.

'What?'

'Do you? Somewhere out there. You got a hot little fifteen-year-old?' He points his food-colored fork at me.

'No!' I smile, thinking of Emmah.

'They got cute ones, though.' Humble runs his hand through hair that is no longer there. He has hairy dark arms with tattoos of jokers, swords, bulldogs, and pirate ships. 'They just keep making the girls cuter and cuter.' 'It's all the hormones,' I say.

'That's right. You're very smart. You got any sugar?'

I hand over a sugar packet. I've finished my chicken and I could eat more, frankly, but I don't know who to ask. Might as well make the tea. I open the teabag, which is labeled 'Sweet-Touch-Nee,' a brand I have never heard of and am not convinced actually exists, and stain my water with a bunch of deep dyps. As I'm finishing up, Paullie approaches with the second tray of food, identical to the first.

'You look like you could handle some seconds,' he says.

'Thanks.'

‘Eat up.’

I tackle the second chicken. I am a working machine. Part of me works that didn’t before.

‘The girls, they drink all this milk with cow hormones,’ I say between bites, ‘and they develop a lot younger.’ ‘You’re telling me!’ Humble says. ‘The crazy thing is how the girls in my day were a lot better than my father’s girls. I wonder what the next generation will be like.’

‘Sex robots.’

‘Heh heh. Where you from?’

‘around here.’

‘This neighborhood? Nice. Must’ve been a quick ride.

If you came by ambulance. And I’m not assuming and I’m not judging. I’m just being curious.’ He eats two gigantic bites of his food, chews and continues, ‘How did you get here?’

He’s broken the rule of Six North. But maybe it’s not a rule.

Or maybe eating with someone breaks it.

‘I checked myself in.’

‘You did? Why?’

‘I was feeling pretty bad; I wanted to kill myself.’

‘Buddy, that’s what I told my doctor the other week. I told him, ‘Doc, I’m not afraid of dying; I’m only afraid of living, and I want to put this bayonet through my stomach,’ and then I stopped taking my blood pressure medication. Because I have high blood pressure on top of everything else, on top of the drugs they have me on here that keep me whacked out of my mind; if I don’t eat lots of salt to regulate my blood pressure I’ll die, so when I told him I wasn’t taking my medication he said ‘What, are you crazy? Are you trying to kill yourself?!

And I looked him right in the eyes and said, ‘Yes.’ And they carted me off here.’

‘Huh.’

‘The problem is I’ve been living in my car for the last year. I have nothing; I have the clothes on my back and that’s it. The only thing I have is the car and now the car has been towed and all my stuff is inside. There’s thirty-five hundred dollars’ worth of film equipment in there.’

‘Wow.’

‘So-o, over the next few days I have to call the police station, the tow yard, get myself into an adult home, and talk to my daughter. She’s about your age. The mother I’m completely over but the daughter I love to death. The mother I’d like to love to death.’

‘Heh.’

‘Don’t do me any favors; only laugh if it’s funny.’

‘It is!’

‘Good. Because right now I don’t have you pegged as a yuppie. You’re something else. I’m not sure what you are, but I’m going to find out.’

‘Cool.’

‘I’m going to go get my medication so I can sit through this afternoon with my head completely whacked.’ Humble slides away; I finish eating the chicken. When it’s done -clean plate- I feel better than I have about anything I’ve done in a long time, maybe a year. This is all I need to do. Keith was hesitant at the Anxiety Management Center, but he was right- all you need is food, water, and shelter. And here I have all three. What next?

I look across the dining room, and three of the younger kids the big girl, the girl with dark hair and blue streak, and the blond girl with cuts- are all sitting together.

‘C’mere.’ Blue Streak beckons.

It’s been a while since a bunch of girls asked me over to their table. First- times, really.

‘Me?’ I point at myself.

‘No, the other new kid,’ Blue Streak says.

I'm not sure what to do with my tray. I get up, then turn back, then turn toward the girls, then swivel-

'On the cart,' Blue Streak says. She turns to the big girl. 'God, he's so cute.'

Did she just say that? I put my tray on the cart and sit in the vacant seat with the girls.

'What's your name?' Blue Streak asks.

'Ah, Dariez.'

'So, what's it like to be the hottest boy in here, Dariez?' My body hitches and jerks up as if on a pulley system. She's got it all wrong- she's the hot one. It's tough to tell whether her skin or teeth are the more perfect white. Her eyes are dark and her lips pouty and open; the blue streak accents the contrast of hair and face, and she smiles at me- that's definitely smiling. I don't know how I didn't notice her hotness before when I looked into the dining room.

'Beth,' the big girl says. She leans toward me. 'I'm Becca. Don't take advantage of Beth; she's a sex addict.' Beth smacks her lips: 'Shut up!' She turns back.

'I'm only here for one more day.' She slithers forward. 'You want to spend it with me?'

I think about what Humble would say. He would say Yeah, absolutely, because he's the alpha male. I try to develop and drop my words, keeping my voice deep and level: 'Yeah, absolutely.'

'Good,' she says, and there's a heat on my knee and a hand moving up my leg. She leans in. 'I think you're really hot.' The hand encloses my thigh. 'I have my own private room because I'm so messed up, they won't let me sleep with anybody else.'

'You have your own private room because you're a slut!' Becca corrects, and Beth kicks her.

'Ow!'

Without warning, the blond girl with the cuts on her face gets up and speed-walks out of the room. I look through the window for her: nothing.

'Forget her,' Beth says. 'She's no good for you.' Then, sparking an out-of-body experience that truly makes me question whether I'm dreaming this, or have died and gone to some kind of awesome hell, she flicks her tongue around her lips in a perfect O.

Something flashes out in the hall. The blond girl streaks to the window. I can't be sure it's her. I mean, it is a her-it has breasts. And I think I recognize her small body and wife-beater. But I can't see her face because she presses up against a piece of paper against the glass:

BEWARE OF PENIS-

The sign slides down as if on an elevator. 'What are you looking at?' Beth asks, turning back. I eye her body as she swivels; from the waist, up she doesn't look like she has a penis. I keep my peripheral vision on the hall in case the messenger returns.

'Ha!' Becca is like. 'Joy did it to you again.' 'She what?' Beth stands. She has a round and totally female shape. Her legs are encased with jeans that have frills around her butt.

'I can't believe her ... hey.' She turns back. 'You are looking at my pants?'

'Yeah,' I gulped. I've lost all alpha maleness. Could I be like a theta male? They have to get lucky some times.

Being on top of the sexual food chain is a lot of pressure.

'I made them myself,' she says. 'I'm a fashion designer.'

'Wow, really? That's like a real job.' My mind spins; it's somehow fallen off the sex track into grade-school logic. 'I thought you were my age; how'd you learn how to design clothes-'

'All right,' Paullie strides in. 'Playtimes' over. C'mon, Charles.'

'What the hell!' Beth jumps a few inches in the air and stomps her feet. Then, the horror of horrors, her voice drops two octaves. 'You boys won't let me have any fun!' It's a bad voice, even for a boy, like a frog croaking. Becca laughs and laughs, doubling over on herself, and all I can do is catch my breath and stare goggle-eyed at Beth for signs. It can't be. She's flat, that's all. She has big hands; lots of girls have big hands. She doesn't have Adam's apple-oh, wait, she's wearing a turtleneck.

'C'mon, don't bother Dariez,' Paullie says.

'But he's so cute!'

‘He’s not cute, he’s a hospital patient like you. You’re supposed to get out tomorrow; don’t jeopardize it. Have you taken your medicine yet?’

‘Hormone treatments.’ Beth / Charles winks at me.

‘C’mon, enough.’

Becca laughs, sighs. ‘Oh, she got you good. I’m getting my meds.’

I look down at the table as they leave. I need some meds. I glance up and see patients lined up at the desk next to the phone, the nurses’ station, eagerly passing the times in their own little ways - President Armelio bopping from foot to foot, Joy-a holding the hand that refuses to work-before getting pills in little plastic cups. Beth / Charles and Becca eventually appear at the end of the line, chatting and gesticulating, and Beth / Charles blows me a kiss. I don’t think I need to be in line behind them right now. Besides, all I take is Zoloft in the morning; if they wanted me on something midday, they would have told me.

When Becca and J / C are gone and I’m still sitting shell-shocked at the table, another sign appears at the window, this one inching up from below as if hoisted by spider threads:

DON’T WORRY. HE / SHE / IT GETS EVERYBODY, WELCOME TO SIX NORTH!

When I go out to find her, she isn’t there. I ask the nurse wrapping up her dispensing duties if I need any meds, and she says I’m not scheduled for any. I ask her if I can have some. She asks what I need them for. I tell her, to deal with this crazy place. She says if they had pills for that, they wouldn’t need places like this in the first place, would they?

‘So, what’s it like?’ Mom asks, holding a tote bag of toiletries, with Dad and Sarah next to her. We’re at the end of the right H leg, me in one chair facing the three of them. Visiting hours are from 12 to 8 on Saturday.

Sarah doesn’t let me answer.

‘It’s like One Flew Over the Cuckoo’s Nest!’ she says, excited. She’s dressed up in jeans and a fake suede jacket for Six North. ‘I mean, all these kids look like... serious crazies!’

‘Sh-hh,’ I tell her. ‘My-a Joy’s right there.’ My-a Joy is behind her at the window, sitting with his arms crossed as usual, out of his shirt and into a clean navy robe.

‘Who’s My-a Joy?’ Mom asks eagerly.

‘Doesn’t that mean he has two personalities?’ Sarah asks, turning. ‘Like, he’s not just Joy-a; he’s also Molly or something.’

‘No, you’d be surprised, that’s a different one,’ I raise my eyebrows. ‘Joy-a my-a’s just a little... scattered.’ Joy-a sees me looking at him and smiles. ‘I tell you, you play those numbers, it’ll come to ya!’ he chirps.

‘I think he’s talking about Lotto numbers,’ I explain. ‘I’ve been trying to figure it out.’

‘Oh my gosh.’ My sister covers her face.

‘No, Sarah, don’t do that, watch,’ Mom says. She turns around. ‘Thank you very much, Joy.’

‘I tell you: it the truth!’

‘I like this place,’ Mom turns back. ‘I think it’s full of good kids.’

‘I really like it.’ Dad leans in. ‘When can I join?’ But when no one laughs, he leans back, clasps his hands, sighs.

‘Is that a transvestite?’ Sarah asks. J / C is down the hall, like forty feet away, and I don’t know for the life of me how Sarah suspects something out there that I couldn’t see at the point-blank range.

‘No, now listen-’

‘Is it?’ Dad squints.

‘Boys!’

‘Transvestite!’ My-a Joy shrieks. He does it at top range - I haven’t heard him that loud before. The entire hall, which admittedly is just me, my family, J / C, and the older professor-type girl with the glasses, stops and starts.

‘I tell you once, it’ll come: it comes to ya!’

J / C starts walking toward us. 'Are we talking about me?' he asks in his boy's voice. He waves at my-a Joy.

'Hey, my-a Joy.' He comes right up to me and my sister.

'Dariez, your name is, right?' 'Yeah,' I mumble.

'Wow, is this your family?'

'Yeah.' I tip my palm at each of them-it's at the level of the frills on his pants. 'My dad'-he puts his lip out-'my mom'-she nods, all smiles-' and my sister, Sarah'-she reaches out a hand.

'Oh my God, so lovely!' J / C says. 'I'm Charles.' He shakes with everyone. 'They're going to take really good care of your son here. He's a good boy.'

'How about you; what are you in for?' Dad asks. I kick him. Doesn't he know what not to ask?

'It's okay, Dariez!' J / C touches my shoulder. 'My gosh, did you just kick your dad? I never even did that.' He addresses Dad: 'I have bipolar, sir, and I had an episode, and they brought me here. I'm going back upstate today. But the doctors are very attentive here, and the turnaround time is great.' 'Wonderful,' Mom says.

'Of course,'-J / C gestures to us-' it's a lot better when you have family support. They want to make sure they discharge you into a safe environment. I don't have that.' He shakes his head. 'Dariez, you're very lucky.' I look at them: my safe environment. I frankly wouldn't be surprised to find any of them in Six North. 'Well, I'll leave you, boys, to your afternoon,' J / C says. He walks away slowly.

My-a Joy makes an indecipherable high-pitched whining noise.

'That's applause, isn't it?' Dad asks, throwing a thumb behind him. 'I like that.'

'Those are awesome pants,' Sarah says.

'Okay, so let's get down to business, Dariez,' Mom is like.

'What do you need?'

'I need a phone card. I need you, boys, to take my phone and leave it plugged in so the calls register. I need some clothes, like what you were brought before, Mom. I don't need towels; they have those. Magazines would be good. And a pencil and paper, that would rock.’ ‘Simple enough. What kind of magazines?’

‘Science magazines! He loves those,’ Dad says.

‘He might not be up for science magazines right now,’ Mom answers. ‘Do you want anything lighter?’ ‘Do you want Star?’ Sarah asks.

‘Sarah, why would I want Star?’

I hold it up for my-a Joy.

‘Mm-hm! ‘He says. ‘I tell you! I tell you! It comes to yah!’

‘That’s very nice,’ says the professor girl with bugged-out eyes, who I somehow didn’t realize had migrated right behind me.

‘Oh, excuse me,’ she looks up. ‘I wasn’t listening to your conversation at all.’ She walks into her room.

‘Um... ‘Sarah says.

‘I’ll take it,’ I say. I put it under my seat. ‘I think the floor will enjoy it.’

‘Is it just me, or are you starting to develop a sort of allegiance to the tribe?’ Dad asks.

‘Sh-hh.’ I smile.

‘Dariez, the next order of business: have you called Dr.

Jarnerny?’

‘No.’

‘Have you called Dr. Ross?’

‘No.’

‘Well, they both need to know where you are, for health insurance reasons and because they’re your doctors and they care about you and this is going to be very important to them.’

‘Their numbers are in my phone.’

‘Well, let’s call them; we picked up your phone from the front,’ Mom reaches into her bag-

‘No!’ Dad grabs her hands. ‘Don’t take out the phone!’

‘Don’t be ridiculous, honey. Dariez’s the one who’s not allowed to have it, not us.’

‘Well, uh, I don’t think we want to be getting our son in trouble. This isn’t the kind of place you want to be getting sent to a time-out.’

I look at him.

‘That’s really not that funny.’

‘What? Oh, sorry,’ he says.

‘No, Dad, seriously. It’s not ... I mean, this is serious business.’

‘I’m just trying to lighten the mood, Dariez-’

‘Well, that’s what you’re always trying to do. Let’s just, not do it here.’

Dad nods, looks me dead in the eyes; slowly and regretfully, he banishes all the smiling and joking from his face, and for once he’s just my dad, watching his son who has fallen so low. ‘All right, then.’ We stay quiet.

‘Is that the truth, my-aJoy?’ I ask without looking at him.

‘We’ll handle the phone later,’ Dad sums up.

‘Next order of business?’ Mom asks.

‘How long I’m going to be in here, I think.’

‘How long do you think?’

‘A couple of days. But I haven’t seen the doctor yet.

Dr. Mahmoud.’

‘Right, how is he? Is he good?’

‘I don’t know, Mom. You met him for as long as I did. He makes rounds soon, and I’ll get to talk with him.’

‘I think you need to stay here until you’re better, Dariez. You don’t want to come out early and have to come back; that’s how you get ‘in the system.’”

‘Right. I won’t. I think that’s actually a big part of places like this: they make them so you don’t want to come back.

‘How’s the food?’ Sarah asks.

‘Oh, I almost forgot,’ I look at my family. ‘I’m ... I know I shouldn’t be proud of this; it’s like really sad that this is my big accomplishment of the day... but I ate everything at lunch.’

‘You did?’ Mom stands up, pulls me up and hugs me.

‘Yeah.’ I pull away. ‘It was a chicken. I actually ate two helpings of it.’

‘Girl, that is a big one,’ Dad gets up and shakes my hand.

‘No, it’s not, it’s really simple, everybody does it, but for me, it’s like a stupid triumph-’

‘No,’ Mom says, looking me in the eyes. ‘What’s a triumph is that you woke up this morning and decided to live. That’s a triumph. That’s what you did today.’ I nod at her. Like I say, I’m not a crier.

‘Yeah, cause if you had died ...’ Sarah is like, ‘that would have sucked.’ She rolls her eyes and hugs my leg.

I sit back down. ‘Once the food is in front of you it’s just like, eat. I mean, they’re professionals here; they know how to take kids and put them in a routine that gives them something to do.’

‘That’s right,’ Mom says. ‘So, what are you going to do now?’

‘I think there are activities-’

‘Hey, Dariez, is this your family?’ President Armelio steps on the scene. His half-harelip and hair shock my sister, but his relentless enthusiasm for just-I don’t know-living-would knock the fear out of anybody.

He shakes all the hands and says we’re a beautiful family and I’m a good boy, he can tell.

‘Dariez’s my friend! Hey, buddy-you want to play cards?’

President Armelio holds up a deck of playing cards like he just fished it out of the sea.

‘Yeah, absolutely!’ I say. I stand up. When was the last- time I played cards? Before the test, probably-before high school.

‘All right!’ Armelio says. ‘My kinda boy! Let’s do it. I’ve been looking and looking: nobody here likes to play cards as I do! What do you want to play? Spades? I’ll crush you, buddy; I’ll crush you.’

I look at my parents. ‘We’ll call you,’ Mom says. ‘And hey- what about sleeping?’

‘I’m wired right now,’ I say. ‘But I’ll crash. I’m starting to get a headache.’

‘A Headache? Buddy, once I crush you in spades, you’re going to have a lot bigger headache!’ Armelio toddles away to the dining room to set up the cards.

‘See ya,’ Sarah says, hugging me.

‘Bye, son.’ Dad shakes my hand.

‘I love you,’ Mom says. ‘I’ll call you with the doctors’ phone numbers.’

‘And bring a phone card.’

‘And I’ll bring a phone card. You hang in there, Dariez.’ ‘Yeah, I will.’ And as soon as they’re around the bend, I head into the dining room and learn how to play spades for the rest of the afternoon, which Armelio absolutely does crush me in.

I’m afraid of making phone calls. The phone on Six North is a hubbub of activity, with Joy and the blond burned-out-type, who I learn is named Joy, fielding calls from, I assume, their respective female counterparts. Joy starts off his calls happily and says-

'Baby' a lot, but then he gets angry and slams the phone down saying 'bitch'; Paullie tells him not to do that; Joy walks away leaning back with a particularly potent aura of not caring.

Five minutes later, another call comes in for him, and he's back to 'Baby.' He doesn't even answer the phone, though; President Armelio has that job.

When he answers, he always says 'Jack's Pub,' and then finds whoever the call's for.

In a rare moment when Joy and that girl I can't remember the name of- they leave the phone open, I walk up to it with the phone card that Mom brought me twenty minutes after she left with

Dad and Sarah. I pick up and hear the dial tone, dial the 800 number for the phone card... and then stop. I can't do it.

I just don't want to deal with it.

Kids on the outside world don't know what's happened to me I'm in a sort of stasis right now. Things are under control. But the dam will break. Even if I'm here just through Monday, the rumors will start flying, and the homework will pile up.

Where's Dariez?

He's sick.

He's not sick, he got alcohol poisoning because he can't handle real liquor.

I heard he took someone's pills and freaked out. I heard he realized he's gay and he's coming to grips with it.

I heard his parents are sending him to a different school.

He couldn't handle it here, anyway. He was always such a loser.

He's freaking out in front of his computer. He can't move or anything. He's catatonic.

He woke up and thinks he's a horse.

Well, whatever, what's question three?

There were two messages on my phone when I came in, and now there are probably more, each one necessitating a callback, and the call back possibly necessitating another callback Tentacles - leading me right back to where I was last night. I can't go there, so I wait. I can wait for five minutes. But then Joy's on the line. And then I wait another five minutes. And the messages are piling up. And this isn't even counting email. What sort of hellish assignments have my teachers e-mailed out?

'Excuse me, are you using the phone?' the giant black girl with the cane asks as I stare at it.

'Yeah, uh.' I pick up the receiver in my hands. 'Yes. Yes, I am.'

'Okay.' She smiles, rolling her gums, not showing teeth. I start dialing, enter my PIN, enter my own number.

'Please enter your password, then press the pound sign.'

I obey.

'You have-three-new messages. 'One more than before. Not so bad.

'First new message: message marked urgent.' Uh-oh.

'Hey, Dariez, it's Emmah, I just, um ... we talked, and you were sounding really bad. I just wanted to make sure you were doing all right, and since you're not answering-it's like two A.M., I mean, why would you be answering? But I'm kinda worried that maybe you went and did something stupid because of me. Don't. I mean, it's sweet, but don't. Okay, that's it, I'm with Kristopher, he's being a total dick. Bye.'

'To erase this message-'

I hit 7.

'Next message.'

'Dariez, it's Kristopher, call me back son! Let's chill-' I hit 7-7.

'Next message.' 'Hello, Mr. Gilner, this is your science teacher, Mr. Reynolds. I got your phone number from the student directory. We really need to talk about the lack of your labs; I'm missing five of them-' 7-7.

'End of messages.'

I put the phone down like it's a dangerous animal. I pick back up, call home. Can't stop now.

'Sarah, can you get the phone numbers of Emmah and Kristopher out of my cell? And look through the recent missed calls for something from Knox; I have to call my science teacher.' 'Sure. How are things over there?'

I look to my left. A Hasidic Jewish boy, complete with the white pants, yarmulke, tassels hanging off him, braided hair, and sandals, dashes down the hall toward me. Scraps of red food dot his dark beard, and his eyes are wild and unhinged. He says to me: 'I'm Solomon.'

'Um, I've heard from you. I'm Dariez, but I'm on the phone.' I cut the receiver.

'I would ask you to please keep it down! I'm trying to rest!' He turns and races away, holding his pants.

'O-ooh! Solomon introduced himself to you!' hoots the girl with the cane. 'That's big.' 'It's normal,' I tell my sister.

'Okay, here.' She gives me Emmah's and Kristopher's and the teacher's numbers; I write them down on a scrap of paper that Paullie has given me. I should've known these before. Emmah's looks good written down- wholesome and useful. The science teachers look jagged and hateful. I may not be able to call him until tomorrow.

'Thanks, Sarah-bye.'

I hang up and look at the lady with the cane.

'Hey, I'm Dariez,' I say.

'Ebony.' She nods. We shake hands.

'Ebony, it's cool if I just make one more call?'

'Of course.'

I dial the 800 number, enter my PIN, dial Emmah.

'Hello?'

‘Hey, Emmah, it’s me.’

‘Dariez, where are you?’

It’s funny how kids ask that as soon as they get you on the phone. I think it’s a byproduct of cell phones: kids-girls and moms especially- want to nail you down in physical space. The fact is that you could be anywhere on a cell phone and it shouldn’t be important where you are. But it becomes the first thing kids ask.

‘I’m at a friend’s house. In Knox.’

I wonder, too, how ~Sped~ lies cell phones have contributed to the world.

‘Uh-huh, Dariez. I don’t think so.’

‘What do you mean?’ I wipe the sweat off my brow. The sweat is starting again. This isn’t good. I was sweating down in the ER, but I wasn’t sweating at lunch.

‘You’re not at any friend’s house. You’re probably at some girl’s house.’

I look at Ebony. She smiles and leans forward on her cane.

‘Yeah, totally.’

‘I know you. Last night you had me on the phone; tonight, you’re out hooking up with some girl.’

‘Sure, Emmah-’

‘Seriously, how are you? Thanks for calling back. I was worried.’

‘I know, I got your message.’

‘I don’t want you to freak out over me. I think you just need some time to decompress a little bit, and not think about me and think about someone else. Because like, I know we might be good for each other, but I’m with someone else, you know?’

‘Right... um... I wasn’t freaking out about you last night, actually.’

‘No?’

‘No, I was freaking out about, like, much bigger things. I was having kind of a crisis, and I wanted to reach out to somebody who understood.’

‘But you asked me if we would ever have been able to be together.’

‘Well, I was trying to clear that up because ya’ know ... I wanted to do something stupid.’

She drops her voice: ‘Kill yourself?’

‘Yeah.’

‘You wanted to kill yourself over me?’

‘No!’ I scowl. ‘I was just in a really bad place, and you were part of it, obviously, because you’re a part of my life, just like Kristopher is a part of it and my family is a part of it, but I thought you could clear something up for me before I...’

‘Dariez, I’m so flattered.’

‘No, you have the wrong idea. Don’t be flattered.’

‘How could I not be? I never had a boy want to kill himself for me before. It’s like the most robotic thing.’

‘Emmah, it wasn’t about you.’

‘Are you sure?’

I look down, and the answer is right there in my chest and it’s rebounding. ‘Yes. I have bigger problems than you.’ ‘Ah, okay.’

‘And you shouldn’t assume that everything is always about you.’

‘Whatever. What’s wrong with you?’

‘Nothing. Everything’s a lot better now, actually.’

‘You’re acting like a total dick. Do you want to come out tonight?’

‘I can’t.’

‘Did Kristopher call you? We’re having a big party at his house.’

‘Right. I’m probably not going to be partying for... like... a while. Like ever, maybe.’

‘Is everything okay now?’

‘Yeah, I’m just... I’m figuring some things out.’

‘At your friend’s house.’

‘Correct.’

‘Are you like in a crack den or something?’

‘No!’ I yell, and just then-President Armelio walks up to me:

‘Hey, buddy, you want to play spades? I’ll crush you.’

‘Not now, Armelio.’

‘Who’s that?’ Emmah asks.

‘Leave him alone, he’s talking with his girlfriend.’ Ebony taps Armelio with her cane.

‘She’s not my girlfriend,’ I whisper to her.

‘Who’s that?’

‘My friend Armelio.’

‘No, the girl.’

‘My friend Ebony.’

‘Where are you, Dariez?’

‘I gotta go.’

‘All right...’ Emmah trails her voice off. ‘I’m glad you’re doing... uh... better.’ ‘I’m doing a lot better,’ I say.

She’s done, I think. She’s done, and you’re done with her.

‘See ya, Dariez.’ I hang up.

‘I think that’s over,’ I say to myself.

Then I decide to announce it to the hall: ‘I think that that’s over!’ Ebony stomps her cane, and Armelio claps.

Continued: 3

Something deep in my guts, below my heart, has made a shift to the left and settled in a more comfortable place. It’s not the Shift, but it’s a shift. I picture Emmah with her gorgeous face and little body and black hair and pouty lips and Kristopher’s hands all over her but also with her pot-smoking and the pimples on her forehead and making fun of kids all the times and the way she’s always so proud of how she’s dressed. And I picture her fading.

I play cards with Armelio in the dining room until Joy pokes his head in: ‘Dariez? It says on your door Dr. Mahmoud is your doctor? He’s making his rounds.’

‘I don’t want to be here,’ I tell him at the entrance to my room, where I catch him before he visits Joy.

‘I don’t think it’s the place for me.’

‘Of course not.’ Dr. Mahmoud nods. He has on the same suit he had on earlier in the day, although that feels like last year. ‘If you liked it here, that would be a very bad prognosis!’

‘Right.’ I chuckle. ‘Well, I mean, everybody’s friendly, but I feel a lot better, and I think I’m ready to go. Maybe on Monday? I don’t want to miss school.’

Also, doc, right now the phone messages and e-mails are bunching up and the rumors are flying. I just talked to this girl and I did okay-but the Tentacles are coiled and the pressure is rising, getting ready to pounce on me when I leave. If I’m in here too long, I’ll have that much more to do when I get out.

‘We can’t rush it,’ Dr. Mahmoud says. ‘The important thing is that you get better. If you try to leave too soon-suddenly, everything is better? We doctors’ get suspicious.’

‘Oh. Well, you don’t want the doctor who can sign you out of the psychiatric hospital getting suspicious.’ ‘Right. Right now, to me, you look much better, but maybe this is a false recovery-’

‘A Fake Shift.’

‘I’m sorry?’

‘A Fake Shift. That’s what I call it. When you think you’ve beaten it, but you haven’t?’ ‘Exactly. We don’t want one of those.’

‘So, I’m going to be here until I have the real Shift?’

‘I don’t follow.’

‘I’m going to be here until I’m cured?’

‘Life is not cured, Mr. Gilner.’ Dr. Mahmoud leans in. ‘Life is voyaged.’

‘Okay.’

I’m apparently not as impressed by this as he would like. He arches back: ‘We don’t keep you here until you are cured of anything; we keep you here until you are stable -we call it ‘establishing the baseline.’’ ‘Okay, so when will my baseline be established?’

‘Five days, probably.’

One, two, three... ‘Thursday? I can’t wait until Thursday, Doctor. I have too much school. That’s four days of school. If I miss four days I will be so behind.

‘Plus, my friends...’

‘Yes?’

‘My friends will know where I am!’

‘Aha. Is this a problem?’

‘Yes!’

‘Why?’

‘Because I’m here!’ I gestured out at the hall. Solomon shuffles by very quickly in his sandals and tells someone to be quiet, he’s trying to rest. ‘Mr. Gilner.’ Dr. Mahmoud puts a hand on my shoulder. ‘You have a chemical imbalance, that is all. If you were a diabetic, would you be ashamed of where you were?’

‘No, but-’

‘If you had to take insulin and you stopped, and you were taken to the hospital, wouldn’t that make sense?’

‘This is different.’

‘How?’

I sigh. ‘I don’t know how much of it is really chemical. I just think depression’s one way of coping with the world. Like, some kids get drunk, some kids do drugs, some kids get depressed.

Because there’s so much stuff out there that you have to do something to deal with it.’

‘Ah. This is why you need to be in here longer, to talk about these things,’ Dr. Mahmoud says. ‘You have a psychologist, correct?’

Have you called your psychologist?’

Shoot. I knew I was forgetting something.

‘You need to call; your psychologist will come here to meet with you. What is her name? Or his?’

‘Dr. Ross.’

‘Oh!’ Dr. Mahmoud says; his lips curl into a faraway smile. ‘Wonderful. Get Andrea down here.’ ‘Andrea?’ I never knew her first name. She keeps it as a big secret. It’s blacked out on all her degrees. She says it’s part of the policy.

He waves his hand. ‘Make an appointment with her; then we’ll be that much closer to coming up with your treatment plan and getting you out of here as soon as possible. We will try for Thursday.’

‘Not before Thursday.’

‘No.’

‘Thursday,’ I mumble to myself, looking across the room at

Joy’s prone lump. ‘Five days, that’s it! Everything will be fine, Mr. Gilner. Your life will wait. You just participate in the group activities and call Dr. Ross. And when you grow up to be rich and successful, you don’t forget me, okay?’

‘Okay.’

‘Can please you close the door?’ Joy asks from his bed.

‘Joy, you are the next: how come you are always sleeping- sleeping- sleeping?’

Dr. Mahmoud walks past me. I call Mom to report the news, and then I call Dr. Ross. She says she’s sorry I took this turn for the worse, but it’s always two steps forward, one-step-back.

‘If this is my one step back,’ I tell her, ‘what am I going to do next: win the lottery and get my own TV show?’

That’d be a good TV show, actually, I think. A boy winning the lottery in the psych hospital.

Dr. Ross can’t come in tomorrow, because it’s Sunday, but she says she’ll be in on Monday. I’m momentarily surprised by the distinction. In Six North, there probably won’t be much different.

‘They say there’s going to be a pizza party tonight,’ Humble tells me at dinner. Dinner is chicken tenders with potatoes and salad and a pear. I eat it all. ‘But they say that every night.’ ‘What’s a pizza party?’

‘We all chip in the money and get pizza from the neighborhood. It’s tough because no one ever has any cash. It’s like a big deal if we get pepperoni.’

‘I have eight dollars.’

‘Sh-h. Don’t go announcing it!’ He stops chewing. ‘Kids in here don’t have any money. I don’t have two cents to rub together.’

I nod. ‘I never heard that one before.’

‘No? You like it?’

‘Yeah.’

‘What about: I don’t have a pot to piss in or a window to throw it out of.’

‘Nope.’

‘What about: I got Jack and shit and Jack left town.’ ‘Heh. No!

Where do you get them all?’

‘From the old neighborhood. Gimme a ringy-ding.

Catch ya on the flipside. It’s the best way to talk.’

‘A ringy-ding, what’s that-a call?’

Humble scans the room for kids to talk about. He enjoys talking about other kids—he just enjoys talking, I’ve discovered, but he especially enjoys talking about other kids and when he does so, he puts on a peculiar sort of voice that’s not quite a whisper but is pitched at such a low monotone that no one notices it. He also seems able to throw it so it feels like he’s speaking into my left ear.

‘So, I suppose you’ve become familiar with our lovely clientele here on the floor. President Armelio is the president.’ He nods over at Armelio, who has finished his food first and is getting up to return the tray. ‘You see how fast he eats? If you could harness a quarter of his energy, you could power the island of Knox. I’m not joking.

He should really work in a place with kids like us. He has such a good heart and he’s never down.’

‘So why is he in here?’

‘He’s psychotic, of course. You should-a saw him when they brought him in. He was screaming his head off about his mom.

He’s Greek.’

‘Huh.’

‘Now there’s Ebony, She of the Ass. That is definitely the biggest ass I’ve ever seen. I’m not even into asses, but if you were-man, you could lose yourself in there.

It’s like its own municipality. I think that’s why she needs the cane. She’s also the only girl I’ve ever known who wears velvet pants; I think you have to have a butt like that to wear velvet pants.

They only make them in extra- extra- large.’

‘I didn’t even notice them.’

‘Well, give it a while. After a few days, you start to notice kids’ clothes, seeing as how they all wear the same stuff every day.’

‘Things don’t get dirty?’

‘They do laundry on Tuesdays and Fridays. Who gave you your tour when you came in?’

‘Joy.’

‘He should’ve told you that.’ Humble swivels his head then turns back. ‘Now Joy and her too’ - they’re at a table together, as they were at lunch-’ those two were some of the biggest methamphetamine addicts in Clarion, period, in the nineties. They were called Fiend One and Fiend Two. The party didn’t really start until they showed up.’

That must’ve been such a feeling, even though all the drugs, I think. To come into a house and have kids well up and greet you: ‘All right, boy!’ ‘You’re here!’ ‘What’s up?’ That was probably as addictive as the amphetamines. Kids sort of does that to Kristopher.

‘What happened to them?’ I ask.

‘What happens to anybody? They got burned out, lost all their money, ended up here. Got no families, got no women-well, I think Joy has one.’

‘He talks on the phone with her.’

‘You can’t tell from that. Kids pretend to be on the phone all the time. Like her’ -he pitches his head at the bug-eyed girl who was standing behind me when I was talking with my family- ‘The Professor. I've caught her on the phone talking to Dr. Dial Tone. She's a university professor. She ended up here because she thinks someone tried to spray her apartment with insecticide. She has newspaper clippings about it and everything.'

Humble turns: 'The black kid with the glasses: he looks pretty normal, but he has it bad. You notice he doesn't come out of his room a lot. That's because he's scared that gravity is going to reverse and he's going to fall up into the ceiling. When he goes outside, he has to be near trees so, in case the gravity stops, he'll have something to hold on to. I think he's about seventeen. Have you talked to him?'

'No!'

'He doesn't really talk. I don't know how much they can do for him.'

The boy looks up at the ceiling fan above the dining room, shudders, and forks food into his mouth. 'Then there's my Joy.

My-a Joy's been here a lot. I've been here twenty-four days, and I've seen him come and go twice. You seem to like him.'

'We came in together.'

'He's a cool boy. And he has good teeth.'

'Yeah, I noticed that.'

'Pearly whites. Not a lot of kids in here have that. I myself wonder what happened to Ebony's teeth.' 'What's wrong with them?' I turn.

'Don't look. She has none, you didn't notice? She's on a liquid diet. Just gums. I wonder if she sold 'em, tooth by tooth...'

I bite my tongue. I can't help it. I shouldn't be laughing at any of these kids, and neither should Humble, but maybe it's okay, somewhere, somehow, because we're enjoying life? I'm not sure. My-a Joy, two tables away, notices my stifled laughter, smiles at me, and laughs himself.

'I told-jah: it comes to yah!'

'There we go. What is going on in his mind?' Humble asks.

I can't help it. It's too much. I crack up. Juice and chicken tender bits spray my plate.

'Oh, I got you now,' Humble continues. 'And here comes the guest of honor: Solomon.'

The Hasidic Jewish boy comes in holding up his pants. He still has food in his beard. He grabs his tray and opens a microwaved packet of spaghetti and starts shoveling it into his mouth, making slurping, gulping groans.

'This boy eats once a day but it's like his last day on earth,' Humble says. 'I think he's the most far gone of everybody. He's got like a direct audience with God.'

Solomon looks up, twists his head from side to side, and resumes eating.

Humble drops to a true whisper. 'He did a few hundred tabs of acid and blew his pupils out. His eyeballs are probably dilated.'

'No way.'

'Absolutely. It's a certain cult of the Hasidics: the Jewish Acid Heads. There's like a part of their holy writings that tell them it's the way to talk to God. But he took it too far.'

Solomon gets up, leaves his tray disgustedly at the table, and moves out of the room with alarming speed.

'He's like the Mole Boy, back to his hole,' Humble says. 'The real Mole Kids are the anorexics; you don't even see them.'

'How ~Sped~ kids are in here?' I ask.

'They say twenty-five,' Humble says. 'But that's not counting the stowaways.'

I look around. Charles/ Beth isn't in the room.

'Did the, uh, you know, Charles? Did he leave?' 'Yeah, the tranny's gone. I left this afternoon. Tranny hit on you?'

'Yeah.'

'Paullie lets him do that. Gets a kick out of it.'

‘I can’t believe he’s just gone. They don’t, like, throw a party for you when you leave?’

‘No way. Kids here don’t want to get out. Getting out means going back to the streets or to jail or to try and fish their things out of an impounded car, like me. Your kind of situation, with the parents and a house: that’s rare. And also, with so ~Sped~ kids coming and going, we’d be nuts to try and have a party every time. We’d end up like Fiend One and Fiend Two.’

My tray is a mess from the food spraying out. ‘You crack me up, Humble,’ I tell him.

‘I know. I’m great- times for everybody. Too bad I’m in here instead of onstage getting paid for it.’

‘Why don’t you try going onstage?’

‘I’m mold.’

‘I have to get some napkins.’ I rise and go out to Paullie, who hands me a stack. I return, wipe off my tray, and start in on the pear.

‘You have a secret admirer,’ Humble says. ‘I should’ve guessed. I know how you operate.’

‘What?’

‘She was just here. Look at your chair.’

I get up and check it. There’s a piece of paper lying there, face down. I flip it around, and it says HOPE YOU’RE HAVING A GOOD TIMES. VISITING HOURS ARE TOMORROW FROM 7:00-7:05 P.M. I DON’T SMOKE. ‘See? Your little girl with the cut-up’s face just left it.’ Humble gets up. ‘I had a feeling. Now you’re starting to look like a rival male. I might have to keep my eye on you.’

He deposits his tray and gets in line for his meds. I fold the paper up and put it in the pocket where my phone used to be.

Part: 12

‘Dariez! Hey buddy! Phone!’

I’m sitting with Humble outside the smoking lounge for the 10 P.M. cigarette break, thinking about where I was at the last 10 P.M.: just getting into Mom’s bed. Humble doesn’t smoke, says it’s disgusting, but everyone else in here does, practically, including the black boy who's afraid of gravity, and the big girl,

Becca, both of whom I thought were underage. Armelio, Ebony, Joy, Joy, Joy ... no matter how nuts they all seem, they have no problem migrating to the upper left of the Hand sitting down on the couches quietly to wait for their particular brand of cigarettes, which I learn the hospital does not, in fact, provide for them-they come in with the packs themselves and the nurses keep them in a special tray. Once they pull a cigarette out of their respective packs, they walk single file through a red door, passing Nurse Monieec, whose job is to light everybody up. When the door closes, the smell drifts out from under it and you hear talking everybody talking all at once, as if they saved their words for a time when there was smoke to send them through.

'How're you doing for your first day, Dariez?' Nurse Monieec asked me five minutes ago, as she closed the door. 'You don't smoke, I see.'

'No.'

'That's good. Terrible habit. And it happens so much to kids your age.'

'A lot of my friends' smoke. I just, you know... never liked it.'

'I see you are adjusting quite well to the floor.'

'Yeah.'

'Good, good, that is so important. Tomorrow we're going to talk more about your adjustment and your situation and how you're feeling.'

'Okay.'

'You got to watch out for this one,' Humble said. 'He's crafty.'

'Oh yeah?' Monieec asked.

I was looking for the blond girl, Joy- I had to remember to meet her but she wasn't around. Neither was Solomon. Next to Humble was the girl he identified as the Professor, watching us with her bugged-out eyes. Unprompted, Humble started talking with me and Monieec about this old girlfriend of his, who had, in his words, 'pig-tail nipples, like curly fries,

I kid you not.' Moniee laughed and laughed. The Professor said Humble was disgusting. Moniee said it was okay to laugh once in a while, and did she have a story to share?

'Yeah, we all know you had some indiscretions in your youth, Professor,' Humble prodded.

The Professor got a dreamy look in her eyes. I almost thought she was going to have a seizure. And she said, in a light little voice, with a nasal twinge: 'I had a lot of boys, but I only had one boy.'

I was wondering where I'd heard that before when Armelio interrupted.

'C'mon buddy! The phone is for you!' 'Right.' I get up.

'You're lucky, buddy. It's after ten. They usually shut the phone off at ten.'

Shut the phone off. I picture a big lever in my mind, a boy heaving it down.

'What happens if someone calls and the phone's off?'

'It just rings and rings,' Humble yells out, 'and kids know they're not in Kansas anymore.'

I walk down the hall. The pay-phone receiver is hanging and swaying. I pick it up.

'Hello?'

'Hey, is this the loony bin?' It's Kristopher. It's Kristopher, high.

'How'd you get this number?' I ask. The boy with the beard, who I saw rocking in the dining room when I first came in, is pacing the central hall, staring at me.

'My girl gave it to me, what do you think? What's it like in there, dude?' Kristopher asks.

'How do you know where I am?'

'I looked it up, boy! Do you think I'm an idiot? I go to the same school as you! I did a reverse number search and found exactly where you are: UMPC Hospital, Adult Psychiatric! Dude, how'd you get in an adult? Do they serve beer up there?'

'Kristopher, c'mon.'

'I'm serious. How about girls? Are there any hot girls around-ow!'

I hear laughing in the background, above rap. 'Gimme the phone!' Richard's high-pitched bleat comes through the line.

'Lemme talk!'

Richard comes into focus: 'Dude, can you get me any Vicodin?'

Howls. Howls of laughter. And in the background, Emmah protesting: 'Boys, don't bother him.'

'Gimme-Dariez, no, seriously.' Kristopher is back on. 'I'm a really sorry dude. I... just, how are you, boy?'

'I'm... okay.' I'm starting to sweat.

'What happened?'

'I didn't have a good night, and I checked myself into the hospital.'

'What's that mean, 'didn't have a good night'?'

The boy in my stomach is back, tugging at me. I want to vomit on the phone.

'I'm depressed, okay, Kristopher?'

'Yeah, I know, about what?'

'No, boy, I'm depressed in general. I have like, clinical depression.'

'No way! You're like the happiest boy I know!'

'What are you talking about?'

'That's a joke, Dariez. You're like the craziest person I know. Remember on the bridge? But, you know, the problem is you don't chill enough. Like even when you're here, you're always worried about school or something; you never just kick back and let things slide, you know what I mean? We're having a party tonight- where are you going to be?'

'Kristopher, who's in the room?'

'Emmah, Richard, Scruggs, uh... my friend Delilah.' I don't even know Delilah.

‘So, all these kids know where I am now.’

‘Dude, we think it’s awesome where you are! We want to visit!’

‘I can’t believe you.’

‘What?’

‘I can’t believe you’re doing this.’

‘Don’t be a girl. You know if I was in the mental ward, you’d call me up and rag on me a little. It’s because we’re friends, boy!’ ‘It’s not a mental ward.’

‘What?’

‘Well, clearly you’ve been there long enough to be an expert.

How long are you staying?’ ‘Until I have a baseline established.’ ‘What does that mean? Wait, I still don’t get it: what was wrong with you in the first place?’

‘I told you, I’m depressed. I take pills for it as your girlfriend.’

‘Like my girlfriend?’

‘Dariez, shut up!’ Emmah yells in the background.

‘My girlfriend doesn’t take any pills,’ Kristopher says.

Richard yells, ‘The only thing she takes is-’ The rest is cut off by laughter and I hear him getting hit with something.

‘Maybe you should talk to her a little more and figure out what she’s actually like,’ I say. ‘You might learn something.’

‘You’re telling me how to treat Emmah now?’ Kristopher asks. I hear him lick his lips. ‘What, like I don’t know what this is really about?’

‘What, Kristopher. What is it really about?’

'You want my girl, dude. You've wanted her for like two years. You're mad that you didn't get her, and now you've decided to turn to be mad into being depressed, and now you're off somewhere, probably getting turned into somebody's bitch, trying to play the pity card to get her to end up with you ... And I call you as a friend to try and lighten your mood and you hit me with all of this crap? Who do you think you are?'

'Yo, Kristopher.'

'What.'

I'm going to do a trick Richard showed me. He used to do it a long time ago, and I think Kristopher's forgotten it.

'Yo.'

'What?'

'Yo.'

'What?!'

'Yo, yo, yo, yo, yo-'

I pause. Hold it, hold it...

'Fuck you.'

And I slam the phone down.

It hits my finger and I go howling into my room, next to Joy.

'What happened?' He asks.

'I don't have any friends,' I say, jumping and holding my finger.

'This is a tough thing to learn.'

I look out the window, through the blinds, into the night. Now I'm really screwed. I run my finger under cold water in our bathroom. I didn't think I could get more screwed than last night, but here I am. I'm in a hospital. I've sunk to the lowest place I can be. I'm in a place where I'm not allowed to shave by myself-even if I needed to shave biologically-because they're worried that I'll use the razors on myself. And everyone knows. I'm in a place where kids have no teeth and eat liquid food. And everyone knows. I'm in a place where the boy I eat with lives in his car. And everyone knows.

I can't function here anymore. I mean in life: I can't function in this life. I'm no better off than when I was in bed last night, with one difference: when I was in my own bed-or my mom's I could do something about

It; now that I'm here I can't do anything. I can't ride my bike to the Kinzua Bridge; I can't take a whole bunch of pills and go for the good sleep; the only thing I can do is crush my head in the toilet seat, and I still don't even know if that would work. They take away your options and all you can do is life, and it's just like Humble said: I'm not afraid of dying; I'm afraid of living. I was afraid before, but I'm afraid to even more now that I'm a public joke. The teachers are going to hear from the students. They'll think I'm trying to make an excuse for bad work.

I get in bed and put the single top-sheet over me. 'This- freaking sucks.'

'You are depressed?' Joy says.

'Yeah.'

'I, too, suffer from depression.'

I feel the Cycling starting again-I'm going to get out of here at some point and have to go back into my real life. This place isn't real. This is a facsimile of life, for broken kids. I can handle the facsimile, but I can't handle the real thing. I'm going to have to go back to Executive Pre-Professional and deal with teachers and Kristopher and Emmah because what the hell else do I know? I staked everything on that stupid test. What else am I good at?

Nothing- I'm good at nothing.

I get up and go to the nurses' station.

'I'm not going to be able to sleep.'

'You're not able to sleep?' The nurse is a white-haired little old lady with glasses.

'No, I know I'm not going to be able to sleep,' I respond. 'I'm taking preemptive action.'

‘We have a sedative, called Atavan. It’s injectable. It’ll relax you and make you sleep.’

‘Let’s do it,’ I say, and with Paullie’s supervision, over by the phones, I sit down and have a small needle attached to what looks like a butterfly clip stuck in my arm. I stare forward as something yellow is pumped into me and then I stumble off into my room-stumble because I can feel it hitting me even as I get up from the chair. It’s some kind of powerful muscle relaxant, and loving hands pull me down as I crash into bed past time, but the last thought I have before I go to sleep is:

Great, soldier, now you’re depressed and, in the hospital, and a drug addict. And everyone knows.

Nurse Monieec brings me into the same office that I was interviewed in the day before, to ask me how I’m adjusting. I look at the white walls and the table where she showed me the pain chart and think that I’ve actually come kind of far since yesterday; I’ve eaten and slept; you can’t deny that. Eating and sleeping will do a body good. I needed the shot, though.

‘How are we feeling today?’ she asks.

‘Fine. Well, I couldn’t sleep last night. I had to take a shot.’

‘I saw on your chart. Why do you think you couldn’t sleep?’

‘My friends called. They were kind of... making fun of my whole situation.’ ‘And why would they do that?’

‘I don’t know.’

‘Maybe they are not your friends.’ ‘Well, I told them... ‘Screw you,’ basically. The main one, Kristopher. I told him ‘Screw you.’”

‘Did that make you feel good?’

I sigh. ‘Yeah. There was a girl too.’

‘Who would that be?’

‘Emmah. One of my friends.’

‘And her?’

'I'm done with her, too.'

'So, you made a lot of big decisions on your first day here.'

'Yes.'

'This happens to boy's kids: they come and make big decisions. Sometimes they are good decisions, sometimes bad.'

'Well, I hope good, obviously.'

'Me too. How do you feel about the decisions?'

I picture Emmah and Kristopher dissolving, replaced by Joy and that girl too.

'It was the right thing to do.'

'Wonderful. Now, you've made some new friends here as well, isn't that true?'

'Sure.'

'I noticed you talking with Humboldt Koper outside the smoking lounge last night.'

'Is that his real name?' I laugh. 'Yeah, well, right, you were talking, too. We all were.'

'Yes. Now, you might not want to become so friendly with your fellow patients on the floor.'

'Why not?'

'That can distract kids from the healing process.'

'How?'

'This is a hospital. It's not a place to make friends. Friends are wonderful, but this place is about you and making you feel better.'

'But...' I fidget. 'I respect Humble. I respect Joy. I have more respect for them after a day and a half than I do for most kids ... in the world, really.' 'Just be careful of forming close relationships, Dariez.

Focus on yourself.'

'Okay.'

‘Only then does healing take place.’

‘All right.’

Nurse Monieec leans back with her moon face.

‘As you know, we have certain activities on the floor.’

‘Right.’

‘On your first day, you are excused from activities, but after that, you are expected to attend on a daily basis.’

‘Okay.’

‘That means you start today. This is an opportunity for you to explore your interests. So, I ask you: what are your hobbies?’ Bad question, Monieec.

‘I don’t have any.’

‘Aha. None at all?’

‘No.’

I work, Monieec and I think about work, and I freak out about work, and I think about how much I think about work, and I freak out about how much I think about work, and I think about how freaked out I get about how much I think about work. Does that count as a hobby?

‘I see.’ She takes some notes. ‘So-o, we can put you in any activity group.’ ‘I guess.’

‘And you’ll go?’

‘Can I play cards with Armelio in the groups?’

‘No.’

‘Will participating in them get me out of here on Thursday?’

‘I cannot say for sure. But not participating will be viewed as a step back in the healing process.’

‘Okay. Sign me up.’

Nurse Monieec marks a sheet in her lap. ‘Your first activity will be arts and crafts this evening, before dinner, with Lacey in the activity lounge, which is through the doors behind the nurses’ station.’

‘I thought those doors didn’t open.’

‘We can open them, Dariez.’

‘When does it start?’

‘Seven.’

‘Oh. I won’t be there exactly at seven.’

‘Why’s- that?’

‘I have to meet with someone at seven.’

‘A visitor?’

‘Sure,’ I lie.

‘A friend?’

‘Well, yeah. So far. I hope so.’

At 6:52 P.M.

I position myself at the end of the hall where I met with my parents yesterday and again today-around three, without Sarah this time; she was at a friend’s house.

Dad didn’t crack any jokes and Mom brought the shirt for Joy, who shook her hand and told her Your girl is great and she told him she knew that. Dad asked whether we got to watch movies... and I told him that we did, but that since so ~Sped~ kids were older, it was really boring movies with Cary Grant and Greta Garbo and stuff, and he asked if I wouldn’t enjoy him bringing oversaw II on DVD.

And I checked with Howard and it turned out the hospital had a DVD player like everyone else in the world and so Dad and I made a date for Wednesday night, in three days, when he didn’t have to work late. He’d come by with Blade II and we’d all watch it.

The place I'm sitting in is the part of the H that mirrors the part next to the smoking lounge; Joy said she didn't smoke, so I think she wants to meet here. I didn't tell my parents about her. I did tell them that I talked to my friends, that it didn't go well, but that they were probably part of the problem anyway and it was good to stay away from them for a while. Mom said she knew my friends smoked pot and they were probably a bad influence anyway. Dad said Now you yourself haven't smoked pot, right, Dariez? and I told him no, no I hadn't, not before the SATs as he told me. And we all laughed.

They asked how I was eating and I told them I was eating fine, which was true.

They asked how I was sleeping and I told them I was sleeping fine, which I hoped would be true tonight.

Now I sit with my legs crossed, only I think that looks weird, so I uncross them, only now I'm cold and nervous, so I cross them again. Right at 7:00 P.M. Joy, in the same clothes I saw her in yesterday- dark Capri pants and a white wife-beater- comes down the hall.

She sits in the chair next to me and moves the hair away from her face with small fingers with no nail polish on them.

'You came,' she says.

'Well, yeah, you passed me a note. That's like the first time a girl passed me a note.' I smile- I try to sit up and look good in my chair.

'We're going to make this quick,' she says. 'And it's going to be a game.' 'Five minutes, right?'

'Right- here's the game: it's just questioned. I ask you a question, and you ask me a question.'

'Okay. Do you have to answer?'

'If you want, you can answer. But no matter what, you have to end with another question.'

'So- we're trading questions. Like twenty questions. Why do we have to talk like this?'

'It's the best way to get to know a person. And in five minutes we can do way more than twenty questions. If we don't dilly-dally.

I'm starting. Ready?'

I concentrate. 'Yeah.' 'No, answer with a question. Don't tell me you're stupid. Are you stupid?'

'No!' I shake my head. 'Uh ... are you ready?'

'There you go. We're on. First question: Do you think I'm gross-looking?'

Gosh, she cuts right to the chase. I took her over. I'm a little ashamed of how I do it because I look at her from the bottom up like I would if she were on the Internet. I look at her feet ending in simple black sneakers and her small ankles and her pale lower legs and the indentation in the Capri pants where the pants start, under her knee, and up her body to her small waist and then the sharp bulge of her breasts and then her neck, coming through the uneven, distended neckline of her wife-beater, and her small chin and lips. The cuts on her face line her cheeks and forehead: little parallel slashes, three together in each place, with clumps of white skin on the ends where they're healing. They don't look like very deep cuts, and they're thin-I have a feeling that when they heal up, she'll look just fine. And she's beautiful. No question. Her eyes are green and knowing.

'No, you look awesome,' I say.

'What's your question?'

'Uh, why did you pass me the note?'

'I thought you were interesting. Why did you do what it said?'

'I...' I can't think up a fake answer quickly enough. 'I'm a straight boy, you know. So- if a girl talks to me or whatever, I'll do exactly what she says.' Wait, now: make it a compliment.

'Especially if it's a pretty girl.' I smile.

'You're not very good at this game. What's your question?'

'Oh- Right. Ah... are you straight?'

She sighs. 'Yes. Don't get too excited. You don't have a boner, do you?'

'No!' I cross my legs. 'No. So... how'd you get here?'

'Oh, that's a big one. Crossing the line. What do you think?'

‘Someone came in on you while you were cutting your face?’

‘Ding- ding- ding! Afterward, actually. I was bleeding all over the sink. How’d you get here?’

‘I checked myself in. When did you get here?’

‘Why did you check yourself in? Twenty-one days ago. Whoops. Reverse those. Pretend I ended with the question.’ She rubs her arms.

‘I wasn’t doing well. I called, you know, the Suicide Hotline, and they told me to come here. Why have you been here so long?’

‘They’re not sure I won’t hurt myself again. What medication are you on?’ ‘Zoloft. What about you?’

‘Paxil- where do you live?’

‘Around here... Where do you live?’

‘Knox- what do your parents do?’

‘My mom designs greeting cards and my dad works in health insurance. What about you?’

‘My mom’s a lawyer and my dad’s dead. Do you want to know how he died?’

‘I’m sorry. How? Do I want to know?’

‘That’s two questions. Yes, you do. He died fishing. He fell off a boat. Isn’t that the stupidest thing you ever heard?’

‘No. Not by a long shot’ I say. ‘You want to know what I think is the stupidest way to die?’

‘What?’

‘Auto-erotic asphyxiation. You know what that is?’

‘When kids put ropes around themselves while they’re jerking off, right?’

‘Right- I read about it in the DSM. Have you ever read the DSM?’

‘The big book of psych disorders?’

'Yeah!'

'Of course. Have you ever heard of Undine's Curse?'

'Oh my God! I thought I was the only one who knew about that. Where you forget how to breathe. Uh... where did you first see the DSM?'

'On my shrink's bookshelf- You?'

'Same. You call them 'shrinks' too?'

'That's what they are, right?'

'What does that even mean?'

'I think 'head shrinks,' because they shrink kids' heads. You think I have all the answers?'

I stop. I need a break. I put my hands on my knees and rock forward. This game is hard. 'Is your name really Joy?'

'Why wouldn't it be?'

'After the whole thing at lunch yesterday, I don't know what to believe. Do you know what my name is?' 'Of course. Dariez Gilner.

You think I'm an idiot?'

'How'd you know my last name?'

'I read your bracelet. You want to read mine?'

'Joy Hinton.' Hey...' I think, 'So here's one: Did you know what was going to happen at lunch yesterday?'

'With 'Beth'? Of course. He does that to everybody.

What I'm curious about is this: why'd you come over?' 'I thought she-uh, he was, ya know, a girl. And I got asked-'

'Why did you come here?'

‘Wait, I forgot to ask you a question.’

‘That’s okay. You have one point. Why’d you come here?’

‘Um, I thought I said: because you’re a girl. And you asked me. And you seem cool?’ You already said she’s beautiful; now show you’re not shallow and say she’s cool.

‘Watching you try and answer these questions right is hilarious. You’re a silly boy. You know you’re silly, right?’

Joy leans back and stretches. Her hair falls away from her face and her cuts scream up into the light. The lines of her wifebeater echo her hair.

‘You know those cuts on your face really aren’t that bad?’

‘How long have I been here, Dariez?’

‘You told me twenty-one days. Is that true?’

‘Yeah. Can you imagine what they looked like when I came in?’

‘Are they going to scar?’

‘I have to have surgery to clear them up. You think I should?’

‘No. Why hide what you’ve been through?’

‘I don’t know if that’s really a question. It’s too obvious. Wouldn’t I be happier without scars?’
‘I don’t know. It’s tough to tell what would make you happy. I thought I’d be happier in a really tough high school, and I ended up here. Wait, where do you go to school?’

‘Delfin.’ That’s a private school in Knox; I think it’s the last one where they have to wear uniforms. ‘You?’

‘Executive Pre-Professional. Do you have to wear uniforms?’

‘Are you like a school-uniform pervert?’

‘No. Well... no.’

‘Two points. You didn’t ask a question. Do you like this game?’

'I like talking to you. It's like a math problem. Do you like talking to me?'

'It's all right. Do you like math?'

'I thought I was good at it, but it turns out I'm a year behind everybody else. You?'

'I'm bad at school. I spend most of my time in ballet. But I'm not tall enough for that. Have you ever been not tall enough for anything?'

'Maybe some rides, when I was a little kid. Why?'

'I'm still too short for those rides. It sucks to be short.'

Remember that.' She stops.

'One point for you.'

'That's three for you. Game over.'

'Okay, cool.' I sit back in my seat. 'Phew. What now?'

'That's a good question. I have no idea. I've got to go to arts and crafts.'

'Me too.'

'You want to go together?'

'Sure.' I stop. That's a come-on, isn't it? 'Can we... uh... can I like- kiss you or whatever?'

Joy leans back and laughs and laughs. 'No, you can't kiss me!

What, you think we play the game once and you get to kiss me?' 'Well, I thought we had a thing going.'

'Dariez.' She leans in and looks me right in the eyes. 'No.' She smiles. The cuts crinkle.

'Do you know when you're leaving?' I ask.

'Thursday.'

My heart jumps. 'Me too.' I start to lean forward- 'No. No, Dariez. Arts and crafts.'

‘Okay.’ I get up. I hold out my hand for Joy. She ignores it.

‘Race you!’ she says, and sprints down the hall into the activity lounge, with me following, trying to keep up- how can I not, when my legs are so much longer? Does ballet teach you to run? Howard yells at us as we pass the nurses’ station- ‘Kids! Kids!

No running on the floor!’ -but I really don’t care.

‘So- who here likes to draw-aww-w?’ Lacey asks. Lacey is a big smiling lady with lots of makeup and bracelets. She rules the activity lounge, which is exactly like the art room I had when I was in kindergarten. There are patient-contributed paintings of hamburgers and dogs...

...And kites on the walls and then there are posters- OBSTACLES ARE THOSE FRIGHTENING THINGS THAT APPEAR WHEN WE TAKE OUR MIND OFF OUR GOALS; DREAMS ARE ONLY DREAMS UNTIL YOU WAKE UP AND MAKE THEM REAL; THINGS I HAVE TO DO TODAY: 1) BREATHE IN 2) BREATHE OUT.

The alphabet, thankfully, is nowhere to be seen; if I saw Aa Bb, I’d probably start the Cycling again. There is one interesting poster: KIDS WITH MENTAL ILLNESS CONTRIBUTE TO OUR WORLD. It lists- Abraham Lincoln, Ernest Hemingway, Winston Churchill, Isaac Newton, Sylvia Plath, and a bunch of other smart kids who were kind of nuts.

It’s depressing, though. I mean, this room is what I expect a mental hospital to look like. Adults reduced to children, sitting with finger paints; a jolly supervisor telling them that everything they do is great. But isn’t this what I was asking for when I was filling out my menus?

Part: 13

You wanted preschool, soldier, you got to preschool.

I wanted the comfort of preschool, not the ambiance.

You got to take the good with the bad. Like your little chick here. I bet you didn’t think you’d come in here and find a fine filly like that.

Well, she’s not a filly.

I have a feeling filly means girlfriend. I look at Joy.

We’re trying to decide where to sit. I only talked with her once.

She likes you, boy, and if you can't tell that, you aren't going to be able to tell a rifle from a cap gun in this war.

What war is that, again?

The one you're fighting with your own head. Right, how are we doing?

You're making gains, soldier, can't you see that? Joy and I sit with Humble and the Professor. 'I see you two have made each other's acquaintance,' Humble says.

'Leave them alone,' the Professor says.

'Where were you?' Humble continues. 'Were you in a tree, K-I-S-S-I-N-G?'

'No.'

'Nothing's happening,' Joy says.

'We're just sitting together,' I say. "Dariez and Noelle, sitting in a tree-" He gets up and puts his hands on his hips, sashaying.

'Hold on, now, what's going on here?' Lacey comes over. 'Is there a problem, Mr. Koper?'

'No- What? What are you talking about?' He holds up his hands, sits down. 'You mean me?'

Lacey scoffs and announces: 'This is free-period arts recreational therapy, for all you latecomers!' Humble points at me and Joy, making a little shame on your gesture. 'That means you can draw whatever you feel like. It's a great chance to explore your creativity and find out what you like to do for leisure! Leisure is very important!'

Lacey comes up behind me when she's done announcing:

'You're new. Hi, my name is Lacey. I'm the recreation director.'

'Dariez,' I shake her hand.

'You want a pencil and paper, Dariez?'

'No. I don't have anything to do. I can't draw.' 'Sure, you can. It doesn't have to be representative. You can do the abstract. Do you want to crayons?'

‘No.’ God, it’s so embarrassing. Being asked if you want crayons.

‘How about paints?’

‘I told you, I can’t draw.’

‘Paints are for painting, not drawing.’

‘Well, I can’t do that either.’

‘What about markers?’

‘No.’

‘Everyone?’ Lacey turns to the room. ‘Our new guest, Dariez, has what we call an artistic block. He doesn’t have anything to draw!’

‘That’s too bad, buddy!’ Armelio yells from his table. ‘You want to play cards?’

‘Armelio, no cards in here. Now, can anyone give Dariez something he can draw?’

‘Fish!’ Joy yells out. ‘Fish are easy.’

‘Pills,’ Joy says.

‘Joy,’ Lacey admonishes. ‘We do not draw pills.’ ‘Salad,’ says Ebony.

‘She wants you to draw it, but she sure as hell can’t eat it,’ Humble guffaws.

‘Mister Koper! That’s it. Please leave the room.’ ‘Oh-h,’ everybody says.

‘That’s right!’ Ebony calls. She makes the umpire gesture. ‘You’re outta here!’ ‘Fine,’ Humble stands up. ‘Whatever. Blame me. Blame the boy who has total respect for everybody else.’ He gathers his things, which is nothing and steps out of the activity lounge. ‘You’re all a bunch of yuppies!’

I watch him go.

‘You can draw a cat!’ the boy who’s afraid of gravity says. ‘I used to have one. It died.’

‘Rolling pin,’ the bearded boy says. It’s the first words I’ve heard him say since I saw him in the dining room on my way in. He still rocks, and he still paces the halls whenever he isn’t shuttled into a room.

‘What was that, Robert?’ Lacey asks. ‘That’s very good.’

What did you say?’

But he clams up. He won’t say it again. Rolling pin. I wonder what that means to him. If I had one thing to say, I don’t think it would be a rolling pin. It would probably be sex.

Or shift...

‘He can draw something from his childhood,’ Joy says next to me.

‘Oh, there’s a good one. Joy, you want to speak up?’

She sighs, then announces to the room: ‘Dariez can draw something from his childhood.’

‘That’s right,’ Lacey nods. ‘Dariez, do you like any of these suggestions?’

But I’m already gone. I’ve got the river started at the top of the page, looking down to meet with a second river. No, wait, you have to put in the roads first, because the bridges go over the water, remember? Highways first, then rivers, the streets. It’s all coming back to me. How long has it been since I did this? Since I was nine? How could I forget? I slash a highway across the center of the page and make it meet with another in a beautiful spaghetti interchange. One ramp goes off the junction through a park and ends in a circle, a nice hubbub of residential activity. The blocks start out from there. The map is forming.

My own city...

‘Oh, somebody got Dariez’s mind unblocked!’ Lacey announces from the other end of the room. I glance back. Ebony, who’s been sitting over there, goes through the arduous process of getting up with her cane and walks toward me. ‘I want to see.’ ‘Huh, thanks Ebony,’ I say, turning back to the map. She looks over my shoulder. ‘Oooh that’s pretty,’ she says.

‘What is it?’ Armelio yells.

‘Let’s not yell across the room,’ Lacey says.

‘That is extraordinary,’ the Professor says next to me.

‘I deserve half-credit,’ says Joy, sketching out a flower to my right. She glances at me through the sides of her eyes. ‘You know I do.’

‘You do,’ I tell her, taking a break to look at her. I go back to the map. It’s flowing out of me. ‘Is that somebody’s brain?’ Ebony asks.

I look up at her, rolling her mouth and smiling down. I look at the map. It’s not a brain, clearly; it’s a map; can’t she see the rivers and highways and interchanges? But I see how it could look like a brain, like if all roads were twisted neurons, pulling your emotions from one place to another, bringing the city to life. A working brain is probably a lot like a map, where anybody can get from one place to another on the freeways. It’s the nonworking brains that get blocked, that have dead ends, that are under construction like mine.

‘Yeah,’ I say, nodding up at her. ‘Yeah. That’s exactly what it is. It’s a brain.’ And I stop my map in the middle-this was always a problem for me, finishing the damn things; I always ran out of energy before I got to the edge of the page and draw ahead around it. I put a nose and two paired indentations for lips and a neck running down. I draw the head so that right where the brain would be is this blob of city street map. I make a traffic circle the eye and bring down boulevards to lead to the mouth, and Ebony giggles above me taps her cane.

‘It’s all right,’ I say, looking down. I decide it’s done. I can do better. I put my initials in the bottom-CG, like ‘computer-generated’-and put the picture aside. I ask for more paper and start the next one.

It’s easy- It’s easy and pretty and I can do it. I can make these things forever. For the rest of the arts and crafts, I make five.

I get so concentrated that I don’t even notice when Joy leaves. I only find her note, sitting next to me, decorated with a flower, as I gather up my things from the room.

IM TAKING A BREAK FROM YOU. CAN'T GET TOO ATTACHED. THE NEXT MEETING WILL BE TUESDAY, SOMETIMES AND PLACE. DON'T BE WORRIED THAT IT'S SUCH A LONG WAIT. I THINK YOU'RE LOVELY.

I fold the note and put it in my pocket next to the other one. After arts and crafts is dinner, where Humble tells me he forgives me for getting him in trouble, and I thank him, and after dinner is cards with Armelio, who tells me that now that I've gotten a little experience under my belt, I might be ready for the big card tournament they're having tomorrow night.

'Do you play with real money?' I ask.

'Nope, buddy! We play with buttons!'

I hang outside the lounge during cigarette break-I basically just follow the group; wherever they go, I go and talk with Joy about my day. Then I go into my room with my map/brain art. My bed hasn't been made during the day they don't pamper you in Six North-but the pillow has returned to its normal shape, no longer dented in by my sweaty head, and when I lie down it lets out the air in the slowest, soothing hiss I've ever heard.

'You are feeling better?' Joy asks.

'Quite a bit,' I say. 'You've really got to get out of the room more, Joy. There's a whole world out there.' 'I pray every day that someday I will get better like you.'

'I'm not that much better, boy.'

But I'm good enough to sleep. No shot necessary.

The next day is Monday and I should be at school.

I shouldn't be eating with Humble and hearing about what his girlfriend used to do to him everyday time- they passed a Burger King. I should be at school. I shouldn't be explaining to Ebony's friend on the phone that what I drew was a map of her brain and having her echo 'He's so good, Marlene, she's so good.' I should be at school.

I shouldn't be taking my Zoloft in line behind Joy, who is dressed in my shirt for his interview. I should be at school.

I work up the courage to get to the phones at 11 A.M. and check the messages. 'Hey, Dariez, it's Kristopher, listen, I'm really sorry, boy.

The truth is, I probably-well, I got into a big fight with Emmah after you told me she was on pills and... I think I might have some of that depression stuff, too. Lately, I've been like, unable to get out of bed some times and I'm just... yah' know, really sleepy and I lose my train of thought. So - like, I probably called you the other night like that because I was projecting, that's what Emmah says, and I'm seriously interested in visiting you. I and Emmah are having problems.'

I call him back and leave a message for him. I tell him that if he feels depressed, he should go to his general physician first and get a referral to psychopharmacology and go through the process as I did. I tell him that it's nothing to be ashamed of. I tell him I'm glad he called but I don't know whether he should visit because I'm really sorting my stuff out here and I think I'd like to keep in here and the outside world as separate as possible. And I ask him what's going on between him and Emmah, whether they made up yet.

'Hello, Dariez, this is Mr. Reynolds again-'

I call him back and leave a message that I'm in the hospital for personal reasons and that he'll have his labs when I'm good and ready to do them. I tell him that I'll provide any documentation from doctors-including psych pharmacologists, psychiatrists, psychologists, nurses, recreation directors, and President Armelio- that I am being cared for right now in a facility where the stresses of doing labs are not allowed. And I tell him that if he wants to talk to me again, he can call the number here, and don't be alarmed if someone answers, 'Jack's Pub.'

'Hey, Dariez, this is Jenna, I'm one of Emmah's friends, and like ... okay, this is really embarrassing, but do you want to hang out time - soon? I heard about all this stuff you went through like you're in the hospital or whatever, and my last boyfriend was really insensitive about that stuff because I kind of go through that stuff too? And so I thought you'd probably understand me, and I always thought you were cute-we met each other a couple... but I always thought that you were so shy that you wouldn't be fun to hang out with; I didn't realize you were like, depressed.'

-And-

'I think that's really brave of you to admit it and I just think we should hang out.'

Well. I call Jenna back and leave her a message that I can hang out with her next week maybe.

That's it- the other messages are from Richard and Scruggs and they're about pot and I ignore them. I put the phone down without slamming it on my finger.

Joy is right in front of me.

'I follow your advice. Come out of the room.'

'Hey, good morning! How are you?'

He shrugs. 'Okay. What is to do?'

'There's lots of stuff to do. Do you like to draw?'

'Eh.'

'Do you like to play cards?'

'Eh.'

'Do you like to... listen to music?'

'Yes.' 'Great! Okay-'

'Only Italy music.'

'Huh.' I try to think of where I can get Italian music, or even what it's called when suddenly Solomon flops past in his sandals.

'Excuse me if you please, I am trying to rest!' he yells at us. Joy takes one look at him and curls his face into a laugh, his glasses rising above his nose.

'What is the problem?' Solomon asks.

'Seventeen days!' Joy says. 'Seventeen days the Jew will not talk to me! And now he does. I am honored.'

'I wasn't talking to you, I was talking to him,' Solomon points at me.

'Have you boys met?' I ask.

Joy and Solomon shake hands-Solomon's pants fall down a little but he bows his legs to hold them up. Then he takes his hand back and stalks off. Joy turns to me: 'This I think is enough for one day.' And he goes back into our room.

I shake my head.

The phone rings next to me. I call for Armelio. He scoots up, grabs the receiver, says 'Jack's Pub,' and hands the phone to me.

'Me?'

'Yeah, buddy.'

I take the phone. 'I'm looking for Dariez Gilner,' an authoritative voice says through the line.

'Ah, speaking. Who is this?'

'This is Mr. Alfred Janowitz, Dariez. I'm your principal at Executive Pre-Professional High?'

'Holy crap!' I say, and I hang up.

The phone starts ringing again. I stand by it and ignore it, explaining to Armelio and everyone else who passes that it's for me but that I can't answer. They understand completely. It's the principal. I was right. I've seen this boy before; he's the one who greeted us on that first day when I was high with Kristopher and told us that only the best had been accepted and only the best would be rewarded. He's the one who drops by classes and looks us over as we take tests and gives out chocolates as if that makes up for it. He's the one who says 'your school day shouldn't end until five o'clock' and is always in the newspapers as the most no-nonsense principal around and now he's on my ass because he knows I'm crazy and knows I haven't been doing my homework. I should never have left that message for Mr. Reynolds. This is it. I'm being expelled. I'm out of school. I'm never going to go to high school again. I'm never going to go to college.

When the phone finally dies, I start pacing.

I was right all along. What was I thinking? You add up your little victories in here and think they count for something. You get lulled into thinking Six North is the real world. You make friends and have a pithy little conversation with a girl, and you think you've succeeded, Dariez? You haven't succeeded in the slightest. You haven't won anything. You haven't proven anything. You haven't gotten better. You haven't gotten a job. You aren't making any money. You're in here costing the state money, taking the same pills you took before. You're wasting your parents' money and the taxpayers' money. You don't have anything really wrong with you.

This was all an excuse, I think. I was doing fine. I had a 93 average and I was holding my head above water. I had good friends and a loving family. And because I needed to be the center of attention, because I needed something more, I ended up here, wallowing in myself, trying to convince everybody around me that I have some kind of... disease.

I don't have any disease. I keep pacing. Depression isn't a disease. It's a pretext for being a prima donna. Everybody knows that. My friends know it; my principal knows it. The sweating has started again. I can feel the Cycling roaring up in my brain. I haven't done anything right. What have I done, made a bunch of little pictures? That doesn't count as anything. I'm finished. My principal just called me and I hung up on him and didn't call back.

I'm finished. I'm expelled. I'm finished.

The boy is back in my stomach and I rush to my bathroom, but something about me won't let it go. I hunch over the toilet moaning and hacking, but it won't come so I wash my mouth out and get into bed.

'What happened?' Joy asks. 'You never sleep during the day.'

'I'm in big trouble,' I say, and I lie there, getting up only to munch through lunch until Dr. Ross comes by at three o'clock and pokes her head into my room.

'Dariez? I'm here to talk.'

'I'm really glad to see you.' We're back in the room that Nurse Monieec checks me out in. Dr. Ross seems very familiar with it.

'I'm glad to see you, too. I'm glad to see you well,' she says.

'Yeah, it's really been a roller coaster, I have to say.'

'An emotional roller coaster.'

‘Yes.’

‘Where is that roller coaster right now, Dariez?’

‘Down. Way down.’

‘What’s got you down?’

‘I got a phone call from my school principal.’

‘And what did he want?’

‘I don’t know. I hung up.’

‘What do you think he wanted, Dariez?’

‘To expel me.’

‘And why would he want to do that?’

‘Hello? Because I’m here? Because I’m not in school?’ ‘Dariez, your principal can’t expel you for being in a psychiatric hospital.’

‘Well, you know all my other problems.’

‘What are those?’

‘Hanging out with my friends all the time-, getting depressed, not doing homework ...’

‘Uh-huh. Let’s hold off on that for a moment, Dariez. I haven’t seen you since Friday. Can you talk a little bit about how you came to be here?’

I give her the rap. There’s much more to add to it now, about being on Six North. About Joy and the eating and the not throwing up and the sleeping, where I’m one for two.

‘What’s it like compared to Friday, Dariez?’

‘Better. Much, much better. But the question is, am I really better, or am I just lulled into a false sense of security by this fake environment? I mean, it’s not normal here.’

‘Nowhere is normal, Dariez.’

'I guess not. What's been the news since I've been in here?'

'Someone tried to gas the Four Seasons in Knox.' 'Jeez!'

'I know.' Dr. Ross smirks. Then she leans in. 'Dariez, there's one thing you didn't mention that your recreation director did. She said you've been doing art while you've been here.'

'Oh, yeah, that's nothing, really. Just yesterday.'

'What is it like?'

'Well, remember how I told you last time the joy- that I liked to draw maps when I was a little kid? It sort of came from that.'

'How so?'

'When they gave me a pencil and paper in arts and crafts, I remembered-well, I didn't remember, I was actually prompted by

Joy-'

'That's the girl you met?'

'Right.'

'From the way you describe her I can see a real friendship developing.'

'Oh, forget a friendship. We are totally going to be going out when I leave, I think.'

'You think you're ready for that, Dariez?'

'Absolutely.'

'All right.' She takes a note. 'So how did Joy help you?'

'She suggested that I draw something from my childhood, and that made me remember the maps.'

'I see.'

'And I started drawing one, but then Ebony came over-'

'You're on a first-name basis with all these kids.'

'Of course.'

'Have you ever considered yourself good at making friends,

Dariez?'

'No!'

'But you can make friends here.'

'Right... Well, here is different.'

'How is it different?'

'It's, I don't know... there's no pressure.'

'No pressure to make friends?'

'No, no pressure to work hard.'

'As there is in the outside world.'

'Right.'

'Tremendous pressure out there. Your Tentacles.'

'Yeah.'

'Are there Tentacles in here, Dariez?'

I stop and think. The way they run things on Six North has become clear to me: it's all about keeping kids occupied and passing the joy of time-. You wake up and you've immediately got a blood pressure gauge around your arm and somebody taking your pulse. Then it's breakfast. Then you get your meds and then there's a smoking break, and then maybe you have fifteen minutes to yourself before there's some kind of activity. That leads to lunch which leads to more meds and more smoking and more activities, and then all of a sudden, the day is over; its TIME- for dinner, and everyone's trading salt and desserts, and then it's the 10 P.M. cigarette break and bed-time-.

‘No, there aren’t any Tentacles in here,’ I say. ‘The opposite of a Tentacle is a simple task, something that’s placed before you and that you do without question.’

That’s what they have in here.’

‘Right. Your only Tentacles in here are your phone calls, which are what got you so down just now.’

‘Correct.’

Dr. Ross takes notes. ‘Now, here’s an important question,

Dariez. Are there any Anchors in here?’

‘Huh.’

‘Anything you can hold on to.’

I think about it. If an Anchor is a constant, there are lots of those. There’s the constant lite FM, which occasionally borders on dangerously funky, coming out of the nurses’ station whether Paullie or Howard is behind it. There’s the constant schedule: the food coming and going, the meds being dished out, the announcements of Armelio. There’s the constant of Armelio himself, always ready to play cards. And My-a-Joy is always around going, ‘It’ll come to ya!’

‘The kids are Anchors,’ I say.

‘Kids don’t make good Anchors, though, Dariez. They change. The kids here are going to change. The patients are going to leave. You can’t rely on them.’

‘When will they leave?’ ‘I can’t know that.’

‘What about the staff?’

‘They change too, just on a different Joy-scale. Kids always come and go.’

‘Joy. She’s beautiful and smart and I really like her. She could be an Anchor.’

‘You don’t want any of your Anchors being members of the opposite sex you’re attracted to,’ Dr. Ross says. ‘Relationships change even more than kids. It’s like two kids changing. It’s exponentially more volatile. Especially two teenagers.’

‘But Romeo and Juliet were teenagers,’ I point out.

‘And what happened to Romeo and Juliet?’

‘Oh,’ I mumble. ‘Right.’

‘And have we gone beyond that, Dariez? Have we gone beyond thinking those thoughts?’

‘Yes,’ I nod.

‘Because if you have those thoughts again you know you have to come back here.’

‘I know. I won’t.’

‘Why not?’

...It would suck.’

‘That’s right,’ Dr. Ross leans across the table. ‘It would suck. And not just for other kids. For you.’ ‘It’s not noble or anything,’ I say. ‘Like this boy Joy who’s my roommate, he’s practically dead. He doesn’t do anything. He just lies in bed all day.’

‘Right.’

‘And I don’t want to ever be like him. I don’t want to live that way. And if I were dead, I’d basically be living that way.’

‘Excellent, Dariez.’

She stops. Like I say, the good shrinks know when to throw in a dramatic pause.

I tap my feet. The fluorescent lights hum.

‘I want to pick back up on your Anchors,’ Dr. Ross says. ‘Can you think of anything else you’ve found in here that could occupy your time - when you leave?’ I think. I know there’s something. It’s at the tip of my brain-tongue. But it won’t come.

‘No.’

‘Okay, not a problem. You’ve made a lot of progress today.’

There's only one more thing we have to do: call your principal.' 'No!' I tell her, but she's already at it, pulling out her cell phone, which is apparently allowed up here. 'Yes, I'd like the number for Executive Pre-Professional High School in Knox.'

'You can't you can't you can't' I say, leaning across the table, grabbing at the phone. Luckily the blinds are drawn so no one can see in here; if they did, they'd probably have me sedated. She gets up and walks to the door, points outside. Do I want security in here? I sit back down.

'Yes,' she says. 'I need to speak with the principal. I'm returning a call of his to one of your students regarding a health and legal matter. I'm the mother.' A pause.

'Great.' She cups the phone. 'I'm being connected.' 'I can't believe you're doing this,' I say.

'I can't believe you'd be worried about me doing this... yes, hello? Is this Mr...' she looks at me.

'Janowitz,' I mouth.

'Janowitz?'

I hear an affirmative mump through the line. 'I'm Dr. Ross, calling for your student Dariez Gilner. You called him before at UMPC Hospital psychiatric facility in Knox. I'm Dariez's licensed therapist and I'm right here with him; would you like to speak with him?'

She nods. 'Here you go, Dariez.'

I take the cell phone—it's smaller than mine, buzzier. 'Um, hello?'

'Dariez, why'd you hang up on me?' His booming voice is light and gentle, almost laughing.

'Ah... I thought I was in trouble. I thought I was being expelled. You called me, you know, in the hospital.'

'Dariez, I called you because I got a message from one of our teachers. I just wanted to tell you that you have the school's full support in everything you're going through and that we're more than willing to have your semester repeated, or given over the summer, or for work to be provided for you where you are now if you should miss enough days to warrant that.'

'Oh.'

'We don't pass judgment on our students for being in the hospital, my goodness, Dariez.'

'No? But it's, like, a psychiatric-'

'I know what kind of hospital it is. Do you think we don't have other kids in these situations? It's a very common problem among young kids.'

'Oh. Uh, thanks.'

'Are you doing okay?'

'I'm doing better.'

'Do you know when you'll be leaving?'

I don't want to tell him Thursday and then have it be Friday.

Or next Thursday. Or next year.

'Soon,' I say.

'Okay. You just hang in there, and whenever you come back, we'll be waiting for you at Executive Pre-Professional.' 'Thanks, Mr. Janowitz.' And I picture it in my mind: me going back to school. My little group of friends- only they're not even my friends anymore offered by this new collection of girls who like me because I'm depressed and teachers who are sympathizing and the suddenly nice principal. It's something I want to get excited about. But I can't.

'See, was that so bad?' Dr. Ross asks. And I have to admit that it wasn't. But it was kind of like getting told that the prison is happy that you've been granted a temporary reprieve but we'll be right here with open arms to take you in when you come back.

'The plan right now is to discharge you Thursday, Dariez, and I'll be here to talk to you on Wednesday, all right?' Dr. Ross asks. I shake her hand and thank her. I tell her what I tell her when I feel really good about talking to her, which is that she knows how to do her job. Then I go back to my room and draw some brain maps.

I'm excited for tonight, for Armelio's big card tournament.

'Okay!' says Armelio. 'Everybody here?'

We're back in the activities lounge. Joy, Humble, Ebony, and the Professor are here. Everyone shaved today-it turns out that the shaving rule is only enforced on weekdays- and they look ten times-s better. Even Rolling Pin Robert, pacing the halls outside, looks serviceable. I'll have to remember that: shaving can make even a psych patient look good.

'Huh.' Joy exhales. 'Joy's still in his interview.' 'Yeah,' Ebony says. 'Dariez lent him a shirt. You're so nice, Dariez.'

'Thanks.'

'When are you going to do more of your art?'

'Maybe tonight, after cards.'

'That's right, buddy, cards are what we need to focus on,' Armelio announces. He stands at the head of the table, which is covered with paint drops, crayon marks, and ink smears over uneven wood. In the middle is a plastic container with the buttons, separated into four even partitions. It looks like at some point the buttons were ordered by size or color, but now they're all mixed up every conceivable hue, shape, and ornamentation.

They look like jewels.

'I don't want any of my buttons missing at the end!' Lacey says from the back. She's at the other table, reading a Roboyce novel and supervising.

'That's right, we're still looking for the Blue Button Bandit,' Humble says. 'Anybody who can suddenly keep their pants up, we're going to be very suspicious. Watch out for Solomon, that means. And Ebony.'

'I told you once, stupid, to stop talking about my pants.' 'Okay, everybody ready?' Armelio asks. 'Take your buttons!'

Our hands dive into the middle of the table, grabbing fistfuls. We pour the buttons in front of us and use our fingertips to spread them into a one-button-thick layer. Armelio gets to judge whether we have an equal amount.

'Humble put back six buttons. Ebony, put back ten. Joy, what's going on, buddy? You have like two hundred buttons too ~Sped~!

‘I got a button bonus,’ Joy says, and just then Joy comes into the activity room.

He moves with his normal loping gait, leaning back with my shirt on. He stops at the end of our table, makes sure he has our attention, raises his right hand, shakes it in the air like he’s doing a magic trick, and then slams both his fists down on the table so his arms make a ‘V-shape,’ as if he were Chairboy of the Board. He grins:

‘I got it.’

Silence holds the room.

Lacey starts the clapping from the back, slowly, but with reverence and purpose. Then Armelio joins in and the tempo starts to spiral.

‘All right!’

‘Congratulations!’

‘Hooray for Knox scumbags!’

‘Joy-by! Joy-by!’

In a small room, eight kids clapping can be a lot. The posters seem to shake with the applause. As it gets louder there’s howling and hooting and cheering. Tommy gets up and gives Joy a bear hug, the kind that you can see between two men who’ve known one another for twenty years, who’ve been Fiend One and Fiend Two, for whom one’s victory counts just as much for the other.

‘Joy, buddy, you the boy!’ Armelio walks over to the hugging pair and smacks Joy’s back, nearly toppling over me.

‘Wait a minute,’ Joy says. He extracts himself from the hug and holds up his right hand. ‘Before we get too crazy, ‘because, I see the buttons are out, I got to thank this young boy over here.’ He walks toward me. ‘This kid literally gave me the shirt off his back this blue one right here and he did n’t know me from Adam, and there ain’t no question, without him, I wouldn’t have gotten this home. This new home.’

I stand up and Joy hugs me, his big bony hands wrapping around my back, and I feel the smooth old skin of his cheek and the well-knit fabric of my shirt doing a better job on him than it ever did on me. I think about how much this means to this boy; about how much more important it is than going to any high school or getting with any girl or being friends with anybody. This boy just got a place to live. Me? I have one. I'll always have one. I don't have any reason to worry about it. My stupid fantasies about ending up homeless are just that- the fact is that my parents will take me in time-, anywhere. But some kids have to get lucky just to live. And I never knew I could make anybody lucky.

If Joy can get a place to live, I think, then I can get a life worth living.

'Thank you, kid,' Joy says.

'It's nothing,' I mumble. 'Thanks for the tour.' 'All right, boys, we going to play cards or what?' Armelio asks, but Joy stops him.

'One more thing: I'm really sorry, Dariez, but I accidentally fell in something on my way back from the interview.' He turns around. There's a... wait a minute...

There's a giant piece of dog shit ground into the back of my shirt, right above his belt.

'Ah ...' I can't believe I didn't smell it. Did I touch it when I hugged him? 'Ah, Joy... it's okay... my mom can wash it out-'

'It ain't real!' Joy reaches back and pulls it off, throws it at me. It bounces off my shirt (a tie-dye T-shirt that everyone on Six North likes) and lands on the table in the buttons.

'It's plastic! I've had it since the eighties! Ha! I love it!'

Armelio cracks up. 'Holy crap! Look at that! It looks like something my mom would leave in my bedroom!' Everyone stops, turns.

'President Armelio, we did not need to know that,' says Humble.

'Your mother would defecate in your bedroom?' The Professor asks.

'Who said that?' Armelio asks. 'I was talking about plastic what's the matter with you?'

'Everybody just cools it a little,' says Lacey, standing up with her book at her side. 'Let's have fun, but keep calm.'

‘All right, who gets the doodie button?’ Humble holds up the poop. ‘I think it counts for two.’

Joy sits down and we ante up. The game is poker, seven-card stud. I’m no good at it. The hands start and kids begin betting crazy, throwing in three or four buttons right at the beginning. I can’t match them. I have a limited number. And I don’t seem to be getting any good hands. So-o I fold. I fold three times in a row.

The third time-, Joy says, ‘You might as well bet. It’s just buttons.’

‘Yeah,’ Humble says. ‘Let me show you a secret.’ He reaches into the button container and takes out a handful. ‘See?’

‘I see,’ Armelio says, looking over his cards. ‘Don’t think that’s not cheating, Humble. Any more and you’re out.’

I laugh and bet six buttons.

‘What am I out of, exactly?’ Humble asks Armelio. ‘The button jackpot?’

‘Be nice,’ the Professor says.

‘Oh, listen to her,’ Humble jerks his thumb. ‘Trying to be the mediator.’ He leans into me. ‘Don’t let her grandma look fool you.

She’s a real hustler.’

‘Excuse me?’ The Professor puts down her cards. ‘What do you mean, ‘grandma?’”

‘Nothing, you just have that little old granny look about you, to lull kids into your trap of playing good cards!’ Humble gestures at himself disbelievingly.

‘You’re saying I’m old.’

‘I’m not! I’m saying you’re a grandma!’

‘Humble, apologize,’ Lacey says from the back.

‘Why? Grandmas are wonderful things.’

‘For your information, I’ll have you know,’ the Professor says, ‘that unlike certain kids around here I act my age.’

‘Oh, so now I’m a liar?’ Humble asks, standing up.

‘We all know that’s what you are,’ says the Professor.

‘People...’ Lacey warns.

‘If I’m a liar, you know what you are?’

‘What? You better not call me old because I’ll take this cane and whack you in the head right in front of everybody.’

‘You ain’t taking nothing of mine!’ Ebony holds her cane close. Quietly, she has far and away from the most buttons.

‘You’re a yuppie!’ Humble yells, and he picks up the dog doo and throws it at her head. ‘A stupid yuppie with no respect for anybody!’

‘A-aaagh!’ The Professor holds her face. ‘He broke it! He broke my nose!’ The dog doo has bounced all the way across the room and Lacey jumps over it lightly as she beats a hasty retreat.

‘Uh-oh,’ Armelio says. ‘Now you boys did it. We were having such a good card game.’

Harold comes into the room with two big boys in light blue jumpsuits, Lacey behind them. Humble raises his hands. ‘What? I didn’t do it!’

‘C’mon, Mr. Koper,’ Harold says.

‘I can’t believe it!’ Humble says. ‘She insulted me! It wasn’t even my dog poop! I didn’t have the weapon!’

He starts pointing at Joy. ‘He’s an accomplice. If I’m going, he’s going.’

‘Humble, you have three seconds to get over here.’ ‘All right, all right.’ Humble throws down his cards. ‘You boys have fun with your buttons.’ He’s escorted out by Harold and the security guards, getting a resounding slap on the butt from the Professor. She still has one hand on her face, claiming that she’s bleeding, but when she removes her hand there isn’t any kind of mark.

Lacey sits back down at her table.

'You all saw what happened. He attacked me,' the Professor says.

'Yeah yeah, we saw, Doomba,' says Armelio.

'Excuse me?'

'You're the Doomba; we all know you are.' 'What's a Doomba?' I ask.

'If you asking, maybe you're a Doomba, too!' Armelio looks mad. This is the first time - I've seen it.

'Huh,' Joy breathes.

'Dariez ain't no Doomba,' Joy says. 'He's on the level.' 'Aren't I the winner yet?' asks Ebony.

'How can you have so ~Sped~ buttons?' asks Armelio.

'You're not winning any hands!'

'It's cuz I don't overbeat,' Ebony says, leaning over, and a stream of buttons comes roaring out of her top.

'Whoops!'

They keep coming-a mountain spilling over the ante pile. She starts laughing and laughing, showing us her very neat and clean gums while she howls: 'O-oooooh, I got you! I got all- of you!'

'That's it,' Armelio says, throwing down his cards. 'Every Monday the card tournament always gets messed up! I quit!'

'Do you resign your position as President?' Joy asks him.

'Forget you, buddy!'

My tongue hurts from so much biting. It might not have been a regulation game, but it definitely had as ~Sped~ emotional ups-and-downs as the poker on TV. I clean up with Joy and Lacey.

Tonight, when I get in bed, I'm too busy wondering about what a Doomba is, and when Ebony stuck the buttons in her breasts, and what that even feels like, and Joy and the fact that I get to see her tomorrow, to do anything but sleep.

Part: 14

The next day Humble isn't around for breakfast. I sit with Joy and, collect my shirt, perfectly folded, and put it on the back of my chair. I drink the day's first 'Swee-Touch-Nee' tea and ask what they did with Humble.

'Oh, he's happy. They went and gave him some serious drugs, probably.'

'Like what?'

'You know about drugs? Pills?'

'Sure. I'm a teenager.'

'Well, Humble is psychotic and depressed,' Joy explains. 'So, he gets SSRIs, lithium, Xanax-'
'Vicodin,' Joy says. 'Vicodin, Valium... he's like the most heavily medicated boy in here.'

'So, when they took him away, they gave him all that stuff?'

'No, that's what he gets normally. When they take him away, they give him shots, I bet.
Atavan.'

'I had that.'

'You did? That'll knock you right out. Was it fun?'

'It was okay. I don't want to be taking stuff like that all the Joy-.'

'Huh. That's the right attitude,' says Joy. 'We got a little sidetracked by drugs, me and Joy.'

'Yeah, no kiddin',' Joy says. He shakes his head, looks up, chews, and folds his hands.
'Sidetracked isn't even the word. We were off the face of this planet. We were holed up twenty-four hours a day. I missed so ~Sped~ concerts.'

'I'm sorry-'

‘-Santana, Zeppelin, what’s that later one with the junkie, Nirvana ... I could-a saw Rush, Van Halen, Mötley Crüe, everybody. All this back when it cost ten bucks to get in. And I was too much of a garbage-head to care.’

‘What’s a garbage-head?’

‘Somebody who does anything, whatever,’ Joy explains. ‘You give it to me, I’d do it. Just to see what it was like.’

Jeez. I’ll admit that it sounds a little sexy. I see the appeal. But maybe that’s why I’m in here, to meet boys who take the appeal away.

‘Do you think Humble stages scenes, so he can get drugs?’ I’m spreading cream cheese on a bagel now. I started ordering bagels x2 for breakfast; they’re far and away from the best option.

‘That’s the kind of thing you just can’t speculate about,’ Joy says.

‘Oh, here comes your girl.’

She rushes in with a tray and sits down in a corner, drinks her juice, dips at her oatmeal. She glances over at me. I wave as lightly as I can, so kids think maybe I have a spasmodictwitch. I haven’t seen her since Sunday; I don’t know what she did all of yesterday. I don’t know how she eats if she doesn’t leave her room. Same with Joy. Maybe they deliver food to her? There’s still so much I don’t know about this place.

‘Huh, she is a cutie,’ Joy says.

‘C’mon, boy, don’t be saying that. She’s like thirteen,’ Joy says.

‘So? He’s like thirteen.’

‘I’m fifteen.’

‘Well, let him say it, then,’ Joy says to me. ‘Leave the thirteen-year-olds to the thirteen-year-olds.’

‘I’m fifteen,’ I interject.

‘Dariez, you should probably wait a few years, because sex at thirteen can mess you up.’

'I'm fifteen!'

'Huh, I was doing stuff when I was fifteen,' says Joy.

'Yeah,' says Joy. 'With boys.'

Pause. If Richard were here, he would say it out loud:

'Pause.'

'Huh. This food sucks.' Joy pushes his waffles aside. 'Kid,' he says. 'Just do this for me. If you get with her, freak her a little bit.

You know what I mean?'

'Stop it,' I look at Joy. 'You got a daughter that age.'

'I'd set him up with my daughter, too. Probably do her good.'

'Wait, how do you boys even know about this? I only talked with her once, and it was really short. Nothing happened.'

'Yeah, but you came into the activity center with her.'

'We notice everything.'

I shake my head. 'What's going on today?' 'At eleven the guitar boy is coming. Joy, she'll play.'

'Oh, yeah?'

'Huh, if the inclination hits.'

I finish up my bagel. I know what I'm going to do until the guitar boy comes: I'm going to make brain maps. I kind of have an audience now. Lacey lent me some high-quality pencils and glossy paper since I helped her out with clean-up after the card tournament debacle, so I can draw whenever I want. When I do, kids line up to watch me work. Ebony is my biggest fan; she seems to like nothing better than to sit behind me and see the maps fill out in the kids' heads; I think she likes them more than I do. The Professor is big into them too; she says my art is 'extraordinary' and I could sell it on the street if I wanted. I'm branching out into variations: maps in kids' bodies, maps in animals, maps connecting two kids together. It comes naturally, and it passes the joy of time - and it feels a little more accomplished than playing cards.

'I'm going to work on my art,' I tell the boys.

'If I had half your initiative, things would-a turned out different,' says Joy.

'Huh, yeah; I want to be you when I grow up,' says Joy.

I walk out with my tray.

The guitar boy's name is Neil; he has a black goatee and a black shirt and suede pants, and he looks totally stoned. He comes in with a vintage-looking electric guitar-I don't know brands, but it looks like something the Beatles would have had-and plugs it into his amp on a chair before we file in. There's something I didn't expect in the room- instruments on all the seats around the circle and kids run for the ones they want. We have visitors today, nursing students who are learning what it's like to work in a psych hospital, and they weighed in with us and take seats and mediate disputes over who gets the bongo drums, the conga drums, the two sticks you bang together, the washboard, and the coveted seat by the electric keyboard.

'Hey, everybody!' Neil sways. 'Welcome to musical exploration!'

He's playing simple chords in a studded belt that I think is supposed to be reggae, and after a while, I realize it's 'I Shot the Sheiff.' He starts singing and he's just got a terrible voice, like an albino Jamaican frog, but we chime in as best we can with our voices and whatever instruments we ended up with.

Armelio bangs on his chair with some sticks and gets bored, leaves the room.

Becca, the big girl, asks if she can trade her bongos (the little ones) for my congas (the big ones,) and I switch. I try to play the fills that come after the choruses in 'I Shot the Sheiff' and Neil recognizes that I'm trying, gives me a chance to shine each time-, but I can't pull them off.

Joy, directly across from me, shakes maracas and her hair, smiling. I occasionally fire off a bongo fill just for her but I'm not sure if she notices. The star of the show is my-a Joy.

I didn't have any idea that the high-pitched noises he made were singing. Once the music starts, he goes right into the universe, banging against his washboard and letting it all hang out in a piercing falsetto that's surprisingly on key. The thing is, he doesn't sing 'I Shot the Sheiff.' He sings only one phrase:

'How sweet it is!'

Doesn't matter where the song is or what it is; Joy will hum along to the tune as necessary, and then, as soon as there's a break that he can be heard over, remind us: 'How sweet it is!' He sounds a little like Mr. Hankey from South Park. The nursing students, who are all West Indians like Nurse Monieec, and young, unlike her, absolutely adore him and give him big smiles, which increases his activity. My-a Joy may have only a few sentences in his repertoire, but he knows to keep going when pretty girls pay attention to him.

I send out fill for him. He sings back. I'm convinced that some part of him knows we came in together. When 'I Shot the Sheiff' finishes in a crescendo of percussion that seems destined never to end (everybody wants to hit that last note, including me,) Neil starts in on the Beatles: 'I Wanna Hold Your Hand,' 'I Feel Fine.' The Beatles are apparently the cue for kids to get up and dance. It begins with Becca, at Neil's left. A nursing student pulls her up, she leaves her conga aside and starts wiggling her big butt in the middle of the circle-we yell out encouragement. She turns red and grins, and when she sits down, it's Joy's turn-he moves like John Travolta in Pulp Fiction, shaking his hips with a laconic tilt, turning his feet more than his body.

Joy refuses to dance but Joy's his head. The nursing students dance with one another and with Neil. Then it comes around to me. I hate dancing. I've never been good at it and I don't mean that in the traditional scared teenager way: I'm really not good.

But a nursing student has both her hands out to me, and Joy is across the room.

I put my bongos aside and try to think about what I'm doing as I do it. I know that you're not supposed to think about dancing what is that stupid expression, sing like no one's listening, dance like no one's watching? Whatever...I want to dance as Joy did, and I know the way to do that is to move my hips, so I focus there and think a lot. I don't think about my arms. I don't think about my legs. I don't think about my head. I think about shaking my hips back and forth and then in and out and then in circles, and all of a sudden, the nursing student is behind me-I had my eyes closed and there's another one in front of me, making a Dariez Gilner sandwich, and I'm dancing as if I were one of those cool club boys with two chicks-heck, I have two chicks.

I hold out my hand to Joy in a fit of confidence. She gets up and we go to the middle of the floor and shake our hips at each other, never touching, never talking, just smiling and keeping our eyes locked. I think she's actually looking to me for tips, so I mouth to her:

'Shake your hips!'

She does, her arms as out of place as my own, hanging at her sides with nowhere sexy to go. Where are you supposed to put your arms when you dance? It's like the Universal Question. I guess you're supposed to put them around someone.

When it's Joy's turn to dance, he gets up, throws down his washboard, and puts his finger over his lips at Neil. Neil stops playing. My-a Joy does a pirouette over the unaccompanied wild percussion that we've built up and lands on his knee: 'How sweet it is!'

When Neil's guitar is packed up, he comes over.

'Good job with those drum fills.'

'Yeah?'

'Yeah. I haven't seen you before. What's your name?'

'Dariez.'

'You had good rhythm; you got kids moving. Ah, I hope you don't mind me asking this but... why are you here? You seem pretty, you know, good.'

'I have depression,' I say. 'I had it really bad. I'm getting out in two days.'

'Great, wonderful, that's great to hear. I have a lot of friends with that.' He nods at me. 'Once you're out, do you ever think you might consider ... volunteering in a place like this?'

'Volunteering with what?'

'Well, do you play instruments?'

'No.'

'You probably could. You have a good musical sense.'

'Thanks. I do art.'

'What kind of art?'

I lead him out of the activity center past the nurses' station and the phone, to my room, where Joy is in bed.

'Dariez, I hear you all in the music room,' he says.

'You should have come.'

Neil smiles at him: 'Hello.'

'Hm.'

I pull the stack of my brain maps out for Neil. 'I do these.' I give him a whole armful, maybe fifteen of the best of them by now. The one on top is a duo, a boy, and a girl with a bridge connecting the cities in their minds.

'These are cool' Neil says. He flips through them.

'Have you done these for a long time-?'

'That depends,' I say. 'Ten years or a couple of days, depending on how you count it.'

'Can I have one?'

'I don't know if I can give them away for free.' 'Ha! Listen, for real, here's my card.' Neil pulls out a simple black-and-white business card that identifies him as a Guitar Therapist. 'Whenever you're out of here, and I'm sure it'll be soon, give me a call and we can talk about volunteering, and -I'm serious-I might like to buy some of these. How old are you? You should be on the teen floor, right, but they're renovating?' 'I'm young,' I say.

'I'm glad you came here and got the help you needed,' Neil says, and he shakes my hand in that way that kids do in here to remind themselves that you're the patient and they're the doctor/volunteer/employee. They like you, and they genuinely want you to do better, but when they shake your hand you feel that distance, that slight disconnect because they know that you're still broken somewhere, that you might snap at any moment.

Neil leaves the room and I spend the rest of the day drawing and playing cards with Armelio. around one-thirty I call Mom, tell her about the sing-along and the card tournament and how I danced, and she affirms that I'm sounding better and that she heard from Dr. Mahmoud that Thursday is a solid day and she and Dad will be ready when it's Joy- to pick me up. Even though it's only a few blocks back to my house, they have to pick me up in person.

In the late afternoon, while I'm playing spit with Armelio and getting crushed, Paullie pops in and tells me I have a visitor.

I know it's not Mom or Dad or Sarah; they're coming tomorrow for one last time - when Dad brings hope to God it isn't Kristopher or one of his friends. Blade II. I - It's Emmah.

I see her through the big window in the dining room, looking like she's been crying or she's about to cry, or both. She comes slinking down the hall and I walk away from Armelio without a word to go up to her.

Part: 15

'What are you doing here?' I ask, then pause. That's really a question other kids should be asking me.

'What do you think?' She has on light makeup that makes her lips sparkle and her cheeks a slight Asian red; her hair is drawn back to accent the curved proportions of her face. 'I'm here to see you.

'Why?'

She turns away. 'I'm having a really hard time right now, okay Dariez?'

'All right,' I get in step with her. 'Come on, the best place to talk is over here.'

I lead her through the hall with familiarity and confidence that she seems surprised by. I guess I'm a veteran here now. Sort of an alpha male. Which reminds me: still no Humble.

'Here.' I sit here in the chairs where I sat with my parents and Joy, 'What's going on?'

She puts her hands on her knees. She has on a little beige combat outfit with black boots; she looks like a Soviet soldier recruit. The light comes in behind her and makes her skin sparkle. I've seen her in this get-up before; it's one of her particularly hottest ones: when you bind up little breasts in boy-type clothing they're just that much more intriguing.

'Kristopher and I broke up,' she says.

'No.' I open my eyes wide.

'Yes, Dariez.' She wipes her face. 'After that night when he called here? And you told him I was on

Prozac?'

'What? Are you saying that it's my fault?'

'I'm not saying it's anybody's fault!' She chops her arms against her thighs and takes a deep breath.

The Professor peers out of her room.

'Who are you?' Emmah turns.

'I'm Aboyda,' she says. 'I'm Dariez's friend.'

'Well, we're trying to have a conversation; I'm really sorry.' Emmah wipes her hair.

'It's okay. But you shouldn't yell. Solomon will come out.'

'Who's Solomon?' Emmah turns to me. 'Is he dangerous?' 'Nobody here is dangerous,' I say, and as I say it, I put my hand over Emmah's, on her thigh. I'm not sure why I do it- to reassure her? I guess it's just an instinct, a reaction. Subconsciously I suppose I'm thinking that it's a really hot thigh and that I would love to have my hand there without her hand serving as a buffer. I haven't really gotten the chance to touch any girl's thigh, and Emmah's beige ones seem just about as alluring as thighs get. I even think it's a sexy word: thigh.

'Dariez, hello?'

'Sorry, I was spacing out.'

She looks down at my hand and gives a little smirk. She doesn't move it away. 'You're funny. I was asking you if you like it here.'

‘It’s not bad. It’s better than the school.’

‘I believe that.’ Now her hand-her another hand- is on top of my hand on top of her thigh. I think of the dancing sandwich I was in before in the activity lounge. I feel how warm she is and remember how I noticed that at the party, eons ago. ‘I’ve been thinking about going to a place like this.’

‘What?’ I pull my body away but keep my hand under hers.

‘What do you mean?’

‘I’ve been thinking of, you know, checking myself in, spending some time - here, or somewhere like it, reentering, like you.’

‘Emmah.’ I shake my head. ‘You can’t just come in here because you want to.’ ‘Isn’t that what you did?’

‘No!’

‘What did you do, then?’ She tilts her head.

‘I... I had like a medical emergency,’ I explain. ‘I called up the Suicide Hotline and they sent me here.’

Emmah leans back. ‘You called the Suicide Hotline?’ She holds my hand up, clutches it. ‘Oh, Dariez!’ I look at my crotch. I’m springing up. I can’t help it. She’s so close. This face is so close to mine and it’s the same face I’ve jerked off to so ~Sped~ times. I’ve conditioned myself to want this face. I want her. I feel her on me and I want her right now in her little Russian army outfit. I want to see what she looks like with it off. I want to see what she looks like with it half off.

‘I didn’t realize...’ she continues. ‘I knew you wanted to kill yourself; I never knew you wanted to kill yourself. I never- would have told Kristopher that you called me from that weird number if

I’d known it was so serious.’

‘Well, what do you think kids come here for?’ My hand twitches around hers.

‘To get better?’ She asks.

‘Yeah, exactly. But you have to be really bad before they make you get better here.’

Emmah swishes her head and her hair slides around her dark eyes. 'I thought that you got bad because of me. And I thought I could make you better.'

She's so cute. The way she holds her face, it's like she always knows the best angles. We hold each other's eyes. I see myself in hers. I look expectant, ready, eager, stupid, willing to do anything.

I don't like how I look. Humble wouldn't like it either; it doesn't have any strength or will. But I don't have any strength or will when I'm with her. I don't have any choice. We're going to do whatever she wants.

'What about Kristopher?' I ask.

'I told you.' She drops almost to a whisper. 'I broke up with him.'

'You broke up with him?' I want it clarified.

'It was mutual. Is this important?'

'Probably broke up?'

'Looks like it.'

'Don't you think it's a little soon for you to be coming in here and, like, touching me?'

She shakes her head and purses her lower lip. 'I've been thinking about you since we talked on the phone Friday night. And now I know you so much better. You've told me all this stuff about you and you're really ... I don't know ... you're mature. You're not like all these other kids with their stupid little problems. You're like, really screwed up.' She giggles. 'In a good way... The way that gives experience.' 'Huh.' I'm not sure what to say. No, wait, I know what to say: Go away, leave, I don't need you; I finished with you on the phone before; I met a girl here who's cooler and smarter; but when you've got a really gorgeous girl in front of you and she's biting her lip and talking low and smiling -and you're hard-what are you going to do?

'Huh ... uh ... well...' I'm back to stuttering. Maybe it was Emmah that made me stutter. I'm sweating too. 'Do you want to show me your room?' She asks.

That's a bad idea. It's a bad idea just as much as it's a bad idea to skip meals or stay awake in bed in the morning or stop taking your Zolof, but there's no hope for me now. I cede control to my lower half, which is actually pointing toward my room, and lead Emmah to it.

Part: 16

Joy isn't in the room. I can't believe it-it's like the first time since I've been here. I look at her rumpled sheets and try to make out a here form, but there isn't enough bulk to account for her. I peek in the bathroom-nothing.

'You have a roommate?' Emmah asks.

'Yeah, uh, he's usually here...'

'Ew-www...' She waves in front of her nose. 'Something smells.'

'The roommate's Italian; I don't think he wears deodorant.'

'Me either.'

I make like I'm cleaning up my stuff near my bed, but really, I'm just taking my brain maps and flipping them over.

'You don't get a TV?'

'No.'

'Do you read in here?'

'I like to read out in the hall with other kids. My sister gave me a Star magazine, but the nurses took it away to read themselves.'

She walks toward me, looking up idly glib and innocent. 'Do you get lonely here?'

'Actually, no,' I tell her. I move hair that is stuck to my forehead. I'm really sweating now. 'It's very social here. I made friends.'

'Who?'

'That lady you were talking to outside.'

‘Her? She’s so rude. She totally horned in on our conversation.’

‘She thinks someone sprayed insecticide in her apartment, Emmah. She gets paranoid.’

‘Really? That’s crazy. That’s really crazy.’

‘I don’t know. She might be right.’ Emmah is a few feet away from me now. Her shoulders are tilted up at me. I could pick her up and throw her on my unmade bed just like Kristopher has done for the past two years. These words we’re saying are just a front.

‘She’s a college professor.

There might be something to it.’

‘Dariez... ‘She’s right in front of me now. ‘Do you remember when you called me’ -she touches my forehead-‘oh, you’re sweating!’

‘Yeah, I do that. When I get nervous.’ ‘Are you okay? You’re really sweating.’ ‘I’m all right.’ I wipe it away.

‘Seriously, Dariez, that is gross.’ She scowls, then gets back to where she was. ‘When you called me, you remember how you asked what I would do if you came over and grabbed me and kissed me?’

‘Yeah...’ My stomach is tight. The boy is down there pulling on the rope. I thought I had him beat. I’d been eating so well.

‘I’d let you,’ she says. ‘You know I would.’

Now she’s got her glossy, sparkly lips turned up at me, and I feel this amazing dichotomy going on. It’s almost like before I came in here when I was in my mom’s bed when my brain wanted to die but my heart wanted to live. Now, quite literally, everything from my stomach up wants to run to the bathroom, to throw up, to talk to Armelio or Joy or Paullie, to kick Emmah out, to get ready for my second date with Joy. But the bottom half has been denied too long. It’s been ready for this for two years, and it knows what it wants. It says that the real cause of all my problems is that I haven’t been satisfying it.

And these aren’t any lips, either, that I’m presented with to rectify my lack of play. These are lips that I’ve had access to for years in my mind. I’ve done terrible, horrible things to these lips in the privacy of my bathroom. So- screw it. You've got to try sometime. I lean down and grab Emmah and push her back on Joy's bed.

I didn't mean to; I meant to turn her around and put her on my bed, but she happened to be in front of me and I couldn't switch directions in mid-grab. I cover her with my thin body and kiss her upper lip first, encase it in my lips, then do the lower one, then try to do them both at once, only that doesn't really work, it's like trying to pull the lips off her head, and she laughs, which gives me her beautiful smile to kiss, the hard white teeth-I don't mind- and then I use my tongue the way I've seen in movies and put my hands on her soldier outfit and feel what I don't have and have wanted for years pressing back at me, taut and yielding at the same time. Two of them.

'Mmmmm,' Emmah mmmmmms, putting her small hands on the back of my head. She feels my hair; I shake against her. I can't believe how good it feels. This is how good it feels? Why the hell did I ever get depressed?

I remember what Kristopher said about the inside of a girl's cheek feeling like another place and I lick the insides of hers. She shivers; she likes it; it's like Kristopher said: she likes sex; her tongue becomes a jittery dart flicking in and out of my mouth. I feel the ring-a little metal bubble, something to add texture, foreign and dirty.

Forget it. Let's do it. I reach up to the buttons on her outfit.

My eyes are closed because if I open them, I think I might get a little too excited and ruin my pants, and Mom didn't bring me any pants.

Darn, the button I'm grabbing is in the middle. Up to one. No.

That's not it. One more.

'God.' she pulls away. 'I always wanted to hook up in a hospital.'

'What?' I look up at her chin. I'm still on top of her on Joy's bed, my legs sticking way off, almost hitting my bed.

'This was totally on my checklist.' She looks down. 'I and Kristopher never did anything like this.' That's a body blow to my whole body: the lower half that wanted this and the upper half that warned me about it. I can't think what to say: Please don't compare me to Kristopher? Please don't mention Kristopher? What checklist? So I say: 'Uh... um...' 'Sex!' I hear from the doorway.

It's Joy its time.

'Sex! Sex in my bed! Children make sex in my bed!' He runs over to us; I jump off Emmah and hold my hands up, thinking he's going to hit me, but he grabs me and holds me close to his square smelly body and carries me like a girder to the corner of the room.

'Um, Joy-'

'Dariez, who is that?' Emmah yells.

'I live here! Your terrible girl corrupts- my friend!' Joy puts me down, turns and stands with his arms crossed at Emmah, guarding me. 'You leave!' He points at the open door.

'There's no door!' Emmah peers at it. On some kind of incredible girl-Joy-, she's gotten up, smoothed out her outfit, and collected her purse from near Joy's pillow. She already has her cell phone out; it's blinking at her side. She's gesturing at me with it.

'There's a door, yeah,' I say, standing on tiptoes to talk over Joy's shoulder. 'We just didn't close it-' 'Don't talk to her!' Joy turns and shakes his finger at me. 'She tries and makes the sex in my bed!'

'It wasn't just me, okay?' Emmah bends her face in at him.

He turns back. 'In case you didn't notice, Dariez was on top of me. And we weren't going to have sex.' 'Girl is the temptress. My wife leaves me; I know.'

'Dariez, I'm out-a-here.'

'Uh, okay!' I answer into Joy's back. 'Ah-' I try and think how to sum it up. 'I like making out with you... but I don't really like you as a person...' 'Yeah, same here,' says Emmah.

'What is going on here?' It's Paullie. He shadows the door.

'Joy, what are you doing? And excuse me, young lady?'

'I was just leaving,' Emmah says.

‘You’re the visitor for Dariez, right?’

‘Not anymore.’

‘What happened in here?’

‘Nothing,’ says Joy. ‘Everything fine.’ He steps aside, turns, and gives me what I guess he thinks is a wink through his glasses.

‘Yeah, absolutely.’ I catch on. ‘Joy just came in and was surprised to see two kids in the room.’

‘Well, he should be,’ says Paullie, ‘because you’re not supposed to have visitors in your room. Don’t let it happen again, okay?’

‘No problem.’

‘Yeah, because you won’t be seeing me again,’ says Emmah, and Paullie gives her a disbelieving look as she walks away from him, stomping down the hall, slamming her shoes with each step.

He shrugs at us.

‘All right,’ he says to her back. ‘Sign out on your way out, miss.’

‘Dariez, what kind of girl is going to put up with this ... crap?’ Emmah turns around, spreads her arms, and gestures to the hall as if she owns it while she backs away. ‘Be quiet, Doomba!’ yells President Armelio from somewhere. She turns back around and doesn’t give any more looks back.

‘Huh,’ Paullie says. ‘Lovely girl. Everything cool, boys?’

We nod like kindergartners. ‘Yes.’

‘Don’t let anything like that happen again, Dariez.’

‘I won’t.’

‘Otherwise, you’ll be here a long time-.’ Paullie walks away from the door; Joy waits a few moments and then turns to me.

‘Dariez, I am sorry I only have very important beliefs about sex.’

‘No, I understand. You did a good thing.’

‘You are not in trouble, yes?’

‘No, I’m fine. You handled it perfectly, boy.’ I put out my hand to get a slap from him, but he misinterprets that as a handshake attempt, so I take the initiative and turn it into a hug, a big smelly one. His glasses smack against me.

‘I am out trying to get Italian music in hospital,’ he says. ‘You give me an idea. But they have none. Now I rest.’ And he climbs back in bed, rearranges his sheet, curls into a fetal position, and stares through me.

I glance at the door. Right there, with her bright green eyes wide open, is Joy.

‘I only have a couple of questions for you,’ Joy says, walking up fast at seven o’clock as I sit in the chair that I’ve come to call my conference chair since I meet with so ~Sped~ kids in it. I wonder what else has happened in this chair-kids have probably peed on it, licked it, drummed their heads against it, and writhed around in it spouting gibberish. That gives me comfort. It feels like a chair with some history.

I didn’t think Joy was going to show up, so I almost didn’t come-but then I decided I didn’t want any regrets. I’m done with those; regrets are an excuse for kids who have failed. When I get out in the world, from now on, if I start to regret something, I’m going to remind myself that whatever I could have done, it won’t change the fact that I was in a psychiatric hospital. This, right here, is the biggest regret I could ever have. And it’s not so bad.

I rush out to talk to her, but she flies down to her room and closes her door. I run-up to it and knock, but there’s no answer, and when Paullie passes me, shooting a look, I have to stop knocking.

I check the clock in the hall and sigh. It’s five. Two hours after our second date.

Joy seems to be looking at me for comment. But I’m amazed at how she looks. New clothes: a pair of tight blue jeans cut down dangerously low and a sliver of white underwear sticking out above them. Does the underwear look like it has pink stars on it-do girls’ underwear really have pink stars? ...And I almost stare, before my eyes are drawn by the soft curve of her stomach to her T-shirt, which is wrapped against her with some kind of mystical female force, reading I- HATE BOYS.

How come girls are coming to me dressed all hot all of a sudden?

Above the shirt is her face, bordered by blond hair pulled back and highlighted by her cuts.

‘Uh... Why’d you wear that T-shirt?’ I ask. ‘Is that a message to me?’

‘No. I hate boys, not you. And this is one reason why: they’re so arrogant. Why is that?’ She stands with her hands on her hips.

‘Well ...’ I think. ‘Do you want like, a real, honest answer?’ My brain is working better than it did before. It has bagels and soup and sugar and chicken in it. It’s firing almost like it used to.

‘No, Dariez, I want a big, dumb, fake answer.’ Joy rolls her eyes. I think her breasts roll in sync with them. Girls’ breasts are so amazing.

‘Wait, you didn’t ask a question!’ I smirk. ‘One point for you.’

‘We’re not playing the game, Dariez. We were going to, but I’m too mad.’

‘Okay, well, darn...’ I start. ‘What were we talking about?’

‘Why boys are so arrogant.’

‘Right. Well, you know, were born into the world seeing that we’re just a little bit... We tend to have things a little bit easier than girls. And we tend to assume therefore that the world was built for us, and that we’re, you know, the culmination of everything that came before us. And then we get told that having a little bit of this attitude is called balls and that balls are good, and we kind of take it from there.’

‘Wow, you are honest,’ she says, sitting down. ‘An honest asshole.’ Yes! She sat down! ‘Who the hell was that girl?’ ‘A girl I know.’

‘She’s pretty.’ (It’s amazing how girls can say this and make it the most withering insult.) ‘Is she your girlfriend?’

‘No. I don’t have a girlfriend. Never had a girlfriend.’

‘So-o, she was just a girl you were hooking up within your room?’ ‘You saw, huh.’

‘I saw everything: from out here to your roommate’s bed.’

‘What, you were following me?’

‘I’m not allowed?’

‘Well, no-’

‘You don’t like it?’ She leans in. ‘You don’t like some poor little girl’ -she throws on a Little Bo-Peep voice, fluffs her hair- ‘following big, da- Dariez around the ward?’

‘It’s not an award, it’s a psych hospital.’ But yes, yes, I do like you following me around; yes, that’s awesome. ‘I can’t believe I didn’t notice you. ...’ I think of the flashes of Joy and time - with Emmah if I ever glanced down the hall or checked behind me.

‘You were in a state of excitement; that’s why.’

‘Well. You want to know who she was?’

‘No. I lost interest.’

‘You did?’

‘No! Tell me!’

‘Okay, okay, she was this girl I’ve known for a long time -, and she came in here-’

‘Just overcome with lust for you?’

‘Yeah, sure, exactly; she came in overcome with lust and I took advantage of her.’ I flick my hand. ‘No, what really happened is she came in here lonely and confused, I think, and thinking that she belonged in a place like this... ‘

‘That was pretty funny when your roommate caught you.

That kind of made the whole thing worthwhile.’

‘I’m glad you think so.’

‘You’re never going to be a good cheater. You’re going to be one of those boys who gets caught on the first try.’

‘Is that good?’

‘You didn’t even close the door. How’d you know the girl?’

‘She was my best friend’s girlfriend since we were like thirteen.’

‘How old are you now?’

‘Fifteen.’

‘Me too.’

I look at her anew. There’s something about kids who are the same age. It’s like you got piped out in the same shipment. You’ve got to stick together. Because deep down I believe my year was a special year: it produced me.

‘So, you ____ ed your best friend’s, girlfriend?’

‘No, they broke up.’

‘When?’

‘Uh, a few days ago.’

‘She moves fast!’

‘I think,’ I think out loud, ‘she’s just one of these girls who’s really not had a boyfriend.’
‘Some of us, we’d call those girls sluts. Do you think she had a boyfriend when she was eight?’

‘Ew.’

‘Maybe she was letting-’

‘Stop! Stop! I don’t want to hear it.’

‘It happens.’ Joy looks at me.

I nod, and pause, and let that sink in. It does happen.

‘Um... how are you?’ I ask.

‘You think you’re really smart, don’t you?’

I laugh. ‘No. That’s one of the reasons I came in here, actually. Thinking I was dumb.’

‘Why would you think that? You’re in a smart school.’

'I wasn't doing well there.'

'What were you getting?'

'Ninety-threes.'

Oh.' Joy nods.

'Yeah.' I folded my arms. 'I think you're really smart. You probably get good grades.'

'Not really.' She puts her chin in her palms like someone in a painting. 'You're not very good at giving compliments.'

'What?'

'I'm smart! C'mon.' 'You're attractive, too!' I say. 'Does that work?'

You're attractive! Did I say that already? I said it the other day, right?'

'Attractive? Dariez, real estate is attractive. Houses.'

'Sorry, you're beautiful. What about that?' I can't believe I'm saying it. We'll both be out of here in two days; that's why I'm saying it. No regrets. 'Beautiful is all right. There are better ones.'

'Okay, okay, cool.' I crack my neck-

'Ew-www. "What?'

'Don't do that. Especially when you're about to compliment me.'

'Fine, okay. What are better words than beautiful?'

She puts on a Southern accent: "Go-geous."

'Okay, okay, you're gorgeous.'

'That sounds terrible. Do it my way: go-geous.'

I do it.

'You can't even do a Southern accent? Oh my gosh, are you even from America?' 'Gimme a break! I'm from here!' 'Knox?'

‘Yeah.’

‘This neighborhood?’

‘Yeah.’

‘I have friends here.’

‘We should meet up sometime-.’

‘You’re so terrible. Try some more compliments.’

‘Okay.’ I dig down deep. I got nothing. ‘Um...’

‘You don’t know anymore?’

‘I’m not good at words.’

‘See, this is why the math nerds don’t get girls.’

‘Who said I was a Math nerd? I told you my grades suck.’

‘You might be one of those nerds who’s not smart. Those are the worst kind.’

‘Listen,’ I stop her. ‘I’m really glad you’re here talking with me, and I’ve met a lot of kids in here.’

‘Uh-oh,’ she says. ‘Is this the part where it gets all serious?’

‘Yes,’ I say. And when I say it, the way that I say it, I see that she understands that I’m serious about being serious. I can be serious now. I’ve been through some serious shit and I can be serious like somebody older.

‘I like you a lot,’ I start. No regrets. ‘Because you’re funny and smart and because you seem to like me. I know that’s not a good reason, but I can’t help it; if a girl likes me, I tend to like her back.’

She doesn’t say anything. I dip my head at her. ‘Um, do you want to say anything?’ ‘No. No! This is fine. Keep going.’ ‘Well, okay, I’ve been thinking about how to put this. I like you for all this stuff but I also kind of like you for the cuts on your face-’

‘Oh no, are you a fetishist?’

‘What?’

‘Are you like blood fetishists? There was one of them in here before. He wanted to make me like his Queen of the Night or something.’

‘No! It’s nothing like that. It’s like this: when kids have problems, you know ... I come in here and I see that kids from all over have problems. I mean, the kids that I’ve made friends with are pretty much a bunch of lowlifes, old drug addicts, kids who can’t hold jobs; but then every few days, someone new comes in who looks like he just got out of a business meeting.’

Joy nods. She’s seen them too: the scruffy youngish boy who came in today with a pile of books as if it were a reading retreat.

The boy who came in yesterday in a suit and told me in the most practical way that he heard voices and they were a real pain in the ass; they didn’t say anything scary but they were always saying the stupidest stuff while he was in trial.

‘And not only in here: all over. My friends are all calling me up now: this one’s depressed, that one’s depressed. I look at what the doctors hand out, and there are studies that show like, one-fifth of Americans suffer from a mental illness, and suicide is the number-two killer among teenagers and all this crap ... I mean everybody’s messed up.’

‘What’s your point?’

‘We wear our problems differently. Like I didn’t talk and stopped eating and threw up all the time-’

‘You threw up?’

‘Yeah. Bad. And I stopped sleeping. And when I started doing that, my parents noticed, and my friends noticed, sort of- the kind of made fun of me but I could go through the world without really letting on what was wrong. Until I came here. Now it’s like: something is wrong. Or was wrong, because it feels like it’s getting better.’

‘What does this have to do with me?’

‘You’re out there about your problems,’ I say. ‘You put them on your face.’

She stops, puts her hand in her hair.

'I cut my face because too ~Sped~-too ~Sped~ kids wanted something from me,' she tries to explain. 'There was so much pressure, it was-' 'Something to live up to?'

'Exactly.'

'Kids told you-you- were hot and then all of a sudden they treated you different?'

'Right.'

'How?'

She sighs. 'You have to be the prude or the slut, and if you pick one, other kids hate you for it, and you can't trust anyone anymore, because they're all after the same thing, and you see that you can never go back to how it was before ...'

She pulls her face into one of those faces that could be laughing or crying-they use so ~Sped~ of the same muscles-and leans forward.

'And I didn't want to be part of it,' she says. 'I didn't want to be part of that world.'

I grab her leaning into me, feel for the first time - the soft dimple of her body. 'Me neither.'

She puts her arms around me and we hold each other like that from our two chairs, like a house constructed over them, and I don't move my hands at all and 'I wasn't doing well there.' 'What were you getting?' 'Ninety-threes.' 'Oh.' Joy nods. 'Yeah.' I told my arms. 'I think you're really smart.

You probably get good grades.'

'Not really.' She puts her chin in her palms like someone in a painting. 'You're not very good at giving compliments.'

‘And I didn’t want to be part of it,’ she says. ‘I didn’t want to be part of that world.’

I grab her leaning into me, feel for the first Joy of time- the soft dimple of her body. ‘Me neither.’

She puts her arms around me and we hold each other like that from our two chairs, like a house constructed over them, and I don’t move my hands at all and neither does she.

‘I didn’t want to play the smart game,’ I tell her. ‘And you didn’t want to play the pretty game.’

‘The pretty game’s worse,’ she whispers. ‘Nobody wants to use you for being smart.’

‘Kids wanted to use you?’

‘Someone did. Someone who shouldn’t.’

I stop.

‘I’m sorry.’

‘It wasn’t you.’

‘Should I not touch you?’

‘No, no, you didn’t do anything. It’s okay. But... yeah.

It happened. And I lied before.’

‘About what?’

'It doesn't matter what kind of surgery I have. I did it with half a scissor, Dariez. It's going to leave scars. I'll have scars for the rest of my life. I didn't know what I was doing. I just wanted to get off the world a little after this... this thing... and now I'm never going to be able to have a job or anything. What are they going to say when I go into a job interview looking like...?' She snuffles, chuckles and snot comes out. '...Like a Klingon?'

'There are places in Califor-Emmah where they speak

Klingon. You can get a job there.'

'Stop it.'

We're still holding each other. I don't want to look up. I keep my eyes closed. 'There are anti-discrimination laws too. They can't hire you if you're qualified.' 'But I look like a freak now.'

'I told you, Joy,' I say into her ear. 'Everybody has problems. Some kids just hide their crap better than others. But kids aren't going to look at you and run away. They're going to look at you and think that they can talk to you, and that you'll understand, and that you're brave, and that you're strong. And you are. You're brave and strong.'

'You're getting better at the compliments.'

'Nah, I'm nothing; I can barely hold food down.'

'Yeah, you're skinny.' She laughs. 'We need to fatten you up.'

'I know.'

'I'm glad I met you.'

'You're bare and honest, Joy; that's what you are.' Words come into my head as they've always been there. 'And in Africa, your scarring would be highly prized.'

She snuffles again. 'I didn't like seeing you with that other girl.'

'I know.'

'You like me more, right?'

'Right.'

‘Why?’

I pull away from her-maybe the first time- in my life, I’ve ended a hug-because a level of eye contact is required.

‘I owe you a lot more than I do her. You really opened my eyes to something.’ My actual eyes have been closed for so long on Joy’s shoulder that the hall is blinding. But when they readjust, I see the Professor, watching us from her door, holding the doorknob with one hand and her shoulder with the other.

‘I wanted to show you this.’ I reach under my chair to pick up something for our meeting-I had it down there as a trump card. I didn’t think the date would go like this; I thought it would all be Joy yelling at me and I’d have to do something drastic. But now I can do something drastic and it’ll be like a cherry on top. I pull out my couple’s brain map and show it to her.

‘It’s a boy and a girl, see? I didn’t do any hair, but you can see how one has a feminine profile and the other is masculine.’ They’re lying down, not on top of each other, just side by side, floating in space. They have sketched-out legs and arms at their sides, but that’s the whole point of my brain maps- you don’t need to spend a lot of time on the legs or the arms. What they really have are brains-full and complete with whirling bridges and intersections and plazas and parks. They’re the most elaborate ones I’ve done yet: divided thoroughfares, alleys, Mill Run Road, traffic circles, tunnels, and toll plazas. The paper is 14’ x 19’ and I had room to make the maps huge; the bodies are small and unimportant; the key thing that your eye is drawn to (because- I understand now, somehow, that that’s how artworks) is a soaring bridge between the two heads, longer than the Kinzua Bridge, even, with coils of ramps like ribbons mashed up at each end.

‘It might be my best yet,’ I say.

She looks it over; I see the red in her eyes, fading. There aren’t any tear streaks-I still haven’t seen actual tear streaks on anyone. Her tears went right into my shirt; they cool and chafe now on my shoulder. ‘You were the one who suggested I do stuff from childhood,’ I continue. ‘I used to do these when I was a kid, and I forgot how fun they were.’

‘I bet you never did them like this.’

‘No, well, this is easier, because I don’t have to finish the maps.’

‘Thanks for getting me started. I owe you big.’

‘Thank you. Do I get to keep it?’ She looks up. ‘Not yet. I have to fix it up.’ I stand, stretch my back, and shrug down at her.

Do it, soldier.

Yes, sir!

‘But, um, I kind of wondered if I could have your phone number, so I can call you when we’re out of here.’

She smiles, and her cuts outline her face like a cat’s whiskers.

‘Crafty.’

‘I am a boy,’ I say.

‘And I hate boys,’ she says.

‘But a boy’s different,’ I say.

‘Maybe a little,’ she says.

Humble is back at dinner. He has entirely new clothes, a sparkly clean-shaven face, and eyes that won’t quite open all the way; he stations himself at his usual table under the TV in the dining room, which everyone left empty while he was gone. Joy’s there too, at the next table, her back to him; I walk in, say hi to both of them, grab the tables, put them together, and sit between them, smiling.

‘Joy, I don’t know if you’ve had the chance to meet Humble.’

‘Not really,’ she says. She’s still grinning. From our date, I hope.

‘Humble, Joy. Joy, Humble.’

‘Uh-huh...’ he says, squinting his eyes. ‘Those cuts on your face are trippy.’

‘Thanks?’ They shake hands.

‘You have a good handshake for a girl,’ says Humble.

‘You have a good one for a boy.’

My dinner is beans and hot dogs and salad, with cookies and pear at the end. I tackle it.

‘So-o, where’d they take you?’ I ask between bites.

‘Across the hall to geriatric,’ says Humble.

‘With the old kids?’ Joy asks.

‘Yeah. That’s where they take you when they have to get you whacked outta your mind.’

‘Where’d you hear the term ‘wack’?’ Joy asks.

‘Whacked?’ Humble picks a piece of salad out of his teeth with his thumb.

‘No, she thinks you’re saying ‘wack,’ like ‘that’s wack,’” I explain.

‘Wack, wacky, whacked, it’s all the same word. This is an old word. I used to have an uncle named Wacky- what are you laughing at? Boy, don’t start with me. This kid is a lot of trouble.’

‘Yeah, I know,’ says Joy. And she bangs her knee against my thigh. Awesome. A girl hasn’t done that to me since like fourth grade. ‘He’s a mess.’

‘I know,’ says Humble. ‘It’s because he’s too smart for his own good. He comes in here; he’s burned out. I’ve seen it before. I see it all the Joy-, but in kids in their twenties, thirties. This boy is so smart that he got burnt out in half the time-. He’s having like a midlife crisis as a teenager.’

‘Forget the midlife crisis,’ I say- ‘It’s all about the sixth- life crisis.’

‘What the hell is that?’

‘Well...’ I look at Joy. She’s not going to hit me with her leg again? I’m not sure if I want to talk. I don’t want to bore her. But I know I won’t bore Humble, and if I don’t bore her either, that would make it like a major victory.

‘Well, first there’s the quarter-life crisis,’ I say. ‘That’s like the characters on Friends-kids freaking out that they won’t get married. Twenty-year-olds. That’s probably true that kids get quarter-life crises; I wouldn’t know. But I know that now things work faster. Before you had to wait until you were twenty to have enough choices of things to do with your life to start getting freaked out. But now there’s so much stuff for you to buy, and so ~Sped~ ways you can spend your time and joy -, and so ~Sped~ specialties that you need to get started on very early in life-like ballet, right, Joy, when did you start ballet?’

‘Four.’

‘Okay. I started Tae Bo at six. So, there are like- so ~Sped~ kids angling for success and so ~Sped~ colleges you’re supposed to get into, and so ~Sped~ women you’re supposed to have sex with-’

‘You got to freak them,’ says Joy from across the room.

‘Were we talking to you?’ Humble asks.

‘Huh, eat your salt.’

‘What, tough boy? How about I knock your head off, how would you like that-’

‘Boys.’ Joy stands up and pulls her hair away from her cheeks, which are red in addition to being cut up. Everybody shuts up.

‘So now,’ I continue, ‘instead of a quarter-life crisis they’ve got a fifth-life crisis that’s when you’re eighteen and a sixth-life crisis that’s when you’re fourteen. I think that’s what a lot of kids have.’

‘What you have.’

‘Not just me. It’s the... um... should I keep going?’ ‘Yes,’ Joy says.

‘Well, there are a lot of kids who make a lot of money off the fifth- and sixth-life crises. All of a sudden they have a ton of consumers scared out of their minds and willing to buy facial cream, designer jeans, SAT test prep courses, condoms, cars, scooters, self-help books, watches, wallets, stocks, whatever... all the crap that the twenty-somethings used to buy, they now have the ten-somethings buying. They doubled their market!’

Joy has pulled up a chair next to me. ‘This kid is a freakin’ lunatic,’ he says.

‘I hope they keep him in here,’ says Humble.

‘So pretty soon.’ I keep thinking. ‘There’ll be seventh- and eighth-life crises. Then eventually a baby will be born and the doctors will look at it and wonder right away if it’s unequipped to deal with the world; if they decide it doesn’t look happy, they’ll put it on antidepressants, get it started on that particular consumer track.’

‘Hm,’ Humble says. I think he’s going to follow it up with something, but instead, he says: ‘Hm.’

Then- Like... ‘Your problem is you have a worldview totally informed by depression.’ He leans in. ‘What about rage?’

‘I was never big on rage.’

‘Why?’

‘It’s so much angrier in my head than it could ever be outside.’ ‘Extra cookies!’

It’s one of the nurses. We all get in line; it’s oatmeal and peanut butter. As I shuffle forward, Joy nudges me from behind; when I turn to her, she turns her face away as if I were trying to kiss her but she wouldn’t let me.

‘Your trouble,’ I say.

‘You’re silly,’ she answers.

I did it. I talked- and she liked me; she thought I was smart. I start to develop a plan. Once I get my cookies, I go to the phone to call Dad, who are already bringing Blade II tomorrow night. I want him to bring something else too.

This is your last full day at the hospital, is what I think when I get up- no one’s taking my blood today (it’s only happened once since Sunday) so I don’t get up super-early, but I’m still the first one in the halls. I take my shower and think about how much life would suck if hot water didn’t come out of the show-ahead when you wanted. I’ve tried to take cold showers and they’re wonderful when they’re over, but during the process, they feel like some form of animal torture. But then again, that’s the point when you take a cold shower you’re supposed to get in and out as fast as possible; that’s why they do it in the army.

That's right! Want to take a shot, soldier?

I don't think so- Sir.

Come on, what's the matter with you? You got a lot going for you; you don't want to keep it going?

I need a cold shower to keep things going?

That's right. Less time- in the shower, more on the battlefield.

Fine.

I can do this. I reach out and twist the temperature knob slowly to the left, then decide that I'm never going to get it done gradually so I'll have to do it like a Band Aid-I jerk it over. The water goes from toasty warm to frigid so quickly that it feels like it burns me. I bend my groin out of its path, but I know that's cheating, so I stick it back in as I furiously lather myself. Leg: up!

Down! Another leg: up! Down! Crotch: uh, scrub- scrub- scrub. Chest: wipe. Arm: down! Back! Other- arm: down! Back! Neck, face, turn around, wash your butt, and I'm out! Straight to the towel. I wrap it around myself and shiver.

I'm so desperate to put my clothes on that my socks stick to my wet feet. I go out to talk with Paullie.

'You okay?'

'First cold shower.'

'Of the day?'

'Of my life.'

'Yeah, that'll knock yah.'

'What's the news?'

Paullie holds up his paper. It seems that a new candidate is running for Mayor of Knox promising to give everyone who votes for him a lap dance. He's a multibillionaire, and at $100 per lap dance, he thinks he can lock up the vote. A lot of women are supporting him.

‘That’s crazy.’ I shiver. ‘It’s like... Who’s out there and who’s in here, you know?’

‘Absolutely. Better music in here, though.’ Paullie turns up the radio.

‘By the way, that’s a question I have-can I play some music in the hall tonight? At the other end?’

‘What kind?’

‘There are no words, don’t worry, nothing offensive. It’s something one of the kids in the hall will like. Like a gift.’

‘I’ll have to see it first.’

‘Okay. And you know I’m bringing that Blade? movie tonight to watch with the group.’

‘You think about that a minute. You’re bringing a vampire movie onto a floor full of psych patients.’

‘They can handle it.’

‘I’m not going to get any nightmares?’

‘Promise.’

‘Nightmares are a big problem in my job, Dariez.’

‘Understood.’

Paullie sighs put his paper down and get up. ‘You want me to do your vitals?’

He straps me in on the chair, pumps me up, and puts his soft fingertips on my wrist. Today I’m 120 / 70. The first day I haven’t been perfect.

Continued: 1

‘How’re you doing?’ Dr. Ross is like.

It’s 11 A.M. I sigh. After vitals was breakfast, where the boy who was afraid of gravity and Rolling Pin Robert were gone Humble told me and Joy that they got discharged. Toward the end of the meal, Joy touched her leg against mine for as long as it took me to drink the first sip of my after-breakfast Sweet-Touch Nee tea, which was a big sip. Then Moniee announced that we'd be screening Blade II tonight opposite the smoking lounge and everybody got excited, especially Joy: 'Huh, that movie is cool; a lotta vampires die.' No announcements about my music, but then again it hadn't arrived yet.

I took my Zolof in my little plastic cup and drew some brain maps by the window in the corner of the hall next to My-a Joy. I handled my phone messages, started thinking seriously about what I'd do the moment I got out-would I buy a cup of coffee? Walk to the park? Go home and start in on thee-mail?

-And-

That got me started thinking about e-mail, and all of a sudden, I was really glad to have Dr. Ross to go to. 'I'm doing okay, I think.'

She looks at me calmly and steadily. Maybe she's my Anchor.

'What's got you in doubt, Dariez?'

'Excuse me?'

'You said you were okay 'you think.' Why do you just think about it?'

'That's an expression,' I say.

'This isn't the place to be leaving if you're not feeling better, Dariez.'

'Right, well, I've been thinking about my e-mail.'

'Yes?'

'I'm really worried about getting out there and having to check it. The phones I'm caught up with, but the email might be pretty deadly.'

'Deadly... How can e-mail be deadly, Dariez?'

'Well.' I lean back, take a deep breath. Then I remember something. 'You know how I had a lot of problems with starting and stopping my sentences before?'

'Yes.'

‘Not lately.’

‘Really?’

‘Yeah, it’s like the opposite, like words can just pour out of me, the way they used to when I used to get in trouble in class.’ ‘Which was...’ She focuses on her pad to write this down.

‘A year ago, before- I went to Executive Pre- Professional.’

‘Right-now tell me about the e-mail.’ ‘The e-mail.’ I put my hands on the table. ‘I hate it. Like, right now, I haven’t been checking it for five days, okay?’

‘Since Saturday.’ She nods.

‘That’s right. Now, what are kids thinking while they’re trying to reach me? These are kids who probably already have some idea where I am because-

Emmah told Kristopher the number and he figured it out.’

‘Right: a big source of shame for you.’

‘Yes. But even if someone has no idea where I am, what are they thinking? Five days. They’re like: He’s crazy. He must have OD’ed or something. Everyone is expecting me to answer them instantly and I’m not able to.’

‘Who e-mails you, Dariez?’

‘Kids who want homework assignments, teachers, school clubs, announcements about charities I should volunteer in, invitations to Executive Pre-Professional football, basketball, squash games ...’

‘So-o, they’re mostly school-related.’

‘They’re all school-related. My friends don’t e-mail me. They call.’

‘So why don’t you just ignore the e-mails?’

‘I can’t!’

‘Why not?’

‘Because- then kids will be offended!’

‘And- what happens then?’

‘Well, I won’t get to join clubs, get credits, participate in stuff, get extra-credit... I’ll fail.’

‘At school.’

‘Right.’ I pause. No, it’s not exactly school. It’s what comes after school. ‘At life.’

‘Ah.’ She pauses. ‘Life.’

‘Right.’

‘Failing at school is failing in life.’

‘Well... I’m in school! That’s the one thing I’m supposed to do. I know a lot of famous kids didn’t do well at school, like James Brown; he dropped out in fifth grade to be an entertainer, I respect that... but that’s not going to be me. I’m not going to be able to do anything but work as hard as possible all the Joy- and compete with everyone I know all the Joy- to make it. And right now, the school’s the one thing I need to do. And I’m away from the e-mail and I can’t do it.’

‘But your definition of school isn’t really one thing, it’s ~Sped~ different things, Dariez: extracurricular activities plus sports plus volunteering. That’s not to mention homework.’

‘Right.’

‘How anxious would you say you are about all of this, Dariez?’

I think back to what Joy said, about anxiety being a medical thing. The e-mail has been in the back of my mind since I got here, the nagging knowledge that when I get out I’ll have to sit on the computer for five or six hours going through everything I’ve missed, answering it in reverse order because that’s the way it comes in and therefore taking the longest Joy- to respond to the kids who e-mailed me in the most distant past. And then as I’m answering them more will come in, and they’ll sit on top of my stack and mock me, dare me to answer them before digging down, telling me that I need them, as opposed to the one or two e-mails that are actually about something I care about. Those will get saved to the end, and by the Joy- I have the Joy- to deal with them, they’ll be so out of date that I’ll just have to apologize: Sorry, boy. I haven't been able to answer my e-mail. No, I'm not important, just incapable.

'Dariez?'

'Very anxious,' I answer.

'The e-mail anxiety, and the failure talk... These are subjects you've brought up before. They're very distressing to you.' 'I know. I'm sweating.'

'You are?'

'Yeah. And I haven't been sweating for a while.'

'You've been away from your Tentacles.'

'Right. Not anymore. Now I get to go back and they're all right there for me.'

'Do you remember what I asked you last Joy-, about whether or not you'd found any Anchors in here?'

'Yes.'

She pauses. In order to ask a question, it is often possible for Dr. Ross only to invite that she might ask a question.

'I think I've found one,' I sigh.

'What's that?'

'Can I get up and get it?'

'Absolutely.'

I leave the office and walk down the hall, where Joy is leading a new recruit on his welcoming tour-a black boy with wild teeth and a stained blue sweatsuit.

'This is Dariez,' Joy says. 'He's really young, but he's on the level. He does drawings.'

I shake the boy's hand. That's right. I do drawings.

'Um- Being,' the boys...

'That's his name,' Joy explains, rolling her eyes.

'Your name isn't Dariez; it's Um- Being too,' the boy says.

I nod, break the handshake, and keep walking to my room. It's literally like breaking away from a monster- the further I get from thinking about e-mail and Dr. Ross and the fact that I'm going to have to leave here and go back to Executive Preprofessional, the calmer I get. And the closer I get to the brain maps, to this little stupid thing I can do, the calmer I get. I walk past Joy- he's staring and trying to sleep- and take my art off the radiator cover. I cradle it in a stack past Joy and Um- Being- who's now explaining how his real last name is Green and that's what he needs, some green- back into the office.

'I kind of like it in here,' I say to Dr. Ross.

'This room?'

'No, the hospital.'

'When you're finished, you can volunteer.'

'I talked to the guitar boy Neil about that. I think I'll try. I can get school credit!'

'Is that the reason you should volunteer, Dariez-'

'No, no ...' I shake my head. 'I'm just joking.' 'Ah.' Dr. Ross cuts her face into a wide smile. 'So, what do we have here?'

I plop them down on the table. There are two dozen now. No kind of crazy breakthroughs, just variations on a theme: pigs with brain maps that resemble Pittsburgh, my couple for Joy joined by the sweeping bridge, a family of metropolises.

'Your artwork,' she says.

She leaf's through them, going 'Oh, my' at the particularly good ones. I constructed this stack last night- not just for Dr. Ross, for anybody. The brain maps have a certain order. Ever since I've been doing them, they've been making it clear that they should be stacked for presentation.

'Dariez, these are wonderful.'

‘Thanks.’ I sit down. We were both standing. I didn’t even notice.

‘You started these because you used to do them when you were four?’

‘Right. Well. Something- like them.’

‘And how do they make you feel?’

I look at the pile. ‘Awesome.’

She leans in. ‘Why?’

I have to think about that one, and when Dr. Ross makes me think, I don’t get embarrassed and try to skip it. I look to the left and stroke my chin.

‘Because I do them,’ I say. ‘I do them and they’re done. It’s almost like, you know, peeing?’

‘Yes...’ Dr. Ross nods. ‘Something you enjoy.’ ‘Right. I do it; it’s successful; it feels good, and I know it’s- good. When- I finish one of these up, I feel like I’ve actually done something and like the rest of my day can be spent doing whatever, stupid crap, email, phone calls, all the rest of it.’

‘Dariez, have you ever considered the fact that you might be an artist?’ ‘I have other stuff too,’ I keep going. What’d she say? ‘First of all, I was thinking about this perpetual candle, like a candle on the ground with another candle hanging upside-down over it, and as the first candle melts the wax is kept molten by some kind of hot containment unit and gets pumped up to the second candle and drips down like a stalactite-stalagmite thing, and then I was also thinking: what if you filled a shoe with whipped cream? Just a boy’s shoe, filled with whipped cream? That’s pretty easy to do. And then you could keep going: a- T-shirt filled with Jell-O, a hat full of applesauce... that’s art, right? That kind of stuff. What’d you say about artists?’

She chuckles. ‘You seem to enjoy what you’re doing here.’

‘Yeah, well, duh, it’s not the most difficult thing in the world.’

‘You’re not sweating now.’

‘This is a good Anchor for me,’ I say. I admit. I admit it. It’s a stupid thing to admit. It means that I’m not practical. But then again, I’m already in the loony bin; how practical am I going to get? I might have to give up on practical. ‘That’s right, Dariez. This can be your Anchor.’ Dr. Ross stares at me and doesn't blink. I look at her face, the wall behind her, the door, the shades, the table, my hands on the table, the Brain Maps between us. I could do the one on the top a little better. I could try putting some wood grain in there with the streets. Knots of wood in kid's heads. That could work. 'This can be my Anchor.' I nod. 'But...'

'What, Dariez?'

'What am I going to do about school? I can't go to Executive Pre-Professional for art.'

'I'm going to throw a wild notion at you.' Dr. Ross leans back, then forward. 'Have you ever thought about going to a different school?' I stare ahead. I hadn't. I honestly hadn't.

Not once, not in my whole life, not since I started there. That's my school. I worked harder to get in than I did for anything else, ever. I went there because, coming out of it, I'd be able to be President. Or a lawyer. Rich, that's the point. Rich and successful.

And look where it got me. One stupid year-not even one, like three-quarters of one-and here I am with not one, but two bracelets on my wrist, next to a shrink in a room adjacent to a hill where there's a boy named Um- Being walking around. If I keep doing this for three more years, where will I be? I'll be a complete loser. And what if I keep on? What if I do okay, live with the depression, get into College, do College, go to Grad School, get the Job, get the Money, get Kids and a Wife and a Nice Car? What kind of crap will I be in then? I'll be completely crazy.

I don't want to be completely crazy. I don't like being here that much. I like being a little crazy: enough to volunteer here, not enough to ever, ever, ever come back.

'Yes,' I say. 'Yes- I have thought about it.'

'When? Just now?'

I smile. 'Absolutely.'

'And what do you think?'

I clap my hands together and stand up. 'I think I should call my parents and tell them that I want to transfer to schools.' 'Visitor, Dariez,' Paullie pokes his head into the dining room. I slide my chair back from the table, where I'm playing after-lunch poker with My-a Joy and Joy and Armelio. My-a Joy doesn't really have any idea how to play, but we deal him cards and he plays them face down and smiles and we give him more chips (we're using scraps of paper; the buttons are locked up due to our recklessness) whenever he pockets his or chews them up.

'I'll be back,' I say.

'This boy, so busy,' says Armelio.

'He thinks he's all-important,' Joy says.

'I woke up, and the bed was on fire!' Says My-a Joy.

We all look at him. 'You okay, My-a Joy?' I ask. 'My mom hit me in the head. She hit me in the head with a hammer.'

'Oh, wow.' I turn to Armelio. 'I heard him say stuff like this down in the ER. Has he talked about this before?'

'No, nuh-uh, buddy.'

'Hey, My-a Joy, it's okay.' I put my hand on his shoulder. At the same time-, I bite my tongue. You can think someone's hilarious and want to help them at the same time -.

'She hit me in the head,' he says. 'With a hammer!'

'Yeah, but you're here now,' Joy says. 'You're safe. Nobody's going to hit you in the head with anything.'

My-a Joy nods. I keep my hand on his shoulder. I keep my tongue bit down, but I make little-chuffing noises as I try to keep from laughing, and he looks up and notices. He smiles at me, then laughs himself, then picks his cards up and claps my back.

'It'll come to ya,' he says.

'That's right. I know it will.'

I excuse myself from the room and head down the hall. Right at the end is Kristopher, holding the record I want. Dad didn't have it.

'Hey, boy,' he says sheepishly, and as I approach, he leans it against the wall. He's a dick, but I'm not perfect either so I come up and hug him.

‘Hey.’

‘Well, you were right. My dad had it-Italian

Masters Volume Three.’

‘I so appreciate this.’ I take the record. It’s got a picture on the cover of what looks like the Nile at dusk, with a palm tree tilting left, echoing the brightening moon, and the purple sky rolling up from the horizon.

‘Yeah, I’m sorry about everything,’ Kristopher says. ‘I... uh...

I’ve had a weird couple of days.’

‘You know what?’ I look him in the eyes. ‘Me too.’ ‘I bet.’ He smiles.

‘Yeah, from now on, whenever crap goes down, you can be like ‘Oh, Dariez, I had a bad few days’, because, I will get what you’re talking about.’

‘What’s it like in here?’ He asks.

‘There are kids whose lives have been screwed up for a long time, and then there are kids like me, whose lives have been screwed up for... you know... shorter.’

‘Did they put you on new drugs?’

‘No, same ones I was on before.’

‘So-o- are you feeling better?’

‘Yeah.’

‘What changed?’

‘I’m going to leave school.’

‘You’re what?’

‘I’m done. I’m going somewhere else.’

‘Where?’

‘I don’t know yet. I’m going to talk it over with my parents. Somewhere for art.’

‘You want to do art?’

‘Yeah. I’ve been doing some in here. I’m good at it.’

‘You’re pretty good at school too, boy.’

I shrug. I don’t really need to explain this to Kristopher. He’s been demoted from most important friend to friend, and he’s going to have to earn that, even. And you know what else? I don’t owe kids anything, and I don’t have to talk to them any more than I feel I need to.

‘What’s up with Emmah?’ I ask... Have to tread carefully here.

‘I got your message, about how things were bad.’

‘They got worked out. It was my fault. I got all freaked out about her being on pills and we broke up for like, a few days.’

‘Why did that freak you out?’

‘I don’t need any more of that in my life, you know? I mean, it’s bad enough with my dad.’

‘He’s on medication?’

‘Every form of medication in the book. Mom, too. And then me, with the pot... when you come right down to it, there isn’t anybody in the household who isn’t seriously drugged except the fish.’

‘And- you didn’t want your girlfriend to be, too.’

‘Her smoking is one thing; I just... I can’t really explain it. I guess you’ll have to go out with someone for a long time- to understand. If you’re with somebody and then you learn that they need to ... take something on a daily basis, you wonder- how good can you be for them?’

‘That’s pretty stupid,’ I say. ‘I met this girl in here-’

‘Oh yeah?’

‘Yeah, and she’s really screwed up, as screwed up as me, but I don’t look at that as an insult. I look at that as a chance to connect.’

‘Yeah, well.’

‘Kids are screwed up in this world. I’d rather be with someone screwed up and open about it than somebody perfect and... you know... ready to explode.’

‘I’m sorry, Dariez.’ Kristopher looks at me deep and holds out a hand for me to slap. ‘I’m sorry I was a bitch to you.’

‘You were a bitch.’ I slap his hand. ‘This album partly makes up for it. Just, don’t do it again.’ ‘All right.’ He nods.

We stand still a minute. We haven’t moved from the crux of the hallways near the entrance of Six North. The double doors that I came in through are eight feet behind him.

‘Well, listen,’ he says. ‘Enjoy the record. And- hey, they have a record player in here?’

‘They still smoke in here, Kristopher. They’re kind of back in time-.’

‘Enjoy it and be in touch, and I’m sorry once again. I guess you won’t be chilling for a while.’

‘I don’t know. I may never be chilling again.’

‘Did you almost kill yourself to get in here?’ Kristopher asks.

‘That’s what Emmah told me.’

‘Yeah.’

‘Why?’

‘Because I wasn’t capable of dealing with the real world.’

‘Dariez, don’t kill yourself, okay?’

‘Thanks.’

‘Just... don’t.’

‘I won’t.’

‘I’ll see you soon, boy.’

Kristopher turns, and the nurses open the door for him. He's not a bad boy. He's just someone who hasn't had his stay on Six North yet. I take the record to Paullie to store behind the nurses 'station.

Six North doesn't need a PA system, because of President Armelio, but it does have one, used regularly for the simple and rhythmic messages of 'Lunch is served,' 'Medication,' and 'All smokers to the smoking lounge; smokers, get your smokes.' This afternoon it pipes up with a longer message, courtesy of Monieec.

'Ladies and gentlemen, this afternoon our patient Dariez Gilner, who is leaving tomorrow, is going to be drawing his artwork for everyone on the floor. If you'd like your own personal piece of Dariez's art, come to the end of the hallway by the dining room.

End of the dining-room hallway, five minutes. Have fun!'

I sit down in the back most chair, by the window that peers out over the avenue that crosses the street I live on, so close to my real life. I look over at my conference chair where I meet with my parents and Joy. I have a second chair set up in front of me as an art desk, with stacks of board games on it and a chessboard on top. It's a little flimsy, but it'll do.

President Armelio is the first to approach. He strides up, barrelchested and sure of himself, like a torpedo. 'Hey, buddy, this is great! You gonna make me one of your heads with the maps inside?'

'That's right.'

'Well let's go, buddy. I ain't got all day!'

Right. Armelio is going to have to be done fast because he is fast. I sketch the outline of his head and shoulders without a second thought and start in on his brain map. Highways, that's what Armelio has in his head-six-lane highways running parallel, streaking through a city, with purpose and minimal on-ramps. He doesn't have any quiet little streets or parks; it's highways and a grid, and no rivers either.

The highways hardly even connect because - Armelio doesn't mix up his thoughts; he has one and does it and then he moves on to the next. It's a great way to live. Especially when the biggest thought is wanting to play cards. Cards have to be represented in Armelio's brain somewhere. So, I sketch some streets into an ace of spades right in the middle - it's not a great ace of spades, but Armelio gets it.

'Spades! Buddy, I crush you in spades.'

I put my initials on it, big and bold, 'CG' like 'computer-generated.'

'I'm gonna keep this, for real,' Armelio says. 'You a good boy, Dariez.' He shakes my hand. 'You want my number for when you go?'

'Sure-' I take out a piece of paper.

'It's an adult home,' Armelio says. 'You're gonna have to ask for Spyros, which is my other name.' He gives me the number and moves aside, and there's Ebony, with her cane and her velvet pants, smacking her lips.

'I heard... that you were making your brains for kids,' she says.

'That's right! And you know who the first person who said they were brains was?'

'Me!'

'Absolutely. Now, look' -I gesture at my stack of work on the floor- 'now I've got all this.'

'So-o- I get paid, right?' Ebony laughs.

'Not quite; I haven't really made it yet. As an artist.'

'I know. It's tough.'

'So-o- you just get a brain map for yourself, okay?'

'Good!'

I trace her head freehand, looking at her, not the paper. I look down and it's pretty good. Ebony's brain ... what's in there? A lot of circles, for all the buttons she stole. She was a nut with those buttons. Didn't mess around. Quite a schemer. And with all of her gambling skills, she needs to have a Strip, like Vegas. So-o- I get a big boulevard in the middle and lots of traffic circles around it, with circular parks, circular malls, little circle lakes. It comes out looking less like a city and more like a necklace with a central band and tons of bunched-up jewels hanging off.

'It's pretty!' She says.

'And you're done.' I hand it to her.

'You like doing these, huh?'

'Yeah. It helps, you know... with my depression. I came in here with depression.'

'Imagine having depression when you were eleven years old,' Ebony says. 'If all my children were in this hall, this hall would be full up, I tell you.'

'You have kids?' I ask, keeping my voice down.

'I had thirteen miscarriages,' she says. 'Imagine that.' And she looks at me without any of the humor or attitude that she usually puts on, just with big wide eyes and empty questions.

'I'm so sorry,' I say.

'I know. I know you are. That's the thing.'

Ebony shuffles away showing off her portrait ('That's me! See? Me!') She doesn't leave a phone number. Humble is next.

'All right, boy, what kind of scam you got going on here?'

'It's nothing.' I start in on Humble's bald head. Bald heads are easy. You know, if I had to right now, I think I could handle the lower tip of Knox. I look at Humble. He raises his eyebrows at me. 'Make me look good, all right?'

I laugh- inside Humble's head is industrial chaos.

I don't make any small blocks, just big ones-the kind of blocks where you'd find lumber shops and factories and bars where Humble would hang out at and work. I put the ocean in there, to represent his hometown, Bensonhurst, which borders the ocean, where he hooked up with all those girl's way back when. Then I splash it with highways, erasing the streets and putting them over the top, throwing in crazy interchanges for no reason, making the whole thing look violent and random, but also powerful and true-the kind of mind that could come up with some great stuff if you harnessed it right. When I'm done, I look up.

'I guess it's okay.' He shrugs.

I chuckle. 'Thanks, Humble.'

'I want you to remember me,' he says. 'No joke. When you're a big-time- artist or whatever, you got to invite me to one of the parties.'

'It's a deal,' I say. 'But how am I going to be in touch?'

'Oh, right-I got a number!' Humble says. 'I'm going to be staying in Seaside Paradise; it's the same home that Armelio is going to, but I'm going to be on a different floor.' He gives me the number; I put it on the same sheet as Armelio's.

'You're not going to be in touch,' Humble says.

'I will,' I say.

'No, you won't; I can tell. But it's okay. You have a lot going for you. Just don't burn out again.' We shake hands. Up next is

Joy. 'Hey, girl!'

'Don't you dare start calling me that. This is very nice of you to do.'

'Least I could do. They're all such cool kids.'

'You're like a celebrity now. Everyone wants to know if I'm your girlfriend.'

'And what do you tell them?'

'No!' And then I walk away.'

'Good call.'

'So-o- what are you trying to pull? You already made one of these for me. You just said it wasn't finished.'

I pull out the one I made for her, with the boy and girl connected by the bridge, and write my phone number on the back of it.

'Oh my gosh.'

‘Now it’s done.’ I smile, standing up. I lean in and whisper: ‘It took me like twice as long as any of the others. And I’ll make you an even better one when I get out-’

She pushes me away. ‘Yeah, like I want your stupid art.’

‘You do.’ I lean back. ‘I saw how you looked at it before.’

‘I’ll keep it to make you feel good,’ she says. ‘That’s it.’

‘Fine.’ She leans in and kisses my cheek. ‘Thank you, for real.’

‘You’re welcome. Hey, what are you doing tonight?’ ‘Well... I thought I’d be hanging out in the psych hospital. What about you?’

‘I’ve got big plans,’ I say. ‘We’ve got a movie coming in-’

‘Right, I’m not seeing that stupid movie.’

‘I know.’ I drop to a whisper. ‘But when it’s halfway done, do you want to meet in my room?’

‘You’re kidding.’

‘No. Seriously.’

‘Your roommate will be there! He’s always there!’

‘Trust me. Come to the room.’

‘Are you going to try and make out with me?’

‘If you must know? Yes.’

‘I appreciate your honesty. We’ll see.’

I give her a hug; she holds the brain map with her hands wrapped around me. ‘And I already have your number,’ I say.

‘You don’t get any second chances if you lose it,’ she says. ‘I don’t give that number out twice.’

I take a quick wanting look at her as we pull away from each other and she moves off to the side.

Joy is next.

‘Who’s that behind you?’

‘Huh, who do you think?’ Joy answers.

‘Come on up together, boys. I’ll do you both at once.’ ‘Cool,’ Joy says, standing off to the side. Joy stands next to him and I start drawing them, their shaggy hair and baggy clothing making for great outlines.

‘So-o- he’s drawing us?’ Joy asks Joy.

‘Be quiet, all right?’

‘Where did you boys hang out?’ I ask Joy, not looking up from the paper. ‘Back when you were garbage-heads?’

‘What? You’re going to draw that?’

‘No.’ I look up. ‘I’m just curious. What neighborhood?’

‘It was the Lower East Side, but don’t draw the Lower East Side,’ says Joy. ‘I don’t want to go back there.’

‘All right, fair enough. Where do you want to live?’ ‘On the Upper East Side, with all the rich kids,’ Joy answers.

‘Huh, me too,’ says Joy.

‘Wait, no, you’re getting a guitar,’ I say.

‘Oh, cool.’

I start on Joy’s and Joy’s brains. With Joy, it’s fun to do a guitar in a street grid-some diagonal streets meeting for the body and then a big wide boulevard for the neck, a park for the head. Then I turn to Joy. I know the Upper East Side pretty well; it’s in Knox and the big thing that it has is Central Park, so I draw that on the inside left of his head. Then I put in the stately grid of rich streets. I know the Guggenheim Museum is somewhere up there; I mark that with an arrow and then I put an 'X' right next to it, on a corner where an apartment probably costs $20 million, and write Joy's pad. 'Joy's pad! That's right! That's where I'm headed.' He raises his arms. 'Moving on up.' 'Enjoy.' I hand them the piece.

'Who gets what?' Joy asks. 'You want us to rip it apart?'

'No, boy, we're supposed to keep it together because we're friends,' says Joy. 'I'll make a photocopy.'

'Where's the photocopy machine in here?'

'There isn't one! I'll do it when I get out.'

'Where's that going to leave me?'

'With a copy!'

'I don't want a copy!'

'Would you listen to this boy? Nothing's good enough for him-'

'Hey, Joy,' I interrupt. 'Anyway, I can get yours and Joy's phone numbers to talk to you after you leave?'

Joy starts to say something, but she leans in and stops him:

'It's not a good idea, Dariez.'

'What? Why?'

He sighs. 'I've been in and out of this place a lot, right?'

'Yeah.'

'There are good things about this place; I mean, the food is the best around; there are good kids here... but it's still not a place to meet kids.'

‘Why not? I met you boys and you’re really cool!’ ‘Yeah, well, all the worse, then, when you try to call me or team up and find out that we’ve OD’ed, or been shot, or come back here even worse, or just disappeared.’

‘That’s a pretty negative view.’

‘I’ve seen it before. You just remember us, okay? We meet in the outside world; it just ruins it. You’ll be embarrassed by me and me...’ He smiles. ‘... I might be embarrassed by me, too. And I might be embarrassed by you if you don’t keep your stuff together.’

‘Thanks. You sure no numbers?’

Joy shakes my hand. ‘If we need to, we’ll meet.’

Joy shakes my hand. ‘What he said.’ The last boy in line is My-a Joy.

‘I tell you, what’d I say? You play those numbers-’ ‘It’ll come to ya!’ I answer.

‘It the truth!’ He grins.

Ah, My-a Joy. What’s in My-a Joy’s brain? Chaos. I do up his nearly bald head and shoulders and then start putting the most complicated, unnecessary, wild highways through him from ear to ear. I connect them in intricate spaghetti ramps. In one nexus, five highways meet; I have to erase and redraw the ramps a few times. Then I put in the grid-a grid laid out by a hyperactive designer, with blocks going in all different directions.

When My-a Joy’s brain map is done it might look the best-a catalog of a schizophrenic mind, but one that works somehow.

‘Here you go,’ I tell him. He’s sitting in a seat that he took next to me to watch me work.

‘It’ll come to ya!’ he says and takes the map. I want him to finally open up, to call me Dariez, to tell me that we came in together, but he’s still My-a Joy- his vocabulary is still limited.

We sit back in our respective chairs; I doze off a bit. Making art on devoid is tiring. But the last thing I see before I go to sleep is My-a Joy unfolding his brain map next to me and comparing with Ebony, who says, of course, hers is a lot prettier. That’s not a bad thing to go to sleep to.

‘Dariez, are you okay?’ Mom asks. I jolt up and I have a momentary seizure that it was all a dream, all of it-the whole Sixth North bit-but then I wonder, where would the dream start? If it were a nightmare, it would have to have started somewhere before, I got bad; it would be like a yearlong dream. You don’t have those. And if it were a good dream, that would mean I was still back where it started, leaning over my parents’ toilet or lying in bed listening to my heart. I didn’t need that. ‘Yeah! I’m-whoa.’ I sit up. They’re all there- Dad, Mom, Sarah.

‘Are you forcing yourself to sleep?’ Mom asks. ‘Are you depressed?’

‘Are you on drugs?’ Sarah asks. ‘Can you hear me?’

‘I was taking a nap! Jeez!’

‘Oh, okay. It’s at six o’clock.’

‘Wow, I was asleep for a while. I was drawing my brain maps for kids.’

‘Oh, boy,’ says Dad. ‘This doesn’t sound good.’ ‘What are brain maps?’ Sarah asks.

‘That’s her art,’ says Mom. ‘This is why he wants to change schools. Making this art makes you happy, right Dariez?’

‘Yeah, want to see?’

‘Absolutely.’

I take the stack from beside me and pass it around. This is really what I was creating the stack for, I think; to show my parents. ‘Some of the best were the ones I just did, for the patients.’ ‘Very original,’ Dad says.

‘I like this one,’ says Sarah, pointing at the pig with quasi- Pittsburgh inside him.

‘You put a lot of time- into these, I see,’ Mom says.

‘Right, that’s the thing: they don’t actually take me much time-,’ I explain. ‘I’m starting to get a little bored of them, actually; I want to move to something else.’ ‘So how are you feeling, Dariez?’ Dad puts the stack back on the floor.

‘You look a lot better,’ Mom says.

'I do?'

'Yeah,' Sarah says. 'You don't look all freaky as much.'

'I used to look freaky?'

'She doesn't mean freaky,'" Mom tells us both. 'She just means that when you were down, you looked a little under the weather.'

Isn't that right, Sarah?'

'No, he looked freaky.'

'A flat affect, that's what the doctors call it.' I smile. 'Right, well you don't have that as much anymore,' Sarah says.

'So-o- you want to quit school?' Dad brings us back to the real deal stuff.

'I don't want to quit.' I turn to him. 'I want to transfer.'

'But that means quitting the school you're currently at-'

'He can't handle the other school!' Sarah says. 'Look at-'

'Hold on a second. I can talk,' I say. 'Boys.' I look at all three of them in turn. 'One thing that they do in here gives you a lot of time- to think. I can't explain it; once you come in, time- just slows down-'

'Well, you don't have any interruptions, that's probably it-'

'Also, I think the clocks are a little off-'

I wave my hand. 'Point is, you have time- to think about how you got here. Because obviously, nobody wants to come back. I don't want to coming back'

'Good. Me neither,' says Dad. 'What I said the last time-, about actually wanting to be here; that was a joke.'

'Right. Hey, did you bring the movie?'

'Of course. I can watch some of it with you, right?'

‘Absolutely. So anyway, I’ve been thinking about when things started getting bad for me. I realized: it started after I got into high school.’ ‘Uh-huh,’ Mom says.

‘That was the happiest moment of my life. The happiest day. And from there on it was all downhill.’ ‘Right, this happens to a lot of adults,’ Dad says. ‘Will you stop interrupting him?’ Sarah interrupts. Dad folds his hands behind him and straightens his back.

‘It’s okay, Sarah. I just... I think I was concentrated on getting into Executive Pre-Professional because it was like, a challenge. I wanted to have that feeling of triumph. I never really thought about the fact that I’d have to, you know, go to the school.’

‘So, you want to do art,’ Mom says.

‘Well, let’s consider. I never really liked math. I was good at it, but only because I liked having basic information in front of me to get through, to reach that feeling of accomplishment. I never really liked English. This’-I point at the brain maps- ‘this is something different. This is something I love. So, I’d better do it.’ ‘You’d better love it,’ Dad says. ‘Because it’s a hard life. It’s mostly the artists who end up in places like this.’

‘Well, then he has to be an artist; that’s where he is!’ Sarah says.

‘Heh. It’s pretty simple.’ I stand up. ‘Take a look around. I tried to go to the best high school in the city.

And this is where I ended up.’

‘True.’ Mom looks behind her. Solomon rushes across our field of view.

‘If I don’t make some kind of big change, I’m going to come out of here wondering how anything is different from before, and I’m going to end up right back here.’

‘Right,’ says Mom. ‘I’m with you, Dariez.’

‘What art school are you going to go?’ Dad asks. ‘Knox

Arts Academy? It’s easy to transfer to with my grades-’

‘Oh, but Dariez, that’s the school for kids who are all screwed up,’ Dad says.

I look at him. 'Yeah? Dad?' I raise my wrist, show him the bracelets. I have pride in them now. They're true, and kids can't screw with them. And when you say the truth you get stronger.

Dad stands still for a minute, looks down at his feet, and then looks up. 'Okay,' he says. 'We'll do whatever we have to do.'

You have to stay in school until you transfer, though.

That's going to be... until the end of the year at least, I think.'

'I'll handle it,' I say.

'I know you will. We'll help.'

'Dinner, get ready for dinner!' President Armelio walks toward us. 'Dariez and his family, dinner is almost here!'

'How've you been eating?' Mom asks as I stretch my legs.

'I have been. That's good.'

'It's wonderful, Dariez.'

'Okay, so I'm leaving the DVD here with you.' Dad hands it to me. 'And I'm going to be back to watch it when you're done with dinner. When will that be?'

'Seven is good. But visiting hours end at eight. You won't get to watch the whole thing.'

'We'll see how long I can stay. You might be surprised.'

I swallow. I actually don't want him sticking around that long.

I'll make sure Paullie gets him out.

'I'll see you tomorrow,' Mom says. 'The staff tells us we're picking you up early in the morning before I go to work.' 'I'll be ready.'

'We've got lots of good food at home.'

'I'll see you when I come home from school.' Sarah hugs my waist. 'I'm so happy you're back.' I pat her head. 'Are you embarrassed by this place?'

‘Yeah, but whatever.’

‘I am too,’ I say. ‘It’s just a good type of embarrassment.’

Mom and Dad are dressed up to bring me out; I’m wearing what I wore all the time- in here- some khaki pants and my tie-dyed

T-shirt and my dress shoes, my Rockport’s, the ones that kids complimented me on every so often, that made me feel like a professional patient. Mom never brought a change of clothes. They’re here early because Dad has to work; he wanted to see me before he left. Mom is staying home today to see that I’m all right. Then, tomorrow, Friday, I’m back at school, but with the official notice that I can pop into the nurse’s office at any time- if I feel depressed. I don’t really have to go to class for the next week; that’s school policy. I’m encouraged to go but they don’t want to overwhelm me. It’s a good deal.

It’s 7:45 A.M. I’ve taken my last vitals-120 / 80- and I’m standing at the crux of the hall by the nurses’ office, looking at the double doors I came in five days ago. It seems like five days; it doesn’t seem too long or too short; it seems like I spent the Bliss- here that I really spent. Kids are always talking about really- REALLY- shocking quotes, really- information, really- news-but in here I think I had really- REALLY-. Armelio shakes my hand a final time-.

‘Good luck, buddy.’

Humble says I should stay for a little longer.

‘You’re going to lose it on the outside, boy.’

Joy mumbles at me. It’s too early for him. The Professor tells me to keep doing my art.

Paullie says he heard from Neil that I was thinking of volunteering and he hopes to see me sometimes.

My-aJoy ignores me completely.

Ebony says to be careful of liars and cheats and to always respect children.

Joy pops out of her room at 7:50, just as breakfast is rolling in and my parents are stepping out of the nurses’ office where they were signing papers. ‘I’m out in the afternoon,’ she says. She’s wearing sweatpants and a T-shirt. 'Call me tonight?' 'Sure.' I touch her number in my pocket, next to her two notes that I saved.

'How are you feeling?'

'I'm feeling like I can handle it.'

'Me too.'

'You're a really cool girl,' I say.

'Your kind of a dork, but with potential,' she says.

'That's all I'm trying for.' 'Dariez?' Mom asks.

'Oh, hey boys, ah, this is Joy. We got to be friends here.' 'I saw you last night,' Dad says, shaking her hand.

'A pleasure to meet you,' says Mom. Neither of them takes a second look at the cuts on her face. My parents have some class.

'Good to meet you too,' she says.

'Are you still in high school?' Dad asks.

'Delfin,' she says.

'A lot of pressure, huh,' says Mom.

'Yeah.'

'I think they might have to change the whole system. Look, two kids like you, smart young kids, sent in here because of pressure.'

'Mom.'

'I'm serious. I'm going to write my congressperson about it.' 'Mom.'

'I'll go,' Joy says. 'See you Dariez.' And she dips her leg up behind her as she turns away and flicks a wave at me-that counts as a kiss, I think. If my parents weren't here that would be a kiss.

‘Are you ready?’ Mom asks.

‘Yeah. Bye, everybody!’

‘Wait!’ From down the hall, Joy moves forward as fast as he allows himself to, which isn’t very fast, sort of like a speed walk, and hands me the record.

‘Thank you, Dariez. This boy, your son,’ he turns to my parents, ‘he has helped me.’

‘Thank you,’ Mom and Dad say.

I hug Joy and take in his smell one last time-.

‘Good luck, boy.’

‘As you go through life, you think of me and hope that I am better.’

‘I will.’

We separate and Joy migrates toward the dining room and the smell of food.

I look at my parents. ‘Let’s go.’

It’s incredibly simple. The nurses open the doors for us and there I am outside, looking at the ‘Sh-h! Healing in Progress’ poster I saw when I came in. The bank of elevators stands sentry in front of us.

‘Girls,’ I tell them. ‘Can you go home yourselves, and I’ll walk after you in like one minute?’

‘Why? Are you okay?’

‘I just want to walk by myself a little.’

‘Think things over?’

Continued: 2

‘Yeah.’

‘You’re not feeling... bad?’

‘No. I just want to walk home myself.’

‘We’ll take your stuff.’ They grab the bag of old clothes and art I had with me, plus the record; wave, and take the next elevator down.

I wait for thirty seconds before hitting the button myself.

I’m not better, you know. The weight hasn’t left my head. I feel how easily I could fall back into it, lie down and not eat, waste my time- and curse wasting my Joy-, look at my homework and freak out and go and chill at Kristopher’s, look at Emmah and be jealous again, take the subway home and hope that it has an accident, go and get my bike and head to the Kinzua Bridge. All of that is still there. The only thing is, it’s not an option now. It’s just... a possibility, like it’s a possibility that I could turn to dust in the next instant and be disseminated throughout the universe as an omniscient consciousness. It’s not a very likely possibility.

I get in the elevator. It’s big and shiny. There’s a lot to look at in the real world.

I don’t know what I’m going to do today, still. I’m probably going to go home, sort through my art, and then call everybody I know and tell them that I’m going to be switching schools and from now on they should reach me by phone instead of e-mail.

But I also might go to the park-how come I never go to the park?

...And throw a ball around with whatever kids are out there. Or a Frisbee. It’s a real day outside. There’s actual weather out there.

I walk through the lobby. The smells! Coffee and muffins and flowers and scented candles from the gift shop. Why does UMPC Hospital have a gift shop? I guess everybody has to have a gift shop.

I step out onto the sidewalk.

I’m a free boy. Well, I’m a minor, but one-quarter of your life is spent as a minor; you might as well make the best of it. I’m a free minor.

I breathe. It’s a spring day. The air is like a sheet billowing down on me in slow motion.

Try drawing a naked person. Try drawing Joy naked. Travel.

Fly. Swim. Meet. Love. Dance. Win. Smile. Laugh. Hold. Walk.

Skip. Okay, it's gay, whatever, skip.

Ski- Sled. Play basketball. Jog. Run. Run. Run. Run home.

Run home and enjoy it. Enjoy. Take these verbs and enjoy them.

They're yours, Dariez. You deserve them because you chose them.

You could have left them all behind, but you chose to stay here.

So now live for real, Dariez. Live. Live. Live. Live.

Live.

'What up, son? Did you get in?!'

'Yeah.'

'Allriiiiiight! '

'Hooooo-ee! '

'Biyatch!'

'That's right!'

'But you studied. I didn't study at all,' he was like.

'True. I should feel lucky to talk to you. You're kind of like Hercules.'

'Yeah, cleaning the stables. I'm having a party.'

'When? Tonight?'

'Yup. My parents are away. I have the whole house. You're coming, right?'

'A real party? Without a cake?'

'Absolutely.'

'Sure!' I was in eighth grade and I had gotten into high school and I was going to a party? I was set for life! 'Can you bring any booze?'

‘Like drinks?’

‘Dariez, come on. Yes. Can you bring?’

‘I don’t have ID.’

‘Dariez, none of us have ID! I mean, can you take some off your parents?’

‘I don’t think they have any ...’ But I knew that wasn’t true.

‘They have something.’

I held my hand over my cell, so Mom wouldn’t hear.

‘Scotch. They have a bottle of scotch.’

‘What kind?’

‘Jeez, dude, I don’t know.’

‘Well, bring it. Can you call any girls?’

I had been in my room studying for a year. ‘No.’

‘That’s all right, I’ll bring the girls. You want to at least help me set up?’

‘Sure!’

‘Get over here.’

‘I’m going to Kristopher’s house!’ I announced to Mom, flipping my phone shut. I still had the welcome packet in my hand; I gave it to her to put in my room. ‘What are you going to do over there?’ she asked, beaming at the packet, then at me.

‘Um... sleepover.’

‘Are you going to celebrate? Because you should celebrate.’

‘Heh. Yeah.’

‘Dariez, I’m being honest, I’ve never seen someone work as hard as you did getting into this school. You deserve a little break and you deserve to feel proud of yourself. You’re gifted, and the world is taking notice. This is the first step in an amazing journey-’

‘Okay, Mom, please.’ I hugged her.

I grabbed my coat and sat at the kitchen table, pretending to text on the phone. When Mom left the room, I invaded the cabinet above the sink, took out the one bottle of scotch (Glenlivet,) and fetched from the back of the cupboard the thermos that I used to use for grade-school lunches. That would seem really cool at the party. I poured some scotch in and I put a little water back in the scotch, in case they checked levels, and stuffed the thermos in my big jacket pocket before leaving the house and calling back to Mom that I would call her later.

I took the subway to Kristopher’s without a book to study on my lap-first time- in a year. At his stop, I bounded up the stairs into the gray streets, slipped into his building, nodded to the doorman to call up, and squished my thumb on the elevator button, giving it a twist and some flair. On the sixteenth floor was Kristopher, holding his front door open, rap music about killing kids on in the background, holding his metal cigarette out for me.

‘Smoke. Celebrate.’ I stopped.

‘If anything’s the Joy of time-, it’s now.’ I nodded.

‘Come in, I’ll show you.’ Kristopher brought me into his house and sat me on his couch and demonstrated how to hold the cigarette, so the metal wouldn’t burn me. He explained how you have to take the smoke into your lungs, not your stomach- ‘Don’t swallow it, Dariez, that’s how hits get lost’- and how to let it go as slowly as you could through your mouth or nose. The key was to hold it in as long as possible. But you didn’t want to hold it too long.

Then you coughed.

‘How do I light it?’ I asked.

‘I’ll light it for you,’ Kristopher was like. He knelt in front of me on the couch-I took a look at his living room, fenced in with floor-to-ceiling bookshelves, filled up with a coffee table, a tall fluted ashtray, a porcelain dog, and a small electric piano- trying to remember how it all looked in case it changed later. The only thing I had done- that kids said was kind of like smoking pot was go- really hard on the swings, and Kristopher had told me that anyone who said that was probably high when they were on the swings.

The butane flame went up.

I sucked in on the metal cigarette as if a doctor were telling me to.

My mouth filled up with the taste that I knew so well from Kristopher's room-a chemical taste, buzzy and light. I looked him in the eyes with my cheeks puffed out. He clipped the flame, smiling.

'Not in your cheeks!' he said. 'You look like Dizzy Gillespie!

In your lungs! Put it in your lungs.'

I worked with new muscles. The smoke in me felt like a blob of clay.

'That's it, hold it, hold it...'

My eyes started watering, getting hot.

'Hold it. Hold it. You want more?'

I shook my head, terrified. Kristopher laughed.

'Okay. Dude, you're good. You're good, dude!' Pffffft. I blew it all in Kristopher's face.

'Jesus! Boy, that was big!' Kristopher swatted at the cloud that came out of me. 'You sure you haven't done this before?'

I panted, breathing in air that still had the smoke in it.

'What's going to happen?' I asked.

'Probably nothing.' Kristopher stood up, took his cigarette back, put it in the stand-up ashtray. Then he reached down with his hand out-I expected a handshake, but he pulled me off the couch.

'Congratulations.'

We hugged mouth to ear. It was a boy hug, complete with slapping. I leaned back and smiled at him as I clasped his arms.

‘You too, boy. It’s going to be great.’

‘I’m-a tell you what’s going to be great: this party,’ Kristopher said, and he began pacing, counting on his fingers. ‘I need for you to go and get some seltzer, for spritzers. Also, we got to put away all of my dad’s books and writing so it doesn’t get damaged. Also, call this girl; her dad threatened to call the cops if I called again; say you’re with Greenpeace.’

‘I’m not going to remember this; hold on,’ I said, taking an index card from Kristopher’s coffee table. I was numbering it with a Sharpie, from one, when the weed hit me.

‘Whoa- Wow.’

‘Uh-oh,’ Kristopher said. He looked up.

‘Whoa.’ ‘You are feeling it?’

Is my brain falling out of my head? I thought.

I looked down at the index card that said 1) get seltzer, and 1) get seltzer twisted back as if it had decided to fall off the card. I looked up at Kristopher’s bookshelves and they looked the same, but as I turned, they moved in frames. It wasn’t like the slowness that came from being underwater; it was like I was under air-thick and heavy air that had decided to follow me. For being high, it felt pretty heavy.

‘You are feeling it?’ Kristopher repeated.

I looked at his stand-up ashtray, filled with crumpled cigarettes and the one clear, shining metal cigarette.

‘Oh, boy,’ Kristopher was like. ‘Dariez- are you going to be able to do the stuff for the party?’

Was I? I was able to do anything. Here I was making clever statements like ‘king of the cigarette butts;’ if I went outside, there was no telling what I would be capable of.

‘What’s first?’ I asked.

Kristopher gave me a few bucks to get the seltzer, but just as I was opening the door to go out into the world, his buzzer rang.

'It's Emmah,' Kristopher said, leaping to the closed-circuit phone in his kitchen, which was full of grapefruits and dark wood cabinets.

'She's coming?' I asked.

Emmah was in our class; she was half Chinese and half Jewish; she dressed well. Every day she came in with something different-a chain of Sponge Bob Burger King toys strung around her neck; one asymmetrical, giant, red-plastic hoop earring; black clown circles on her cheeks. I think her accessories were a courtesy meant to distract from her small, lucrative body and baby-doll face. If she let it all go natural, if she just let her hair swing down the way it would have if she'd grown up in a field with the wind, she'd make all us boys explode.

'Emmah's pretty hot, huh,' Kristopher said, hanging up the phone.

'She's okay.'

We sat watching the door like we were waiting for the mama bird to bring us food. She knocked.

'Heyyyy,' Kristopher called, beating me.

'Hi!' I said. We rushed to the doorknob; Kristopher gave a look, pulled it toward him, and there she was in a green dress with a rainbow of fuzzy anklets on one leg. Her eyes were so big and dark that she seemed even more tiny and spindly, on high-heeled shoes that threw her forward at us and made her dress outline her little breasts.

'Boys,' she said. 'I think someone has been smoking pah-at.'

'No way,' Kristopher said.

'My friends are coming. When's the party starting?'

'Five minutes ago,' Kristopher said. 'You want to play Scrabble?'

'Scrabble!' Emmah put her bag down-it was shaped like a hippo. 'Who plays Scrabble?'

'Well, I do, duh, and Dariez does, too'-I didn't, actually-' and we're some smart boys, seeing as we got in.'

'I heard!' Emmah grabbed her hippo bag and hit Kristopher with it. 'I did too!' As an afterthought, she hit me.

'Congratulations!'

'Group hug!' Kristopher announced, and we got together, a tiered threesome -Emmah's head came up to my chin; my head came up to Kristopher's chin. I put my hand around Emmah's waist and felt her warmth and how narrow she was. Her palm curled around my shoulder. We pushed our torsos together in a sort of ballet. I could feel Emmah's breath between us. I turned to look -

'Scrabble,' Kristopher said. He went across the living room, took it out of one of the bookshelves. He put it on the floor and we sat, Kristopher between me and Emmah, the ashtray taking up the fourth spot.

'House rules,' Kristopher said as he flipped over the tiles. 'If you don't have any words to put on the board, you can make a word up, as long as you have an actual definition of that word in your head. If your definition makes the other kids laugh, you get the points, but otherwise, you lose that ~Sped~ points.'

'We can make up words?' I asked. This was brimming with possibilities. I could make up Emmahed-what happens when Emmah touches you, you get Emma had. That would make her laugh. Or not.

'What about Chinese words?' Emmah asked.

'You have to know what they mean and be able to explain them.'

'Oh. That shouldn't be a problem.' She smiled wickedly.

'Who's going first?'

'Can we smoke?'

'So, decoding.' Kristopher gave her the metal cigarettes-I said no this time-; I'd had enough.

For her first word, Emmah put down M-U-W-L-I.

'What is that?' I asked.

‘Chinese word.’

‘What’s it mean?’

‘Uh, cat.’

‘That’s ridiculous. How do we know if muwli is real?’ I turned to Kristopher.

He shrugged. ‘Benefit of the doubt?’

Emmah stuck out her tongue at me and damn it was a cute tongue. Is that a ring? I thought - can’t be. Wait-it’s gone.

‘I swear.’ she said. “Come here, little mule!” See?’ ‘I’m checking you on your next one,’ I said.

‘The Internet’s over there.’ Kristopher was like.

‘But while you’re gone, we’re going to give you all consonants.’ Emmah smiled.

‘Is it my go?’ I put down M-O-P off M-U-W-L-I. Ten points.

Kristopher put down S-M-A-P off M-O-P. ‘That’s a cross between a smack and a slap. Like, ‘I’m-a-snap you.’” Emmah laughed and laughed. I chuckled even though I didn’t want to.

Kristopher got the points. Emmah put down T-R-I-I-L.

‘What is that?’ I asked.

‘It’s a thrill, you know, like a trill on the flute, except the first L is lowercase and the second is uppercase!’

‘That’s not trilling, that’s ‘tree-eel’!’

‘Okay, fine.’ She switched the letters. Now it said T-RI-L-I.

‘Trill-ee! What is tril-hee?’

‘An unmentionable act.’

Kristopher laughed so hard that he just had to ease his body into Emmah’s, leaning on her shoulder. She pushed back, tilting her flank into him.

I saw where this was going. I made eye contact with Emmah and here's what her eyes said:

Dariez, we're all headed to the same school. I'm going to need a boyfriend going in, to give me some stability, a little bit of backup, you know? Nothing serious. You're cool, but you're not as cool as Kristopher. He has a pot and he's so much more laid back than you; you spent the last year studying for this test; he didn't lift a finger for it. That means he's smarter than you. Not that you're not smart, but intelligence is very important in a boy- it really is the most important thing, up there with a sense of humor. And he has a better sense of humor than you, too. It doesn't hurt that he's taller. So, I'll be your friend, but right now let's let this develop. And don't be jealous.

That would be a waste of everybody's Joy-.

We kept playing. Kristopher and Emmah moved closer until their knees touched, and I could only imagine the energy that was going through those knees. I thought maybe they were going to lean in for a first kiss (or a second? No, Kristopher would have told me) right in front of me when the buzzer rang again.

It was Emmah's friend Cookie. She had brought bottles of beer.

We took ten minutes to open them, eventually hitting them against Kristopher's kitchen countertop edge, to work the tops off. Then Emmah said Cookie should've gotten twist-offs, and she asked what twist-offs were, and we all laughed. Cookie had blond hair and glitter all over her neck. She hadn't gotten into Executive Preprofessional, but that was okay because she was going to high school in Canada. The boy down at the local bodega let her buy beer if she leaned over the counter- she had developed early and had the kind of massive alluring breasts that moved in reverse rhythm when she walked.

We put Scrabble away-nobody won. The rap music seemed to be hooked up to some sort of Internet-capable playlist and kept going, never repeating, as more and more guests arrived. There was Anna-she was on Ritalin and snorted it off her little cosmetic mirror before tests; Paul-he was nationally ranked in Halo 2 and trained five hours a day with his 'team' in Seattle (he was going to put it on his college applications;) Mika-his dad was a higher-up in the Taxi and Limousine Commission and he had some sort of badge that allowed him to get free cab rides anywhere, anything-. Kids started showing up who I had no idea who they were, as a stocky white kid in an Eight Ball jacket- that would tell my future-to anyone who looked at me, which he announced, coming in, was so popular back in the 1990's that you would get knifed just for having it and nobody had a vintage-like him.

Inexplicably, someone came in a Batboy mask. His name was Race.

A short, pugnacious, mustached kid named Richard came with a backpack full of pot and set up shop in the living room.

A girl with hemp bracelets in different subtle shades proclaimed that we had to listen to Sublime's 40 oz. to Freedom, and when Kristopher refused to put it on, she started gyrating and put what she claimed was a Devil curse on him, saying,

'Diablo Tantunka' and pointing her fingers in mock horns: 'Ffffffft!

Ffffffft!'

I smoked more pot. The party was like a movie- it should have been a movie. It was the best movie I'd ever seen- where else did you get shattering glasses, a kid trying to break-dance in the living room, a dictionary being thrown at a roach, a kid holding his head in the freezer and saying it could get you high, orange vomit spread out in a semicircle in the kitchen sink, kids yelling out the windows that 'school sucks,' rap music declaring 'I want to drink beers and smoke some shit,' and one poor soul snorting a Pixie Stik, then hacking purple dust into the toilet...? Nowhere.

I haven't cured anything, but something seismic is happening in me. I feel my body wrapped up and slapped on top of my spine. I feel the heart that beat early in the morning on Saturday and told me I didn't want to die. I feel the lungs that have been doing their work quietly inside the hospital. I feel the hands that can make art and touch girls-think of all the acquired you have. I feel the feet that can let me run anywhere I want, into to the park and out of it and down to my bike to go all over Knox and Knox too, once I convince my mom. I feel my stomach and liver and all that mushy stuff that's in there handling food, happy to be back in use. But most of all I feel my brain, up there taking in blood and looking out on the world and noticing humor and light and smells and dogs and every other thing in the world-everything in my life is all in my brain, really, so it would be natural that when my brain was screwed up, everything in my life would be.

I feel my brain on top of my spine and I feel it shift a little bit to the left.

That's it- It happens in my brain once the rest of my body has moved. I don't know where my brain went. It got knocked off-kilter somewhere. It got caught up in some crap it couldn't deal with. But now it's back- connected to my spine and ready to take charge.

Jeez, why was I trying to kill myself? It's a huge thing, this Shift, just as big as I imagined. My brain doesn't want to think anymore; all of a sudden it wants to do.

Run. Eat. Drink. Eat more. Don't throw up. Instead, take a piss. Then take a crap. Wipe your butt. Make a phone call. Open a door. Ride your bike. Ride in a car. Ride in a subway. Talk. Talk to kids. Read. Read maps. Make maps. Make art. Talk about your art. Sell your art. Take a test. Get into a school. Celebrate. Have a party. Write a thank-you note to someone. Hug from your mom. Kiss your dad.

Kiss your little sister. Make out with Joy. Make out with her more. Touch her. Hold her hand. Take her out somewhere. Meet her friends. Rundown a street with her. Take her on a picnic. Eat with her. See a movie with her. See a movie with Kristopher. Heck, see a movie with Emmah, once you're cool with her. Get cool with more kids. Drink coffee in little coffee-drinking places. Tell kids your story. Volunteer. Go back to Six North. Walk-in as a volunteer and say hi to everyone who waited on you as a patient. Help kids. Help kids like Joy. Get kids books and music that they want when they're in there. Help kids like Joy. Show them how to draw. Draw more.

Try drawing a landscape. Try drawing a person.

Blade II... well, you have to like action movies to like it. I myself am a big fan of action movies. They're like the blues; there's a certain formula. You have the hero and the villain and the girl. The hero is going to almost die but not quite, and if there's a dog it'll be the same story with him. There's going to be one sub-villain with a distinguishing facial characteristic, and he's going to get killed in a printing press or a pool.

The plot of Blade II is that Blade is a boy who runs around killing vampires. He wears a leather coat with a sword stuck in the back of it; he regularly just walks around with this thing. I guess it's possible like- that you could walk around a city with a sword and not have kids notice, but the chances of you not cutting your butt open seem close to nil, especially if you're running or doing jump flips.

Now, the real kicker is the way the vampires die. They digitally dissolve into multicolored ash-in slow motion. I could watch these vampires die all day. It's so clean the way they go; they don't leave a body or anything.

I explain all this to Humble as we help Moniee roll out the TV from the activity center and plug it in. Moniee has no idea how to use a DVD-the whole metal shiny disc concept scares her. We pop it in and have to hit the TV a few things to get it going, but then it's blasting into our eyes: Blade killing his first swath of vampires in Prague by skidding down fire escapes, jumping over motorcycles, and stabbing dudes with his sword.

The audience is a good cross-section of Six North- Humble, time, and Joy; the Professor; Ebony; the new boy Um- Being; Becca, and Dad. He came in right at seven and sat down in the corner, staying very quiet, blending in. My-a Joy came by as soon as he heard the noise of the film and took a seat beside him.

'Hello,' Dad said.

'Your son?' My-a Joy asked, pointing at me.

'Yes.'

'How sweet it is!'

Dad nodded and said, 'Yes, yes- it is.'

On the screen, Blade slices a vampire right through from his groin up to his skull.

'Whoa, this is wild,' says Humble. 'Did you see that?'

That's worse than gonorrhea, boy.'

'Did you ever have gonorrhea?'

'Please. I've had everything. You know what they say: the Jews cut 'em off, the Irish wear 'em off.' 'Ewww,' I say.

'You're Irish?' 'Half,' says Humble.

'Could you be quiet? I'm trying to watch the film,' the Professor says.

‘Oh, don’t start. You don’t care about this movie; Cary Grant’s not in it,’ says Humble.

‘Cary Grant was a real boy. Don’t you say anything about him.’

‘I can say whatever-’

‘What’s that boy doing?’ Joy asks.

‘He’s sucking that girl’s blood, can’t you see?’

‘I thought she was a vampire, though.’

‘So? Vampires have blood.’ ‘Vampires ain’t got no blood,’ says Um-Being. ‘Vampires ain’t got nothing but green running in their veins, and green means money.’

‘You don’t know what you’re talking about,’ Humble says. ‘If you drink blood, how are you not going to have blood?’

‘I met a lotta vampire in my TIME-, and their blood was always green. Been sucking me dry in their little temples.’

‘What temples?’ Becca asks. ‘I go to the temple. You better not be talking about the Jewish kids.’

‘I’m Jewish too,’ says the Professor. ‘That’s why they tried to insecticide my house.’

Joy walks toward the TV from down the hall, wearing a long black skirt and a white top with little frills around the shoulders, locking eyes with me. I look around; no seat for her.

Dad notices as soon as she becomes visible. He leans over and gives me a look:

So, is this why you’ve been feeling better, son?

I shrug.

She comes up to me. ‘There’s nowhere to sit.’ ‘Here!’ I stand up and point at my armrest. She sits down right in the middle of the chair. ‘Ooh, you warmed it! Thank you.’

‘No, I meant-where am I going to sit?’ She pats the armrest.

‘Darn, girl.’

I sit down, and we watch Blade slice up some more vampires. Topics discussed among the audience include surgery, the moon, chicken, prostitution, and jobs in the Sanitation Department. Dad leans back and lets his eyes fall; I had a feeling that would happen.

As soon as I see him breathing heavy and steady, I get up, go to Paullie, and I tell him that it's after eight o'clock.

'You want me to kick out your own Dad?' He asks.

'I need to be independent,' I say. 'All right.' Paullie walks down the hall with me. 'Mr. Gilner - I'm sorry; visiting hours are over.'

'Oh, hm!' He gets up. 'Right. So, Dariez, you'll bring this back tomorrow?'

'Yeah,' I tell him. 'Thanks.'

'Thank you for getting here and getting help.' He hugs me. Paullie backs away. It's a big hug, and long, and right in front of the television, but no one says anything.

'I love you,' I mumble. 'Even though I'm a teenager and I'm not supposed to.'

'I love you too,' Dad says. 'Even though ... eh... No - I don't have any jokes about it. I just do.'

We separate and shake hands and he makes his way down the hall, waving without looking back.

'Good-bye Mister Gilner!' a chorus of those paying attention calls out.

I dip down next to Joy, whisper in her ear. 'That's one; I got to settle one more thing, and then I'll see you in my room.'

'Okay.'

I walk down the hall and pop into my room, where Joy is putting his distinctive shape in the bed, turned toward the window, in his continuous dead reverie.

'Joy?'

'Yes.'

‘You remember how you wanted Italian music?’

‘Yes, Dariez.’

‘I got some for you.’

‘You did?’ He pulls his top sheet aside. ‘Where?’

‘I got a record over,’ I say. ‘You know we’re watching a movie, right?’

‘Yes, I hear. This sounds very violent, no good for me.’

‘Right, well, in the other hall, by where the smoking area is, I asked Paullie to put the Italian music.’

‘And he did this thing?’

‘It’s ready to go on right now. You want to hear?’ ‘Yes.’ Joy pushes the sheets aside in a gesture of hope and strength and determination. It’s tough to get out of bed; I know that myself. You can lie there for an hour and a half without thinking anything, just worrying about what the day holds and knowing that you won’t be able to deal with it. And Joy did that for years. He did that until he needed to be hospitalized. And now he’s getting up.

Not for good, but for real.

I walk with him out of the room, passing Paullie at the nurses’ station and nodding at him. He opens a door behind his desk and goes in to turn on the turntables, changing the PA music from the normal funky lite FM to the sounds of deep plucked strings, and rolling over it, a voice of dangerous clarity and yearning, hitting three ascending notes and then bending one beyond where I thought you couldn’t bend an Um- voice, sounding like a boy drawn out and smacked to vibrate around a little.

‘Umm Kulthum!’ Joy says.

‘Yeah! Uh... Who’s that?’

‘This is Italy’s greatest singer!’ he yells. ‘How you find this?’

‘I have a friend whose dad has some records.’

‘This I have not heard in so long!’ He’s grinning so much I think his glasses are going to fall off.

Armelio is playing solitaire in the back of the hall, by the smoking lounge. 'You're out of your room, buddy? What's going on? Is there a fire?'

'This music!' Joy points up to it. 'This is Italian!'

'You Italian, buddy?'

'Yes.'

'I'm from Greece.'

'The Greeks, they took all our music.'

'This?' Armelio looks up. 'This ain't nothing like Greek music, buddy.'

'You want to sit, Joy?' I ask him. He looks around, then up at the music.

'The best seat will be over here, right by the speaker.' 'Yes,' he says, and sits down.

'I don't like this,' Armelio looks up.

'What kind of music do you like, Armelio?' I ask.

'Techno.'

'Just... techno?'

'Yeah. Utz-utz-utz-utz. Like that.'

'Heh heh.' Joy laughs. 'The Greek boy is funny.'

'Of course, I'm funny, buddy! I'm always funny! You just don't leave your room. You want to play cards?' Joy starts to leave; I stand over him and hold my hands out. 'Wait one second, boy. I know you can't play cards for money, but Armelio doesn't play for money.'

'This I know; I do not want to play.'

'Are you sure? He's got no one else to play with.' 'That's right. My friends are all watching this stupid movie. Do you want to play spades? I'll crush you in spades.'

‘Joy,’ I say. He’s still looking up at me, hands on his armrests, ready to spring. ‘Remember when you saved me from that girl?’

‘Yes.’

‘I’m trying to do the same thing for you now, to get you out of your room and save you. Please. Play with

Armelio.’

He looks at me, then at the speakers.

‘This I do for you, Dariez. But only for you. And only because of music.’

‘Great.’ I pat his back. ‘Go easy on him, Armelio.’

‘You know that’s not going to happen, buddy!’ I smile and walk down the hall, waving at them. As soon as I get to the corner, I run- I don’t have much Joy at the moment of the time- but skid to a leisurely pace by Paullie and then, moving as slowly and calmly as I can, enter my room. Joy picked up on what was happening: she’s already there, sitting on my bed, looking out the window.

‘You’re very crafty,’ she whispers. I shrug. ‘Come and sit. It’s a pretty view through your blinds.’

I sit down next to Joy and it starts off right away, like it was destined to-though I don’t believe in destiny; I just believe in biology, and hotness, and wanting girls. There’s been so much hesitation in so boy-y parts of my life that it’s shocking to not have any here, to just lean in and have this girl’s mouth open to mine, to be easing her down and touching her face and feeling the cuts there but understanding, not getting freaked out, just moving my hands down to her neck, which is clean and smooth, and her hitting my pillow and me next to her with my legs off the bed, still on the floor like I was sitting in class like my lower half had no part in this. K-I-S-S-I-N-G.

‘You’re beautiful,’ I stop and tell her.

‘Shh, they’ll hear.’

She has her hand in my hair and that reminds me that my hands should be doing something right now they’re just sort of touching her neck while I try and figure out what it is about her that’s so much sexier than Emmah. It's her tongue, I think it's a whole different creature than Emmah's. Emmah's was small and flighty; Joy's is overwhelming-she slides it in and it almost fills me up. It's like some deep dark part of her that I've gotten out, that no one else has access to. She presses it through my teeth and I keep my eyes open, although there's nothing in the room but scattered moonlight to see her by. We press against each other as if we both had prizes at the back of our mouths and we could only get them out with the tips of our tongues.

It frickin' rocks.

I put my hands on her white top and she doesn't stop me, not at all, and there they are, right through the soft fabric-one on each side, that is so cool- my palms envelop them and then rise from them and then envelop again. I'm not really sure what to do with them. They're bigger than Emmah's; they fill up my hands. Should I squeeze them? I try that. I look up. She's nodding. I squeeze them again, the whole thing, both at once and move my mouth down her chin to her neck, kissing the underside of it where Adam's apple would be, only this is a real girl.

She moves her hips against me. Not her hips, her crotch-I mean, that is a crutch, right? Girls have crotches...? Or do they have like a prettier name for them? Wow, how far is this going to go?

She presses it- whatever it is against my thigh. My feet have levitated somehow and now I'm horizontal on the bed next to her, with my hands squeezing her and my shoes-my Rockport shoes clanking against each other.

She says nothing. Everything is touching.

'Do you want me to?' I ask.

She nods. Or maybe shakes her head. I don't know. But I take two fingers of my right hand and put them through the soft seam in her top. Underneath is a bra, I'm pretty sure something made of mesh that wraps around her. I twiddle my finger against it, not sure if she can feel it. Can you feel things through a bra?

She makes noises like someone about to sneeze. When I squeeze her breasts, she makes more; when I twiddle the side of the bra, she doesn't make any. So, I put my fingers in all the way through her shirt and feel up the dome of the bra-the highest point on her.

An inch and a half above sea level.

‘Hold on.’ Joy lifts her butt off the bed and inserts her hands, flat, palms-down, below herself. Now she’s got no hands. She wasn’t doing anything with them anyway, but it’s weird. ‘Keep going,’ she says.

‘Okay,’ I slide my fingers, still outside her bra, around her nipple. I decided to try something. I get the nipple right between the knuckles on my index and middle finger, and I squeeze.

You can’t get much of a squeeze on through a bra, but the noises are immediate.

‘Un-hh.’

‘Um?’ I look up.

‘Mm-Mmmmm.’

Oh, this is awesome.

‘Sh-h,’ I whisper. ‘Paullie will come.’

‘How much Joy- do we have?’ She asks.

‘I don’t know. A little while.’

‘You’re going to call me, right? When you’re out? And we’re going to hang out?’

‘I want to go out with you,’ I say. ‘I really do.’

‘That’s what I mean. We will.’ She smiles. ‘Where will I tell kids, I met you?’

‘In the psych hospital. Then they won’t ask any questions.’

She giggles-yup, a real giggle. Now we’ve sort of lost the sexual nature of things. Can I get it back just by squeezing? It’s worth a shot.

‘Mm-mmm.’

All right, cool, only now there’s one more voice that wants me to do one more thing. It’s the same voice that got me hooking up with Emmah; it’s the voice of the lower half of me, but it feels truer now, and it knows it can’t get away with everything it wants to do, but it insists that we try something.

We need to test out that claim of Kristopher’s.

My hand moves down the real Joy's body, down the seam of the frilly white shirt to the skirt, which has a slightly different grain to the fabric. I move down to its end, by her knees, shocked that I don't get any resistance or hesitancy or punches in the face. I roll the skirt up-I'm really in danger of putting a hole through this bed at this point and there I find underwear. Not underwear. Panties.

Real panties!

Holy crap, I'm actually going to figure this out!

'Wow!'

Joy gasps.

'It is like the inside of a cheek!'

'What?'

Joy pushes me off her. The distended seam of the shirt is repositioned; the panties are jerked back in place; the skirt is down and the girl is up at the head of the bed, staring at me.

'What did you say about my cheeks?'

'No, no, sh-h-h-h-h,' I tell her. 'Not your cheeks, um... you're... your other cheeks.'

'My butt cheeks?' She pulls her hair over her real cheeks, holding it there, eyes wide and angry in the moonlight.

'No,' I whisper. Then sigh. 'Let me explain. Do you want me to explain?'

'Yes!'

'All right, but this is like privileged boy information. I'm only telling you because we're going to be hanging out when we get out of here.'

'Maybe we're not even. What did you say about my cheeks?'

'No, listen, it doesn't have anything to do with your cheeks and your cuts, all right?'

'What does it have to do with?'

I tell her.

When I'm done, there's a terrible pregnant pause, a pause that could hold all the hatred and yelling and screaming in the world as well as the possibility of me getting discovered as having another girl in my room (how did I get two? Am I a 'player'?) and having to stay here for another week, never talking to Joy again, going back to the Cycling, to being unable to eat, to move, to wake up, ending up like Joy or a Joy- or not remember being joy or thinking you are one. Single moments contain the potential for a complete failure, always. But they also contain the potential for a pretty girl to say-

'That is the stupidest thing I've ever heard.'

-And-

To put her own finger in her mouth to test it out.

I hug her.

'What?' she asks, mouth clogged. 'I don't get it. It doesn't feel the same at all.'

I pull back. 'You're so cool.' I look at her. 'How did you get so cool?'

'Please,' she says. 'We should go. The movie's almost over.'

I hug her one more time and pull her down to the bed. And in my mind, I rise up from the bed and look down on us, and look down at everybody else in this hospital who might have the good fortune of holding a pretty girl right now, and then at the entire Knox block, and then the neighborhood, and then Knox, and then Clarion's Counties, and then the whole Tri-State Area, and then this little corner of America-with laser eyes I can see into every house-and then the whole country and the hemisphere and now the whole stupid world, everyone in every bed, couch, futon, chair, hammock, love seat, and tent, everyone kissing or touching each other...and I know that I'm the happiest of all of them.

Kristopher and Emmah talked on the couch. I took my thermos of scotch-just to have something in my hand; I didn't open it-and watched how they moved, swaying toward and away from each other in increments that I doubt they even recognized. They stopped becoming kids in my eyes; they morphed right into male and female sex organs on a collision course.

'What's going on, son?' Richard asked. Richard hadn't gotten his first piece of jewelry yet; he was in like a larval state. 'You enjoying yourself?'

I was enjoying everything but Kristopher and Emmah. And the scotch. I wanted him to think I was enjoying the scotch, at least.

‘Do you like this stuff?’ I asked, opening my thermos.

‘What is it?’ He sniffed. ‘Yeah, dude, that’s hardcore. You gotta sip it.’

I put it to my lips. I didn’t even take any in, just let it filter against me and felt how hot it was. It was cutting evil, and bitter smelling-

Richard shoved the thermos at my mouth.

‘Sip it!’

‘Dude!’ I backed off as scotch splashed on my shirt; it felt lighter, slicker, and warmer than water. ‘You’re such a dick!’ ‘Pause!’ He ran across the room and punched this kid Asen, told him he’d had sex with his mom, and threw a pillow at Kristopher and Emmah, who were now attached by the lips on the couch.

I wasn’t that mad that it was happening. I was just mad that I’d missed how it happened. I hadn’t seen him lean in, or her; I wanted to know for the future, for some girl who wasn’t as desirable. But now at least I got a show; I got to see how Kristopher moved his hands. He put his right hand on her face over and over, gently, while his left slid around her side and gripped the small of her back more firmly. His hands were playing good-cop-bad-cop.

There was still some scotch in the thermos. I drank from it.

The taste didn’t bother me since Richard’s shove.

‘I didn’t know you drank, Dariez!’ a voice was like behind me. Julie, who always wore sweatpants that said Nice Try in an arc on her butt cheeks, clanked a beer against my thermos.

‘I don’t, really,’ I was like.

‘I thought you’d be busy studying. I heard you got into school. What are you going to do now?’

‘Go there.’

‘No, I mean with you, Joy.’

I shrugged. ‘I’ll work hard at school, get good grades, go to a good college, get a good job.’

‘It was crazy how much you studied. You always had those cards.’

I looked at the scotch. My esophagus was scorched, but I took more.

‘Did you see Kristopher and Emmah making out? They’re so cute!’

‘They’re making out?’ I was shocked.

‘Yeah, haven’t you seen?’

‘I saw them hooking up,’ I explained, looking out the kitchen at them. ‘I didn’t think they were having sex.’

‘They’re not!’

‘I thought making out was having sex.’

‘Jeez, Dariez, no. Making out is making out.’

‘Is that the same as hooking up?’

‘Well, hooking up can mean having sex. You got confused.’

Kristopher and Emmah were fully occupied now. One of his hands was hidden, exploring magical beige places.

‘You should put it on one of your cards.’ ‘Heh.’ I smiled.

Julie took a step toward me. ‘I really want to make out with somebody right now.’

‘Oh, cool.’

‘I’ve been looking and looking for someone.’ ‘Um...’ I eyed her. Her short blond hair framed a face that was a little wide at the bottom, and toothy, and somewhat red all around. I didn’t want to hook up with her or make out with her or whatever. The person I wanted was ten feet away. This would be my first kiss if she were offering me. Girls loved to say that they wanted to hook up with ‘someone’ when it was anyone but you. Julie tilted her head up, though, with her eyes closed. I looked at her lips, trying to make myself kiss them, but stopped. For my first kiss, I didn't want to settle. Julie opened her eyes.

'Are you okay, boy?'

'Yeah, yeah, I just...' Whew- I'm drunk and stoned, Julie. Give me a break. 'It's okay.' She left the room, and soon after, the party. I had hurt her feelings, I found out later; I didn't know I had that power.

I wandered over to the laptop that was supplying the music to the stereo. Next to it was Kristopher's father's record collection, shelved in the bookshelf, of old vinyl records. I suddenly needed some discrete information to put in my brain, to push out what was there, so I pulled a record out. Led Zeppelin III.

It was big-as big as the laptop-and the cover was a spiral of images: male heads with lots of hair, rainbows, blimps (I guessed those were the Zeppelins,) flowers, teeth. The edge of the record stuck out a bit, like a tab on a five-subject notebook, and I grabbed it experimentally. It turned, and when it turned, the whole circle turned inside, and the images that showed through the little holes changed: rainbows into stars, blimps into planes, flowers into dragonflies. It was freacking awesome. One of the symbols that popped up looked just like the levels of Q-Bert, one of the best old video games-I didn't realize Led Zeppelin had invented Q-Bert!

I looked up-Kristopher and Emmah was still at it. Now he had his hand in her hair and he was pulling her toward him like a gas mask. I held the album up to hide their heads. Heh.

I dropped the album. Kristopher and Emmah. I held it up.

More images. It was like they were part of it.

The house filled up. Kids began getting in line to go into one of Kristopher's book-filled closets. They weren't making out or anything-a kid named John had announced that he had sprayed pepperspray in there and kids were going in to see if they could handle it.

Boys and a few girls stumbled outgoing 'Aggg, my eyes!' and tearing, and running for water, but that didn't stop the ones lined up after them. It seemed like everyone at the party went except me.

I looked at more albums, like the Beatles' White Album, which I never knew was actually white, and each time- I looked up, Kristopher and Emmah were in a deeper state of entanglement. Suddenly I got really sleepy and warm, from the scotch I guess, and leaned against the album stack, just trying to rest my eyes for a minute. When I woke up, I looked instinctively for Kristopher and Emmah; they had disappeared. I craned from behind my resting spot and looked at the clock above the TV; somehow it was 2:07 A.M. The house had thinned out.

Jeez. I got up. The laptop playlist had stopped. My night was over. All I had done was look at records and almost hook up with a girl, but somehow, I felt accomplished.

'Uh, Richard?' I asked.

Richard was playing PlayStation on Kristopher's couch. The PlayStation cord stretched across the room. He looked up.

'What?'

'Where is everybody?'

'Having sex with your mom.'

Next, to Richard, a girl named Donna was balled up in a lump on one end of the couch. The boy with the Eight Ball jacket occupied a chair. Someone yelled to put on more music; Richard yelled to Shut up, son. The house was full of cups-mugs and glasses everywhere like they had been multiplying during the party.

'Does anyone know where Kristopher is?'

'Pause,' was all Richard could voyage.

'Kristopher!'

'Shut up, boy! He's with his chick.'

'I'm here, I'm here!' Kristopher strode out from his room, adjusting his pants. 'Jeez.' He surveyed the damage. 'What's up? You have a good rest?'

'Shoot, yeah. Where's Emmah?'

‘Asleep.’

‘You did her good, huh?’ Richard asked. ‘Asian invasion.’

‘Shut up, Richard.’

‘Asian contagion.’

‘Shut up.’

‘Asian persuasion.’

Kristopher yanked his controller out of the PlayStation.

‘Suh-uhn!’ Richard scrambled for it.

‘You want to go for a walk?’ Kristopher asked.

‘Sure!’ I got my jacket.

Kristopher woke up Eight Ball jacket and Donna and got them out; he forced Richard to leave too, over Sped protests. We all took the elevator down; Eight-Ball jacket and Richard went uptown; Donna and two others slid into a cab; me and Kristopher, instinctively, started toward the shimmering Kinzua Bridge, which carved its way through the night about three blocks from his house.

‘You want to walk across the bridge?’ Kristopher asked.

‘Into Knox?’

‘Yeah. You can go home or we can take the subway back to my place.’ ‘When will it be light?’

‘In three, four hours.’

‘Let’s do it. I’ll walk home and get breakfast.’

‘Cool.’

We walked in step. My feet weren’t cold at all. My head swam. I looked at bare trees and thought they were beautiful. The only way it could have been better was if it were snowing. Then I’d have flakes dripping down on me and I’d be able to catch them in my mouth. I wouldn’t be worried about Kristopher seeing that.

‘So, how do you feel?’ I was like.

‘About what?’ He was like.

‘You know,’ I was like.

‘Hold on a second.’ Kristopher spotted a Snapple bottle on the curb; it looked like it was filled with urine, which happens a lot in Knox-I don’t know why but homeless kids fill up bottles with piss and they don’t even have the courtesy to throw them away but then again it could be apple Snapple -did they have that? He lunged at it and sent it sailing across the street with a three-point kick; it landed on the opposite curb and shattered yellow under the streetlight.

‘Rough!’ Kristopher screamed. Then he looked around.

‘There aren’t any cops, right?’

I laughed. ‘No.’ We came to the entrance to the bridge. ‘So seriously, what was it like?’

‘She’s awesome. I mean, she likes everything- she really likes it. She likes... sex.’

‘You had sex with her?’

‘No, but I can tell. She likes everything else.’

‘What’d you do?’ He told me.

‘No way!’ I pushed him as we climbed the bridge. Air from the frigid Knox Waterfront blew at us, and I put my hood up over my head and tightened the chewed cord. ‘What was it like?’

‘It’s the craziest thing,’ Kristopher was like. ‘It feels just like the inside of your cheek.’

‘No kidding?’ I pulled one hand out of my pocket. ‘Yeah.’

I stuck a finger in my mouth and pushed to the side.

‘That’s it?’

‘Just like that,’ Kristopher said. He had his finger in his cheek too. ‘I’m serious. It’s hot.’

‘Huh.’

We walked in silence with our fingers in our mouths.

‘Did you hook up with anyone?’ he asked.

‘Nope. Julie wanted to, though.’

‘Nice one. Did she slip you something?’

‘What? No.’

‘Because you crashed out pretty hard in the corner over there.’

‘I was drinking my mom’s scotch and checking out your dad’s albums.’ ‘You’re a trip, Dariez.’

‘Looks pretty cool, though.’

We weren’t even a tenth of the way up the bridge, but it did look cool. Behind us, the walkway extended to City Hall, where the city had sprung for some spotlights to illuminate the dome of the building. It looked like a white pearl nestled between giants like the Woolworth building, which I learned in English class Ayn Rand had described as a ‘finger of God,’ and that was about right-green and white at the top like the world’s most decorated mint. To our left were the other bridges of Knox, arrayed against each other like alternating sin and cos waves, carrying a smattering of late-night trucks whose tops trailed mist.

But to the right was the best view: New York harbor, in a painting. Mostly black before freedom was just that. The Statue of Liberty was lit up with its older torch, but it always struck me as a little cheesy- to think this is what freedom is, standing out there being all cute. The real action was on the sides: Knox had its no-nonsense downtown, where kids made money, and on the other side was Knox, sleepy and dark but with a trump card-the container cranes, lit up not for show or government pride but because there was work going on, even at this hour-ships unloading stuff that was famously unchecked for terrorist threats but somehow hadn’t blown us up yet. Knox was a port. Knox was a port. We got things done. I had gotten things done, too.

Between Knox and Hollidaysburg, miles across the water, we saw the final curtain of Clarion-the Kinzua Bridge Bridge. It spanned the opening to the port, a steel-blue pair of upper lips greeting the blackness.

I could do anything anywhere, in all four directions.

‘Dariez?’ Kristopher was like.

‘What’s up.’

‘What’s up with you? You okay?’ ‘I’m happy,’ I said.

‘Why not?’

‘No, I said I’m happy’

‘I know. Why not be?’

We came up to the first tower of the bridge, with a plaque proclaiming who had built it; I stopped to read. John Roebling.

Aided by his wife, and then his son. He died during construction. But hey, the Kinzua Bridge might be here for eight hundred years. I wanted to leave something like that behind. I didn’t know how I was going to do it, but I felt like I had taken the first steps. ‘The really cool thing about Emmah...’ Kristopher was saying, and he started to go into anatomical details, things about her that I didn’t need to hear; I tuned him out; I knew he was talking to himself.

This was what he was happy about. I was happy about different stuff. I was happy because - someday I’d be walking across this bridge looking at this city, owning some piece of it, being valuable here.

‘Her butt is like-I think her butt shape is where they got the heart logo....’

We came to the middle of the bridge. On either side of us the cars hissed past; red on the left and white on the right, the lanes encased by thin metal trussing that stretched out from the walkway.

I had a sudden urge to walk out over the trussing and lean over the water, to declare myself to the world.

Once it came into my head, I couldn’t push it away. ‘I don’t know if it was real-’ Kristopher was saying.

‘I want to stand out over the water,’ I told him.

‘What?’

‘Come with me. You want to do it?’ He stopped.

‘Yeah,’ he said. ‘Yeah, I see where you’re coming from.’

There were pathways built onto the top of the trussing, places for the bridge workers to get out to the cables and repair them. I clambered onto one on the waterfront side, the side crowned by the Kinzua Bridge, and grabbed the handrails and balanced my feet one in front of the other on a piece of metal about four inches wide. Below me, cabs and SUVs are hummed by. In front of me was the black of the water and the black of the sky and the cold.

‘You’re crazy,’ Kristopher said.

I took steps forward. It was easy. Stuff like this always is. The stuff adults tell you not to do is the easiest.

Below me there were three lanes of traffic; I cleared the first, got halfway over the second; then Kristopher yelled: ‘What are you going to do out there!’

‘I’m just going to think!’ I called back.

‘About what?’

I shook my head. I couldn’t explain. ‘It’ll only take a minute!’

Kristopher turned back.

I moved past the second lane and kept my eyes on the horizon. I didn’t move my eyes from it for the last lane, shifting my hands in front of one another in a tight rhythm. I came to the edge of the bridge and was sort of surprised how there wasn’t any fence. There wasn’t anything to keep you from falling off, just your hands and your will. I gripped the bars at either side—they were freezing and then sprung my hands open and spread my arms wide and felt the wind whip and tug at me as I leaned myself over the water like... well, like Christ, I guess.

I closed my eyes and opened them, and the only difference was the feel of the wind on my eyeballs because when I closed them, I could still see the dotted lights perfectly. I threw back my head and yelled. When I was a kid, I read these books, the Redwall books, fantasy books about a bunch of warrior mice, and the mice had this war cry that I always thought was cool:

‘Eulalia.’

And like an idiot, that’s what I yelled off the Kinzua Bridge:

Eulaliaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa!

And I could have died right then.

And considering how things went, I really should have.

Part: 17

Depression starts slow. After howling off the Kinzua Bridge, I walked home and felt great. Kristopher split and took a late-night subway back to Knox, where he had a hell of a time - cleaning up his apartment and returning Emmah to her parents; I went to a dinner and got some eggs and wheat toast and came home at ten in the morning, telling Mom I had slept over at Kristopher’s, and pouring myself into bed. When I got up in the afternoon there were some forms to sign about accepting my admission to Executive Pre-Professional and a physical to schedule-how glorious. For once I was looking forward to the doctor holding my balls and telling me to cough, which I still don’t understand why they do.

The rest of the junior high was a joke. I didn’t need to do anything except make sure I didn’t fail a class and get ‘rescinded’ from Executive Pre-Professional, so I started hanging out with Kristopher every day. Now that we had the pot barrier broken, it became a magnificent haze of yelling back at the TV; we stopped calling it ‘watching movies;’ we started calling it ‘chilling.’ ‘Want to chill?’ Kristopher would ask, and I would pop on over.

Richard was never far behind. His insults never stopped, although they became more lovable, but- that didn’t matter, because he grew into a reliable dealer. He wasn’t going to high school with us- for all we knew, he wasn’t going at all-, but he was going to set up a jewelry shop, sell drugs, and make beats, that was for sure.

Emmah was always around, too. She and Kristopher spent about as much time - apart from as me and my right hand. I thought I was cool with it, but as I saw them-sitting with each other, sitting on each other, hugging each other, touching each other’s butt, smiling and kissing, in Kristopher’s room or in public- I started to get more and more pissed off. It was like they were throwing it in my face, although I knew neither of them meant that, the way I had thrown my studying in kids' faces and not meant it. Why else would they tell each other how much they wanted each other in whispers in front of me? Why else would Kristopher tell me, in great detail, about the first time - they had sex? One-day Kristopher announced to me and Richard as we watched MTV, 'You know what, since I got with Emmah, I've forgotten how to masturbate.'

'Me too, since I found your mom,' Richard said.

'Huh,' I said. My stomach hitched.

'I'm serious, I don't even know, anymore!' Kristopher grinned.

Great, boy. Wonderful. I learned how to masturbate the last few months of junior high when I went on AOL and started talking to girls with names like 'Little Luscious Lolita42.' I don't know if they were real girls. I just knew that I was lonely, and I wanted to make it so that when I got with someone, I'd have some idea what to do.

Problem was, no matter what girl I was talking to online when I came to the end of the whole process, I would run to the bathroom. And as I knelt down in front of the toilet, in the final few milliseconds, I would think about Emmah.

I had homework for school even before school started. They gave me this insane reading list for the summer that included Under the Volcano and David Copperfield. I tried to read them; I really did, but it wasn't like flashcards. It took days. Mom actually read the letters that the school sent and told me that part of their mission was to make us well-rounded, liberally educated bearers of tomorrow's vision, so I had better be ready to do English as well as math, but I found myself jealous of the kids who wrote the books. They were dead, and they were still taking up my Joy-. Who did they think they were? I would much rather chill at Kristopher's, sit in my room, run to the Internet and then to the bathroom, rinse, cycle, repeat. I ended up not finishing any of the summer-reading list books.

That wasn't good when it came TIME- to start school. The first day, I was quizzed on what I was supposed to have read over the summer. I got a 70, something I'd never seen on a sheet of paper in my life. Where do you see the number 70? There are no $70 bills; there's no reason to get a $70 check. I looked at the 70 as if it had stolen from me.

Kristopher, who ended up in eight out of my nine classes, got a 100 on the start-of-school reading quiz. He had read the books in Europe, where he got to go over the summer because his dad's books were popular there. He came back not just tan and full of knowledge and pictures, but ripe with stories of the European girls, he had hooked up with. He said he and Emmah had talked and she was totally cool with the other girls; he said he was busy turning her into a freak, someone who would be down for anything. When we hung out now, I didn't say half as much as I did that first night; I just listened and stayed impressed, tried to control my lower half while Emmah was there, pictured her in different freeze-frames for later in the evening.

Executive Pre-Professional High School was hard.

The teachers all told me I was going to have four hours of homework a night, but I didn't believe it- plus I believed I could handle it. I had gotten into the school; I'd definitely be able to take anything it could dish out, right?

In the first semester, in addition to the book list, I had this class called Intro to 17th Street that required me to pick up the Knox Times and 17th Street Journal every day. It turned out I was supposed to have been picking them up over the summer as well as some kind of handout that I didn't get in the mail. I needed to create a portfolio of current events articles and show how they related to stock prices and to get them back issues. I couldn't use the Internet; the teacher made me go to the library and use microfiche, which is like trying to read the U.S. Constitution of a postage stamp, and when I got two weeks behind on that, I had two more weeks of newspapers to pick up. The papers were so long; it was unbelievable how much news there was every day. And I was supposed to scan it all? How did anyone do it? The papers piled up in my room, and every day when I came home, I looked at them and knew that I could handle them, that if I just opened that first one, I'd be able to get through them all and get the assignment done.

Instead, I lay in bed and waited for Kristopher to call.

It was about this time- that I started labeling things Tentacles. I had a lot of Tentacles. I needed to cut some of them. But I couldn't; they were all too strong and they had me wrapped too tight, and to cut them I'd have to do something crazy like admit that I wasn't equipped for school.

The other kids were geniuses. I thought I was a big deal for getting an 800 on the exam-like the entire entering class had gotten 800. It turned out the test had been 'broken' in my year; they were tweaking it to make it less formulaic-i.e., less likely to let in kids like me. There were kids from Uruguay and Korea who had just learned English but were doing extra credit for the current events stuff in Intro to 17th Street, reading Barron's and Crain's Business Daily. There were freshmen taking calculus, while I was stuck in the math that came after algebra, which the teacher announced on the first day was 'ding-dong' math and there was no reason for us not to get a 100 in everything. I got an 85 on my first test and a small frowny face.

Plus, there were extracurriculars. Other kids did everything: they were on student government; they played sports; they volunteered; they worked for the school newspaper; they had a film club; they had a literature club; they had a chess club; they entered nationwide competitions for building robots out of tongue depressors; they helped teachers out after school; they took classes at local colleges; they assisted on 'orientation days.' I didn't do anything but school and Tae Bo, where I hit a plateau. They humored me in class, letting me fake-fight and do my not that formfitting pushups, but the teacher knew it was something that I didn't really enjoy. I quit. That was the only Tentacle I ever cut.

Why were the other kids doing better than me? Because they were better, that's why. That's what I knew every time with the joy- I sat down online or got on the subway to Kristopher's house. Other kids weren't smoking and jerking off, and those that were giftable to live and compete at the same Joys and times-. I wasn't gifted. Mom was wrong. I was just smart and I worked hard. I had fooled myself into thinking that was something important to the rest of the world. Other kids were complicit in this ruse. Nobody had told me I was common. That's not to say I did terrible in high school I got 93's. That looked good to my parents. Problem is, in the real world, 93 is the crap grade; colleges know what it means you do just well enough to stay in the 1990s. You're average. There are a lot of you. You aren't going over the top; if you're not doing any extracurriculars you're done. You can change things in later years, but with 93's your freshman year, you're going to have a lot of dead weight.

In December, three months into Executive Pre - Professional, I had stress vomiting for the first Joy-. It happened with my parents at a restaurant; I was eating tuna steak with spinach. They had brought me out to celebrate the holidays and talk with me. They had no idea. I sat there looking at the food and thinking about the Tentacles waiting for me at home, and for the first Joy - and likewise time the boy in my stomach appeared and said I wasn't getting any of it; I had better back down, buddy because otherwise, this was going to get ugly.

'How's biology class?' Mom asked.

Biology class was hell. I had to memorize these hormones and what they did and I hadn't been able to make flashcards because I was too busy clipping newspaper articles.

'Fine.'

'How's Intro to 17st Street?' Dad asked.

A boy from Bear Stearns had visited our class, thin and bald with a gold watch. He told us that if we were interested in getting into finance, we had better work hard and smart because a lot of machines were able to make investment decisions now, and in the future, computer programs would run everything. He asked the class how ~Sped~ of us were taking computer science, and everybody but me and this one girl who didn't speak English raised their hands.

'Great, excellent,' the boy had said. 'You other kids are out of a job! Heh heh. Learn comp sci.'

Please die right now, I mumbled in my head, where more and more activity was taking place. The Cycling had begun to develop, although it hadn't hit hard, and I didn't know quite what it was yet.

'17st Street is fine,' I told Dad across the table. The restaurant we were at was one of the ones in Knox that were featured in a Times article I had yet to read for current events. I didn't think we could really afford it, so I didn't get an appetizer.

The spinach and tuna mulled in my stomach. My whole body was tight. Why was I here? Why wasn't I off somewhere studying?

Soldier, what is the problem?

I can't eat this. I know I should be able to.

Get over it. Eat it.

I can't.

Do you know why that is?

Why?

Because you're wasting your Joy- like time, soldier! There's a reason the U.S. Army isn't made up of potheads! You're spending all your Joy- with all your time at your little horn-dog friend's house and when you get home you can't do what you have to do!

I know. I don't know how I can be so ambitious and so lazy at the same Joy- and time.

I'll tell you how, soldier. It's because you're not ambitious.

You're just lazy.

'I've got to be excused,' I told my parents, and I walked through the restaurant with that fast-walking going-to-throw-up gait-a run aching to get out that I learned to perfect over the next year. I came to the chrome bathroom and let it go in the toilet. Afterward, I sat, turned the light off, and pissed. I didn't want to get up. What was wrong with me? Where did I lose it? I had to stop smoking pot.

I had to stop hanging out with Kristopher. I had to be a machine.

I didn't get out of the bathroom until someone came and knocked.

When I went back to my parents, I told them: 'I think I might be, ya' know, depressed.'

The first doctor was Dr. Jarnerny. He was fat and short and had a puckered and expressionless face like a very serious gnome.

'What's the problem?' He leaned back in his small gray chair. It sounded like a callous way to put things, but the way he phrased it, so soft and concerned, I liked him.

'I think I have serious depression.'

'Uh-huh.'

'It started last fall.' 'All right,' he took shorthand on the pad on his desk. Next to the pad was a cup that read Zyprexa, which I thought was the craziest-sounding medical name I'd ever heard. (It turned out to be a drug for psychotics, I wondered if maybe a psychotic person had called a doctor a 'Zyprexa' and that's how they came up with the name.) Everything in Dr. Jarnerny's office was branded-the Post-it notes said Paxil on them; his pens were all for Prozac; the desk calendar had Zoloft on each page.

‘I got into this high school, and I had every reason to be the happiest boy in the world,’ I continued. ‘But I just started freaking out and feeling worse and worse.’

‘Uh-huh. You completed your sheet, I see.’

‘Yes.’ I held up the sheet that they had given me in the waiting room. It was a standard sheet, apparently, that they have all the new recruits at the Anthem Mental Health Center, the building in downtown Knoxville where this brain evaluation was taking place. The sheet had a bunch of questions about emotions you had felt over the past two weeks and four checkboxes for each one. For example, Feelings of hopelessness and failure. Feeling difficulty with your appetite. Feeling that you are unable to cope with daily life. For each one, you could check 1) Never, 2) Some days, 3) Nearly every day or 4) All the time- all the time.

I had run down the list, checking mostly threes and fours.

‘They like to collect these sheets every time you come in, to see how you’re doing,’ Dr. Jarnerny continued, ‘but on yours right now there’s one item of concern that we should discuss.’

‘Uh-huh?’

‘Feeling suicidal or that you want to hurt yourself.’ You checked ‘3) Nearly every day.’ ‘Right, well, not trying to hurt me. I wouldn’t cut myself or anything stupid. If I wanted to do it, I would just do it.’

‘Suicide.’

It felt strange to hear. ‘Right.’

‘Do you have a plan?’

‘Kinzua Bridge.’

‘You’d jump off the Kinzua Bridge.’

I nodded. ‘I’m familiar with it.’

‘How long have you had feelings like that, Dariez?’

‘Since last year, mostly.’

‘What about before then?’

‘Well... I’ve had them for years. Just less intense. I thought they were, you know, just part of growing up.’

‘Suicidal feelings.’ I nodded.

Dr. Jarnerny stared at me, his lips puckered. What was he so serious about? Who hasn’t thought about killing themselves, as a kid? How can you grow up in this world and not think about it? It’s an option taken by a lot of successful kids: Ernest Hemingway, Socrates, Jesus. Even before high school, I thought that it would be a cool thing to do if I ever got really famous. If I kept making my maps, for instance, and some art collector came across them and decided to make them worth hundreds of thousands of dollars if I killed myself at the height of that, they’d be worth millions of dollars, and I wouldn’t be responsible for them anymore. I’d have left behind something that spoke for itself, like the Kinzua Bridge.

‘I thought... you haven’t really lived until you’ve contemplated suicide,’ I said. ‘I thought like it would be good to have a reset switch, like on the video games, to start again and see if you could go a different way.’

Dr. Jarnerny said, ‘It sounds as if you’ve been battling this depression for a long Joy - with time.’ I stopped. No, I hadn’t... Yes, I had.

Dr. Jarnerny said nothing.

Then he said, ‘You have a flat affect.’

‘What’s that?’

‘You’re not expressing a lot of emotion about these things.’

‘Oh. Well. They’re too big.’

‘I see. Let’s talk a little about your family.’

‘Mom designs postcards; Dad works in health insurance,’ I said. ‘They’re together?’

‘Yes.’

‘Any brothers or sisters?’

‘One sister. Younger. Sarah. She’s worried about me.’

‘How so?’

‘She’s always asking me whether I’m good or bad, and when I tell her I’m bad she says, ‘Dariez, please get better, everyone is trying. ‘Things like that. It breaks my heart.’

‘But she cares.’

‘Yeah.’

‘Your family supports you coming here?’

‘When I told them about it, they didn’t waste any Joy- like time. They say it’s a chemical imbalance, and if I get the right drugs for it, I’ll be fine.’ I looked around the office at the names of the right drugs. If I got prescribed every drug that Dr. Jarnerny ripped, I’d be like an old boy counting out pills every morning.

‘You’re in high school, correct?’

‘Yes.’

‘And your sister?’

‘Fourth grade.’

‘You realize there are a lot of parental consent forms that need to be filled out for us to help you-’

‘They’ll sign everything. They want me to get better.’ ‘Supportive family environment,’ Dr. Booth scratched on his pad. He turned and gave his version of a smile, which was a slight affirmative, the lips barely curled, the lower lip out in front.

‘We’re going to get through this, Dariez. Now, from a personal standpoint, why do you think you have this depression?’

‘I can’t compete at school,’ I said. ‘All the other kids are too much smarter.’

'What's the name of your high school?'

'Executive Pre-Professional High School.'

'Right. I've heard of it. Lots of homework.'

'Yeah. When I come home from school, I know I have all this work to do, but then my head starts the Cycling.'

'Cycling.'

'Going over the same thoughts over and over. When my thoughts race against each other in a circle.'

'Suicidal thoughts?' 'No, just thoughts of what I have to do.

Homework.

And it comes up to my brain and I look at it and think 'I'm not going to be able to do that' and then it cycles back down and the next one comes up. And then things come up like 'You should be doing more extracurricular activities' because I should, I don't do near enough, and that gets pushed down and it's replaced with the big one: 'What college are you going to, Dariez?' Which is like the doomsday question because I'm not going to get into a good one.'

'What would a good one be?'

'Harvard. Yale. Duh.'

'Uh-huh.'

'And then the thoughts keep turning and I lie down on my bed and think them. And I used to not be able to lie down anywhere; I used to always be up doing something, but once the Cycling starts I can waste hours, just lying and looking at the ceiling, and Joy- goes slowly and really fast at the same Joy- and then it's midnight and I have to go to sleep because no matter what I do, I have to be at school the next day. I can't let them know what's happening to me.'

'Do you have difficulty sleeping?'

‘Sometimes- not. When I do it’s bad, though. I lie there thinking about how everything I’ve done is a failure, death, and failure, and there’s no hope for me except being homeless because I’m never going to be able to hold a job because everyone else is so much smarter.’

‘But they’re not all, are they, Dariez? Some of them have to be not as smart as you.’

‘Well, those are the ones who I don’t have to worry about! But plenty of kids are, and they’re going to kick my ass everywhere. Like my friend Kristopher-’

‘Who’s that?’

‘My best friend. He has a girlfriend too, who I’m friends with.’

‘How do you feel about her?’

‘Not so much... one way or the other.’

‘Uh-huh.’ Dr. Jarnerny wrote on his pad.

‘Anyway... ‘I tried to sum up. I was lying to this boy; that meant we really knew each other. ‘It’s all about living a sustainable life. I don’t think I’m going to be able to have one.’ ‘A sustainable life.’

‘That’s right, with a real job and a real house and everything.’

‘And a family?’

‘Of course! You have to have that. What kind of success are you if you don’t have that?’

‘Uh-huh.’

‘So, to have that I have to start shaping up now, but I can’t because of this crap that’s going on in my head. And I know that these things I’m thinking don’t make sense and I think ‘Stop!’”

‘But you can’t stop.’

‘I can’t stop.’

‘Well.’ He tapped his Prozac pen. ‘You know that your thoughts aren’t thoughts you want to have. That’s a good thing.’

‘Yeah.’

‘Do you ever hear voices?’

Uh-oh. Now we were getting into the real meat. Dr. Jarnerny was cuddly enough, but I was sure that if you gave him a straitjacket he’d be able to handle it just fine, coaxing you into it and leading you to a very comfortable room with soft walls and a bench where you could sit looking at a one-way mirror and telling kids you were Scrooge McDuck. (How did they make one-way mirrors, anyway?) I knew I had problems, but I also knew I wasn’t crazy. I wasn’t schizo. I didn’t hear voices. Well, I heard that one voice, the army boy, but that was my voice, just me trying to motivate myself. I was not going to get thrown in the loony bin.

‘No voices,’ I said. Lied, technically. Lied again.

‘Dariez, do you know about brain chemistry?’

I nodded. I’d skipped ahead in the bio textbook.

‘Do you know how depression works?’

‘Yeah.’ It was a simple explanation. ‘You have these chemicals in your brain that carry messages from each brain cell to the next brain cell. They’re called neurotransmitters. And one of them is serotonin.’

‘Excellent.’

‘Which scientists think is the neurotransmitter related to depression ... If you have a lack of this chemical in your system, you can start to get depressed.’ Dr. Jarnerny nodded.

‘Now,’ I kept on, ‘after the serotonin passes a message from one brain cell to the next, it gets sucked back into the first brain cell to be used again. But the problem is sometimes your brain cells do too much sucking’-I chuckled-‘and they don’t leave enough serotonin in your system to carry the messages. So, they have these drugs called selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors that keep your brain from taking too much serotonin back to get more of it in your system. So, you feel better.’ ‘Dariez, excellent!

You know a lot.

We’re going to put you on medication that is going to do just that.’

‘Great.’

‘Before I write a prescription, do you have any questions for me?’

Sure, I did. Dr. Jarnerny looked happy. He had a nice gold ring and shiny glasses.

‘How’d you get started in this?’ I asked. ‘I’m always interested to know how kids got started.’

He leaned forward, his paunch disappearing in his shadow. He had huge gray eyebrows and a somber face.

‘After college, I went through my own shit and decided that all the physical suffering in the world couldn’t compare to mental anguish,’ he said. ‘And when I got myself cleared up, I decided to help other kids.’

‘You got yours cleared up?’

‘I did.’

‘What did you have?’

He sighed. ‘What you have.’

‘Yeah?’

‘To a tee.’

I leaned forward-our faces were two feet away from one another. ‘How did you fix it?’ I begged.

He tilted the side of his mouth up. ‘The same way you will. On my own.’

What? What kind of answer was that? I scowled at him. I was here for help; I wasn’t here to figure this out on my own; if I wanted to figure it out on my own, I’d be taking a bus tour of Mexico -

‘We’re going to start you on Zoloft,’ Dr. Jarnerny said.

‘What’s the name of your high school?’

‘Executive Pre-Professional High School.’

‘Right. I’ve heard of it. Lots of homework.’

‘Yeah. When I come home from school, I know I have all this work to do, but then my head starts the Cycling.’

‘You got yours cleared up?’

‘What did you have?’

He sighed. ‘What you have.’

‘Yeah?’

‘To a tee.’

I leaned forward—our faces were two feet away from one another. ‘How did you fix it?’ I begged.

He tilted the side of his mouth up. ‘The same way you will. On my own.’

What? What kind of answer was that? I scowled at him. I was here for help; I wasn’t here to figure this out on my own; if I wanted to figure it out on my own, I’d be taking a bus tour of Mexico—‘We’re going to start you on Zoloft,’ Dr. Jarnerny said. Oho?

‘It’s a great medication; it helps a lot of kids. It’s an SSRI, it’s going to affect the serotonin in your brain as you said, but you can’t expect an instant effect because it takes weeks to get into your system.’

‘Weeks?’

‘Three to four weeks.’

‘Isn’t there a fast-acting version?’

‘You take the Zoloft with food, once a day. We’ll start you on fifty milligrams. The pills make you feel dizzy, but that’s the only side effect, except for sexual side effects.’ Dr. Jarnerny looked up from his pad. ‘Are you sexually active?’

Ha, ha, ha. ‘No.’

‘All right. Also, Dariez: I think that you would benefit from seeing someone.’

‘I know! Don’t think I haven’t tried. I’m not really good at talking to girls.’

‘Girls? No. I meant therapists. You should start seeing a therapist.’

‘What about you?’

‘I’m psychopharmacology. I refer you to the therapists.’

What a racket. ‘Okay.’

‘Let’s take a look for one.’ He opened up what looked like the white pages on his desk and started rattling off names and addresses to me as if they made a difference. Dr. Abrams in

Knox, Dr. Fieldstone in Knox, Dr. Bok in Knox... I thought Dr. Bok was a cool name, so we set up an appointment with him-I missed it, though, because later in the week I was doing a history assignment, and I was so embarrassed that I didn’t call to cancel with Dr. Bok that I never went to see him again.

The next joy’s of time is- with Dr. Jarnerny we had to pick another shrink, and then another, and then another, among them the little old lady who asked if I had been sexually abused and the beautiful redhead who asked why I had so ~Sped~ problems with women and the boy with the handlebar mustache who suggested hypnosis. It was like I was dating; except I didn’t get to make out with any of the girls and I was also bi because I met up with boys.

‘I like talking to you,’ I told Dr. Jarnerny.

‘Well, you’ll be seeing me in a month, to check up on how the medication is treating you.’

‘You don’t do therapy?’

‘The other doctors are great, Dariez; they’ll help.’

Dr. Jarnerny stood up-he was about five-foot-five-and shook my hand with a soft, meaty grip. He handed me the Zoloft prescription and instructed me to get it right away, which I did, even before taking the subway home.

The Zoloft worked, and it didn't take weeks-it worked as soon as I took it that first day. I don't know how, but suddenly I felt good about my life - what the hell? I was a kid; I had plenty more to do; I'd been through some crap but I was learning from it. These pills were going to bring me back to my old self, able to tackle everything, functional and efficient. I'd be talking to girls in school and telling them that I was messed up, that I had had problems but that I'd dealt with them, and they'd think I was brave and sexy and ask me to call them.

It must have been a placebo effect, but it was a great placebo effect. If placebo effects were this good, they should just make placebos the way to treat depression - maybe that's what they did; maybe Zoloft was cornstarch. My brain said yes, I am back and I thought the whole thing was over.

This was my first experience with a Fake Shift. Dastardly stuff you do well on a test; you make a girl laugh; you have a particularly lower-body-simmering experience after talking online and rushing to the bathroom; you think it's all over. That just makes it worse when you wake up the next day and it's back with a vengeance to show you who's boss. 'I feel great!' I told Mom when I got home.

'What did the doctor say?'

'I'm on Zoloft!' I showed her the bottle.

'Huh. A lot of kids at my office take this.'

'I think it's working!'

'It can't be working already, honey. Calm down.'

I took my Zoloft every day. Some days I woke up and got out of bed and brushed my teeth like any normal Um- being; some days I woke up and lay in bed and looked at the ceiling and wondered what the hell the point was of getting out of bed and brushing my teeth like any normal Um- being. But I always boy aged to take it. I never tried to take more than one, either; it wasn't that kind of drug. It didn't make you feel anything, but then after a month, just like they said, I started to feel that there was a buoy keeping me upright when I got bad. If the Cycling started there was a panic button attached to my good thoughts; I could click it and think about my family, my sister, my friends, my Joy- online; the good teachers at school-the Anchors.

I even spent Joy- with Sarah. She was so smart, smarter than me for sure. She'd be able to handle what I was going through without seeing any doctors. Her homework bordered on algebra even though it was only fourth grade, and I helped her with it, sometimes doodling spirals or patterns on the side of the pages while she worked. I didn't do maps anymore.

'Those are cool, Dariez,' she would say.

'Thanks.'

'Why don't you do art more?'

'I don't have Joy- or time.'

'Silly. You always have Joy- and time.'

'Oh yeah.'

'Yes. Joy- is a person-made concept.'

'Really? Where'd you hear that?'

'I made it up.'

'I don't know if that's true. We all live within joys and the joy of time-. It rules us- that is why we're all joy at some point, we have to find it when lost.'

'I use my joy's of time – time now and time past- how I want, so I rule it.'

'You should be a philosopher, Sarah.'

'Uggg, no. What's that? Interior design.'

My eating came back around: first coffee yogurt, then bagels, then chicken. Sleeping, meanwhile, was two steps forward, one step back. (That's one of the golden rules of psychology: the shrinks say that everything in our lives is two-steps-forward, one-step-back, to justify that time- you, say, drank paint thinner and tried to throw yourself off a roof. That was just taking a step back.) Some nights I wouldn't sleep, but then for the next two, I slept great. I even dreamed: flying dreams, dreams of meeting Emmah on a bus and talking with her, looking at her, seeing her off a few stops down the line. (Never having sex with her, unfortunately.) Dreams that I was I jumping off a bridge and landing on giant fuzzy dice, bouncing across the Hudson River from Knox to New Jersey, laughing and looking back at which numbers I had landed on.

When I couldn't sleep, though, it sucked. I'd think about the fact that my parents weren't going to leave me much money and they might not have enough to send my sister to college and I had a history assignment to do and how come I didn't go to the library today and I hadn't checked my e-mail in days-what was I missing in there? Why did I fret so much about e-mail? Why was I sweating into the pillow? It wasn't hot. How come I had smoked pot and jerked off today? -I had developed a rule: on the days you jerk off you don't smoke pot and on the days you smoke pot you don't jerk off, because the days you do both are the ones that become truly wasted days, days where you take three steps back.

I started to work in phases a little bit. For three weeks-

I'd be cool, fine, functional. Even at my most functional, I wasn't someone you'd pay a lot of attention to; you wouldn't see me in the halls at school and go 'There he goes, Dariez Gilner-I wonder what he's up to.' You'd see me and go, 'What does that poster say behind that boy-is the anime club meeting today?' But I was there, that was the important thing. I was at school as opposed to a home in my bed.

Then I'd get worse. Usually, it happened after a chill session at Kristopher's house, one of those glorious times when we got really high and watched a really bad movie, something with Will Smith where we could point out all the product placements and plot holes.

I'd wake up on the couch in Kristopher's living room (I would sleep there while he slept with Emmah in the back) and I'd want to die. I'd feel wasted and burnt, having wasted my time - and my body and my energy and my words and my soul. I'd feel like I had to get home right now to do work but didn't have the ability to get to the subway. I'd just lie here for five more minutes. Now five more. Now five more. Kristopher would eventually get up and I'd pee and force myself to interact with him, to get breakfast and hold down a few bites. Emmah would ask me 'You all right, boy?' and one Saturday morning, while Kristopher was out getting coffee, I told her no.

'What's wrong?'

I sighed. 'I got really depressed this year. I'm on medication.'

'Dariez- Oh my gosh. I'm so sorry.' She came over and hugged me with her little body. 'I know what it's like.' 'You do?' I hugged back. I'm not a crier; I just look it; I'm a hugger. Cheesy, I know. I held the hug as long as I could before it got awkward.

'Yeah. I'm on Prozac.'

'No way!' I pulled back from her. 'You should have told me!'

'You should have told me! We're like partners in illness!'

'We're the illest!' I got up.

'What are you on?' she asked.

'Zoloft.'

'That's for wimps.' She stuck her tongue out. She had a ring.

'The really messed-up kids are on Prozac.' 'Do you see a therapist?' I wanted to say 'shrink,' but it sounded funny out loud.

'Twice a week!' She smiled.

'Jesus. What is wrong with us?'

'I don't know.' She started dancing. There wasn't any music on, but when Emmah wanted to dance, she danced.

'We're just part of that messed-up generation of American kids who are on drugs all the time-.'

'I don't think so. I don't think we're any more messed up than anybody before.'

'Dariez, like eighty percent of the kids I know are on medication. For ADD or whatever.'

I knew too, but I didn't like to think about that. Maybe it was stupid and solipsistic, but I liked to think about me. I didn't want to be part of some trend. I wasn't doing this for a fashion statement.

'I don't know if they really need it,' I said. 'I really need it.'

'You think you're the only one?'

'Not that I'm the only one... just that it's a personal thing.'

'Okay, fine, Dariez.' She stopped dancing. 'I won't mention it, then.'

‘What?’

‘Jesus. Do you know why you’re messed up? It’s because you don’t have a connection with other kids.’

‘That’s not true.’

‘Here I am, I just told you I have the same problem as you.’

‘It might not be the same.’ I had no idea what Emmah had; she might have basic-depression. Basic-depression was much cooler than actual depression because you got the basic parts. I read that they rocked. It was so unfair.

‘See? This is what I mean. You put these walls up.’

‘What walls?’

‘How ~Sped~ kids have you told that you’re depressed?’

‘My mom. My dad. My sisters. Doctors.’

‘What about Kristopher?’

‘He doesn’t need to know. How ~Sped~ kids have you told?’ ‘Of course, Kristopher needs to know! He’s your best friend!’

I looked at her.

‘I think Kristopher has a lot of problems too, Dariez.’ Emmah sat down next to me. ‘I think he could really benefit from going on some medication, but he’d never admit it.

Maybe if you told him, he would.’

‘Have you told him?’

‘No.’

‘See? Anyway, we know each other too well.’

‘Who? Me and you? Or you and Kristopher?’

‘Maybe all of us.’

‘I don’t think so. I’m glad I know you, and I’m glad I know him. You can call me; you know if you’re feeling down.’

‘Thanks. I actually don’t have your new number.’

‘Here.’

And she gave it to me, a magical number: I put it with her name in all caps on my phone. This is a girl who can save me, I thought. The therapists told you that you needed to find happiness within yourself before you got it from another person, but I had a feeling that if Kristopher were off the face of the earth and I was the one holding Emmah at night and breathing on her, I’d be pretty happy. We both would be.

At home I got through the bad episodes by lying on the couch and drinking water brought from my parents, turning the electric blanket on to get warm and sweating it out. I wanted to tell kids, ‘My depression is acting up today’ as an excuse for not seeing them, but I never managed to pull it off. It would have been hilarious. After a few days, I’d get up off the couch and return to Dariez who didn’t need to make excuses for himself. around those times, I would call Emmah to tell her I was feeling better and she would tell me she was feeling good too; maybe we were in synch. And I told her not to tease me. And she would smile over the phone and say,

‘But I’m so good at it.’

In March, as I had eight pills left of my final refill, I started thinking that I didn’t need the Zoloft anymore.

I was better. Okay, maybe I wasn’t better, but I was okay it was a weird feeling, a lack of weight in my head. I had caught up in my classes. I had found Dr. Ross - the sixth one that Dr. Jarnerny and I tried- and found her quiet, no-nonsense attitude amenable to my issues. I was still getting 1993’s, but what the hell, someone had to get them.

What was I doing taking pills? I had just had a little problem and freaked out and needed some time- to adjust. Anyone could have a problem starting a new school. I probably never needed to go to a doctor in the first place. What, because I threw up? I wasn’t throwing up anymore. Some days - I wouldn't eat, but back in Biblical times kids did that all the time- fasting was a big part of religion, Mom told me. We were already so fat in America; did I need to be part of the problem?

So, when I ran out of the final bottle of Zoloft, I didn't take any more. I didn't call Dr. Jarnerny either. I just threw the bottle away and said Okay, if I ever feel bad again, I'll remember how good I felt that night on the Kinzua Bridge. Pills were for wimps, and this was over; I was done; I was back to me.

But things come full circle, baby, and two months later I was back in my bathroom, bowing to the toilet in the dark.

My parents are outside hearing me retch up the dinner I just ate with them. I look at the door; I think I can hear Dad chewing the last bite he took when he got up from the table.

'Dariez, should we call someone?' Mom asks. 'Is it an emergency?'

'No,' I say, getting up. 'I'm going to be all right.'

'Um, hey, yeah, I told your mom not to make the squash,' Dad jokes.

'Heh,' I say, climbing to the sink. I wash out my mouth with water and then mouthwash and then more water. My parents pepper me with questions.

'Do you want us to call Dr. Jarnerny?'

'Do you want us to call Dr. Ross?'

'Do you want some tea?'

'Tea? Give the boy some water. You want water?'

I turn on the light-

'Oh. He had the light off. Are you okay, Dariez? Did you slip?'

I look at myself in the bathroom light. Yes, I'm okay. I'm okay because I have a plan and a solution: I'm going to kill myself.

I'm going to do it tonight. This is such a farce, this whole thing. I thought I was better and I'm not better. I tried to get stable and I can't get stable. I tried to turn the corner and there aren't any corners; I can't eat; I can't sleep; I'm just wasting resources.

It's going to be tough on my parents.

So tough, And my little sister...

Such a beautiful, smart girl. Not a dud like me, that's for sure.

It'll be hard to leave her.

Not to mention it might mess her up. Plus, my parents will think they're such failures. They'll blame themselves.

It'll be the most important event in their lives, the thing that gets whispered by other parents at parties when their backs are turned:

Did you hear about their son?

Teen suicide.

They'll never get over it.

I don't know how anyone could.

They must not have known the warning signs.

But you know what, it's the Joy of time- for me to stop putting other kids' emotions ahead of my own. It's the joy of time- for me to be true to myself like the pop stars say. And my true self-wants to blast off this rock.

I'll do it tonight. Late tonight. In the morning, specifically. I'll get up and bike to the Kinzua Bridge and throw myself off it.

Before I go, though, I'll sleep in Mom's bed for one final night. She lets me sleep there when I'm feeling bad, even though I'm too old-Dad'll sleep in the living room. There's plenty of space by her, and it's not like we touch or anything; she's just available to bring me warm milk and cereal. Tonight is something I owe her; her only son spending time- with her before he goes.

I'd be heartless not to. I'll hug my dad too, and my sister. But I'm not leaving any notes. What kind of crap is that?

‘I’m okay,’ I say, unlocking the bathroom door and stepping out. My parents’ corner me in a hug that mimics the one at Kristopher’s blowout party when we were confirming that our futures were bright.

‘We love you, Dariez,’ Mom says.

‘This is true,’ Dad says.

‘Uh,’ I say.

With Dr. Ross, I talk about my Tentacles and Anchors. Here’s something for you, Doctor: my parents are now part of the Tentacles, and my friends too. My Tentacles have Tentacles, and I’m never going to cut them off. But my Anchor, that’s easy: it’s killing myself. That’s what gets me through the day. Knowing that I could do it. That I’m strong enough to do it and I can get it done.

‘Can I sleep in your bed tonight?’ I ask Mom.

‘Sure, honey, of course.’ Dad nods at me.

‘I’m ready for bed, then.’ I go into my room and pull out clothes to sleep in, stash another pile to die in. I’ll get them when I leave in the morning. Mom announces that she’s making some warm milk and it’ll help me sleep. I go to my sister’s room. She’s up, sketching a kitchen at her desk.

‘I love ya, little girl,’ I tell her.

‘Are you okay?’ She responds.

‘Yeah.’ ‘You threw up.’

‘You heard?’

‘It was like eccccccchhhh reccccccch blaccchhh, of course, I heard.’

‘I turned the water on!’

‘I have good ears.’ She points to her ears.

‘You do good throw-up impressions, too,’ I say.

‘Yeah.’ She turns back to her sketch. ‘Maybe when I grow up, I could be like a stand-up comedian, and just get on stage and make those noises.’

‘No,’ I say, ‘what you could do, or what I could do, since I’m so good at it, is get up on stage and actually throw up, and kids would pay to watch like I was a professional vomit-er.’

‘Dariez, that is so gross.’

But I don’t think it’s gross. I think it’s kind of a good idea.

How does per-for-Boyce art get started, after all?

Don’t let that distract you, soldier.

Right, I won’t.

You’ve made your decision and you’re sticking to it, is that correct?

Yes, sir.

The point of you being in this room is to say goodbye to your sister, is that, not right?

Absolutely, sir.

I’m sorry to see it come to this, soldier. I thought you had promise. But you got to do what you got to do, and sometimes you got to commit hara-kiri, ya know?

Yes, sir.

I hug Sarah. ‘You’re very sweet and smart, and you have great ideas. Stick with them.’

‘Of course.’ She looks at me. ‘What’s wrong with you?’ ‘I’m okay.’

‘You’re bad. Don’t try and fool me.’

‘I’ll be all right tomorrow.’

‘Okay. You like my kitchen?’

She holds it up. It’s practically a blueprint, with the swinging quarter-circles for doors and the sink and refrigerator outlined in crisp, bird’s-eye detail. It looks like something someone would pay for.

'It's amazing, Sarah.'

'Thanks. What are you doing now?'

'I'm going to sleep early.'

'Feel better.'

I leave her room. Mom already has the warm milk for me and my place all set up in her bed.

'You feeling better?'

'Sure.'

'Are you really, Dariez?'

'Yes, jeez, sure.'

'Lean back on the pillows.' I get in her bed-the mattress is firm and real. I scrunch my feet under the covers and savor that feeling fresh linen over your feet, bunching up in little mountain ranges.

That's a feeling everyone can enjoy. Mom hands me the milk.

'It's only nine o'clock, Dariez; you're not going to be able to go to sleep.'

'I'll read.'

'Good. Tomorrow we'll schedule something with Dr. Jarnerny to help you. Maybe you need new medicine.'

'Maybe.'

I sit and drink the warm milk and think nothing. It's a talent I have got the developed-one thing I've learned recently. How to think nothing. Here's the trick: don't have any interest in the world around you, don't have any hope for the future, and be warm.

Continued: 1

Damn, though. There's someone else I should call. I pick the cell out of my pocket and flip it open to the name that's all caps. I hit SEND.

‘Emmah?’ I ask when she picks up.

‘Hi, yeah, what’s up?’

‘I wanted to talk to you.’

‘What about?’

I sigh.

‘Oh-hhh. Are you okay, boy?’

‘No.’

‘Where are you?’

‘At home. I’m in my mom’s bed, actually.’

‘Whoa, we have bigger problems than we thought, Dariez.’

‘No! I’m just here because it helps me sleep. Don’t you remember when you were a little kid, sleeping in your parent’s bed was like, such a treat?’

‘Well, my dad died when I was three.’

Shoot. That’s right. Some of us have actual things to complain about.

‘Right, sorry, um, I-’

‘It’s okay. I slept with my mom sometimes.’

‘But you probably don’t anymore.’

‘No, I do. Same situations as you, I bet.’

‘Huh. What are you up to now?’

‘Home on the computer.’

‘Where’s Kristopher?’

‘Home on his computer. What do you want, Dariez?’

I take a breath. 'Emmah, you remember the party that we had when we all figured out, we got into Executive Pre-Professional?'

'Yeahhhh...'

'When you came to that party, did you know you were going to hook up with Kristopher?'
'Dariez, we're not talking about this.'

'Please, come on, I have to know if I had a shot.'

'We're not.'

'Please. Pretend I'm dying.'

'God. You are so melodramatic.'

'Heh. Yeah.'

'I wore my green dress at that party, I remember that.'

'I remember too!'

'And Kristopher was very nice to me.'

'He sat next to you in Scrabble.'

'And I already knew he liked me. But I had been putting off getting involved with anyone until I knew about high school because I didn't want it to distract me. And you and Kristopher, you were like, in the running. You both talked to me. But you had that mole on your chin.'

'What?'

'Remember, the big hairy one? It was all pockmarked and gross.'

'I didn't have any mole!'

'Dariez, I'm joking.'

'Oh, right, duh.' We both laugh. Hers is full, mine empty.

'You promise not to take this the wrong way, Dariez?' 'Sure,' I lie.

'If you had made a move, I would probably have, you know, go along. But you didn't.'

Death.

'See, it works out, though. Now we're friends, and we can talk about stuff like this.'

'Sure, we can talk.'

Death.

'Believe me, I get sick of talking with Kristopher.'

'Why?' 'He's always talking about himself and his problems. Like you. You're both self-centered. Only, you have a low opinion of yourself, so it's tolerable. He has a really high opinion of himself.'

It's a pain.'

'Thanks, Emmah, you're very sweet.'

'You know I try.'

'What if I tried now?' I ask. Nothing to lose.

'To what?'

'You know. What if I just came over and said screw it and stayed outside until you came out and grabbed you and kissed you?'

'Ha! You'd never do it.'

'What if I did?'

'I'd slap you.'

'You'd slap me.'

'Yeah. Remember that? That was so funny.' I switch phones from ear to ear.

'Well, I just wanted to clear that up.' I smile. And that's true. I don't want to leave loose ends. I want to know where I stand. I don't stand anywhere with Emmah, really, not more than friends.

I missed an opportunity with her, but that's okay, I've missed ~Sped~. I have a lot of regrets.

'I'm worried about you, Dariez,' she says.

'What?'

'Don't do anything stupid, okay?'

'I won't,' I tell her, and that's not a lie. What I'm doing makes a lot of sense.

'Call me if you think you're going to do anything stupid.'

'Bye, Emmah,' I say. And I mouth into the phone, I love you, in case some of her cells pick up on the vibrations and it serves me well in the next life. If there is one. If there is a next life, I hope it's in the past; I don't think the future will be any more handleable.

'Bye, Dariez.'

I click END. I think it's a little harsh how the END button is red.

~*~

I'm pretty stupid for thinking I could get any sleep tonight. Once I turn off the lights and put the cup aside, I get the not sleeping Feeling-it's kind of like feeling the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse rear up in your brain and put some ropes around it and pull it toward the front of your skull. They say, No way, dude! Who did you think you were fooling! You think you were going to wake up at three in the morning and throw yourself off the Kinzua Bridge without staying up all night? Give us a little credit!

My mind starts Cycling. I know it's going to be the worst that it's ever been. Over and over again, cycling of tasks, of failures, of problems. I'm young, but I'm already screwing up my life. I'm smart but not enough-just smart enough to have problems. Not smart enough to get good grades. Not smart enough to have a girlfriend. Girls think I'm weird.

I don't like to spend money. Every time I spend it, I feel as if I'm being raped. I don't like to smoke pot, but then I do smoke it and I get depressed. I haven't done enough with my life. I don't play sports. I quit Tae Bo. I'm not involved in any social causes. My one friend is a screwup-a genius blessed with the most beautiful girl in the world, and he doesn't even know it. There's so much more for me to be doing. I should be a success and I'm not and other kids' younger kids- are. Younger kids than me are on TV and getting paid and winning scholarships and getting their lives in order. I'm still a nobody. When am I going to not be a nobody?

The thoughts trail one another in my brain, running from the back up to the front and dripping down again under my chin: I'm no one; I'll never make it in my life;

I'm about to get revealed as a fake, I've already been revealed as a fake but I don't know it yet; I know I'm a fake and pretend not to. All the good thoughts-the normal ones, the ones that have occasionally surfaced since last fall- scramble out the front of my brain in terror of what lives in my neck and spine. This is the worst it'll ever be.

My homework swims in front of my closed eyes- the Intro to 17th Street stock-picking game, the Inca history paper, the dingdong math test-they appear as if on a gravestone. They'll all be over soon.

Mom climbs into bed next to me. That means it's still early. Not even eleven. It's going to be such a long night. Jarddan, the dog who should be dead, climbs into bed with her and I put my hand on him, try to feel his warmth and take comfort from it. He barks at me.

I turn on my stomach. My sweat drenches my pillow. I turn over on my back. It drenches it in the other direction. I turn on my side like a baby. Do babies sweat? How about in the womb, do you sweat in there? This night will never end. Mom stirs.

'Dariez, are you still up?'

'Yes.'

'It's twelve-thirty. Do you want cereal? Some times I have a bowl of cereal that will just knock you out.'

'Sure.'

'Cheerios?'

I think I can handle Cheerios. Mom gets up and gets them for me. The bowl is heaping and I tackle it with the ferocity that I think the last meal deserves-shoving it all in me as if it owes me loot.

I'm not going to throw this up.

Mom starts breathing regularly next to me. I start to think practically about how I'm going to handle this. I'm taking my bike, I know that. That's one thing I'll miss: riding around Knox on the weekends like a mammal, dodging cars and trucks and vans with pipes sticking out of them, meeting Richard and then locking the bikes up by the subway station to go to Kristopher's house. Riding a bike is pure and simple-Richard says he thinks it's boykind's greatest invention, and although I thought that was stupid at first, these days I'm not so sure. Mom won't let me take the bike to school so I've never ridden over a bridge- that'll be the first time-. I don't think I'll wear my helmet.

I'll take the bike, and it'll be a warm spring night. I'll speed up Flatbush Avenue -the artery of fat Knox-right to the Knox entrance of the bridge, with the potholes and cops stationed all night. They won't look at me twice that, it's illegal, a kid biking over a bridge? I'll go up the ramp and get right to the middle, where I was before, and then I'll walk out over the roadway and take one last look at the Kinzua Bridge Bridge.

What am I going to do about my bike, though? If I lock it up, it'll just stay there at the side of the bridge, as evidence, and they'll clip the lock or saw through the chain after a while. It's an expensive chain! But if I don't lock it up, someone will take it quickly-it's a good bike, a Raleigh-and there won't be any evidence that I was ever even there.

I can't lose the bike, I decide. I'll take the key with me when I go down, and Mom and Dad will know, then, where I've gone. The cops will find the bike and tell them. It'll be harsh, but at least they'll know. It'll be better than not leaving anything.

What Joy- is it? Joy- has stopped for me. Since I can't sleep and I'm still sweating, I decide I can try something to knock myself out: push-ups. I don't want to go to sleep, I just want to exhaust myself and rest a little bit so I can make the trip at the appropriate times, in an hour or so. I prop myself up in bed in proper pushup position, which is also a proper sex position, I realize, and I haven't even had sex-I'm going to die a virgin. Does that mean I go to heaven? No, according to the Bible, suicide is a sin and I go straight to hell, what a gyp.

I learned push-ups in Tae Bo. I'm good at them. I can do them on my fingers and my fists, as well as my palms. Here, next to my mom, in a scene that would look very weird if you filmed it from the side, I start to do them up and down one, two, three ... I move very, very slowly so as not to wake Mom up- she's a heavy sleeper and doesn't notice my exercises; her head is turned in the opposite direction.

When I get to ten pushups I start counting down: Five, four, three... until I finish at fifteen. I collapse in bed.

I'm so weak from holding down nothing but Cheerios in the last twenty-four hours, I'm beaten. I'm cracked from fifteen pushups. But I feel something in the bed. I feel my heart beating. It's beating against the mattress, amplified, resounding not only in the bed but in my body. I feel it in my feet, my legs, my stomach, my arms.

Beating everywhere.

I get on my palms again. One, two, three... My arms burn. My neck creaks; a bed isn't the best place to do push-ups; you tend to sink in. This set is tougher than the last. But when I get to fifteen, I keep going, to twenty. I strain and hold back a grunt on the final one and discharge myself to the mattress.

Bad-o-o-m. Bad-o-o-m. Bad-o-o-m.

My heart is ramming now. It's beating everywhere. It hits all the spots in my body, and I feel the blood pressuring through me, my wrists, my fingers, my neck. It wants to do this, too bad-o-o-m away all the time-. It's such a silly little thing, the heart.

Bad-o-o-m.

It feels good, the way it cleans me.

Bad-o-o-m.

Screw it. I want my heart.

I want my heart but my brain is acting up.

I want to live but I want to die. What do I do? I get out of bed, glance at the clock. It's 5:07. I don't know how I got through the night. My heart radiates bad-o-o-m, so I stand and shuffle into the living room and pick a book off my parents' shelf.

It's called How to Survive the Loss of a Love; it has a pink and green cover. It's sold like two million copies; it's one of these psychology books that kids everywhere buy to get through breakups. My mom bought it when her dad died and raved about how good it was. She showed the cover to me.

I looked at it just to see what it was about, and the first chapter said, 'If you feel like harming yourself right now, turn to page 20.' And I thought that was pretty silly, like a Choose Your Own Adventure book, so I turned to page 20, and right there it said to call your local suicide hotline because suicidal thoughts were a medical situation and you needed medical help right away.

Now, in the dark, I open How to Survive the Loss of a Love to page 20.

'Every municipality has a suicide hotline, and they're listed right in the government services section of the yellow pages,' it says.

Okay. I go into the kitchen and open up the yellow pages.

It's a pain in the ass to find those government listings. I thought they were marked with green pages, but the green pages turn out to be a restaurant guide. The government listings are in blue at the front, but it's all phone numbers for where to get your car if it's towed, what to do if your block has a rat problem... Ah, here, health. Position control, emergency, mental health. There are a bunch of numbers. The first one says 'suicide' near it. It's a local number, and I call.

I stand in the living room with my hand in my pants as the phone rings.

Part: 18

'Hello.'

'Hi, is this the Suicide Hotline?'

'This is the Knox Anxiety Management Center.'

'Oh, um...'

'We work with the Samaritans. We handle Knox Suicide

Hotline calls when they overflow. This is Keith speaking.'

'So, the Suicide Hotline is too busy right now?' 'Yes-it's Friday night. This is our busiest Joy-.' Great. I'm common even in suicide.

'What seems to, ah, be the problem?'

'I really, just... I'm very depressed and I want to kill myself.'

‘Uh-huh. What’s your name?’

‘Ah... ‘Need-a-fake-name, need-a-fake-name: ‘Scott.’

‘And how old are you, Scott?’

‘Fifteen.’

‘And why do you want to kill yourself?’

‘I’m clinically depressed, you know. I mean, I’m not just... down or whatever. I started this new school and

I can’t handle it. It’s gotten to a point where it’s the worst it’s ever been and I just don’t want to deal with it anymore.’

‘You say you’re clinically depressed. Are you taking medication?’ ‘I was taking Zoloft.’

‘And what happened?’

‘I stopped taking it.’

‘Ah. That’s probably, you know, a bad idea.’ Keith sounds like he’s just getting started with this whole counseling thing. I picture a thin college-age boy with wire-rim glasses at a desk lit up with a small reading lamp, looking out the window, nodding at the good deeds he’s doing.

‘A lot of kids run into problems when they, ya know, stop taking their medication.’

‘Well, whatever the reason, I just really can’t handle it right now.’

‘Do you have a plan for how you would kill yourself?’

‘Yes. I’d jump off the Kinzua Bridge.’ I hear Keith typing something.

‘Well, Scott, we aren’t the suicide hotline, but if you like, we have a five-step exercise for managing anxiety.

Would you like to try it?’

‘Um... sure.’

‘Can you get a pen and a piece of paper?’

I go to the drawers in the dining room and get a pencil and paper. I take it to the bathroom and sit on the toilet with Keith.

The lights on.

‘First, okay? Write down an event that happened to you.

That you experienced.’

‘Any event?’

‘That’s right.’

‘Okay...’ I write on the piece of paper Ate pizza last week.

‘Do you have it?’ Keith asks.

‘Yes.’

‘Now, write down, ah, how you felt about that event.’ ‘Okay.’ I write Felt good, full.

‘Now write down any ‘shoulds’ or ‘woulds’ that you felt about the event.’

‘Like what?’

‘Things that you regret about it, things that you feel would have made it go better.’

‘Wait, uh, I don’t think I have the right kind of event.’ I furiously erase my first statement, which is marked I. Instead of Ate pizza, I put down Threw up Mom’s squash and then for 2, I write Felt like I wanted to kill myself, all the while telling Keith to hold on, I messed up.

‘Just put down ‘shoulds’ and ‘would,’ he reassures me.

Well, I should have held down the squash and I would have been full if I had. I put that down.

‘Now put down only what you actually had to do in the event.’

‘What I had to do?’

‘Right. Because there are no such things as shoulds and would in the universe.’

‘There aren’t?’ I’m starting to suspect Keith a bit. For someone in Anxiety Management, he’s giving me an exercise that is fairly confusing and anxiety-provoking. ‘No,’ he says. ‘There are only things that could have turned out differently. You don’t have any shoulds or would in your life, see? You only have things that could have gone a different way.’

‘Ah.’

‘You never know what truly would have happened if you had done your shoulds and would. Your life might have turned out worse, isn’t that possible?’

‘I don’t see how it’s really possible, seeing as I’m on the phone with you.’

‘What you really have in life are needs, and you only have three needs: food, water, and shelter.’

And air, I think. And friends. And money. And your mind.

‘So- the next step in the process is to put down only what you actually had to do in your event, and then compare it to the should and would- you assigned yourself.’

‘How ~Sped~ steps are in this thing?’

‘Five. The fifth is the most important. We’re at four.’

‘You know, I really, um-’ I look at the piece of paper, covered with half-erased scribbles about pizza and squash. ‘-I think I should talk to the Suicide Hotline kids because I still feel really... bad.’ ‘All right,’ Keith sighs.

I’m worried that he thinks he’s done a bad job, so I tell him: ‘It’s okay. You’ve been really helpful.’ ‘It’s tough with young kids,’ he says. ‘It’s just tough. Have you called 1-800-SUICIDE?’

1-800-SUICIDE! Of course! I should’ve known. This is America. Everyone has a 1-800 number.

‘That’s Helpline, they’re national. Then there’s Local Suicide Watch ...’ Keith gives another number.

‘Thanks.’ I write them both down. ‘Thanks so much.’ ‘You’re welcome, Scott,’ he says. I hit OFF- these are the first calls I’ve made not on the cell phone in a long time - and type in 1800SUICIDE.

It's really convenient that suicide has seven letters, I think.

'Hello,' a girl answer.

'Hi, I ...' I give her the rap, just like I gave Keith. This girl's name is Maritsa.

'So, you stopped taking your Zoloft?' she asks.

'Yes.'

'You know, you should be on that for ... a couple of months, really.'

'I was on it for a couple of months.'

'Some kids stay on it for years. At least four to nine months.'

'Well, I know, but I felt better.'

'Okay, so how do you feel right now?'

'I want to kill myself.'

'Okay, Scott, now, you know you're very young and you sound very accomplished.'

'Thanks.'

'I know high school can be tough.'

'It's not that tough. I just can't handle it.'

'Are your parents aware of how you're feeling?'

'They know I'm bad. They're asleep right now.'

'Where are you?'

'I'm in the bathroom.'

'At your house?'

'Yes.'

'You live with them?'

‘Yeah.’

‘You know, when you want to commit suicide, we consider that a medical emergency. Did you know that?’

‘Ah, an emergency.’

‘If you feel like that, you need to go to the hospital, okay?’

‘I do?’

‘Yes, you go right to the emergency room and they’ll take care of you. They know just how to handle it.’ The emergency room?

I haven’t been in the emergency room since I got clipped by a sled and knocked myself out in the park in grade school.

Blood was coming out of one ear, and when I woke up it was like I’d slept for three days and I wasn’t quite sure what year it was. They kept me overnight, sent me through an MRI to make sure my brain wasn’t dented and sent me home.

‘Are you going to go to the emergency room, Scott?’

‘Ah...’

‘Would you like us to call 911 for you? If you’re unable to get to the emergency room, we can send an ambulance for you.’

‘No, no! That’s not necessary.’ I do not need the neighbors seeing me carted off. Besides, I never realized, but I’m right next to a hospital. It’s two blocks away- a tall gray building with big tanks of frozen oxygen out front and construction vehicles constantly adding new wings. UMPC Hospital. I can walk there from here. It might even feel good. And once I get there, I won’t have to do anything.

I’ll just tell them what’s wrong with me and they’ll give me medicine.

Probably they’ll give me some kind of new pill- maybe they’ve invented that fast-acting Zoloft by now and I’ll come right back home. Mom and Dad won’t even know.

‘Scott?’

'I'm going. I have to...'

'You have to put on your clothes?'

'Right.'

'That's great. That's wonderful. You're doing the right thing.'

'Okay.'

'You're very young. We don't want to lose you. You're being very strong right now.'

'Thanks.' I find my shoes. No, pants first. I put on my khaki pants. The only shoes I can find are my dress shoes, worn to Dr. Ross's office this afternoon, a lifetime - ago. They're Rockports, shiny and beveled.

'Are you still there?'

'Yeah, I'm just getting my hoodie.' I pull it off the hook and flip it on. I grab the phone again.

'Okay.'

'You're very brave, Scott.'

'Thanks.'

'You're going to the hospital, right? What hospital?'

'UMPC.'

'They're wonderful there. I'm proud of you, Scott. This is the right thing to do.'

'Thank you, Maritsa. Thank you.'

I hang up the phone and walk out the door. Jarddan comes toddling out just as I'm leaving, cocks his head at me. He doesn't bark.

Part: 19

The emergency room is nearly abandoned at five-thirty in the morning I don't know how I caught that lucky break. There's a long black metal bench sprinkled with kids. A Hispanic couple walks around, the girl howling about her knee. An old white lady and her gigantic son fill out forms next to each other. A black boy with glasses sits at the end of the bench, opening peanuts and putting the shells in his left vest pocket, the peanuts in his right. It could be a plain-old doctor's office, really. Except for the peanut boy.

I walk up to the main desk: REGISTRATION. There are two registration, one sitting, and one standing behind. The one behind looks about my age she's probably getting school credit.

'I need to be, uh, admitted. Registered,' I say.

'Fill out a form and the nurse will see you shortly,' the sitting one says. The standing one stuffs envelopes, eyes me. Do I know her from somewhere? I sniff my armpit to hide my face.

I take the Xeroxed form that's handed to me. It asks my birthdate and address, my parents' names and phone numbers, my health insurance. I don't know much about health insurance, but I know that my Social Security number is my ID number, so I put that down. I feel kind of good filling out the form like I'm applying to a special academy.

I put the form, completed, in a small black tray hanging off the side of the registration desk. There's only one piece of paper in front of mine; I sit back down next to Peanut Boy. I stare at the floor; it's made up of footlong tiles in red and white, like a chessboard, and I imagine how a knight would move across it. I'm so crazy. I've lost it. This isn't going to help. I should leave. Is it too late? My bike is back at home in my hallway. I can do it. I'm strong enough.

'Dariez?' A girl pops her head out from a door at the end of Registration.

I stand up. The Hispanic couple howls that they were here first and someone comes out to talk to them in Spanish. Sorry, kids.

'Come,' she beckons. 'I'm a nurse.' I shake her hand.

'Have a seat.' I enter her long, thin chamber, which has a computer and two chairs and an array of tubes and robes on hooks on the wall. The sun is rising through a window at the end of the room. Across from me is a poster about domestic violence: If your boy beats you, forces you to have sex, controls your money, or threatens you about immigration papers, you are a victim!

The nurse-short with curly hair and a clownish face- reaches to the hooks behind her and unfurls a blood pressure gauge. I always liked these. Not that they're pleasant, but they always feel like they could be so much worse. She attaches it to some readout device and pumps me up.

'So, what's wrong?' she asks.

I give her the rap.

'Did you do anything to yourself? Did you try and cut yourself; did you try and hurt yourself; did you actually go anywhere?'

'No- I called 1-800-SUICIDE and they sent me here.'

'Good. Wonderful. You did the right thing. They're so great.'

She unwraps me, turns, and types of information into the computer. She reads off my sheet in a tray to the right of the monitor, where I wrote 'want to kill myself' as my reason for admission.

'Now, were you on medicine?'

'Zoloft. I stopped taking it.'

'You stopped?' She opens her eyes wide. 'We get that a lot.'

She types. 'You really can't do that.'

'I know.' I'm glad I have a concrete thing to blame this on, something everyone can point a finger at. 'You really have to stop, right now, and think about how you feel. I want you to remember how you feel the next time- you decide to stop taking your medicine.' 'Okay.' I commit it to memory; I feel dead, wasted, awful, broken, and useless. It's not the kind of feeling you forget.

'You're going to be fine, ish-ka-bibbles,' she says.

I look at what she's typing on the screen. Under 'reason for admission,' she puts SUICIDAL IDEATION. That would be a good band name, I think. 'Come on,' she says, getting up from the computer. Behind it, a printer is producing something, whining, and clicking. She reaches back and pulls two stickers out, puts them on plastic bracelets that she has attached to her belt, which is like a nurse utility belt and affixes them to my right wrist.

I look down. They both say Dariez Gilner and have my Social Security number and a barcode on them.

‘Why do I get two?’ I ask.

‘Because you’re too special.’

She leads me out of the room into the ER proper, past curtains that are alternately drawn and undrawn to show the cast of characters here on an early Saturday morning. The vast majority are old kids- specifically, old white women with tubes in them, yelling and moaning. What they’re yelling for is water-

‘Waaa-taaa, waaataa’-and what they’re getting is totally ignored. Doctors-I think the doctors are in white coats and the nurses are in blue, right? - Stride by holding clipboards. One has a young scruffy blond beard that I would never expect to see on a doctor his name is Dr. Kepler. It says RESIDENT, so he’s a college boy. That’s one of the things I could be someday if I hadn’t messed up and gotten myself in here. ‘This way,’ the nurse says.

Beeping serenades us. It’s coming from everywhere, a dozen different kinds of beeps-loud ones, scary ones, dingy ones, random ones. I wonder if they ever sync up as we pass by two giant metal racks on wheels-inside are pale yellow trays wrapped in plastic. Hospital breakfast. A nurse pushes them through a door marked FOOD PREP.

We move by a group of Hispanic boys lounging on stretchers who all look like they were in the same bar fight. One has a bandage on his face, one is pointing to his chest for a doctor, and one is rolling up his pants to show off what looks like a shark bite. The doctor hisses at him in Spanish, and he rolls his pants back down. We go by a bank of computers and there the nurse tells me to wait- she flags down an Indian doctor, and he takes a stretcher, which up close looks like a very complicated and expensive piece of machinery, with red and black levers sticking out everywhere, into a side room marked ‘22.’

Room 22 is just big enough to accommodate the stretcher. It doesn’t have a door, just a doorway. The walls are yellow. The nurse leads me in there.

‘A doctor will be with you shortly,’ she says. It’s bright. Bright as hell. And I haven’t slept. I sit on the stretcher. What am I supposed to do here? There’s nothing to do. There aren’t even any hooks.

Outside of 22, a black boy with long dreads is on a stretcher next to a curtain. He's well dressed in dark brown with black shoes like mine and he's holding his hip and writhing in pain. It's something I've never seen except in movies—a boy clutching himself and grimacing and swaying and breathing in little huffs and baring his teeth and going 'Nurse, nurse, please.' It looks like he's dislocated his hip. He rolls over on his side and then back on his back, but nothing seems to help.

Who's worse, soldier, you or him? Don't know, sir!

It's a trick question, soldier.

Well, him, obviously. I mean I'm sitting here longing; he's practically dying out there. I expected more from you, son.

How?

You're a smart kid. You should be able to see when somebody's faking. And soldier—

Yes.

—Good job out there. I'm glad you're still on board.

I don't feel any better.

Life's not about feeling better; it's about getting the job done.

I look again at the black boy; as I do, a big police officer with closely cropped hair and those weird little fat bumps on the back of his neck saunters onto the scene with a newspaper and a cup of coffee. He takes an orange plastic seat and sits down right outside from me, between Room 22 and Room 21, another open-style, closet-sized space.

'Hey, how ya doin',' he says. He speaks slowly and calmly. 'I'm Chris. If you need anything, let me know.' He sits down and opens up his paper.

The black boy is really moaning now, bugging out his eyes at every nurse that passes by. He grabs his hip with both hands. Maybe he's a heroin addict. They come to the hospital and pretend they're hurt to get morphine. I watch him for minutes, trying to figure out if he's real or fake. There aren't any clocks.

There are only beeps.

Chris shakes his paper. Page two is '108 Stories Down:

Boy Plunges from Empire State.'

'Jeez,' I say. I can't believe it. 'Is that about a boy jumping off the Empire State Building?'

'No.' Chris smiles, glancing at me over his shoulder. 'Not at all.' He flips the paper back over. 'You're not supposed to be looking at this.'

I chuckle. 'That is too much.' 'He lived!' Chris says.

'Yeah, right.'

'He did! And you will too.'

Did someone tell this boy what I was in for? Or do all kids with mental difficulties get shuttled to room 14?

'What'd he do? Hit a tree?'

But Chris has moved on to page four. 'Not supposed to be looking at this.'

Someone must have told him. He's a cop in charge of making sure things are okay in the ER and someone must have told him they had a depressed kid in 14, and now he's trying to be helpful.

I lie down on my stretcher, take my hoodie off, and throw it over my face. It's not dark enough. I'm not going to be able to sleep. I'm sweating. I want to do push-ups, but I can't on the stretcher, and it's probably a bad idea to do them on the tiled floor, which doesn't look recently mopped. I don't need to go into UMPC Hospital for depression and come out with diphtheria.

'Nurse! Nurse! Please!' the black boy groans.

'Waaa-taaa. Waaa-taaa,' a girl croaks.

'Hey, what's up?' Chris answers his phone. 'No, I'm on.' Beep, something beeps.

These are the sounds of the hospital, the hospital, the hospital.

'Hello, Dariez?'

A doctor comes into 14. She has long, dark hair and a pudgy face and bright green eyes.

‘Hey.’

‘I’m Dr. Data.’

‘Dr. Data?’

‘Yes.’

Huh. I want to ask her if she’s an android, but that wouldn’t be very respectful, and besides, I’m not up to it.

‘What’s going on?’

I give her the rap. It gets shorter every time-. I wanted to kill myself; I called the number; I came here. Blah blah blah.

‘You did the right thing,’ she says, ‘A lot of kids get off their medication and get into big trouble.’

‘That’s what they tell me.’

‘Now, besides wanting to jump off the Kinzua Bridge, have you had anything else going on? Have you been seeing things? Hearing things?’

‘Nope.’ I’m not talking about the army boy. Same rules as with Dr. Jarnerny.

‘Do your parents know you’re here?’

‘No.’

Part: 20

‘Okay, well, let me tell you what we can do for you, Dariez.’ She takes out her stethoscope, holds it in her hands, and folds her short arms. She’s pretty. Her eyes are serious and beautiful. ‘It’s Saturday, and on Saturday our best psychologists are here the really good ones. I’m going to recommend that you see Dr. Mahmoud.

He’ll be in soon, and he’ll be able to give you the help you need.’ I have a sudden vision of Dr. Mahmoud taking me into his office, a special shrink’s office within UMPC Hospital. It must be very pleasant and bare. There’s probably a black couch and a wide window and some Picassos... He'll take me up there; we'll have some emergency therapy; he'll give me the kind of trick that Dr. Ross has been unable to give me, affect the Shift, re-prescribe me

Zoloft (maybe that fast-acting Zoloft!) ...and I'll be on my way.

I said to him I love you.

But you want to know the secret to keep any woman under your spell, don't let them take over?

'Sounds like a plan.'

'Now, you have to inform your parents about where you are because when Dr. Mahmoud comes down, he's going to need them to sign for you.'

'Oh-hhhh.'

'Is that going to be a problem?'

'Yeah.'

'Are they going to be okay that you're in here?'

I sigh. 'Yes. I'm the one who's... not.'

'No. I can do it.'

'Where are your parents?'

'Like two blocks away.'

'They're together? They're supportive?'

'Don't worry, it happens to a lot of kids. It tends to be related to stress. Breathe for me, Dariez.' She puts her stethoscope by my back and has me take deep breaths, cough, the whole deal. She doesn't have to hold my balls, which is cool, because there's no door.

I look out as she's examining me. The black boy has a nurse leaning over him.

'Dr. Mahmoud will be down soon. Call your parents, please, and make sure they're here within two hours.'

Two hours. Jeez. I've got to wait two more hours?

'Gotcha.'

Dr. Data nods at me. 'We will help you.'

'Okay.' I try to smile.

She heads out. I figure that, with the parents, I should get it over with as soon as possible. I flip open my cell phone. No service in the emergency room. I walk out of Room 14 to find a payphone.

Chris rises from his chair.

'Buddy, hey, I told ya, ya gotta ask me for things. What do you need?'

I turn and look at him, eye his badge and nightstick. I realize what he is now. He's not there in general or for the ER; he's there for my protection. When you come into the hospital with a mental disability, they put a cop next to you so you don't hurt yourself.

I'm on like, suicide watch. You want to commit suicide; you call 1 800 SUICIDE; you get suicide watch.

'Ahm, I have to call my mom.'

'Not a problem. Phones are right there. Dial nine.' He nods.

The phones are like, three feet away. But Chris puts his hands on his hips and keeps a close watch as I pick up a receiver.

Hi, Mom, I'm in the hospital? No.

Hey, mom, are you sitting down? Eh.

Mom, you're not going to believe where I'm calling you from!

Nah.

'Hey, Mom,' I say when I hear her groaned hello. 'How are you?'

'Dariez! Where are you?! I just-you just woke me up and you aren't in bed! Are you okay?'

'I'm okay.'

'Are you at Kristopher's?'

'Uh ...' I suck air through my teeth. 'No, Mom. I'm not at Kristopher's.'

'Where are you?'

into
'I, uh... I really freaked out last night, and I was feeling really bad, and I, um, I checked myself

UMPC Hospital.'

okay?'
'Oh, my goodness.' She stops, hitches her breath. I hear her sit down, exhale. 'You ... are you

'Well, I mean I wanted to kill myself.'

'Oh, Dariez.' There's no crying, but I hear her put her face in her hands.

'I'm sorry.'

'No. No! I'm sorry. I was sleeping! I didn't know!'

'Please, Mom, how could you know?'

'I knew you were bad, but I didn't realize. What did you do?'

How did you get there?'

'Don't worry. I didn't do anything. I used your book.'

'What, the Bible?'

'No, you're How to Deal with the Loss of a Love book.'

'Survive. How to Survive the Loss of a Love. Wonderful book.'

'It recommended calling the suicide hotline number in there, and I did.'

'Is that this sheet of paper by the phone?'

‘Yeah, you can throw that away. They said you know ... if I was feeling like I was in an emergency, I should come to the emergency room, and I put on my shoes and came here.’

‘Oh, Dariez, so you didn’t do anything to yourself?’ She pauses.

‘No, I checked myself in.’

I hear her breath catch and I think, in my house a few blocks away, her hand is on her chest. ‘I am so proud of you.’ ‘You are?’ ‘This is the bravest thing you’ve ever done.’

‘I... thank you.’

‘This is the most life-affirming thing you’ve ever done. You made the right decision. I love you. You’re my only son and I love you. Please remember.’

‘I love you too, Mom.’

‘I thought I was a bad mother, but I’m a good mother if I taught you how to handle yourself. You had the tools to know what to do. That is so important. And they’re going to be great over there; it’s an excellent hospital. I’m coming right down-you want me to bring your dad?’

‘I don’t know. It might be good to just have a few kids as possible, if possible.’

‘Where are you now?’

‘In the emergency room. They want you to sign some forms.’

‘Where are they taking you?’

‘To talk with this doctor, Dr. Mahmoud.’

‘And how are you feeling?’

‘I don’t know. Like the whole thing is unreal. I didn’t really get any sleep last night.’

‘Oh, Dariez-if I had known...I didn’t know...’ I smile. ‘I love you, Mom. I have to go.’ Chris is looking at me.

‘I love you. I’m so proud of you.’

I hang up. My mom seems happier about me getting into the hospital than she was about me getting into high school. He leads me past the chatty Hispanic patients to a chrome-and-tile bathroom that's probably seen some bad action. He stays outside. I look around and muse at how I would kill myself in here if I really needed to- I'd have to crush my head in the toilet seat. Ouch. I haven't even seen that in a horror movie. I look at the toilet and decide to stand. I'm not going to sit down like the world's beaten up anymore. I stand, push hard, wash my hands, and step out.

'Wow, that was quick,' says Chris.

We pass My-a Joy in Room 21 on my way back. His hands are still crossed in his lap as Dr. Data tries to ask him questions.

'I tell you once: it the truth. You play that number, that number will come to you!'

The boy with the dreads is still tripping out.

I lie down. A nurse comes with a cart that threatens to have more food on it. She knocks-as if there were a door-and says she has to take my heart rate. This involves the placement, all over my body, of sticky tabs attached to wires. They don't hurt; I have a feeling they will when they come off, though. I turn to the cart as she puts them on, and a metal arm like a record needle is reading out my pulses. I watch it: a spike, then a flatter spike, then a dip and a repeat. That's you. That's your heart.

'All right,' the nurse says. She pulls the tabs off my skin. They don't hurt-the adhesive is kind and soft. My tabs hang off the cart like a tangle of roots as it rolls away. I lie doing nothing for a second, then put my shirt back on, then my hoodie. How long have I been here? I open my phone. Two-and-a-half hours.

'Mr. Gilner?'

A boy in a dark suit and a gray tie stands at the entrance to my room. He almost completely occupies it; he's large and barrel-shaped with a stately, pockmarked face, gray hair, big eyebrows, and a firm handshake.

'I am Dr. Mahmoud, yes? You are feeling how? Why are you here?'

I give him the rap.

'Are your parents here?'

‘Urn, I called them but...’

‘Here, okay, thanks!’ I hear Mom’s voice out in the ER. I put my head in my hands.

‘He’s here? Twenty-two?’

Dr. Mahmoud steps aside, and there’s Mom, trailed by the nurse who let me in, with an overstuffed tote bag on her left arm and Jarddan in her right.

‘Miss!’ the nurse is yelling. ‘You really can’t have dogs in here!’

‘What dog?’ Mom asks, slipping Jarddan into the tote bag.

He pokes his head up at me and barks, then dips down.

Everyone in the ER is silent all of a sudden. Even the cracked-out boy with dreads looks at my mom. Chris approaches her; the nurse who let me in points to me - ‘Wait for a second,’ says Dr. Mahmoud. ‘Mrs. Gilner?’

‘Yes? Dariez! Oh my gosh!’

Everyone lets her into Room 14. They fan out in a three-person semicircle as she hugs me tight, the kind of hug she used to give me when I was a five-year-old, complete with swaying. Jarddan grrr’s at me.

‘He had to come; he was making a fuss. I love you so much,’ Mom whispers into my ear, hot and full of spittle.

‘I know.’ I hold her back.

‘Mrs. Gilner-’

‘She really needs to leave with the dog,’ the nurse says.

‘She has a dog? Dogs are against policy,’ Chris says.

‘Just one second,’ Dr. Mahmoud says. We all look at him.

‘All right, Mrs. Gilner, since you’re here, your son has checked himself in due to suicidal ideation and acute depression, you understand?’

‘Yes.’

‘He was on his Zolofit but he stopped taking it.’ ‘You did?’ Mom turns to me.

‘I thought I was better.’ I shrug.

‘Stubborn like your father. Yes, Doctor?’

‘Well, the next question is for Dariez. Dariez, would you like to be admitted?’

Admitted. That probably means to the special room where I get to talk with Dr. Mahmoud. A quick visit and then I’m gone. It’ll give me the feeling that I’ve accomplished something, that I haven’t just languished in the ER.

‘Yes,’ I say.

‘Good decision,’ Mom says.

‘Mrs. Gilner, you have to sign off for Dariez on that decision,’ the doctor says. He swivels his clipboard, which he had been holding in front of me, toward her. There’s a terrible amount of very small writing on the top half of the page and even more on the bottom half; in the middle, an equator of sorts marks where you’re supposed to sign.

‘There is one thing,’ the doctor says. ‘Right now, the hospital is undergoing renovations and we’re very tight for space, so your son will be admitted with the adults.’

‘I’m sorry, what?’

‘He will be admitted along with our adult patients, not with the teenagers alone.’

Oh, so I’ll be waiting with old kids to see Dr. Mahmoud?

‘That isn’t a problem,’ I say.

‘Good.’ The doctor smiles.

‘Will he be safe?’ Mom asks.

‘Absolutely. We have the best care in Knox here, Mrs. Gilner. The renovations are only a temporary situation.’

‘All right. Dariez, you’re okay with that?’

‘Sure. Whatever.’

Mom puts her loopy indecipherable signature on the sheet.

‘Great. We’ll get everything ready for you, Dariez,’ Dr.

Mahmoud says. ‘You’re going to feel a lot better.’

‘Okay,’ I shake his hand. He turns and heads out, a large suit greeting patients left and right in the ER. The nurse touches Mom’s shoulder. ‘I’m sorry, you really have to go with the dog, ma’am.’

‘Can I give my son a bag of clothes?’

‘What am I going to need clothes for?’ I ask. I look in the bag: not only are there clothes, and not only are they the clothes I hate, but Jarddan is sitting on them.

‘If you want to bring him items, you can bring them to the hospital later in the day,’ the nurse answers. ‘Where is he going to be?’ Mom asks like I’m not there.

‘In Six North,’ the nurse answers. ‘Just ask for him.’

Come on.’

‘I love you, Dariez.’

‘Bye, Mom.’

A quick hug and she’s on her way-Chris watches, with his hands on his hips. I’m really curious about his efficacy as a hospital security guard.

‘What’s Six North?’ I ask him.

‘Ah, uh, we’re not supposed to be talking,’ he says and sits back down with his paper. I look out the door for some news, but it’s all the same. You know, this is a crappy place to be. I wish I wasn’t depressed so I didn’t have to be here.

‘Mr. Gilner?’ someone finally asks. A new boy walks up to the door, a thin, short-bearded, older hippie-looking boy-except without the long hair- with glasses. He’s not wearing a white robe or a blue robe or a cop uniform. He's wearing jeans, a blue-collared shirt, and what appears to be a leather vest.

'I'm Paullie. We're ready to take you up now.'

'There're two!' a doctor says as she passes by. 'Twenty-one and twenty-two.'

'Well, I don't have papers for Mr. Twenty-One.'

Paullie shakes his head. 'So, I'm going to be taking up

Mr. Gilner, and I'll be back down, all right? Hey, is that my-a Joy!

'He's back' the doctor moans.

'Hey, it's Saturday, a baby. Everything is going to be all right.

Mr. Gilner?' He turns to me.

'Uh, yeah.'

'You ready to get out of this crazy place?'

'Am I going to see Dr. Mahmoud?'

'Sure. Later in the day.'

'You got this one, Paullie?' Chris asks.

'I don't think you're going to give me any trouble, are you, Mr. Gilner?'

'Um, no.'

'Okay, do you have your stuff?'

I check my bracelets, my keys, my phone, my wallet.

'Yep!'

'Let's walk.'

I hop off the stretcher, nod at Chris, and follow Paullie at his slow pace through the ER. We open a door near the bathroom and pierce a seal into an entirely different biome of the hospital red brick, indoor trees, posters of notable doctors who practiced there.

Paullie leads me through an atrium to a bank of elevators.

He hits the up button, stands by me, and nods. I notice a plaque between the two elevators, showing us what's on each floor.

- Pediatrics.
- Delivery.
- Adult Psychiatric.

Oh, he'll be up in Six North.

'Going to adult psychiatric, huh?' I ask Paullie.

'Well'-he looks at me-'you're not quite old enough for geriatric psychiatric.' And he smiles.

The elevator dings; we get in and turn around, each taking a corner. Paullie leads me left when we get to six. I pass a poster with a chubby Hispanic boy in blue robes holding his hand over his mouth: shhhhhhhh! HEALING IN PROGRESS. Then Paullie passes some kind of card in front of two double doors, and the doors open and we walk through them.

It's an empty hallway, wide enough for a grown boy to lie across with his arms stretched up. In the end are two big windows and a collection of couches. To the right is a small office with a glass window that has inch-wide squares of thin wire embedded in it; inside, nurses sit at computers. Just beyond the office, another hall branches off to the right. I follow Paullie forward, and when we come to the crossroads of the two halls, I glance down the one to my right.

A boy stands there, leaning on the banisters that line the hall even though there are no steps. The boy is short and stocky; he has bugged-out eyes and a squashed face and an almost-but-not-quite harelip. There's fuzz coming out of his neck and a big swath of black hair on his little head. He looks at me with homeless person eyes, like I just popped out of a butthole and offered him valuable paper clips from the moon.

Oh my God, it hits. I'm in the mental ward.

I turn to Chris and notice that the room next to him, Room 21, is now occupied. A black boy is in there, sitting upon a stretcher. He's bald, but not shaved-head bald-old bald with thin white hairs in a halo around him. His face is unshaven; his arms lie on his legs at cross-purposes. He's skinny, in sweatpants and a white T-shirt covered, from the neck down, with an unidentifiable dark stain. He turns his head toward the wall and I see a scar running from his ear down to his neck. Then he turns back to me. The only thing you can say for him is that he has all his teeth, and they're white, and he's smiling.

I slink back into Room 14 and return to watching the boy with the dreads. He's not writing anymore; apparently, the nurse gave him what he needed because he's sitting up, eyes closed, pants rolled up to his knee, scratching everything-his lower leg, chest, face- mumbling and swaying. His scratches are light and don't seem intended to actually relieve any sort of itch. He rocks back and forth at a slow rhythm that fits in with the beeps and opens his eyes about a quarter of the way every minute.

Maybe that should be me. If I were on drugs that good, maybe I wouldn't have time - to get depressed. It's heroin, right? That's what I need: some heroin. But I reconsider. First of all, it'd be pretty tough to ask my friends: Hey, who knows where I can get heroin?

They'd think it was a joke. Plus, it has the worst nicknames: 'horse,' right? How could I ask for a 'horse' with a straight face?

And, if I were doing heroin, then I'd be a depressed teenager on heroin. I didn't need to be that cliché.

'Want some breakfast?' Chris asks, and before I can say no, one of the sad yellow trays is pushed in at me. The tray has a half pint of what appears to be oatmeal, a hardboiled egg squished into a lidded Styrofoam container, a coffee (I can tell because the lid is stained with coffee,) a foil-topped couplet of orange juice, and a piece of wheat bread individually sealed from the elements.

Also, a fork, spoon, knife, salt, pepper, sugar. It disgusts me. I have no interest in any of them. But they might be monitoring me, so I open the bread and force myself to eat it strip by strip, chasing it with orange juice. I ask one of the nurses for tea and she brings me another coffee. I sniff the coffee but it smells pretty dangerous, so, just to annoy him, I offer some to Chris.

‘Got my own,’ he says and holds up a popular worldwide brand of coffee. It’s strange to see brand names in the hospital.

As Chris yaks on his cell phone (I’d like to know what company gives you service in here; they would like, use it on a commercial: a boy behind padded walls, ‘Can you hear me now?’,) Dr. Data comes back with forms for me to sign about my age and residence. She also brings forms to the older boy next to me, the one in Room 21.

‘How’re you doing, Joy?’ she asks in there. She has to talk very loudly.

‘I told-ja: it comes to ya!’ he yells back in a succinct Southern voice.

She makes a tsk-tsk noise. ‘How’d you get back in here, Joy?’

We didn’t think we would see you for a long time.’

‘I, I, I woke up, and the bed was on fire.’

It’s pretty clear at this point that Mom is going to be late. She’s probably trying to pack me an activity bag. I should really get some sleep. I crash on the stretcher with my hoodie draped dejectedly over my head, but there are way too ~Sped~ thoughts in my brain. What am I going to do? It’s starting to hit me under there. I’m in the hospital. I’m supposed to do stuff tonight. There’s a party—a big one—at Kristopher’s house. Am I going to be able to go? And if I don’t go, what will I say? And what’s the alternative? Will I stay home and try to work but not be able to and end up with another sleepless night? I can’t have another sleepless night. How do you know when you’ve hit bottom? The real bottom involves being on the street, I think, not in a hospital. But the Cycling is starting and I can’t deal with it and it feels like the bottom. I sit up, throw the hoodie off.

‘Can I use the bathroom?’ I ask Chris.

And then we ran for it she and I—

I wanted to:

Kiss my little sister.

Kiss my dad.

Make out with Joy.

Make out with her more...

She and I both got what we really needed to live... me that was death her me!

Dariez and Joy- had their happy ever after, kind of...

I do- and her mom and dad blame me...

Yet, they think she is still alive, yet she has a known live here and there, yet is one of us, and now she looks over Joy, and is her angel on Earth and studying magic with us.

Ash Angel

Part: 1

Preface:

I have been left behind-

'One death won't change a world-mind, I don't want to be another left behind, sorry mom's-
I did not want it this way, but what good is life, if it will never- change?

You like me cannot deny the life that you live... like sometimes were- I try to rhyme, about being left behind- and, just like you girl- I know that you have, let it all out; I stay strapped with gangs, and bitches, I walk into the school see them all, I am wanting to be cool, yet making a fool, I am so lame, and they're so cool, just want to drown the ass in the Barnesboro pool.

Converse's covered in mud, now blood, making a tear flood, and I go back to my table, laugh at me like I am the lent of the navel. So-o I get up in the morning, just seeing the old man snoring, just to see my only friend, there is not one... those teachers, I break their wrist make a fist and shove the kids in their own lockers, look at me you would never think I would do such a crime, yet I have been left behind.'

'So-o, you hate me, and I hate you- and you don't know, just what I go through, and you get love, and I get hate, don't ask for forgiveness, for it's far too late.'

~Dariez~

(Back to where Naddalin said I am taking her...)

'Somewhere in this world little girls' fan-ie was going up and down on a big girl thing, like this one here, in her room, even so, it was not worth losing her she said to him... I blame you, and it's just a wand not that, this here is that and she holds it after snooping her room out- so-o and even so-o, she a 14-year- old girl, that has never sinned in her life, and God posted on the cross, so even if we did sin, it was not looked at by him as bad, that was why he did... so what that say... she doing nothing wrong- by being- GIRL. Little girls have a feeling that needs out...'

The big mean man was crying like a baby at her feet... thinking Dariez, may not make it come back...

She said the 'And you want to say that your oh-h so-o holy, as a man you're not I know that you have been looking at this girl while she was nude in her bed frapping, so, Mr. you want to say you're not sinful, I know that you did, I know that you're like pissed about it, over the fact, I think and feel that was not your penis that was the first inside her, I know your feelings for her, and you want to say she has more sin then you, Mr. your wrong, I should leave you- I should... I wanted more for her then her sucking men of just to live after she was 18, dancing around on dicks, just to make it, for food and a piece to lie her head, at night, and working in some dump of a bar like I did when I was a girl- I want more for her than some man like you, saying what she can and cannot do when it was her life and her body... and even her soul! And I am happy for her, doing what she did now, I understand, you're in the wrong...'

At that moment, the- wineglass Aunt Marge was holding exploded in the hands, with loss of control, of remembering her days as one of them too. Shards of glass flew in every direction and Aunt Marge sputtered with words that were not words and blinked repeatedly, her face blushed, as she is remembering her own powers.

Marge!

She squealed Aunt Jennath.

Marge, are you, all right?

-Then-

Not to worry, and grunted Aunt Marge, mopping her face with her top, showing belly button skin. And Must have squeezed it too hard. She- did the same thing at Colonel Fibster's the- another day, and a plate moved and broke. No need to fuss, Jennath, I have a very firm grip... on this one... she proud a new glass of wine, and was about to put it down, and she did and then.

Aunt Jennath And Uncle Read they were both looking at Naddalin suspiciously - back for the long weekend, when she made the glass of wine go in reverse like, from when it shattered back to being in her hand- fixing itself, saying whispering words like in slurs, so she- decided she'd better skip dessert and escape from the- table as soon as she- could, before calling the evil child- yet once more.

(Back at the school it's a Tuesday, that feels like a Monday.)

Outside in the- hall, she- leaned against the- wall, breathing deeply. It had been a long time since she had lost control and made something explode. Naddalin knew it was her doing.

She- couldn't afford to let it happen again, this time she was in her bad, and made it seem like it was all her, yet she knew better.

The- Claepsiara, Skoufyceol of Wizardry and the Fallen, the form wasn't the- only thing at stake, Dariez was too, like- if she- carried on like that, she'd be in trouble with the- Bureau of Magic.

Naddalin was still an underage as magician and angel, and she - was forbidden by sorcerer law to do magic outside the village of Hayvannahol.

The record was not exactly clean either. Only last summers she had gotten an authorized cautionary that had said quite evidently that if the- Bureau got wind of any more magic in Privet Drive, Naddalin would face dismissal from the school.

She heard the Bureau of them all leaving the- table and hurried upstairs out of the- way. Naddalin got through the- next three days by forcing herself to think about the Handbook of Do-It-Yourself Wing care whenever Aunt Marge started on her, it was like homework yet not, it was kinda fun even to read about. She worked relatively- well, though it seemed to give her a glazed look, for the reason that- Aunt Marge started voicing the- opinion that she- was emotionally poor.

At last, at long last, the- final evening of Marge's stay arrived, it seemed a long time coming, did it not? Yes- yes, it did- I feel- um and -ah- too.

Aunt Jennath cooked a fancy dinner and Uncle Read uncorked several bottles of wine. They got all the- way through the- consommé and her- salmon without a solitary mention of Naddalin's faults; during the- lemon meringue pie, Uncle Read bored them a with a long talk about Sterling's, the continuous mining company up in the village of Alverda, just past Carrolltown; then Aunt Jennath made coffee for, Uncle Read, and give him the paper, and carried out a bottle of brandy, your one granddaddy did that back way on back when, his name was Chiaz, yet somehow down the line, his last name was forgotten about, and your grandma oh so-o many years back with bake to her maiden name.

Also, can I lure you, Marge?

-And-

Aunt Marge had already had relatively a- lot of wine, and she was slurring her speech. Her huge face was very red. Than Just a small one, then, and she- chuckled like a young schoolgirl. And A bit more than that... Besides a bit more... that's the- ticket.

-Besides-

Dariez was eating her fourth slice of pie, and Aunt Jennath was sipping coffee with her little finger sticking out of the handle. Naddalin really wanted to disappear into the bedroom, but she - met Uncle Read's angry little eyes and knew she- would have to sit it out.

Furthermore, Aunt Marge said, 'Aah,' rubbing her lips, on the rim of the glass, and putting the- empty brandy crystal glass back down. And Excellent nosh, Jennath.

'It's normally just a normal long day for me, of an evening, with twelve kids mine or not running around to look after...' She- burped richly, and patted the dog, in her lap. Yet this is what I love to do is cooking and cleaning and tending to young ones. Nonetheless, I do like to see a healthy- girl, and she'd- went on, winking towards Dariez, how was running around, with the others act far too young for her true age.

...And, you will be a prophesized lady, like your daddy- and more importantly.

'Yes, I'll have a spot more brandy, read... thank you!'

-Besides-

Correspondingly, now- she one there -at that moment, she- jerked her head at Naddalin, who felt she puppy's nails clench into her skin of her freshly shaved legs- grate even more cuts... she mumbled, well holding her hands of books in all that is enchantment, she - thought quickly, about getting up and then the puppy fell asleep in her lap and it was nice.

Naddalin was trying to remember page fourteen of the book: A Charm to Remedy Unenthusiastic Reversers'.

At that moment seeing the blood dripping from her gashing legs, she thought it... all comes down to red blood- no? And she was bleeding again, as I was saying the- another day- about, in my work. Bad blood will itself out...!

Now, I'm saying nothing against your family, she'd- patted Aunt Jennath's lanky hands with a swoop, along with saying something on the lines of, your cousin is a bad egg, this magic that you are looking in to is of the devil, see these card, it an old set of cards that were your grandmothers, yet that made her go mad looking into them more than seven times a day, think they were helping her, find her way, when really it was all an illusion with fifty-fifty chance of probability either way, of what you want to believe.

Naddalin got up and rolled her eyes and said, 'bull shit,' 'They turn up in her- best families, too and are charity cases that free-load, or the fact that they are a simpleton.' Then she'd- ran off with a wastrel and here's the- result right in front of us.'

Naddalin was staring at the plate, a funny ringing in the ears, and then she could hear the voices- even if holding her ear and looking rude to them, it was not their voices in her head it was them- you know them.

I's am- grasp my bum firmly, she- thought, and run, as if you have girly problems, and go for the bathroom and let them talk to you thought your own mouth- were they here you at of these mind body and soul too alike, linked like, it is trafficking walking around in your body that is rightfully yours yet is no longer, in life- and knowing that is not you doing it is them- and you don't really know whom- they are, and they could kill, by moving your own body to do say, if they wanted - and not really remember the way and where, and make it looks as if it was self-inflicted death or harm, makes you look nuts no? yet it's them, 4 voices, and one power over me. All the time, it never ends, chatter- chatter- yelling and whispers too. But she- couldn't remember what came next, even if she said- was going to do, even if she said to do this or that if she did or they did for her, she was so confused, her mind was not her own- nor- figure, personality, character, nature, behavior, disposition, and most of all temperament.

Aunt Marge's voice seemed to be boring into her like one of Uncle Read's drills.

Besides she-, she said Aunt Marge loudly, seizing the- brandy bottle, tightly and splashing it about in the bottle more into the glasses, she was swishing it around so drunkenly that it was spraying out and over the blue and white tablecloth, and you never- ever...ever- never- like told me what he- did for a living?

'...And's- and's now's I's know's,' she said slurringly.

-And-

Uncle Read and Aunt Jennath were looking extremely tense. Dariez had even looked up from her pie, and that was big for her to do that when it came to sweets, to gawk at her parents.

At that time, he- didn't work, she thought, said Uncle Read, with half a glance at Naddalin, who was still unemployed, and in her second year of what would be a high school for a normal girl her age, yet she is to mental- is she not? '...To do the nigger work, that blacks used to do for white people,' 'I can see that, you still have the confederate flag hang from your porch,' said Naddalin, getting red in the face with all the- just wrong- slurs that were being said. 'Honey-hush- even they know how to scrub a floor down on their hands and knees, unlike you and your dim-witted ways.'

'I sure that you have spent quite a- lot of time on yours... down on your knees that is...!' Said Naddalin, smirking.

-And-

And as I expected, 'I' am the bad girl-' 'I' am not THE BAD GIRL!'

And then said, Aunt Marge, taken a huge swig of brandy and wiping her chin, looking for to inappropriate, just after Naddalin pun.

And A no-account, good-for-nothing, lazy scrounger who-

-And-

And she- was not, said Naddalin suddenly over and over, with her famous saying.

The- table went very- very quiet, and Naddalin was shaking all over, with her getting her ass chewed out and completely- butt reamed, and all the things said, about others, and races too, and smarts, of others that did not match- her leave of genius- only she thought she had, you know the type all- run at the mouth, yet nothing said, to walk away with.

She- had never felt so angry in life, yet she was the one- um, that was being all ever name in the book.

There is too much and with or for law in a lawless country, and they wonder why cops are being shot, they will not do anything about, it- it being everything that is a slur to you and me, and I sorry I am for the minorities' I always felt as if I was one.

I had to google...

The Bill of Rights:

'Mmmm-kay-'

The United States Constitution has 27 Amendments.

‘Cool, I thought... The first 10 Amendments to the Constitution are called the Bill of Rights, really? The Bill of Rights was approved, or, in 1791, and I care why? Yet is said- It outlines the basic rights and freedoms of American citizens, um- hum sure it does.’

We the girls of this book feel this way-

Amendment 1

The First Amendment protects the rights of every American. It defines the freedoms of religion, speech, and press. Most Americans believe that the First Amendment guarantees their most important rights.

- ‘Speech- I would say this is a good thing, yet when do you draw the line, here I would say to a cop of law in my hometown that has their own, and can’t read the book that stats the law in which they say they flow when doing you for example: call some retarded to their face, more than ten times, when do you do something about it? Who do we blame, you blame me the BAD GIRL would you not?’

- ‘Press- these days would be nothing but Facebook- and online crap, would it not? It’s not read worlds of news and news of slandering one another until that are harassed and bullied and stocked and hanging on a rope... Others calling another faggot, and nonsensical thing like that, that is not true yet become believed over the fact that they only have a second-grade education- yet what do you expect when they are told to be happy that have that... and post lines of text, that are not even words or sentences.’

- ‘Religion- what’s that? And- even if you do have one, OMG- don’t say or off goes your head, and you would piss off the atheist’s and get a long drawn out speech about evolution...’

Amendment 2

The Second Amendment guarantees Americans the right to bear arms, or own guns.

- ‘Guns- That why you can go to a school with an AK-47 and spray for fame, yet I do not blame you for you don’t have an education, over others saying you can’t handle it. And have no law- yet, again to say you can’t wave a gun in my face, it there right to do so-o. it is every man for themselves and do even get me to start on women’s rights and how there is not any. They will not give you a pencil, over they- like your schooling system doesn't have the money, yet maybe they will let you have a gun, so you can blast them in the head for not teaching you anything, and not having enough wit about you to know any better, only in 'America...' and spell that, ah- you can't, other countries are giggling at us!'

Amendment 3

The Third Amendment prevents the government from forcing citizens to shelter soldiers in their homes.

- 'What?'

'And... this should not matter- and the why? And I say this- over the fact we have no understanding of any world wars anyways, nor do the kids, I want to school with before, I left there forever, and found a place where they care about girls and their thoughts. And at this point, you say this 'GAY' and stop reading! It all bull shit, and I don't care... and say this is all over the no child left behind... act!'

'Yep... yep! ...YET, SHOULD IT

BE US- WE- YOU AND I, TO BE

GUILTY UNTIL PROVEN

INNOCENT?'

Amendment 4

The Fourth Amendment protects the privacy of American citizens.

- 'Like taking a photograph is now a felony, FOR SOME AND NOT OTHERS. Over more and- and or, being the way out, privacy there is no such thing... I am sorry if your someone, that was or is like stocked like a celebrity, before leaving this world! It prohibits, or prevents, unnecessary or unreasonable searches of a person's property- sure- sure it does.'

Amendment 5

In the Fifth Amendment, all Americans are guaranteed the right to a fair and legal trial. It also protects someone from testifying against him- or herself under oath.

- ‘Um-mm- I don’t believe that for a moment my- freaking time; more like- by 12 of their town people, that hate you for you, saying your this and that, all lies believe over there too simple to think, yet they make it so you’re the BAD GIRL, or paid off by a school to hush up... just for instance... so if you’re like me and I know that you are- you’re guilty until proven innocent! If you are like me you don’t have a trial, that would say you should be happy we don’t take you away, for what you are, more press of what was never confidential, oath there no God to kids my age so- go suck something- long and hard. Then have a population of 3,000 say everything they need and your F*CKED! And they think you can’t read, write, or spell or do math with fingers and toes, and the press documents make you more than a dumb shit that- the man behind the desk with a gavel would roll his eyes at you and say don’t waste my time, funny is not like he could be your school superintendent or something like I had.’

‘They say- ‘I have lost my mind, at this point-’ yet I have something to say back to that, ‘I never had one to lose- so there...’

Amendment 6

- A right to a speedy trial is guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment.

‘More like piss and flap your dick in my face, and hit- the- door, that if you can find it, without help!’ ‘See- see that sing there would say exit- in red- it’s lighting up, just so ya know!’

Amendment 7

- The Seventh Amendment

guarantees the right to a trial by jury in civil, or private, legal cases where damages are more than $20. Civil cases solve disputes between citizens.

‘Okay that is everything in my town- the card I have to play, yet there is no time for- someone like me... I already know when the cops are independent, and say and do- what that want to say- and do, and the system rigged within the names of the towns- and a county that well stays names that, I am part of over and- and or suits they could give me for saying truths. Good luck...’

Amendment 8

- Unreasonable bail or fines and cruel and unusual punishment are prohibited by the Eighth Amendment.

‘Is that English...? I don’t know that this is saying so I am going to take it as disrespect as you would too- if you’re my age.’ ‘Nope sit and rot is what I got, just like her and she too, and maybe you also.’

Amendment 9

- The Ninth Amendment recognizes that Americans have rights that are not listed in the Constitution.

‘And that is and that is what now?’

‘In 1920, the Nineteenth Amendment gave women the right to vote... ‘Yep glad to see we have something.’

Amendment 10

The Tenth Amendment says that the powers not given to the United States government by the Constitution belong to the states or to the people.

And labor law ha, that a joke makes nothing, get pissed on if you can find work, with your background of nothing, and have old-timers say you’re a waste of life when you can’t make a change. You have to be certified or have a degree, yet get one... making Big Macs is what they say to do or if your smart and know where the money is an internet-nudist, I deserve more... or hit the military table, or drop out, or do what I did kill yourself as my school counselor said to do.

‘I disagree... and that maybe some of the issues, when they’re all fighting with the man in power.’ And the world is a deplorable disgrace, to the Earth and the USA people.’

‘Yep, I’ll be moving to Canada...’

Another Chapter in My Book of Life

...And, MORE BRANDY!

...And, more of me being the bad girl of what did you do...

...And, they start it and your fault...

...Yet, they see only what they want to see...

...Yet, that is my life, not just home all around town too...

...And, then yelled Uncle Read, who had gone very- white in the body and face.

She- emptied the- bottle into Aunt Marge's glass, I knew if they keep drinking someone would get their face stabbed off, with a small pocket knife. It starts with love and ends with passionate hate, then us girls take the brunt of the stabbing in other ways, as they snarled at me Naddalin, and say -

'Go to bed! '...Go on!'

-And-

No, Read, I said, I am not a little girl, yet that is when he said- 'yet you have the intellect of one so-o go-o to your room, now.' 'BUT - BU- T... awe- you're hiccupped...go cry to dead mommy and daddy, and we all know, you don't have a right to be more than a baby...and treated as such!!!' Aunt Marge, said, holding up her left hands, in an authoritative way. Her tiny bloodshot eyes fixed on Naddalin's, looking at her as if she could murder. Her tiny eyes welling up, yet hold back to be a strong girl, that she knew inside... that she was even if, said not so-o over and over.

'Go on, girl to bed.'

Naddalin- Proud of your parents, are you, girls, you should be there nothing but worthless alcoholics! They're going to get themselves killed in a car crash being this drunk, one of these days, you'll see, they well, like a girl I knew that almost did...

-And-

Them- 'And they- like the girl, didn't die in a car crash, or she would not be here!'

Naddalin- 'You don't know half of what you think you do!' ...And who found herself on her feet in- front of them all as if it was a civil court case.

Them- 'She did not die in a car crash and see the light and come back, you're a nasty little liar!'

Look- look and now left you to be a burden on them- mm-mm- mm-mm, hardworking relatives, taking in dumb ass-ed shit'n trash, that can't read write or spell, with her special needs program!

Then shrieked Aunt Marge, swelling with vehemence. Besides- You are so-oo insolent ant' yah, ungrateful little brat.

-And-

But Aunt Marge suddenly stopped speaking. For a moment, it looked as though words had failed her altogether. She- seemed to be swelling, some with inexpressible anger - but she- swelling didn't stop, in her read face. Her prodigious enflamed face started to swell until she was losing air, her tiny eyes stick out as if she was possessed, and her mouth stretched all evil like, and like fare too tightly for speech- next additional moments went by and then, several buttons were opened by her to breathe, as if she was going bust out of her old holy jacket, that stuck to high heavens, like dog shit and her own bad-smelling piss and woman-ness- ness- ness. And sounded off the- walls, she was letting outgas, and it was horrid. And I did what they said finally, or be completely gassed- like a girl in a concentration camp, killed by the 'stank,' so I left the room- and when to mine, waving my hand back and forth just slightly by my little picture-perfect nose.

MARGE...!

She was yelling for Uncle Read, and Aunt Jennath together as Aunt Marge's whole body began to rise off the chair toward the- ceiling, I could see that Dariez had found her inner power, she had enough too.

She- was completely plump, yet more even than before, and everyone in the room was under her cast- yet, Dariez was overpowering her, now, and her hands, then feet stuck out weirdly as she- floated up into the- air, making angry bursting noises until her head exploded all over the walls- like a busted piñata full of candy; with brains and goo- splattering everything, and the puppy's started liking it up- is if it was their candy. -And-

NO-OOOOOO!

-Besides-

That night after I and she got so ticked off that me and Dariez, chipped together and bought an adorable tiny house, all white on the inside with all the things too girls would ever need up in the loft bedrooms, for us both, to live, cute and more room than you would think at 20 x 20 in and placed it in the backyard, also a Victorian. It was time that I got my own place, yet not to far away, yet away... right next to the old tracks, under the tree, that is way taller.

There is nothing more pretty than a girl's pussy full of her c*mming and she drips it out, I can see Dariez for my room, and it's okay, she a girl and a cute one at that so-o... everything these days with girls are open what not, what dirty about a girl's body feeling good and her feeling good - I ask?

(Back)

Uncle Read apprehended one of Marge's feet and tried to pull her body down from floating in the air all headless, nonetheless was practical- elevated from the- floor herself. A second later, the puppy dove forward on her and started to lick her even more than before, and descended her teeth into Uncle Read's leg, when he tried pulling her off her.

Naddalin tore away running from the- dining room before anyone could stop her, heading for the- cubbyhole under the- stairs. The- cubbyhole door burst magically open as she- reached it, think this may be the last time I see it. In minutes, she- had dumped the trunk to the- front door.

She- sprinted upstairs and threw herself under the- bed, getting her hands on anything she could say is mine- to take without say of this or that not being so-o, spraining up the- loose floorboard, and grabbing all the pillowcase off her bad too though in her belongings, full of the books- that she never read yet did, and birthday presents too, for the others, not them- yet they never really gave her anything, over all the years- it took what you could.

She- wriggled out, seized Baby Raven's empty cage, and dashed back downstairs to her trunk, just as Uncle Read burst out of the- dining room, she trouser leg in bloody tatters, I am getting my own place, and I am taking this little girl with me too, and don't say anything or I will run away with her, and you can get charges for the- why of it all when I say what goes on here.

'OH, NO YOUR NOT, and COME BACK IN HERE NOW- I say!' She- hollered- 'COME BACK, I make it right with you.'

But a reckless rage had come over Naddalin, and Naddalin holding Dariez hand pulled her, and even harder way... saying you're not going to have a life like this... She - kicked the trunk open, pulled out her wand, and pointed it at Uncle Read, and her to charming them into thinking this was all a-okay to do, saying it's for the best- trust me, you don't want a life like a girl I once knew- she was a- lot like me, she was saying as they were waking the tracks Naddalin on the left rail and Dariez on the right, to town hand and hand linked in the middle, the sun rays shining on them at sundown.

-And-

(Up to the point of going to town, where I said we'll have a home, when not at school, and magically three-grand showed in her hand, saying see, as they walked to a place where they made tine homes, to order, Naddalin using a fast forward spell, she made a week go by, with them, to have it there within the night.)

And she would- deserved it, did she not, so don't feel bad about it, Naddalin said, breathing very fast. She would- deserved what she'd- got.

'You keep away next to me- always.'

-And-

Naddalin- She- rummaged behind her for the- latch on the- door, to their cute new little home, that was somewhat of an indentation, to a nook, that had windows wrapping around. And I'm going, said Naddalin, coming? And I've had enough excitement for one-day so-o... yeah.

-Also-

Then in the- next moment, she- was out in the- dark, quiet street, heaving the heavy trunk behind her, with Baby Raven's cage under her arm.

Well then, said Dorezblumd finally, and that's that, you have a new home - then, I will document this event for our records.

We have got no business staying there... here in the backyard with this home, even if...

We may as well go... in and have celebrations, first meal.

It was funny to see the land grow before my eyes- thought Dariez- into this 50' x 100' plot of land and them home within, and- in size, that was not there before, yet magical it was now, Naddalin made happen with her wand, making them think also by charming them with a spell that it was a line of acquiescence, that was something they just had and ever need to pay for it was just given land- that there were dumbfounded over- being there, so in front of their home now is owners, and there is nothing they can or will do about it.

-Besides-

Besides saying 'yeah,' then in a very muffled voice, in on belief. And I'll be takin' Trirus the bike back, you don't need to work any longer as at your age as something as dumb as a papergirl for a $1.50, over summer, just to give it all to them.

G'night, Professor Pattergirl - Professor Dorezblumd, sir, now back at the school, with all the children gone, it was to quiet- too quiet.

Then and there she was wiping tears streaming from her eyes onto her jacket sleeve, looking at her new home and room, that was aloft a big step up in her world of filth.

Then swung herself onto the- bicycle, that was not her she said I go give this to him now and walk back, then she kicked the- 1921 engine; with a roar, it rose, and off into the- night.

Above and beyond, that all- I shall see you soon, I expect... 'yes, yes' she said with a sweet smile. Professor Pattergirl knew this and so did Dorezblumd, nodding for the go-ahead to do so-o, for me to look after her and so on, it all was approved.

Professor Pattergirl blew her nose in reply, saying- 'awe this is sweet- is it not, looking around the tiny- house.'

Dorezblumd turned and walked back down the- street, with the two girls saying keep this nice and were fine with it, you girls need a stable home interment. On the- corner she- stopped and took out the- hoary light-exterior, as the lights were about to flicker on. It was now nightfall, and she was off, Dorezblumd did not really want to be seen, clicked it once- beforehand, and fourteen balls of light flew back to their street lamps post. So that tree-lined driveway that wound about glowed suddenly orange, as it did ever so many years back, and she- could make out a shadow person slinking around the- corner at the other end of the- street.

(Forward)

Dorezblumd - could just see the- bundle of blankets on the- step of number four, for them too now keep as a gift, there were heading for the train car, for them to go back home, now that the girls were- set. And good luck, Naddalin, they- murmured, as they were all next to the train to set off. She- turned on her heel as they walked up the steps to the car, and with a swish of Dorezblumd Robe, they- were gone inside, and the steam from the wheels was overtaking them, whispering around them as the train pulled away.

A breeze ruffled the- old tree with plant life in shades of webbed like- greens of the leaves of angle oak, that would sway and hangs down on the limbs, in the slight gusts of breeze, in the dim, light a wondrous sight to behold, with covering branches that lie on the ground, that cover every which way, with moss. On the shadow covered pathway showing the figures of all the leaves as they dance about, and green tall grasses which lay silent and tidy under her- blue inky sky, the- very last place you would expect astonishing things to happen.

Naddalin - rolled over inside her blankets without waking up, odd for her being a light sleeper, yet this new blanket made her feel safe for some reason.

Dariez- one small hand closed on the- letter beside her, night said, apart to add to her book of life, like a story of another chapter within her book of life, and she - slept on it hoping to have dreams that would add to it that were even more beautiful than reality, not knowing she - was special, even if she was. Like and then not knowing she- was going to be famous a Naddalin, not knowing she- would be woken in a few hours... back to where magic, enchantment, fairy-tale's is the only thing that matters.' Natalie's scream as she- opened the- front door to put out the- milk bottles, seeing the remains of her laying in the yard... after the exploding head thing... she hardly made a wish in her mind and time move forward, with light being distorted, by that time Mr.S, walked out of the castle we were there walking towards her, the long weekend was over.

Nor would spend have to spend the- next few weeks being nudged and pinched by her cousin Alisha... that wanted to sleepover in the new house, it may have been a day yet felt like time was moving slower.

She- couldn't know that, like at the very moment, individuals meeting in secret all over the - country were holding up their glasses and saying in almost silent voices:

To Naddalin- the- girl who survived!

-And-

As she- passed the- door to the- living room... Naddalin caught a glimpse of Uncle Read and Dariez, he was taking out her ribbon in her hair, sweetly trying to get back in with her, yet it was never- ever- ever going to work.

She- had only just reached the- upstairs landing when she- the doorbell rang and Uncle Read's furious face appeared at the- foot of the- stairs. Naddalin was several streets away before she- collapsed, on her way back to her new home, panting from the- effort of moving all that belonged to two girls out of her home to her new one. She- sat quite still, anger still surging through her over it all, listening to the- frantic thumping of her once still hart.

But after ten minutes or so-o alone in the- shadowy dark street, a new emotion overtook her mind body and soul- a fear, more than any that she has in the past days of days. Either way she- looked at it, she- had never been in a worse solution- never.

She- was stranded, quite alone, in the- dark nonmagical people world, with absolutely nowhere to go or run, yet she felt as if she needs to run- yet nowhere to go in was all in her mind the voices. Besides the- worst of it was, she- had just serious magic on her mind, and she knew not to use this in this world, maybe that is why she was feeling as she was? Which meant that she- was almost certainly expelled from at the school for girls, for doing what she did, yet it was all okay, she knew when they got back on the train, so why all the character in her head of saying that was WRONG MISS-ie.

She- had broken the- Pronouncement for the- Constraint of Youthful Wizardry so badly, she- was surprised Bureau of Magic assemblies were not swooping down on her where she- parked her behind. Naddalin trembled, falling as she was walking towards the new home-based, for her and the girl she was taken under her wings and looked up at the crescent moon wondering if her life was ending, over this all, that this was wrong of her. Was her life now ending to save hers, she wondered and thought...?

What, was going to happen to her?

Wonder, wonder, wonder...

Part: 2

Would she- be arrested, or would she- simply be outlawed from the- wizarding world, and made to die so she could live on?

In a way that is what she thought would happen as she blacked out...

She- thought of Jinger And Emmah, Emmah the most, as her life and past ones flashed before her fast and yet slow too... And her heart quivered, in the body that she now owns on this Earth, and yet felt as if it was even lower, then before falling to her feet even more.

Naddalin was sure that, criminal or not, Jinger And Emmah would want to help her now, life on, but they were both abroad, back, and with Baby Raven's gone to, she- had no means of contacting them back here where she lay on the driveway. She- didn't have any money, either... even if she was able to make it somewhere, or even back to the tiny home, it seemed that all that she had was stiped away from her.

There was a little entertainer money from the other world in her- bag that she had in her trunk if she could get the strength to get there; but the- rest of her- fortune, was her parents that was left to her, she had left her was stored in a vault at Buchanan Wizarding Bank in Pennsylvania, a week ago know this all, a links to their world through with tubes of teleporting, people not money - to their inheritance, within big tubes going down, yet with a whooshing of pink-red-sh licked add for safety, that was backlight, like a waterslide to the Underworld, of banking. She never is able to drag the trunk all the- way to Pennsylvania, 'till now, she was going to have more money than she knew what to do with... when she came of age, in this body she was in...

Unless... she passed it down... not knowing... she- looked down at her hands with all the power she once had, a wing within her feeling like they were dying and about to fall off. Which she- was still clutching in the hands, the falling feathers, graying and blood covered. If she- was already expelled (the heart was now thumping painfully fast, as if she was all human all over again.) A bit more magic could not hurt... right?

Part: 3

She- had she- inconspicuousness negligee one in the first place to hid from all that was around her, she- had inherited from her daddy, that was smart in picking that over all others, what if she- bewitched? The- Negligee also make her feel close to her late daddy, tied to her wrist was a ribbon, this was all that covered herself until she got back. There was no one that was going to help here in Pennsylvania? Then she- could get the- rest of the money out of the vault and... if only she had the mind and strength to at this very moment. Outcast begins her life as always and ever she thought, weekly.

It was a horrifying panorama, to think this may be her last days of days, to life on... but she- could not lay in the street forever, or she would find herself trying to explain to nonmagical people police, why she was half nude, sleeping in the street, and brain dead to them, with- and or's- that was... misunderstandings. And- that do nothing but harass the innocent, making bull shit charges for you to have to face, making me- the bad girl like ways- only seeing what they want to see- not the truth- or way of law- but their own made up of dimwitted minds at the time, dumb shit's that can't even mumble, your name, they are; asking dumb question of -why?

Like why she- was out in the- dead of night with a trunk full of spell books, and all her stuff made them think she was a slut run away, and a busted pillow... littering as well.

The give her a run-on of charges, that she would have to face... and dragged her home lags dangling, as she was drunk, as with they thought. Then it was- the next morning and she snapped awake, she was in her bed as if nothing happened. Naddalin opened the trunk again and pushed the - fillings aside, looking for she- Inconspicuousness Negligee- it was confiscated, she thought but before she- had found it, she- straightened up suddenly, looking around her once more, it was on the floor of her new loft bedroom, and Dariez looking at her from a-crossed the way as if she lost it.

A funny itchiness on her- back, and butt that she was skating inappropriately for a lady had made Naddalin feel she- was being watched- as if she was a celebrity- by all them, but the- street appeared to be deserted- and her home was all her own with the girl she took under her wings- and about that too- she thought... what if they fell off, and never going to have them back. And no lights stand out outside the houses, yet she felt those eyes upon her- as if she was the girl from the story- chosen, and tricked into giving in.

She- bent over the trunk again, her undies flying a crossed the room as she was pulling all the things that were cute out- that did not seem all that important to her now, but almost immediately stood up once more, her hands clenched on the crystal ball, that Dariez had discovered, days before saying, this is not a toy, she said 'I know I could see a girl like you within it...'

Naddalin- 'Yah I know that girl well, and so well you someday, yet in time- in time.'

She- had sensed rather than heard it, it was a like a lightning bolt jumped from her hand to the ball as she touched it giving of high voltage of power back to her to live: she ran back outside, with her hand and arm stretched out with the ball in her palm to the heavens above in cold shades of grays, and the storm string above, with moody clouds, moved fast, the blot of life hit her, knocking her to the ground, looking fried, to Dariez who ran to her and not long after, this crystal ball ounces belong to- them...she muttered, her- it was her... and this was how she was the most evil of all them then. 'Very dark and very powerful, it is...' she whispered to her... as she was more than okay to live on, with bark life now given to her. And then and there someone or something was standing in the- narrow gap between the- garage and falling down fence behind her, it had to be one them as a haunt of the past, knowing- it had to be- but which one?

Naddalin squinted at the- black driveway that was closing out by all the trees.

If only she knew if this shadow was a girl, or if it would move like a girl's figure, would move, then she would know, what it was, or if it was something like a stray cat or- something else, that also was completely harmless.

And then Naddalin muttered- saying take it to hold on to it and never let it go, then a light appeared within the ball getting brighter and brighter till glowed, like a light bulb, almost dazzling Dariez, and her face and eyes were totally locked and fixed on it with phenomenon, she was becoming the next in the line of the most powerful- of the fallen. She- held it high over the head- now with both hands as the rain no poured down her, suddenly it sparkled; with- with orange hora's, as she was standing in front of the garage door gleaming with her newfound strength to do anything, Naddalin said - 'know- longer well you be a simpleton just to be pissed on... no longer feeling as if you - like you're in ass- backwardsville- she thought.'

Then between them, Naddalin saw, quite distinctly, the- small outline of something very, with gleaming eyes. The fear with-in her was more now than ever- think it was one of them, no that they may have found her out and hand no straight left.

Naddalin stepped backward, saying they will be after you... yet don't let that stop you, learn as much as you can and see as much as you can, I am looking out for you, now they're after me, don't ask why, found out the way for yourself.

Dariez- she started to cry and said-

‘Okay.’

Part: 4

With a yell, she- rolled back and forth on the pavement, just in time. Naddalin had just been lying there doing such. Her legs went a week and Dariez hit the trunk falling down onto it, it was if she was dying... you would think, she placed the glass ball down, and it rolled out of her hands. Then she flung her arms out to hold her... not break her fall at all as she did it she hit the ground hard for her, and she- landed, hard, in the- gutter with her thinking she was going to die! There was a deafening sonic BANG, that was made after, the delay of her body getting stuck, and Naddalin threw up her hands to shield the eyes from a sudden blinding light... of the crystal ball. It was the shadow of her larking for the ball to get life back, even if that life is one of us, I knew it I could feel it.

They went, as Naddalin saw them- rise above her dementing her, like hounds, and sucking the life out of her mind through her head; they were pulling the power from her, she was trembling as she was dying, as much as they could get.

A double-decker CAM tram bus in blue was aggressively driving as it went by her... which had appeared out of thin air, so it seemed as it rushed down the driveway as if it was ripping and pulling at the dark shadowy trees. Gold lettering over the- windshield spelled The- Knight Bus, to the station, the only way Naddalin could be saved is if they would get her back to the school, to restore, her strength, it was called the moment that she was hit, they knew and saw this happens, though her mind body and soul. For a split second, Naddalin wondered if she- had been knocked silly by the fall, as she was being taken on to the blue bus, she was babbling, about things that just did not make any sense, things that happen within that girl's life and story, details that she should not understand.

Then at the decerped train station, the steaming train rush in so close to using that you could feel the heat of the steam, and the conductor in a black uniform leaped out and began to speak loudly to the- night, saying don't waste time. Of course, Dariez was tagging slightly behind... odd it was number 13, it was taking her even fastback... to here she could be fixed, they hoped.

-And-

Welcome to the- Knight train, 13 back to your home away from home, emergency transport, for you they said this was life or death so we're going to move, and the track is bumpy, for the - Marooned fallen girl or wizard just stick out your hands, step onboard miss, he said to Dariez whom was very- very worried, and she did and the train started to take off before her footing was all the way on the footstep of the train car, and we can take you anywhere, with this line, you want to go, that is when Dariez said 'I know- I am the one that owns this train.' 'Really- you- like you're just a child.' She just glared... not mean, yet not in the mood...

'Yes, well then... my name is Stan Shunpikes, and I will be your conductor, the duration he even said it would be my honor... miss!'

Part: 5

Then the- conductor stopped abruptly he- had just caught sight of Naddalin, who was still sitting on her- ground... of the train car. Naddalin snatched up the ball, that was rolling on the rocking back and forth floor, even told not to by EMT's again, she tried desperately to scramble to the feet, falling- times and times over. Close up, she- saw that Stan was only a few years older than she- was, nineteen or eighteen or at most, a large, boy yet all too cute in all the right places, even if he had a few pimples, and a scruffy look, no boy has it all you have to looking and find what lays within. What is that you are doing down there, what is that thing?

Said Stan, dropping the professional manner, over being stunned by its curiosity... asking questions, like a 5-year old boy would with seeing a new toy.

Naddalin has fallen over 4 times now... Then she rolled over on her belly, now on the floor, onto a stretcher, for them to do her vitals, and get an IV started. Besides snorted Stan, who was starting to feel, feelings for Dariez feeling as he was.

'And I did not do it on purpose,' she said- they said, 'we know,' then said Naddalin, annoyed, by them feeling her up as a modest girl in some way that she was, with a man she did not know or feel comfortable with. One of the- knees, and butt part of Dariez in her jeans were torn, and it was showing her tight underwear some and Dariez new that Stan was all into her, by him sneaking peeks. Yet, oddly that made her feel more loved than ever, in a time of pain. Besides her- hands she- had been thrown out to break the fall was bleeding, from them, and need them to be stitched if there was anything there left to stitched up, there was just raw skin hanging from the bone.

She- suddenly remembered why she- had fallen over and turned around quickly to stare at the- pathway between the- garage and fence, that led to the driveway that was surrounded by trees. The- Knight train's headlamps, was flooding the ground ahead with light, she knew what she had seen one of them, girls from the past, after her, yet it was, and it was completely empty - was it all in her mind over reading a story- or was it real, were they after her now? She felt as if that hunt was in her mind now...

Dariez was feeling looking at him with big sad eyes, and it was working they were falling too each other fast, even if it was the first time, they meet' and said Stan, was looking at magic, in that light happening too, it was like she forgot all about Emma, who would feel cheated on at that moment, yet after all, he was a boy, with all that boys come with, you know - boy things, that girls find cute.

Part: 6

Besides, there was a big black thing, she saw hovering over her, thought Naddalin, pointing uncertainty into her- gap. In addition to that, like a faceless black mischievous sprite... it had to be AVA, she was the only one that did that hiding in the background gazing with mischievous intents, she thought even deeper into the creepy of it all!

She- looked around at Stan, wondering if he too could be trusted or not, even saying it - aloud and then muttering that trust is only had when there is a gold band around your finger, she said to Dariez, who looked smitten with her new interest. Whose mouth was slightly open, still looking at her with the love stick eyes. With a feeling of unease, Naddalin saw Stan's eyes move to mark on Naddalin's head.

'...And like what is that on your head?' He questions with committed to finding out all the details. He said all of that- all that he spoke tersely, with wet and thought behind it. It's nothing, said Naddalin quickly, pulling down her hair over she marks; If she- Bureau of Magic was looking for her, fine, yet this was far more - evil she knew it was one of them. she- didn't want to make it too easy for them, either way.

'Besides was your name, little girl what was your name?' Stan persisted, over never - ever- ever- never like wanting to forget- her or it, very unique he thought- so-o like her. Look here comes Neville saying about the- first name that came into her head, the voices that are, she thought she lost it and some still think she did, even being nothing more than a young kid herself. And so - so the train, went on quickly, hoping to distract Stan, she was talking with her about the sounds in her head, and did you say it goes anyplace- or they take you to someplace as you yet you're not really you but all around you think it's still you- do you have a clue as to what I am saying to you, or is it just jabbering or mind takeover of everything that makes you-you?

'Yep- yep,' said Stan self-importantly... 'Besides, anywhere you like- I would take and kiss you if you say you wanted to, he moved fast, as long as it's on land, and I have the cash to do so-o, I would do anything you say miss-ie.' 'I can't do underwater, fear of drowning he said, along with being eaten by sharks, like that girl-' 'I have seen that too.' 'How about you and me, go to the next car over,' 'Okay-' she said rubbing her body into his, like a young girl in love would do... all lovesick... and they did holding hands as if they were lovers for years, and I'm sad, 'Go be young and crazy, there no harm in it.'

'Only the unified beat of sex and heart together can create ecstasy, and that is what it was for her first time ever with a boy. When she closed her eyes, she felt he had many hands run down her body, which touched her everywhere, and many mouths, which passed so quickly over her, she did not want to think over that would end the perfect moment, and with a hot man ever like perceptiveness, his teeth started to go under the surface into her fleshiest parts, he was the deep in her lower parts on her and it was just right.

Now both naked, looking at one another there was no weird, just feeling right, he laid his full length over her. She enjoy-d his weight on her, enjoy-d being- crushed under his body. She wanted him soldered to her, from mouth to feet.

Shivers passed through her body as all 7 inches slipped in between her little line that parted into a tight hole for him to fit into just perfectly, as they did lovemaking for the first time, her first not his, he knew what he was doing.'

She even stopped thinking about Emma too, she was living for the moment of him being the right one at the right time, the right one for the first time she thought, doing.

'I don't kiss and cum! Um- who cares about the kiss and tell...' thought Dariez.

Yet that is all the same thing- these days.

'So, yeah, I do- do- just that, like a teen girl- that I am!!!'

Naddalin- I was, looking suspicious again, thinking back on all the tricks in the past done to nice girls like her, yet I'm thought this is her life and her young dumb years... I did not have a say.

Neville- She said, they have flag us down, didn't they- she said pondering something as if she knew... you have it don't you, you have the crystal that belonged to them don't yah- but-but, oh yes, I know who you are...

Naddalin- 'sh-h,' she said, hushing her with her index finger pressed to her lips, as she was now sitting in one of the benches.

Move your hair away, on your head I wanna see the mark, (she shows it) it is- it's you-you're here, aren't you? The girl that existed, you got hit by having their power, that they once had. your hands are even fried over it, yet you have another 100 years don't you, or something like that, in other words, eternal life? Is that right...?

...She questions...

'Yes,' said Naddalin quickly- 'but you should not know about this, unless... unless you're like-like, one of them.'

'Oh, know- I am not one of them...'

Part: 7

I am glad to see that your find, Dariez said Stan, said coming back into the same train car, with the look of what we just do on their face, yet it was all meant to be, so I was happy for them, time was wording and we were about there. All the color pushing in a tunneling fashion in our eyes and sight. The fear in my mind was that this was all planned like it was with Kristen, why was he so hot and lust for her, and her the same, unless she, and he and I too was to tally hexed charmed by- something or someone, and why was she so wet for him back, and I thought, this is not right- and then I was like don't say anything, you need to think about you- and you only. Dariez even said there was nothing wired all romantic, even if it was almost like a onetime thing... that will always stay hush-hush! A girl has a lot of those moments in her young life. I see that you walked away with a free gift too, I can see you grow a tell? Said Naddalin, there one hanging down from her skirt.

'Oopies- forgot to take that out and her face turns bright red.'

It's a Tushy-toys Genuine Fox Tail Butt Plug, she liked the gray and white, well it is better in looking at a butt hole is not?

Said Dariez, and 'it's cute!' She said following that line, and 'I love it! We sell them in the gift shop so-o, yes, I said to keep one... I would give her the store if I could... 'don't forget about me...' he said... And she shakes her butt side to side making it like wage to her sensual movements, saying 'never-ever' It was a trade for my underwear, a little something-something to remember me by. I know every time he looks and touches and whiffs them, he will have - to- change his.

'I plan on keeping it in, and walking around all day with it, like what are they going to do?'

'Nothing it's your body- girl.'

'If you think it okay, then do it- you'll start a trend fox tell hanging down from short skirt.'

Um- something to go with your gray fox ear headphones, you got on there, I's said.

'I told him how much, I like foxes. And how much I like them...'

And he said- 'I have the thing for you, to go with them...'

'This one is just made for a fifteen-year-old girl, he said guessing her age.' 'Next, to the toothbrush of all things, she giggles saying, your close and a girl never says.'

-And-

Part: 8

Naddalin rummaged once more in the trunk, saying here, I have a book for you on foxes, she extracted some money bag saying go have fun in the shop with him, keep it; and Dariez run of skipping playfully, and then shoved some gold into Stan's hands, pulling him back by looping her finger into his belt keeper, saying- 'don't trick me or her, or break her heart, your you'll see a hell, that you don't want to pay- understand, yes? Say- yes...!'

...And he did.

Naddalin- 'Remember boy- you remember sucking up, and she remembers too- sucking down!'

-Then-

Naddalin thought about the health, always be an interest to her wondering mind, of what just happened, and she thought deep, know if that boy has been with the average 5- other girls he, might as well have slept with 31 partners, based on the exposure chart, and her to her none.

She thought about the 7 that, Karly said by the time she was 17, she was with mean she was exposed to 127, possibilities of exposers. And then Jenny more than 12 in a year, equals to 4,095 acquaintance that had sexual activities with that person to person and passed to you and them. When you have sex with some remember that you have sex with everyone that he has been with before you, the same with her.

-Any-who-

On top of the trunk, was baby raven's cage balancing tippy on top, on the platform on the train car that hangs out in the back outside, see the dark world go by on its side of ashen, and mysteries, a fog that was low, and steam wiping around her body, she was still too weak to move it; yet she wanted to make sure she was alive and not fried, like last night's dinner.

Moving into new parts of the train, even Naddalin had not seen yet, car that she had added, to her line, there were no seats; instead, half a dozen brass bedsteads stood beside the - curtained windows, then it was said that the trip would take another day due to something unexplained, dark powers, were interfering with the line, I knew, now how was at the bottom of it all, I see were sleeping the night here... Nightlights were burning in brackets beside each bed, very quaint, illuminating the - 1919 wood-paneled walls, of the hoary Pullman cars.

A tiny wizard in a nightcap on each headboard, with the name of Naddalin on each, for gest, she muttered, these are nicer than I could have hoped for, I love the way this all turned out. As she looked at her hands wrapped in wound tap, a worker said, 'can I get you anything?' 'No, thanks, I am just going to roll and fall asleep,' she said. Before going under the cover of her new bed for the night, or what seemed like night, she shoved her trunk under her - bed... with all the things that she crushed, hoping that they would not be bothered, by any roaming hands that were not her own. Dariez was sitting in front of her - in a rocking chair, recapping her long trilling day. Neville, she is in the other adjacent to the other one catty-cornered to her.

There was another tremendous BANG, and the - next moment Naddalin found herself flat on the bed, thrown backward by the - the speed of the - Knight Train now pulling in realms, moving forward to the other side. She is reading the Nevaeh's book of her life with thick glasses, nodded to Naddalin, who nervously flattened she bangs again, reading about a girl she may see right in - front of her yet would not see it at all. As she was sitting down on her bed at the edge, just awoken - out of nightmarish shock. Stan, sitting down in her - armchair next to her now of his shift, magic still happens.

Pulling herself up, Naddalin stared out of the - dark window with sudden burst of energy, seeing all the things out there distorting and looking otherworldly, and then she saw looking out a completely different windows, the town-looking like something you would see in a quaint village set in France in the 1920's that the locals call- Nick-Town for a short name, yet with any land there are many town within town, that make an enchanted world, street with their people, shopping, you could even start to see the numbers on the street signs, that were showing even as we pass with the naked eye - now, slowing to normal speed, the hint of the castle far away, all we need to do is cross the viaduct over the gorge, nevertheless, we are there we have made to the other side.

Stan was watching Naddalin's stunned face with great delight, saying "this is normal," for old trains to have moments of feeling as if they're jumping the rails, I looked the same way also my first time too when we re-entered.'

'Where are we...?'

Dariez was saying over and over trying to flag me down, that she is scared to death.

'What is this place...?'

'We are there sweaty, you have made it over... you are seeing things that most girls your age we never, over the fact these places have been forgotten about, with your new schooling.'

-And-

'Aww,' said Ernie, 'nothing changes here, yet it looks homey.'

'Like- how come she- Nonmagical peoples Do not shear this train?' Said Ernie.

Dariez- said 'I bought it over, not want it to die in a field, for a moment like this it's just from us, that are in need of it- a hush-hush way in for us only.'

~*~

‘Look at all them there so cute! They all have had a life like yours that is why they're here, so you can relate to them and them to you.’ Said Stan contemptuously. ‘Right- right, he is a start boy, this one!’

Unlike back home were- they don’t listen properly, do they?

‘Don’t look properly either. Never notice this so-o much before why now- it could be that you have fallen- to a gentleman, and see the difference now, is worlds apart.’ Said Naddalin to Dariez.

‘They- don’t...?’

Naddalin- So-oo ladies it’s best now to go wake up more, and not look frizzy, in need of a bath and bad-birthed, get dressed, and have some cereal, in the dining car and then were off, Stan I see soon, ‘Awwwhhh’- said Ern.

Stain- and we’ll be in a minute to say my final goodbye as your- departure, and he taps ever so softly and sweetly, on her nose saying- ‘I love you!’

-And-

Stan passed Naddalin’s bed for the what would be the last time on this trip, and disappeared up a narrow wooden hallway. Naddalin was still looking out of the- window, sitting up in her romped bed, feeling increasingly nervous. Ernie didn’t seem to have grasped the idea of what to be left to wake up, she was still sitting in her chair.

The- Knight Train, kept rising on up the line of the mountains of tracks climbing ever so gingerly up to the bridge, but it didn’t hit anything, and it was grinding and squealing; lines of markers for the whistle to blow, and switch tracks of 20 pounds rail- looking sketch-ie for the 8-mile bypass- using the freakishly high up in the air viaduct, other world animals and people moved out of the way of the snacking train that seems to be making a pathway through brush, and tall grasses. Stan came down the hall some just to press Dariez into a long slow kiss pressing his body into hers, he was in nothing more than a short green robe, hot out of the shower, where he took her by the hand and said, ‘come on- in here with me’- and she did and the steam lapped her body, as they showered together ever so-o romantically.

And there you go, said Stan happily, as stamped on a towel to draw off patting her down with another big and fluffy one.

Caring her out in the buff, in his arm then laying her on to her- beds, helping her slide into her uniform, and get her feet into her shoes, he was standing toward the- front of the train car where she said she wanted to sleep for the night, in that- one particular bed, that just seemed to be saying last night- I can give you pleasant dreams, as she turned to down with the teddy bear and mint on the pillow ever so distinguished.

Dariez- she clamped a hand tissue to her eyes and then mouth, and tottered down as she went down the 2- steps. Stan chucked her bag out, along with ours, after she was out of the way doors no time before need to be shut; there was another loud BANG, and there was thundering down a narrow lane of track, it was another train coming down the line adjacent us, trees leaves whistling by its breeze, I even found myself leaping out of the- way, even though I knew it was not even close to me yet felt as if it was right next to me as my skirt blow tight to my legs.

Naddalin would not have been able to sleep even if she wanted to with all the pain she was feeling with her body that she was in- and also over the fact she- and them, had been traveling on a train that didn't keep banging loudly and jumping a hundred miles at a time, yet even so she loved the whole experiences.

Looking at the electronic billboards showing videos, being about the only thing, that looked our time period, everything else was 1920's yet, these billboards were rolling top stories of to p events within the small town within small villages, as the- fell back to wondering what was going to happen to her crept in her mind.

(Back)

Stan had unfolded a copy of the- daily paper, during his breakfast, and rattled and handed it to me in a crumpled-up ball, yet, I said 'thank you;' besides- he was not really reading it, yet what boy this day reads anything... I thought quickly, she had her tongue between the teeth, saying 'awe - ant' that cute- he's one of those smart boys.'

A large photograph of a depressed face man with long, matted hair blinked sully at Naddalin from the- front page, all the text, and photos were moving about as if charmed, and Naddalin said they are everything has life in here. Along with saying 'he- this man looks oddly familiar to me.'

‘That man right there she pointed as he tried to hide behind the bleed, of the yellowing page that was tattered and ripped!’ Naddalin then said, disremembering the troubles for a moment.

‘He- was on the- news back home too as wanted,’ ‘so now he’s here?’

Stanley turned to the- front page and chuckled, saying ‘well I think he got the last laugh, all that will be left is the prize at the end of a rope for him.’

Naddalin- ‘Sound like a girl, that I once knew, and I don’t get the humor in death sorry.’

-And-

Trirus Black is the name- Dariez - said, drowsy, yawning and scratching herself so-o un-lady-like. “Besides of course,’ like- he was on the- news, Neville.’ Where have you been, she looked as if she just crawled out of bed?’ She- gave a superior sort of chuckle at the- blank look on Naddalin’s face, removed the- front page, and hand over to her.

‘You want us to teach her,’ Naddalin said in a muffled voice. She- now understood what Firenze’s warning had meant. The attempts are not working, of scaring her about this, she- would do better to not hear it, being so young, and sometimes careless with her life.

Of course, the- other creatures who lived in the- Forest would have heard Dargides fruitless attempts to teach English, do you hear how this child talks, said Naddalin to Dariez think it was sweet and cute but really wrong for her age.

Neville- ‘She said, - ant’!’

‘You have room to take the girl with slurring words.’

“Yes, but I have tried all my life to fix it,’ you-you don’t care- to show the farmgirls ways you just do, nothing wrong with it but God, the other girls are going to pick at you for it.’

‘Yeah even if yen’s just’ talk to her a bit for’ yah’ both ta’ see, about it, maybe you’ all can show her, about what she be- down.’ (Say it with a hillbilly twang.) said

Naddalin with any luck, you see it. ‘Because- I’s reckon, if she- can talk like that people, well undercut, you for how smart- pretty and intelligent you really are, I have been there- sweetie.’ Naddalin looked at Emmah, who peered back at her from between the - fingers over her face, trying not to giggle, by looking at her; even more over the fact of the truth, and trying to be nice, to her.

‘Kind of makes you wish we had Norrah back, doesn’t it?’ she - said, and she’d- gave a very shaky laugh, like- yah- no.’

‘We’ll do it, then?’ Said Dargide, who did not seem to have caught what Naddalin had just said, as she walked with them through the station.

‘Well...’ said Naddalin, already bound by the promise, to make Dariez a fine young lady of the school.’

‘We’ll do try,’ said Dargide, ‘as you distinguish- she has a so-o -so reputation already.’

Back home it was the day that the sun went in a total solar eclipse, blocking out all daylight for the first time in 99 years around 12: 15 p.m. in our parts, that made the news more than anything- and freaked out the world admiring the darkness, I looked up at the moment there and thought, I never see this again, yet I wonder if my story well.

‘I knew I could count on yah, Naddalin, to remember to get a video of this event.’ Dargide said, beaming in a very watery way, saying I am getting old and this reminds me of when I say this with my dad the first time around, I was no more than 5 yet, I remember, she was dabbing at her face with her hand using a tissue again.’

Dariez- ‘I’ll wake up, and introduce myself.’

‘How did it go?’

‘Not good, she finds me dumb... I can tell.’

‘Ah, I don’t know to want your put yourself out there that, like...’ said Neville.

I know you’ve got exams... if yen could just sit down there in your Indiscernibility Robe, where you appear to not be seen by all that is around you, and over here all that we need to know then maybe once a week and have a little chat with them, after knowing all that we need to know.

‘There is no way that I am going to pass her class!’ Said Dariez.

~*~

(Forward a week)

‘What- no!’ said Emmah, jumping about what if... if you would get busted for it.’

‘Dargide, would never- ever no, do not wake her, really, we do not need, to do this just to pass these grades, if we work hard and kiss up.’

(Back to walking up to the castle)

Nevertheless, Dargide had already stepped over the - great tree trunk, up the pathway that had fallen, a week or so earlier, you would have thought by now that someone would have clean this thing up, but NO! Anyway, in front of them, there were more kids on their way up also proceeding towards the castle, that they would be calling home to for a half a year or so-o.

Naddalin- when she- was about ten feet away, she- raised up over the log, working on her levitation ability in her flight, still feeling broken she hit the - ground, smiled soothingly over the shoulder at Emmah and the other girls, that was saying- ‘look she not doing any better than us now,’ and in the middle of her- back you could now see all the wounds and laceration’s within her skin, over her dramatic proceedings, the night before, she was not even able to walk the night be for now she trying to fly? Is she nuts...? Said the one looking shocked... at her even think of such a thing to do to herself in such a weekend state.

She then gave a giant roar out her mouth as if she was passed by some evil power, you called to hear her scream all around she- silent forest; birds in the- treetops fluttered out and about twittering from there perches’ and soared away, as if frightened, even the house to upon their knoll’s, overhead rose to flight, right in front of Naddalin And Emmah, meanwhile, as they were walking up the pathway.

The sound like the flying wildlife was rising from the ground to her overpowering shrill yells, her eyes the deepest shade of black color- that they could possibly be as she was crying blood out of them.

Naddalin shuddered as Dariez- placed her small hands on it to hold her down her knees were knocking and body quivering, something you would see in an exorcism. She - turned her head to see who was looking over them and what had disturbed her, so much, and knowledge was there yet, she was lifted off her feet and thrown into the air as if someone had a hold of her from behind.

‘...Are you all right miss-ie,’ grayed out- to what was happening in her mind, and then it hit her she was back and terrorizing her?’ there and then said Dargide, in a would-be disturbed voice, backing away with the- long bough raised, she feels to her feet hard then knees, ready for something or something to do it to her again- like a plaything to be toyed with.’

Eh, she hit so hard it knocked her out entirely?’

Naddalin and Emmah retreated as far as they could while still keeping the- the evil feels of whatever away, within their sights, yet that was the thing they could not see the evil attacking her from within her mind, yet she knew how and why, all too well- it was one of them, ...it was her- and Naddalin knew; between two trees she- had not yet uprooted, as she walked weekend up the long pathway that wound through the lands of grasses and curly branched trees.

They looked up into she horrifically huge face- that was now overtaking Naddalin’s pushing through her skin even, that resembled a devil- looking lion, with horns, that looked as if it wanted to park out of her and eat me, all of sudden the light of the world went out on the day of the eclipse and there was a black full moon swimming, in a red blood-colored sky, and bugs crawling from her mouth, as she was flung into the air yet again, in the- gloom- of the day she said I can’t take any more of this, being attacked within my own body mind and soul, they have found me and got at me yet again.

Like- just when I think I am away for the good they suck me back in... her power of trying to end the madness makes a wave of energy in a column to the atmospheres of the world above her, a swelling cyclone, to over her just like one depicted in the girl’s story from years ago, and then Dariez knew, she knew she was the girl from the story, yet she would never admit if she was or was not- even after Dariez, being 99.9 percent sure of the fact. Yet, there was always- that .1 percent, that kept her hushed.

Within the crystal ball was the soul of the girl, we know as Nevaeh, that why I could see her, and she was looking at me. It was clearing, back to glass, yet I say what I need to know, I became the next one down in the hex.

The body of Neveah’ was the ball, lost for all time, the soul was within Naddalin, yet her mind was not her complete own, they still had power over that, even being split into three’s.

A mind that was now going to be shared with Dariez, it was as though her- features had been hewn off and this evil thing was the replacement, it was the entity of the mother- a tower that would never- ever fall entirely.'

~*~

Eh, the- nose, wet and dripping with snot- covered with matted hair, was thick and shape teeth, the- mouth uneven and full of misshapen yellow tusks.

Um yeah- like- the- size of half Patton bricks following the shape of the diamond of the logo, to be a small weak furlsweet innocent not to smart not to dumb of a girl- named Dariez- that's me.

The- eyes, small- yet, look through me as if it has taken me to a new place of scared - that I have never been before- completely over-concentration, physique, and personality death; were a muddy greenish-brown, skin, covered in hair. And I wondered why-? Why like- she never had friends, family and all that is normal for a teen girl- then I thought about that and muttered in my mind, with this entity in her how could she, and in her mind, she heard me say it- at that very moment- I know that she was- NEVAEH.

AND I WAS NEXT!

'G-e- thanks!'

Dariez- I then was also raised by my dirty ankles backflipping heels overhead, and then like a ball, and in my mind, I started hearing the same voices she had for years now. Saying- 'you help her you'll go mad- well make sure of it!'

I had to rub my eyes, vigorously, then and there at that very moment, without warning, pushed herself to her feet with surprising speed and liveliness; she had defeated it... how I have no idea?

'Oh my- I was no longer so mortified!'

Yet, was it all over and would I get over this?

Naddalin heard Emmah squeal, she could see the haunts with her naked eyes trying to suck the life out of her, terrified, beside her Dariez, stood and grabbed her hand to hold it.

The- trees to which she was next to hold up the ropes bridge, they were about cross over the vale- started to jump violently as they were on it as if someone was giggling it with all there might, yet, and it felt as if someone had me by wrists and ankles were attached to ominously, trying to take me down the 1,000 feet or so-o to the watery depth below of the moat- that is protected by extremely dark girl topless mermaids yet- gorgeous in their own way- black and gray tones- with skills of fallen angels- that were snatched out of the air- by theme- like killer whales- within the waters of the fallen of the past- lies a haunted shipwreck hanging in fog that is tips sideways - many have ventured in to see yet- never came out alive, the mermaids with wisp webbing around their smooth skin- that drifts within the crystal clear waters, that would rip a girl like me apart- for the blood. They have made that their home, at the far end of the island- in the middle- with it abandon lighthouse, inside the ship.

She- was, as scared as she could be. Dargide had said, at least sixteen feet away from the other side she needs to fly to be a safety.

Gazing blearily from place to place and over, Grawp reached out a hand from the other side making it over be for she did, holding out an umbrella saying grab it, I pull you up with it or if you fall to use it to slow your fall. She fell like a bird from its nest from the - upper branches of a towering pine.

She was even turned upside down within her decent with a roar, or a yell of apparent displeasure, of knowing that she was going to die if she did not learn to fly fast... like a bird- the first time out she did; wings spread, and feathers flew, and as she was now towards the end of the water.

Yet- and still, the- ground, seemed like it was forever away, and Dargide threw her arms over, her head to protect herself from the income girl, that was unconfident in her foremost flight.

‘Anyway, Grawpy,’ shouted Dargide, looking up apprehensively in case of further falling of a girl up in the air 100 feet or so-o, for someone to come and make sure that she would land safely, and with magical powers and her hand lifted up she made her fall down to her feet perfectly.’

‘I’ve brought some friends ta- meet yen’s, yet this was not the entrances, that I thought was going to happen with you, that is for sure!’ She said.

‘Do you remember when I told yen’s- about all this- in class, ‘I might?’ This story was no fairytale- and I know- I know that one of you is- HER! Yet, I know that you’ll never tell, over not trusting anyone, not even us- here. Yet we know- to look out for you- and we have it narrowed down to you two.’

Remember, when I said 'I might have to go on a little trip and leave for a while, I did, this was it... to go and get her and make sure- she and I had a home that was not a setup... I am going look at her a bit, and she winked her eye?'

'Remember that, Grawpy? To look over, see the next. God help her... yet that was sh-h-h too.'

Nonetheless, Grawp simply gave another low grumble; it was hard to say when she was listening to Dargide or when she- even familiar the- sounds Dargide was making a speech.

Looking around one girl that was- just a spectator felt the wrath of them too she was a tiny thing compared to the other girls, anyways she was hanging at the- top of a- pine tree, at play beforehand, kids were pulling the tree towards them, evidently for the- simple pleasure of seeing how far it would spring back when- she- let go, she was flung into the air, into the arms of another girl, she too was being picked on for being the small one.

'Now stop before someone get hurt, she looks at me and I say- 'I don't know what I want to do,' yet she was saying to the other kids, not to do that- that is why you all are here you were like her at one time- were you not.' shouted Dargide.

'It's not nice to gang up on others.' Now pulling the tree down one last time, the girl was able to get down without more than some black and blue marks.

And sure enough, Naddalin could see the- Earth around the- tree's roots and beginning to crack, as she was over past the water's edge feeling way to powerful, she had gotten her new life now- one more time around- another 100, yet not a sure thing if they find her yet she has them... she feels as if she has seen over more than 100 years of life- and lives, and that maybe be so, yet she only lived within 25 years in real-time.

'I got the company for the yen's like I said!'

Dargide shouted- 'company, see- SEE YOUNG LADIES make friends PLAY- INTERACT- don't kill them- for the love of God, there sweet and younger-looking for someone to care- ABOUT THEM- BE-NICE!' Naddalin and girls- I brought yen some new friends!'

Oh, Dargide, do not moan Emmah, yet she did over they were prepubescent babies in her mind that need binky's and babysitters, but Dargide had already raised her hand saying it finally, without saying a word we knew to shut up.

Dargide stumbled on pine needles, and blinking over and over frustrated looked down at her own feet to feeble walk on up the pathway- mumbling something like- 'mmm- M- kids these days- I remember- when I was a girl... and the sound vanished.' With her pointer finger out and shaking.

The girl was so-o delighted to let go of the- top of the- tree, which swayed frighteningly and deluged She,' said Dargide, hurrying over to where Naddalin And Emmah stood, saying out of breath it's good to get to know you both, her glasses falling off her face and cracked, in the one lens.

'Is Naddalin, Grawp favorite or something, she asked sheepishly- 'no child just old friends! Naddalin is a very important girl to get to know well.'

One girl said to the other group of girls- 'Naddalin is that one there! She- might' becoming, to visit yen's all if I have to go away, understand? She has not been feeling well.'

Naddalin realized her bandaged hands to them all patting them on the shoulders saying 'welcome,' that Emmah where there, saying- 'see girls she's really nice- don't be intimidated.'

They watched, in great anxiety, as she- lowered her hands on to them and they could barely peer over her, yet they were stunned to see that they were about the same height at them.

'And the is Emmah,' see, her- um she is close friends with Dariez- like close...

Turning to Emmah, she- said, 'would yen's mind if told them your story, Naddalin?'

'No- go for it- um, like yet- it's not easy to tell...'

'Yet you'll do a fine job- I know that you well...' said- Naddalin. 'Only it's a difficult remembering all the name to remember, not the story- for me anyway.'

'No, not at all,' squeaked Emmah, I have it all in my mind down pat.

'Isn't' that' nice? Eh?'

Look at that said some of the professors.

'Two friends for yen are to get to NO!' Grawp's hands had shot out of nowhere towards Emmah, as dementors, scraped and shot up and out - not all the way the closed trunk into thin air; Naddalin seized herself and pulled herself back behind the- tree with the girls, as she tried to defeat them, she knew whom the spirits belonged too, they would not take NO for an answer.

‘EVIL, this is evil-ness- GIRL, Dargide yelling, as Emmah clung to Naddalin behind she - tree- now, shaking and whimpering- know that it was after her.’

‘VERY BAD GIRL!

Naddalin poked her head out from around the - large tree trunk and saw Dargide lying on her back she was dying, her hands over her eyes, she could see their faces, as plain as day - yet all in her head, ‘they made her go brain died,’ along with saying- ‘over me-’ she screamed, as her hand dropped out hers in her last moments.

The other looking around were apparently losing interest, had uncurled, to their shock and awe, and was up and was again engaged into their activities, as the body of an old friend started to decay, in pulling the pages of the day that the typewriter had written spitting out pages automatically... keys- pounding down and the hammers snapping- pages after pages- flying in the air- staking up, she could see who was at the bottom of it all- the one that deceived us- all. Back, and back she looked into the text and it was always them!

‘Right,’ said Emmah thickly, getting up with one hand pinching her bleeding from her nose and the - other hand gashed and also dripping blood.

‘Well... their yen are... you have made a friend and lost them on the same every day, welcome to my life,’ said Naddalin.

‘You have met her and now she-’ll, see you in this life ever again- her lives are all over- they took them... it was all them... them- they...’

‘Yeah... well... That’s life and it goes pushing on.’ Said Emmah.

She- looked up at all those young faces, who was now pulling back the - pine tree down was a kid that was possessed BY- THEM- THEM- THEM!!!

Then with an expression of detached pleasure this girl looked me with a super creeper- creep evil grin, and gold eyes, with her head, cocked to the side saying- ‘I’ll kill you- for the f*ck of it!’

Standing on the boulder’s face of a large monument statue of an old wise wizard of the past; that was more powerful than ever before him, now the one that shall not be named his - that title, see-the tree started to uproot where was standing creaking as it falls ripped away from the world, the - ground, to also decay- like her on the inside.

‘Well, I reckon that’s enough for one day,’ said Emmah.’

‘We’ll- shell we go now, shall we?’ Naddalin And Emmah nodded, handheld and kinda sad.

Emmah’s shouldered had her arms cross again on top of them, and still, Naddalin was still pinching the nose, leading the- way back into the- trees down the dusking pathway.

Nobody spoke for a while, not even when they heard the - distant crash, even so, that meant they have passed all the- pine tree at last and was moving into the open clearing.

Emmah’s face was pale as she had to set for a-while on a bench, just so her mind could go blank. Naddalin could not think of a single thing to say. What was going to happen when they all found out what was hidden in the- Forbidden Forest?

Then she- had promised too, Jinger and Emmah and the other girls, that would continue what seemed like totally pointless attempts to civilize the attacks on them, yet she would win out.

Monsters- they were never loveably harms- fools they are, that should never ever- have been, or mix with humans. Demoniac’s they are- in what you saw demoniac.

‘Hold it,’ said Dariez abruptly, just as Naddalin And Emmah were struggling through a patch of thick knotgrass behind her- not sticking to the pathway.

Naddalin And Emmah raised their hands; now that they had stopped walking, they, too, could hear movement close by, they were being flowed as if there were evil eyes on them.

‘Oh, Joannah’ said Emmah quietly, that was the person that came up behind them startling them.

...Or was it?

Naddalin did not trust, that thought of only!

‘I thought we told you, never to do that,’ said a deep male voice, that a girl should not have ever,’ that you are no longer welcome in our group said Emmah?’ ‘You’re creepy... to us girls even, and you did that to yourself.’

‘That was not nice-’ said one other girl- standing there that was new- yet the look that they all gave her was not to question it any further.

‘We were nice to you, and you stabbed us in the back... so-o, go-o.’

~*~

A girl’s naked torso seemed for an instant to be floating towards on a chestnut brown horse’s in-flight dappled in a glowing half blueish -light glowing around its wings then they saw that her hair was joined smoothly into its body- by its main as if they were linked mind, body, and soul. The horse had a proud stance, high cheekbones a long face with long brown layered hair.

The girl was armed; With arrows and a longbow where slung over the shoulders, as asked of the school to protect us from harm. Our own personal bodyguard. The - trees behind the- her rustled and four or five more centaurs emerged behind her, that she was starting to fight for us.

Afterward-

‘How is yeah, Lily?’ Said Emmah said circumspectly, like the rest of the girls.

Naddalin recognized the- bodies of the girl right away, whom she- had met many- many moons a- ago on the- same night- this took place, when she had to live on and not die, now the same night of the aligning the great eclipse.

Yet, she gave no sign that she- had ever seen Naddalin before, yet it seemed as if she was covering the fact, that she did really know her for years even.

‘So-o,’ she- said, with a horrid nuance in her voices, before turning immediately to Lily.’

‘We agreed, I think, what we would do if they would ever show their faces in the - forest again?’

‘I REMEMBER BEING- human now, am I have- fallen and have to live with it...’ said Lily.

‘You and I- like always being: ‘us’ will be stopping’ all the committing’ murder, by them- and her most of all.’

‘You ought not to have meddled girls with them,’ said Lily.’ Along with saying- ‘there highly demented.’

‘Our ways are not yours, nor are our laws- here things are quite different than back where you all are from, in your small towns. These girls have betrayed and dishonored us, yet there the highest of all of us, and we take the wrath still.’

You neither know-how about what happens down there or you do, it will all work itself out,’ said Emmah impatiently, there here they make trouble here and we hope that they go down there and when they're down there we hope they stop, and they're here so we can take care of the destruction .

‘She’s did not do anything except help Duerre- and them. That is speculation... but I believe that is so-o.’

Firenze- said and I overheard.

Part: 9

‘Oh no, don’t ever say that.’ Said Naddalin.

‘Firenze has entered into servitude to humans,’ said a grey centaur with a hard, deeply lined face, and ghostly figure. ‘Serfdom!’ Said Naddalin said scathingly of her bandages. ‘she is doing’ us all a favor is all, it for your good trust her.’

‘She- is peddling our telling our secrets among humans,’ said Lily quietly, and killed young girls to get in their mind, and use their bodies for their own dementors to live within, so they have a life that is immortals. There can be no return from such disgrace, yet they are still here!’

‘If yen’s say so,’ said Emmah, shrugging her shoulders, ‘but partially I think you’re making’ a big mistake.’

‘As are you, human, once- so were they and they want to be in the worst way’ said Neville, ‘coming back into our Forest when we counseled you.’

‘Now, yeah listen to me,’ said Naddalin angrily. You're new here be nice to her she knows more then, and at this point is the head of all things here, she was one that had to live with their wrath, you have one her to tell her story is real and your life before now- was nothing compared to yours.’

‘No more is it up to you, said Lily effortlessly, you have a mind think for yourself.’

Guards- 'We shall let you pass today because you are accompanied by your tutors, they make their way into the castle, for the first time; looking totally- awestruck eyes wide and mouth dropped.'

'...They're not right are they...?' Said the one girl interrupted the others contemptuously.

'Students, Lily, from up at her- Hayvannahol! Small town girls...'

'They have probably already profited from the- traitor Firenze's teachings.'

'Nevertheless,' said Lily calmly, 'the- slaughter of foals is a terrible crime we do not touch the- innocent.'

Today, Dargide, you pass, right why do you think they wanted her at final death? The- effort it took was not really worth it, it's like they can't stay away from this place, even if the powers are fallen and not as strong as they once were.

'You pay for the- friendship of the- centaurs that were would to help the- traitor Firenze escape us- and she is at the heart of it all.'

'I won't be kept outta The- Forest, they say in their mind that was taken over, as they went into trances.'

'Let's go, please let's go...!' Naddalin, said Emmah and then girls in a high pitched, as if a young girl voice of the past was trying to get out, a terrified voice, as both girls were being chased down by this- grey-black centaur pawing at them and hitting ground just behind them as the room the ground within the wall of the castle, with its claw-like hands with long nails...

Lily moved forwards, but the crossbow was still raised- not really need yet it makes her feel safe, and the eyes were still fixed threateningly upon, eviler creeping upon them, at last, they can see, Dargide meeting back up with them, saying- 'come on.'

'Lily called after them, as the- centaurs slipped out of sight, that could be good then and then not so-o much too.'

And our tolerance is waning!'

'We know that they are hiding within The- Forest, over the fact that it just too haunted and creepy for most of us girls to enter in!'

Dargide turned and gave every appearance of wanting to walk straight back to Lily. 'You'll tolerate' them as long as she's there if it would not before her you would be able too.'

'It's as much our Forest as yours, back off and leave us alone,' the young of the girl's shrieked in a tight ear pricing way- of jittery nervousness, as it was sucking them back into it, from the castle walls into the dark deeps of the mysterious ominous woods!'

'We just keep on getting pulled back by them, even as hard as we run, we can't get away.'

She- yelled, as Naddalin and Emmah both pushed with all there might against Dargide's coat in an effort to keep her moving forward, her being the biggest of them all.

Dariez- is still looking frightened like them all yet, she keeps- looked down; with the expression of fear not changed to mild surprise at the- sight of them both pushing her; almost over, yet she is not holding on knowing she is being braver than them, pushing from behind the group. She - seemed not to have felt it, but she was showing her true colors of bravery.

'Calm down, you two,' she- said, turning to walk on, while they panted along behind her- now as she ran past them with all her might.'

'Dargide,' said Emmah breathlessly, skirting the- patch of nettles they had passed on their way there,' if the- centaurs do not want half-humans, like this girl's half-bloods, that are here for transformation to this world in the- Forest, they feel that have a place to control, and take at well.

Lily- 'Like- it doesn't really look as though Naddalin... they want the girls they want you!!!'

'And I will be able ah to end this,' you heard what they said, said Dariez dismissively, 'they would not hurt foal's- kids- I mean would they?'

Naddalin- 'Yes, yes- they would you should have seen what they did with kids in their orphanage on Earth, years ago, like Kristen, she has pages, about it all, it horrific.'

Dariez- 'Anyhow, we cannot let ourselves be pushed around by them, that is what they want... they want you- to do that... fight them, and then you're in the wrong, and you let it go, and you're wrong too- what do you do?'

'Nice try,' Naddalin murmured to Emmah, who looked crestfallen.

At last, they rejoined the- path and, after another ten minutes, the- trees began to thin once more; they were able to see patches of the clear blue sky again and, in the- distance, the- definite sounds of cheering and shouting.

‘Was that an added goal?’ Asked Emmah, pausing in the- shelter of the covering of the- trees as the- Claepsiara stadium came into view.’

‘Like- do yeah reckon her- games are over?’

‘I do not know,’ said Emmah miserably.

Naddalin saw that she- looked much more than worse for wear; her hair was full of twigs and leaves, and her uniform was now completely ripped in several places and there were numerous scratches on her faces and arms as well.

Naddalin she- knew she- must look little better, then the night before yet that was not so-o. Yet, she was going to oversee the games.

-And-

You ought to read the- papers more, Neville, it has all these games and events listed on it.

Part: 10

-And-

Naddalin held the- paper up to the- lantern light and read: BLACK STILL ON THE LOSE Trirus Black, possibly The- most dishonorable person ever to be held in Dizeryland fortress, is still eluding capture, the- Bureau of Magic inveterate at the moment, as you can see it is life with the pages.

Besides- girls, we are doing all we can to recapture Black is said to see our panic on our faces as we read and viewed, said ‘the- Martita of Magic, Cornelius Harlan, the morning, and we beg the- magical community to remain calm, just like you girls don’t worry about a thing.’

-And-

Harlan has been criticized by some members of the- International Federation of Warlocks for informing she- nonmagical people Prime Martita of the- crisis.

‘And, well, really, I had to, do not you know,’ said an irritable Harlan.

‘Black is livid, angry, furious and mad.’

‘There is a danger to anyone who crosses this person, magic world or Earthly.’

‘I have the- Prime Martita’s assurance, that she- will not breathe- a word of Black’s true identity to anyone. Besides, let’s face it- who would have faith in her if she- did?’

-And-

Even though nonmagical peoples or ‘Early people’ have been told, that Black is carrying a gun, (a kind of metallic wand, that Nonmagical peoples use to kill each other called a dagger...)

The- magical community lives in fear of a massacre, like that of one year ago and a day ago when Black murdered one hundred thirteen people with a single curse. On the 24th day, on the 12th month, 366 days ago or so-o would mark the bloodbath of spraying for fame. The sown was high too, I remember... all those kids, think about the moms and dads and how they feel the next day not having them.

Naddalin looked into the- shadowed eyes of Trirus Black.

Dariez- The- only part showing now, and within the frame of the photograph- sunken face and head of the kids he killed, to make love to after they were no longer fighting back- like this is what he would do to them, see- see all this in the background of those floating body parts detached bobbing in green licked, that did not survive- his ah- hum- pounding.

It says- that he keeps all their body parts- in glass jars on his desk, next to his vintage typewriter-like his manuscript, that we never- ever will see the light of day, or be published; it said- here that he makes sick twisted, freak me- stories of wanting to make creepy- creeper love to kids...’

Naddalin- ‘It says he is a- necrophiliac!’ Along with saying in the same breath- ‘Do we really put all nuts in the same category- he eats crayons, and roll his turds into balls, then too.’

Blink- blink- blink... is what Dariez did...

‘I guess you think that too- of him, and may not be so-o don’t believe, everything you read about someone that may have had a set- up.’

‘Fa-h,’ said Emmah, ‘you believe what you want... I would believe that is so-o.’

Duriez- ‘like you were never really uncomfortable, you were just irritated with everyone's stupid.’

‘I feel you...’ said Naddalin, at that moment, in that day, and at that very heartwarming time; they were bounding as she was her child she never had.

Overhearing the girls talking in a group huddle not so far away...

‘There was one that seemed alive, and he keeps her whole body up for his BITCH ‘till she did - passed- over to our side, yet with him on top of her, earthly body.’

Naddalin had never met an Ashes Angels, yet she did today the girl was me- Emmah.

Emmah- ‘I was the one, that almost survived too.’

But... she- had seen pictures of them in her defense think about it at that moment - against The- Dark Arts classes, and Black.

Yet, the girl showing her other side to her now was and is changing before her eyes, with her waxy white skin, looking like an angel she has never seen before.

The wings would have a covering of ash, that would fall to the ground, like paper remnants - that still smoldering and part light with a flame, in shades of gray, and fall like unique snow flacks, along with a body that would burn... as well and then start a new life - in that some incense, before your eyes, as she wept in sadness putting out her own flaming dismay and passion to take back what she had lost, over her former life.

Emmah-

(Back)

The shadow- that shows through- from within and then back out. 'Stamina is everything, that is energy and strength.'

'I got stamina- don't give up, I won't give up- I got stamina!'

Damen's dark eyes focus on mine all the time if I want my privacy or not the see into me and out and looking into my eyes reflecting it see them within me, wiles me to listen, really listen to them all the time, like her I now have this too.

I press my lips together and nod, her voice beaten by the one in my head influence: Tell you all that I am not crazy I hear the voices too! She was never crazy, and it has made us closer- than ever.

I- Emmah- thought- Tell them all, about what they can't understand, they have taken over me, like her with their hex!

Quit stalling, I thought yet they have my mind and just get it over with!

Nevertheless, I don't, I won't say a word, nothing but the feeling of traumatized going thought me- of all the one before me- feeling their every emotion. I just delay for her to endure so-o, I can delay even further, with the voices ripping through me.

Raise your hand, she nods, palms out, moving toward mine, feeling the sparks of link up with memories and transmitting them to one girl to the other.

Lifting my arm unhurriedly, carefully, figured out to evade any and all bodily contact when she says, 'Now tell me, what do you perceive?'

I squint, unsure what Naddalin is after with me doing this, then shrugging I say, 'Well, I see pale skin, long fingers, a freckle or two, nails in serious need of a manicure...'

'Really, yet now think about, that does sound about right.'

She beams, as though, I just passed the world's easiest test.

Even so, if you could see it as it really is, you wouldn't see that at all, they're so much more - yet, you can see- and that is more than most. Instead, you would see a group of fragments encompassing neutrons, protons, quarks, and electrons.

And within those little quarks, down to the littlest idea, you would see zilch- but pure vibrating energy moving at a speed slow enough, that it seems hard and solid, and yet, rapidly abundant, that it can't be seen for what it really is.'

Not sure- to believe it or not, I narrow my eyes; never mind the circumstance that she's been studying this stuff for hundreds of years.

'Trust.' She said to me, enthusiastically.

'Seriously, ever- nonentity is distinct.'

Fully taken to the subject now, she leans toward me.

'The whole thing is one. Items that give the impression dense, like you and I, and this sand that we're sitting on, are really just a mass of energy vibrating gradually enough to seem hard, while things like spirits and ghosts vibrate so quickly they're nearly unbearable for most humans to see- yet we can see it.'

'I see you,' I say, eager to remind her of all the time, I used to spend with my ghostly sister.

'Or at least I used to, you know before she overlapped the bridge and moved on- like all the others.'

'I have met her, I think.'

'Also, that's accurately why- you can't see you anymore.' She nods. I want you to be with a girl named- Dariez, be a girlfriend to her, she is like me in so many ways you will love her- I can see that too- for you.

'Her vibration is moving too wildly. Though there are those who can see past all of that.'

I gaze at the water before us, the swells rolling under the bridge that was standing on, one after another. Endless, never-ending, immortal- like us.

'Now raise your hand again and bring it so close to mine we just nearly touch.'

Walking After You

Part: 1

I hesitate, filling my palm with sand, unwilling to do it. Unlike her, I know the price, the dire significances the slightest skin-on-skin contact can bring. Which is why I have been avoiding her touch altogether, and scenes last Saturday.

Which is why I've been avoiding her touch altogether.

But when I peer at her yet again, her palm out, waiting for mine ever so softly, I take a deep breath and lift my hand too- gasping when he draws so close the space that divides- us like a hair-thin.

'Um- do you feel the sensation that?' She smiles.

'That tingle with the heat?'

'That's our energy linking- of bodies, minds, and souls.'

She moves her hand back and forth on my softly, employing the push and pull of the energy force sparking from me to her with a field bolt between us.

'But if we are all linked as you say, then why doesn't it all feel the same?'

Not like this was not, I have memories, that they don't have, and well never- ever have.

I for one murmur, drawn by the undeniable charming stream that links us, causing the most wonderful warmth of course through my frame.

‘We are all linked, all of us made of the same vibrating source. Nonetheless, while some energy leaves you cold and some leaves you feeling like your dying on the inside, the one that you’re intended for? It feels just like this.’ I close my eyes and turn, allowing the tears to stream down my cheeks, no longer able to keep them in.

Knowing I’m barred from the feel of her skin, the touch of her lips, the solid warm comfort of her body on mine.

This electrical energy field that trembles between you and me- like- is the closest I will get to feeling precious, thanks to the horrible decision I made I have never- ever felt real love.

‘Knowledge is just now catching up with what metaphysicians and the great spiritual instructors have known for eras.’

‘Everything is vigor energy of stamina. Everything is one with that- understand.’

‘Somehow some way we are all the same with the link.’

I can hear the smile in her voice as she draws closer, eager to entwine her fingers with mine.

But then again, I move away too swiftly...

-Then-

Emmah said- ‘Pennsylvania was the first state to legalized witchcraft, I think that is why we’re all mostly from those parts.’

catching her eye just long enough to see, the look of hurt that across-ed her face- the same look she’s been giving me since, I made her drink the antidote that returned her to life, and to feel all things like love- and all the feeling a teen girl should have as if she was alive.

Wondering why-why?

Why- I’m acting so silent, noiseless, inaudible, still and quiet.

So, aloof, so remote- rejecting to touch her when just a few weeks earlier, I could not get enough.

Erroneously assuming it's because of her hurtful behavior- she is flirting with Emmah, her cruelty toward me- when the truth is, it has nothing to do with that. Her was under Naddalin's spell, the entire school was. It wasn't her fault.

What she doesn't know is that while the antidote returned her to life, the moment I added my blood to the mix it also ensured we could never- ever be together.

Never! Ever! For all of eternity!!!

'Ever?' She undertones, in her voice, that is too deep and sincere. But I cannot look at her. Cannot touch her; along with certainly can't utter the words she deserves to hear- I messed up- I'm so sorry- Jinger tricked me, and I was desperate and dumb enough to fall for her trick- Besides now there's no hope for us because, if you kiss me if we exchange our DNA- you'll die- I can't do it. I'm the worst kind of coward. I'm pathetic and weak. And there's just no way I can find it within me.

'Ever, please, what is it?' She asks, alarmed by my tears.

'You've been like theirs for days. Is it me?

Is it something I've done?

For the reason that you know I don't remember much of what happened, and the memories that are starting to surface, well, you must know by now that wasn't the real me.

I would never- ever- ever deliberately hurt you.

'I'd never harm you in any way.'

I hug myself tightly, squeezing my shoulders and bowing my head.

Wishing, I could make myself smaller, so small she could no longer see me. Knowing her words are true, that she's incapable of hurting me, only I could do something so hurtful, so rash, so ridiculously impulsive.

Only, I could be stupid enough to fall for Naddalin. So, eager to prove myself as Naddalin's one true love- wanting to be the only one who could save her-and now look at the mess, that I have made.

Then she moves toward me, sliding her arm around me, grasping my waist and pulling me near. Nonetheless, I can't risk the closeness, my tears are deadly now, and must be kept far from her skin.

I- Emmah then climb to my feet and run toward the water's edge, curling my toes at its edge and allowing the cold white froth to splash onto my shins, that is on the far end of the castle beach.

-And-

Wishing I could dive under its incalculability and be carried by the tide.

Anything to avoid saying the words-anything to avoid telling my one true love, my eternal partner, my soul mate for the last four hundred years, that while she may have given me an eternity- I have brought us our end.

-Then-

I stay like that, silent and still and hushed. Waiting for the sun to sink until I finally turn to face her.

Taking in her dark shadowy outline, nearly- indistinguishable from the night, and speaking past the sting in my throat when I mumble...

'Naddalin... baby- girl... there's something- that, I need to tell you.'

Part: 2

I kneel beside her, hands on my knees, toes buried in black the sand, wishing she'd look at me, wishing she would say something.

Even if it's only to tell me what I already know- that I made a grave and stupid mistake-one that will perhaps never be erased.

I would gladly accept it, I deserve it. What I can't stand is her absolute silence and daydreaming gaze.

Besides, I'm just about to say anything, something, to break the intolerable motionlessness tranquilities', when she looks at me, with eyes so weary they're the perfect byword of her years.

'Naddalin.'

She sighs, shaking her head. 'I didn't identify her; I had no idea-' Her voice trails off along with her stare.

'There's no way you could've known,' I say, eager to erase any guilt she might feel.

'You were under her spell from the very first day. Believe me, she had it all planned, made sure any memories were completely erased.'

Her eyes search my face studying me closely before she stands and turns away. Gazing out at the water's edge, hands balled into fists as she says, 'Did she hurt you?'

'Did she go after you or harm you in any way?'

I shake my head back and forth.

'She didn't have to; it was enough to hurt me through you.'

She turns, eyes growing darker as her features strengthen, inhaling deeply as she says, 'This is all my fault.'

I gawk, conjecturing how she could have faith in that after the case I just made.

-And-

Rising to my feet and standing beside her as I cry, 'Don't be ludicrous! Of course, it is not your fault!'

'Did you listen to anything I said?' I shake my head.

'Naddalin poisoned your elixir and hypnotized you. You had nothing to do with it, you were just doing her bidding-it was beyond your control!'

Nonetheless, I have scarcely finished when she is already discharging it with a wave of her hand. 'Ever, don't you see? The is not about Naddalin, or you, the is karma.

‘The is vengeance for centuries of selfish living.’

She then shakes her head and giggles, though it’s not the kind that asks you to join in.

It’s the other kind-the kind that chills you to the bone.

‘After all those years of loving you and losing you, repeatedly, I was sure that was my punishment for the way I’d been living, having no idea you’d died at Haven’s hand. But now I see the truth I’ve missed all along. Just when I was sure I’d evaded karma by making you immortal and keeping you forever by my side, karma gets the last laugh, allowing us an eternity together, but only to look, never to touch each other again.’

I reach for her, wanting to hold her, comfort her, convince her that it’s not at all true. But I pull away just as quickly.

Remembering how our inability to touch is the very thing that got us both here.

‘That’s not true,’ I say, gaze fixed on her. ‘Why would you be punished when I’m the one who made the mistake?’

Don’t you see?’

I- Emmah shake my head, irritated by her singular way of thinking.

‘Naddalin planned it all along. She love’s Haven- I bet you didn’t know that, huh? She was one of the orphans you saved and she loved her for all of those hard times when she was like you, would’ve done anything for her.’

But Haven didn’t care about her- as she should, she only loved her-and her only, loved me- and then, well, after they killed her, Naddalin decided to go after me-only she did it through you.

Wanting me to feel the pain of never being able to touch you again-just as she feels with Haven!

-And-

It all happened so fast, I just-’ I stop, knowing it’s useless, a total waste of words. She stopped listening just after I started, convinced she at fault for some of this- I knew- what I did not get was the hex causing all this.

Nonetheless, I refuse to even visit that place, and I will not let her either.

‘Naddalin, please!’

‘You can’t just give up.’

The isn’t karma-it’s me! I made a mistake, horrible, dreadful mistakes also.

But that doesn’t mean we can’t fix it!

‘See that was something I could never do is- FIX THING TO OTHER’S LIKING’S.’

There must be away.’ Clinging to the falsest of hopes, forcing an enthusiasm, I do not really feel- THAT ANY LONGER.

Naddalin stands before me, a dark silhouette in the night, the warmth of her sad tired gaze serving as our only embrace.

‘I never should’ve started,’ she says.

‘Never should’ve made the tonic-should’ve let things take their own expected path.’

‘Seriously, Ever, just look at the result-it’s brought nothing but pain!’

She shakes her head, her gaze so sad, so apologetic, my heart caves.

‘There’s still time for you though.’

You have got your whole life ahead of you-an eternity where you can be anything you want to be, do anything you want to do.

But for me- she shrugs. ‘I’m tainted. I think we can all see the result of my hundred years.’

‘Nope!’ My voice quivers as my lips tremble so seriously it spreads to my cheeks.

‘You don’t get to walk away; you don’t get to leave me once more! I spent the last month going through hell to save you. Besides now that you’re well I’m not about to give up. We are meant for each other, you said it yourself! We’re just suffering a brief setback, that’s all. Nonetheless, if we can just put our heads together, I know we’ll think of a way to...’

I stop, voice fading, seeing her already moved on, retreating to her bleak sorry world where she's solely at fault for it all.

Besides, I know it's time to tell the rest of the story, the sorry, regretful parts I'd prefer to leave out.

Maybe then she'll see it without a dealt, maybe then...

'So-o, before you assume karma's out to get you or whatever, you need to know something else, something I'm not accurately proud of, but still-' 'There's more,' I say, swish ahead though I've no idea how to phrase what comes next.

I without delay take a deep breath...

-And-

Also, I tell her about my trips to Earth and my homeland and the town around- to me was the world, that magical dimension between the dimensions, where I learned how to go back to time and that given the choice between my family and her- I chose her- over them- yet that is getting hard for me to do.

Persuaded and influenced, I could one way or another restore the future I was sure had been stolen, and up till now all it really amounted to was a lesson, I already knew - that occasionally destiny lies just outside of our reach and it is not graspable.

I swallow hard and stare at the black sand, reluctant to see Naddalin's reaction when she considers the eyes of the one who betrayed her.

But then again, as an alternative of getting mad or upset like I thought, her environs me with the most beautiful glowing white light-a light so comforting, so forgiving, so pure- it's like the portal to my home -only better it's a connection of body, mind, and soul.

So-o, I close my eyes and surround her with light too, and when I open them again, we're wrapped in the most beautiful warm hazy glow.

'You had no choice,' she says, in a gentle voice with a very soothing, gaze, doing everything she can to ease all my shame.

‘Unquestionably, you chose your family...’

It was the right thing to do... after all.

I would’ve done the same given the choice... yet, do I HAVE THE RIGHT TO CHOOSE.

I nod, shining her light even brighter and tacking on a telepathic embrace. Knowing it’s not nearly as comforting as the real thing but for now, it’ll do.

‘I know about your family, I know all, I saw it all-’ Her looks at me with eyes so dark and intense I force myself to go on.

‘You’re always so secretive about your past, where you came from, how you lived -and so one day, while I was in Hastings; I asked about you-and-well-your entire life story was revealed.’

I press my lips together and peer at her standing before me so silent and still.

Moaning as she gazes into my eyes and telepathically traces her fingers along the curve of my cheek-creating an image so deliberate, so tangible, it almost seems real.

‘I’m sorry,’ say says nit-picking, thumb mentally smoothing my chin.

‘I’m sorry,’ ‘I was so shut down and disinclined to share that, I reduced you to that. But then again, even though it happened a long time ago, it’s still something I for one would rather not to confer.’

I nod, having no intention of pushing it. Her seeing her parents’ murder followed by years of abuse at the hands of the church is not a subject I intend to pursue.

‘But there’s more,’ I say, hoping I can maybe restore a little hope by sharing something else, and that I learned.

‘When I was watching your life unfold, in the end, Naddalin had killed you.

Then even though, that seemed meant to be, I still managed to save you.’

I look at her, sensing she’s far from swayed and rushing ahead before I lose her completely.

‘I mean, yeah, maybe our fate is sometimes fixed and unvarying, but there are other times when it’s shaped morally by the actions we take.

So, when I couldn't save my family by going back in time, it's only because, that was destiny, that couldn't be changed.

'It's beautiful... that you can change destiny.'

Or as Riley my pain in the butt little sisters, yet my best little friend too was all meant to be, then just a second before the second accident, that took them again... yet she never did say she loves me either.

'Love not to be- is for me- it was my destiny!' Said, Emmah.

'You can't change the past; it just is more of the past remand it kills the future.'

'Nonetheless, when I found myself right back here in Hastings, and I was able to save you, well, I think it evidences that the future isn't always concrete, not everything is ruled solely by fate.'

'Maybe so-o.' She sighs, gazes fixed on me, and my fate.'

'But then again you can't escape karma, ever ...?... It is what it is ...?... It doesn't judge, it's neither good nor immoral like most people ponder.'

Naddalin- I heard them call me a baby rapper to my face, and there was nothing, I could but stand there, hearing these lies day in and day out; like all the other lies, as well- that was just that nothing but lies.

Emmah- 'It's the result of all actions, positive and negative -a constant balancing of events- cause and effect- tit for tat- reaping and sowing- what goes around comes around.'

'Look at Karly's destiny- and what she did over not having a or education, and did not want to work for $2.00 an hour, a hamburger joint. So, all she had to do is make on shit video of her, this is just one out of a hundred- I recall this one for $20.00 - 'teen masturbates & fucks her dildo' - saying the headline- ('22-mins of me enjoying myself deliciously. Watch me cum over and over with my toys. Adore my long legs, my small tits, and my bush while- I let myself go crazy thinking about you.')'

It had 3,555 views- and she made $71,100 just with that... was it wrong some would say, yet what other choice did she have? Yet that makes her the bad girl- she is a girl after all- that showed that she was one- and had needs- and need the money more than modesty in a world that could give a flying shit about her- in any way.' With one video, she has made $6,000,000 in her short life, be the end days of it and money still has not made a destiny for her either. Said, Naddalin.

She shrugs her shoulders...

'However, you phrase it, it's the same in the end- is it not?'

Then... we are the bad ones out over- it's our destiny.

Emmah- 'And as much as you'd like to think otherwise, that's exactly what's happening here with you sometimes you just have to ask if... God's at be are just screwing us.'

'I have been there too...'

'All actions cause a reaction, I pounder even now- still having faith, even if some days I faulted like a human that was deemed- less then human....' Said Emmah.

'By them...' she said.

'By them...' Naddalin said.

Part: 3

She shakes her head...

'And the is where to have my actions have brought me- either.'

'Then again you need to ride 20 dicks before you find the right one if ever you do.'

'Ture- true... that you do... both- girls felt unanimously- saying we have been hurt, so badly, that way we turned to girls, for love, girls well love always when boys are a macho asshole, that is just impressing their jackoff boyfriends!'

'All the time, I told myself I turned you out of love- but now I see it was really out of self- interest- because, I couldn't be without you.'

'You like this?' She asks softly, her teeth nibbling my outer ear, and she starts to flex his thumb slowly, in, out, in, out... of me, her fingers still circling the fleshy lips that move about with her thumb, that connecting line linking as she pulled it away of wetness.

I close my eyes, trying to keep my breathing under control, trying to absorb the disordered, muddled sensations that her fingers are releasing on me, fire coursing through my body. I moan again.

‘You’re so wet, so quickly.’

‘Open your mouth,’ she commands and thrusts his thumb in my mouth. My eyes fly open, blinking wildly.

‘Let me make cum for you!’

‘M-mm- you are my Oreo cookie, that I just have to sate and like out the creamy center.’

Her thumb presses on my tongue, and my mouth closes around her, sucking wildly on the beach. I’m panting once more as I tug at her with my mouth, and its trails down and under my chin, I can taste the smooth, rich leather of her.

‘See how you taste,’ she breathes against my ear. ‘Suck down on me, the baby she said.’

I taste the saltiness on his thumb and the faint metallic tang of blood.

‘That’s why is happening now.’

‘So, that’s it?’ I shake my head, hardly believing he’s determined to give up so easily. ‘That’s how it ends?’

You’re just so dang sure you’ve been chased down by karma you don’t even try to fight back?

‘What’s the use...?’ She said to Naddalin.

You came all the way just so we could be together, at last... and now that we’re facing difficulty, you’re not even going to try to walk with me down this path- hand in hand?’

‘Ever- and ever- never, letting go of ever- and forever- never.’

Her gaze is warm, loving, all- encircling like her hair and tightly squeezing arms, as they are falling around her as they fall together to the gold wheatgrass within the black sand, but it does nothing to stop the defeat in her voice, of worn-out yet want the love and touch of each other hands and bodies.

‘I’m sorry, but there are some things I just know.’

‘Yeah, well...’ I shake my head and gaze down at the ground they were laying on top off the tall grasses swaying in the breeze, burying my toes deep in the sand.

‘Just because you’ve got a few centuries on me doesn’t mean you get the last word. Because if we’re truly in the together, if our lives, like our fate, is truly entwined, then you’ll realize she isn’t just happening to you, I’m part of it too. And you don’t get to walk away from it you don’t get to walk away from me! We’ve got to work together! There has to be a way,’ I stop, body shaking, throat closed so tight, I can no longer speak. All I can do is stand there before her, silently urging her to join me in a fight I’m not sure we can win.

‘I’ve no plans to leave you,’ she says, gaze filled with the longing of four hundred years. ‘I can’t leave you, Ever. Believe me, I’ve tried. But in the end, I always find my way back to your side. You’re all I’ve ever wanted-all I’ve ever loved-but Ever-’

‘No buts...’ I shake my head, wishing I could hold her, touch her, press my body tightly against her. ‘There’s got to be away, some kind of cure. And together we’ll find it. I just know that we will. We’ve come too far to let Naddalin keep us apart. But I can’t do it alone. Not without your help. So please promise me-promise you’ll try.’

She looks at me, her gaze luring me in. Closing her eyes as she fills the beach with so many tulips the entire cove is bursting with waxy red petals atop a green curving stems-the ultimate symbol of our undying love covering every square inch of sand.

Then she slips her arm through mine and leads me back to her car. Our skin separated only by her supple black leather jacket and my organic cotton tee. Enough to spare the consequences of any accidental DNA exchange, but unable to temper the tingle and heart that pulsates between us.

‘Never should’ve made the elixir-should’ve let things take their own natural course.

Seriously, Ever, just look at the result-it’s brought nothing but pain!’

Without delay at the moment at that time she shakes her head, her gaze so sad, so remorseful, my heart caves.

‘There’s still time for you though.

You've got your whole life ahead of you-a endlessness where you can be whatsoever you want to be, do anything you want to do. But for me- she shrugs at me like a young girl that she is. 'I'm contaminated. I think we can all see the consequence of my hundred years.'

'No!' My voice quivers as my lips shake so-o badly it spreads to my cheeks.

'You don't get to walk away; you don't get to leave me again!

I spent the last month going through hell to save you, and now that you are well, I'm not about to give up.

We are meant for each other, you said it yourself to me many times!

We are just feeling a temporary setback, that's all.

Nonetheless, if we can just put our heads together, I know we'll think of a way to... you and I.'

I personally stop, voice fading, seeing she previously moved on, withdrawing to her bleak sorry world where she solely to blame.

Then- I know it is time to tell the rest of the story, the sorry, regretful parts I would prefer to leave out. Maybe then she'll see it differently, maybe then- and there... 'There's more,' I say, whistle ahead though I've no idea how to phrase what comes following.

'So, before you assume karma's out to get you or whatever, you need to know something else, something I'm not precisely proud of, but still- I take a deep breath...and hold it- letting it out slowly.

Besides, tell her about my trips back home there is that magical dimension, left out of my life for a while, and the space between the dimensions where I learned how to go back in time and that given the choice between my family and her- I chose her, I choose to be here.

Influenced I could somehow restore the future, I was sure had been pilfered, and yet all it really amounted to was a lesson I already knew: Occasionally destiny lies just outside of our range for girls like you and me.

I swallow hard and stare at the sand, reluctant to see Naddalin's reaction when she looks into the eyes of the one who betrayed her.

So-o I close my eyes and surround her with light too, and when I open them again, we are wrapped in the most gorgeous warm hazy glow.

But then again, as an alternative of getting mad or upset... like I thought, she environs me with the loveliest glowing white light-a light so comforting, so magnanimous, so pure- it's like the portal to another world-only better- and we go there together.

'You had no choice,' she says, voice gentle, gaze soothing, doing everything she can to ease all my shame. 'Of course, you chose your family. It was the right thing to do. I would've done the same given the choice.'

I nod, shining her light even brighter and tacking on a telepathic embrace.

Knowing it's not nearly as comforting as the real thing but for now, it'll do.

'I know about your family, I know everything, I saw it all-' she looks at me with eyes so dark and intense, I force myself to endure. 'You're always so secretive about your past, where you came from, how you lived-and so one day, while I back on Earth I found out your story and where you're really from... I did... I asked about you-and-well-your entire life story was revealed to me just by reading between the lines.'

I press my lips together and peer at her standing before me so silent and still. Exhaling as she gazes into my eyes and telepathically traces her fingers along the curve of my cheek-creating an image so deliberate, so palpable, it almost seems real.

Part: 4

'I'm sorry,' she says, thumb mentally smoothing my chin. 'I'm remorseful I was so shut down and unwilling to share, that I condensed you to that. However even though it happened a long time ago, it's still something I prefer not to discuss any further.'

I nod at her, having no intention of pushing it anymore. She is witnessing her parents' homicide followed by years of abuse at the hands of the church is not a topic- I intend to pursue, over the pain that she had on the inside cover it all.

'Nonetheless, there is more,' I say, hoping I can maybe reestablish a little hope by sharing something else that I learned.

‘When I was watching your life unfold, in the end, Naddalin had killed you. Nevertheless, even though that seemed fated to happen, I still managed to save you.’

I gaze at her, sensing she’s far from convinced and rushing ahead before, I lose her entirely.

‘I mean, yes, maybe our providence of destiny is sometimes fixed and unalterable, but there are other times when it’s shaped purely by the actions we take.

So-o when I could not save my family by going back in time, it’s only for the reason that was a destiny that couldn’t be changed.

Or as Riley said seconds before the second accident that took them again, ‘You can’t change the past, it just is.

Naddalin- ‘I knew a girl that did that over and over named Karly- and your right you can’t but you can go back to see what you have lost, by seeing what you gave up on be - maybe doing thing differently.’

‘Nonetheless, when I found myself right back here, and I was able to save you, well, I think it proves that the future isn’t always tangible, not everything is ruled solely by fate.’

‘Maybe so.’ Her sighs gaze fixed on mine. ‘But you can’t escape karma, Ever- and Never.

It is what it is... No?

Yes?

Maybe?

It does not judge, it’s neither good nor bad like most individuals are ‘So, that’s it?’ I shake my head, hardly believing she’s determined to give up so easily. ‘That’s how it ends? You’re just so dang sure you’ve been chased down by karma you don’t even try to fight back? You came all the way just so we could be together and now that we’re facing an obstacle, you’re not even going to try to scale the brick wall in our path?’

‘Ever-’ her gaze is warm, loving, all-encompassing, but it does nothing to cancel the defeat in her voice. ‘I’m sorry, but there are some things I just know.’

‘Yeah, well...’ I shake my head and gaze down at the ground, burying my toes deep in the sand. ‘Just because you’ve got a few centuries on me doesn’t mean you get the last word. Because if we’re truly in the together, if our lives, like our fate, is truly entwined, then you’ll realize she isn’t just happening to you, I’m part of it too.

-And-

Like- you don’t get to walk away from it you don’t get to walk away from me! We’ve got to work together! There has to be away-’ I stop, body shaking, throat closed so tight I can no longer speak. All I can do is stand there before her, silently urging her to join me in a fight I’m not sure we can win.

‘I’ve no plans to leave you,’ she says, gaze filled with the longing of four hundred years. ‘I can’t leave you, Ever. Believe me, I’ve tried. But in the end, I always find my way back to your side. You’re all I’ve ever wanted-all I’ve ever loved-but Ever-’

‘No buts...’ I shake my head, wishing I could hold her, touch her, press my body tightly against her. ‘There’s got to be away, some kind of cure. And together we’ll find it. I just know that we will. We’ve come too far to let Naddalin keep us apart. But I can’t do it alone. Not without your help. So please promise me-promise you’ll try.’

She looks at me, her gaze luring me in...

Closing her eyes as she fills the beach with so many lilies the entire cove is bursting with waxy pink petals atop a green curving stems-the ultimate symbol of our undying love covering every square inch of sand.

Then she slips her arm through mine and leads me back to her car.

Our skin separated only by her supple uniform and my organic cotton tee that was underneath my white fitting blouse, that is fluttering in the wind open, like my hair.

Enough to spare the penalties for any accidental DNA exchange, but unable to temper the tingle and heart that pulsates between us even then even though.

She shrugs... even so-o.

It’s the result of all actions, a positive and negative-a constant balancing of events-cause and effect-tit for tat-reaping and sowing-what goes around comes around.’

‘Though you phrase it, it’s the same in the end. In addition, as much as you would like to think otherwise, that is exactly what’s happening here. Altogether actions cause a response.

‘All the time I told myself I turned you out of love-but now I see it was really out of selfishness-for the reason that I couldn’t be without you. That’s why is happening now.’

‘And the is where my actions have brought me.’ She- being Emmah shakes her head.

(Some time has passed)

‘Guess what?’

She gazes at me as she climbs to her knees looking down with her hair falling all around me, in the sand.

Her big eyes wider than usual, cute baby face curving into a grin. ‘No, you know what? Don’t guess...

I’ll just tell you because you’re never going to believe it! You’re never going to deduction!’

I smile, hearing her thoughts a few moments before she can speak them, refraining from saying the wrong thing.

But I did say your good friend Naddalin, who actually- knows all and everything about me!

You and I dating- ‘I’ve known about the possibility for a few weeks, but it just became official last night, and I still can’t believe it!

Eight weeks in France you and I could spend, doing nothing but acting, eating, and stalking smoldering hot men... to yet know that she and I are even more perfect this some man, over the fact that we get each other, yet it’s fun to play with boys.’

I glance at her as I back out of her drive. ‘And Holt’s good with all that?’

She looks at me. ‘faster, you know the drill. What happens in here stays in here.’

Walking down the street hand in hand... as girlfriends.

My thoughts drifting to Haven and Naddalin, wondering how many more immortal rogues are still out there, just waiting to show up in my mind over and over just to terrorize me, no matter where I go.

Except when it does not, I feel the most fear- over knowing what next, by them.

‘Anyway, I am leaving soon, just after school gets out.’

I did not want to say yet this is our last time to be together... I am moving on to a new life.

And I have so much to prepare between now and then!

‘Seriously perfect.’ I smile, and the best of it all. ‘Really, Congrats, on making it see what you lost.’

‘That’s so cool. And well deserved I might add. I only wish I could go with you.’

And the moment I say it, I realize it is true, I am happy for her- yet, I feel like I am losing yet, another person in my life.

It would be so nice to escape all my problems and fly away from all the and that what we did, wings soaring, to angels in flight at midnight- in starlight.

Besides, I miss hanging with her, already.

Part: 5

The last few weeks when she and Haven (along with the rest of the school,) were under Naddalin’s spell were some of the loneliest days of my life.

Not having Naddalin beside me was more than I could bear, but not having the care of my two best friends nearly sent me over the edge.

Nevertheless, she and Haven do not evoke any of that, none of them do. Only Naddalin can access small bits and pieces, and what she recalls leaves her feeling awfully- guilty.

We stay in youth hostels, backpack around-how cool is this? Just the three of us, you know, you and Naddalin, Haven and I, and me and whoever...’

‘You and whoever... we meet along the way too?’ I glance at her. ‘What’s that about?’

'I'm a realist.' She shrugs.

'Oh, come on.' I roll my eyes. 'Since when?'

'Since last night when I found out I'm going back home and starting over.'

Part: 6

She giggles, running a hand through her brown hair.

'Listen, you all great and all, don't get me wrong.'

But I'm not fooling myself.

I am not pretending it's anything more than it is, am I? It's like we've got an expiration date, you know- and it's just my time- to try over- I'll see you again I promise? You guys are different, you're lifers.'

Lest go see a show with a full three acts with a definite beginning, middle, and end. It is not like with you and Naddalin.

'Lifers?' I peer at her, shaking my head as I stop at a traffic light. 'Sounds more like a prison term than a happily ever after- yet that is how girls like lives go.'

'You know what I mean don't you.'

She inspects her shape, turning her hot-pink nails the way and that. 'It's just that you guys are so in tune with each other, so connected.

And I mean that literally by the way since you're pretty much always going at it.'

Not anymore, I swallow hard, waking fast the second the light turns from not showing the hand, crossing the intersection with a loud screech of wheels stopping for us to go to the walkway, and leaving a thick trail of rubber behind them.

But even after I set still for a moment to think she's nowhere to be found. Besides I am just about to climb a wall in a panic, wondering where she could be, when she appears right beside me - and I blink- blink and blink once more, her hand in mine the whole time - I think I have blacked out a moment there. Refusing to slow until we run into a parking lot and I scan for Naddalin, who always seem to stare down danger more than us, in a second- she was next to me.

She asks, glancing at me and her and slings her backpack over her shoulder.

Naddalin nods.

‘A hundred and ten euros.’ Naddalin laughs. ‘Don’t forget, it was fully customized and loaded with options.’ there looking at scooters.’

‘We could rent one... no?’ Said Emmah.

‘Yet that lest one girl out- no nah.’ Said Naddalin.

She stares at her, eyes practically bugging out of her head, unable to understand how anyone could do such a thing-why anyone would do such a thing, as buy one.

Part: 7

(The next day)

‘Um, okay, so let me get the traditional one we could see a lot more - she said, ‘so-o you just woke up and decided-hurry, what the hell?’ ‘...And we have to look at the locals- and do as they do.’

‘We get you one- and in the same breath she said, Emmah and I well ride tandem.’

I think I’ll just dump my ridiculously expensive luxury scooter by the side of the road-WHERE JUST ANYONE CAN TAKE IT?’

Naddalin shrugs, saying ‘Pretty much’ - with an attitude. ‘You have a lock...’ she said ‘...and the people around here are not like back home.’

‘Because in case you have not noticed,’ Emmah says, practically hyperventilating now.

‘Some of us are a little scooter deprived’ said, Haven, I just said today I would get you one - relax- even if just renting one.’

‘Some of us were born to parents so cruel and unusual they’re forced to rely on the kindness of friends for the rest of their lives, thank you truly, and yes I would take the gift- thanks!’

‘Sorry,’ Naddalin shrugs, about that- yet you did get all that you wanted and more. ‘Guess- I hadn’t thought about that. Though if it makes you feel any better, it was all for a very good cause.’ (She gives double thumbs up! And a wide smile with her head turned to the one side.)

And when she looks at me, eyes meeting mine in that way that she has, along with the usual wave of warmth, I get the horrible feeling that ditching the scooters is just the start of her plans, to get to know me better, walking is taking she thought...

‘How’d you get to school?’ I ask, just as we reach the front gate where Haven is waiting, took the train as you, and walked and walked...

‘She rode the train.’ Haven glances between us, she recently dyed, her bangs falling into her face, to make herself look Earthlier. ‘I kid you not. I would not have believed it either, but I saw it with my own eyes, she was classed as a girl forever.

Watched her climb right off that big steamer train, with all the other freshmen, dorks, retards, and rejects who that were all like us, unlike Naddalin, have no other choice but to ride.’ She shakes her head, saying don’t say it like that- think it doesn’t say it even if true.

‘And I was so shocked by the sight of it, I blinked a bunch of times just to make sure it was really her. And then, when I still wasn’t convinced, I snapped a pic on my cell and sent it to Josh who confirmed it.’ She holds it up for us to see.

I glance at Naddalin, wondering what she could possibly- be up to, and that’s when I notice she’s ditched her usual cashmere sweater in place of a plain cotton tee, and how her designer jeans have been replaced with no-name plain pockets, her early look as she calls it.

Even the brown boots she’s nearly famous for have been swapped for girly rubber flip-flops.

And even though she does not need any of that dash and flash to look as incredibly beautiful as the first day we met the new low-key look just is not her- I thought.

Or at least not her- that I’m so-o used to.

I mean, while Naddalin is incontrovertibly smart, kind, loving, and generous- she’s also more than a tad colorful and otiose at times.

Always preoccupied with her clothes, her image in general- along with smarts.

Also, do not even try and pin her down on her exact date of birth, since for someone who chose to be immortal, she has a definite multi-layered hidden point of view about her age- to use she is always the same age of the young teen girl.

Nonetheless, even though I normally could not care less about the clothes she wears or her ride to school look either, when I look at her again, I get the horrible chink in my belly- an unrelenting push, demanding my notice.

A definite warning that she is merely the beginning. That the sudden transformation goes way deeper than some cost-cutting, altruistic, environmentally conscious agenda. No, she has something to do with last night. Something about being haunted by her karma. Like she's convinced herself that giving up her most prized possessions will somehow balance it all out.

'Shall we?' Her smiles, grasping my hand the second the bell rings, leading me away from Emmah and Haven who'll spend the next three phases of their time texting back and forth, trying to determine what's up with Naddalin.

I look at her, her gloved covering hand in mine as we head down the hall, whispering, 'What's going on? What really happened to your scooter?'

Three girls' hands and hand going down the sidewalk...

'I already told you.' she shrugs her hold body. 'I don't need it. It's an unnecessary sympathy, I no longer care to indulge.'

She giggles, looking at me smiling. But when I do not join in, she sinks more and shakes her head and says, 'Don't look so serious.'

It's not a big deal. When I realized it's not something I need, I drove it out to a depressed area and left it by the side of the road where someone can find it.'

I press my lips together and stare straight ahead, wishing I could climb inside her mind, and see the thoughts she keeps all to herself, get to the bottom of what she is really about.

Because- notwithstanding the way she looks at me, despite the dismissive shrug that she gives, nothing she's said makes the least bit of sense.

‘Well, that’s fine and all, I mean, if that’s what you need to do, then great, have fun.’ I shrug, fully convinced that it’s not at all great, though knowing better than to say it out loud.

‘But just how are you planning to get around now that you’ve ditched your ride? I mean, in case you haven’t noticed, this is not back home where you can run around freely, you can’t get anywhere without having a motorbike.’

She looks at me, amused by my surge of lighter, which is not exactly the reaction I had prearranged on. ‘What’s wrong with the bus? It’s free.’

I gape, shaking my heard, hardly believing my ears. And since when do you worry about cost, Missy.

‘As some shallow, money-oriented, self-absorbed, buyer-driven slob?’

‘No!’ I cry, shaking my heard and squeezing her hand.

Hoping to convince her even though, I actually did kind of mean it- not being mean yet truthful. Only not in a bad way like she thinks or you even.

At one time, she had my old boyfriend appreciates the finer things in life kind of thing, and less in my girlfriend’s now she is the version of what I am looking for in that kind of way, even if a girl.

‘I just-’ I squint, wishing I could be even half as eloquent as her, but still forging ahead when I say, ‘I guess I just don’t get it.’ I shrug. ‘And what’s up with the glove?’ I raise her leather-clad hand to where we can see.

‘Isn’t it obvious?’ She shakes her head and pulls me toward the door.

But I just stay put, refusing to budge. Nothing is obvious... Nothing makes sense anymore.

She pauses, hand on the knob, more than a little hurt when she says, ‘I thought it was a satisfactory solution for now. But perhaps you’d prefer I not touch you at all?’

Not at all!

That’s not what I intended!

Part: 8

(Back at the school)

Switching to telepathy the moment some classmates approach, reminding her how hard it's been avoiding any and all skin-on-skin contact for the last three days.

Fantasizing I had a cold when we both know we don't get sick, and other ridiculous avoidance techniques that left me feeling deeply ashamed. It's been torture, pure and simple. To have a girlfriend so gorgeous, so sexy, so amazingly awesome -and to not be able to touch her-is the worst kind of agony.

'I mean, I know we can't risk any accidental palm sweat exchange or anything like that, but still, don't you think it looks kind of odd?' I whisper, the second we're alone again.

'I don't care about that.' Her gaze open, sincere, and fixed right on mine. 'I don't care what other people think. I only care about you.'

She squeezes my fingers and opens the door with her mind, leading me right past Emmah and the other girls as we head for our desks.

And even though I have not seen her since Friday when she woke from Naddalin's spell, I'm sure her hatred for me hasn't dampened a bit.

But while I am fully braced for her usual ploy of dropping her bag in my path in an attempt to trip me -today she's too distracted by Naddalin's new look to play that tired old game.

Her unhurried gaze traveling the length of her, from her head to her toes, before starting all over again.

But just because she ignores me doesn't mean I can relax or trust that it's over. Because the truth is, it's never over with Emmah. She's made that abundantly clear. If anything, she's probably more charged up and vicious than ever -making the little reprieve nothing more than the calm before the storm.

'Ignore her,' Naddalin whispers, scooting her desk so close the edges practically overlap.

Besides even though I nod as though I am, the truth is - I can't. As much as I'd love to pretend, she's invisible - I can't do it.

She's in front of me now and I'm completely obsessed. Peering into her thoughts, wanting to see what, if anything, happened between them.

Since even though I know Naddalin's responsible for all of the flirting, and kissing, and cuddling, I had no choice but to watch.

Even though I know for a fact, that Naddalin was completely deprived of free will that doesn't change the fact that it happened- that Naddalin's lips pressed against her while her hands roamed her skin.

And even though I am pretty sure it didn't go any further than that, I'd still feel a heck of a lot better, if I could just get some evidence to back up my theory.

And despite how crazy, hurtful, and completely masochistic it is- I won't stop until her memory gives, and every last horrible, painful, excruciating detail is finally revealed.

I'm just about to delve deeper, travel to the very core of her brain, when Naddalin squeezes my hand and says, 'Ever, please. Stop torturing yourself.

I've already told you, there's nothing to see.' I swallow hard, gaze fixed on the back of her head, watching her gossip with Jewell and Mireille, barely listening as she adds, 'It didn't happen. It's not what you think.'

'I thought you couldn't remember?' I turn, overcome with shame the instant I see the pain in her eyes as she looks at me and shakes her head.

'Just trust me.' She sighs loudly. 'Or at least try to. Please?'

I inhale deeply, gazing at her, wishing I could, knowing I should.

'Utterly, Constantly. First, you could not get over the past hundred years of my dating, and now you're obsessed with last week?'

She knits her brow and leans closer, voice urgent, coaxing, as she adds, 'I know that your feelings are unbelievably hurt. Really, I do. But what's done is done. I can't go back; I can't change it. Naddalin's done the on purpose-you can't let her win.'

I swallow hard, knowing she's right.

I'm acting ridiculous, irrational, allowing myself to veer way off track.

Besides, Naddalin thinks, switching to telepathy now that our teacher, Mr. Robins, has arrived. You know it's meaningless. The only one I have ever loved is you. Isn't that enough?

She brings her gloved thumb to my temple, gazing into my eyes as she shows me our history of all things enchanted, my many incarnations as a seeing all the young servant girl in France, all daughter gorgeous girls reminded me of how lucky I really was... it was nice to be back... eyes wide, I gape, never having seen that particular life before, I think back, in class and wonder.

Part: 9

But she just smiles, gazes growing warmer as she shows me the highlights of that time, a quick clip of the moment we met at a gallery opening in Amsterdam-our first kiss just outside of the gallery that very same night. Presenting only the most- Dadaistic moments and sparing my death, which always, inevitably, comes before we can progress.

-And-

After watching all of those beautiful moments unfold, her unabashed love for me laid bare to see, I gaze into her eyes, answering her question when I think: Of course, it's enough. You have always been enough.

Then closing them in shame when I add: But am I enough for you?

Finally admitting the truth-my fear that she'll soon tire of the gloved hand-holding, the telepathic embrace, and seek out the real thing in a normal girl with safe DNA.

She then nods, gloved fingers cupping my chin as she gathers me into a mental embrace so warm, so safe, so comforting, all of my fears slip away.

Responding to the apology in my gaze as she leans forward, lips at my ear as she says, 'Good. Now that that is settled, about Naddalin...'

As I make my way toward history class, I'm wondering which will be worse-seeing Naddalin or Mr. Milley?

For the reason that while I haven't seen or spoken to either of them since last Friday when my whole world fell apart there's no doubt, I left them both on a pretty strange note.

My last contact with Milley consisting of me going all sentimental and not only confiding my psychic powers-which is something I never do-but also encouraging her to date my aunt Sabine-which is something I'm seriously beginning to regret.

And as awful as that was, it's only rivaled by my last moments with Naddalin when I aimed my fist at her navel chakra, determined not just to kill her but to obliterate her completely. And I would have too-except for the fact that I totally choked and she got away. And even though in retrospect that worked out for the best, I'm still so angry with her, who's to say I won't try again?

But the truth is, I know I won't try again. Besides not just because Naddalin spent the whole of English class telepathically lecturing me on how revenge is never the answer, how karma is the one and only true justice system, and plenty more blah- blah- blah- like that-but mostly because it's not right.

Despite the fact that Naddalin tricked me in the very worst way, leaving me absolutely no reason to ever trust her again-I still don't have the right to kill her over it.

It won't solve my problem. Will not change a thing. Even though she's awful, evil, and everything that adds up to bad, I still don't have the right to- do that... She slithers up beside me, all blond tousled hair, water's edge blue eyes, and shiny white teeth relaxed stretching her strong, tanned arm across the classroom door, barring me from getting inside.

And that's all it takes.

But I won't... even if... even if...

I promised Naddalin I could get myself safely to and from class without resorting to that.

'So, tell me, Ever, how was your weekend? Did you and Naddalin enjoy a nice reunion? Was her ability to survive you-by chance?'

I clench my fists by my sides, visualization how she'd look like nothing more than a heap of designer clothes and a pile of dust, despite the vow of nonaggression I took.

She then nods, gazes fixed on mine, lowering her voice to a soft whisper as she adds, 'Not to worry though, you won't be alone for long.'

Once the proper mourning period ends, I'll be happy to step in and fill up the void of her loss.'

I focus on my breath, keeping it slow and steady as I take in the strong, tan, muscular arm blocking my path, knowing all it would take is one well-placed karate chop to break it in half.

'Hell, even if you did manage to hold back and keep her alive, all you have to do is say the word, and I'm right by your side.' She grins, eyes grazing over me in the most intimate way.

'But no need to answer too quickly or commit yourself yet. Take as long as you like, For the reason that, Continually, I assure you, unlike Naddalin, I am a man who can wait. Besides, it's just a matter of time before you come looking for me anyway.'

'There's only one thing I want from you.'

I narrow my gaze until everything surrounding us blurs. 'And that's for you to leave me alone.' Herat rising to my cheeks as her gaze deepens to a leer.

"Farid not, darling." She laughs, looking me over and shaking her head. 'Trust me, you want way more than that. But not to worry, it's like I said, I'll wait for as long as it takes.

It's Naddalin I'm worried about. And you should worry too. From what I saw those last hundred years, she's an impatient man. Bit of a hedonist really. Didn't wait for much of anything so far as I could tell.'

I- Emmah, swallow hard and strive to keep calm, reminding myself not to fall for her bait. Naddalin has a knack for locating my weakness, my psychological strength so to speak, and pretty many lives to exploit it.

'Don't get me wrong, she's always been one to keep up entrances-wearing the armbands that are black and white stripes, appearing inconsolable at the wake-but trust me, Ever, the moss hadn't time to adhere to her shoe before she was back on the lurk.

Looking to drown her sorrows in whatever or should I say whomever-her could. And even though you prefer not to believe it, take it from someone who's been there all along. Naddalin waits for no one. And he certainly never waited for you.'

I take a deep breath, filling my head with words, music, mathematical equations stretching far beyond my skills, anything to drown out the words that are like prudently honed arrows aimed straight for my heart.

‘Yep.’

‘Saw it with my own eyes, I did!’

Smiling as she slips into a thick cockney pronunciation and backs out again. ‘Haven saw it too.

It like- broke her poor heart.

Willing to take her back no matter where she’d been, no questions asked.

Though, unlike me-and, I’m afraid, quite unlike you haven’t loved was unconditional. Which, let’s face it, is something you’d never do.’

‘That’s not true!’ I cry, voice hoarse, and very dry, as though it’s the first time, that I’ve used it all day- it was so bad.

‘I’ve had Naddalin since the moment we met-I-’ I stop, knowing I should not have started. It is useless to engage in the fight.

‘Sorry, darlin’, but you’re wrong. You have never- ever had Naddalin at all. A pure kiss here, a bit of sweaty hand-holding there-’ Her shrugs, gaze contemptuously.

‘Totally, Forever, you think some pathetic attempts at second base can satisfy an avaricious, self-absorbed, self-indulgent bloke like her? For four hundred years no less?’

Part: 10

I swallow hard, forcing a calm I don’t own when I say, ‘That’s a lot further than you ever got with Haven.’

‘No thanks to you,’ he spits, harsh gaze on mine. ‘But, it’s like I said, I’m a man who can wait.’

‘Naddalin is not.’

She shakes her head.

‘Shame you’re so-o strongminded to play hard to get. You and I are a lot more alike than you think. Both of us pining after someone we’ll never truly have-’

‘I could-’ I suck in my breath, not wanting her to know what only Naddalin and I know, that targeting an immortal’s weakest chakra, one of the body’s seven energy centers, is the quickest way to obliterate them.

‘I could kill you right now,’ I whisper, voice shaky, hands trembling, even though I promised Naddalin I wouldn’t do them, even though I know better.

‘Slug me in my sacral center, perhaps?’

‘You could what?’ She smiles at me, faces impending so close her breath chills my cheek.

I myself gape, wondering where she could’ve possibly erudite that.

Nonetheless, she just giggles, shaking her head saying, ‘Don’t forget, Liv, Naddalin was under my spell totally.

which means she told me everything, answered every question I am asked-including a good bit about you.’

She got me... Right where it counts. And don’t think she doesn’t know it.

I stand there, refusing to react, figured out to appear composed, unruffled-but it’s too late.

‘No worries, Liv. ‘I’m having far too much fun watching you squirm to attempt something like that.

The just a moment later- ‘I’ve no plans to go after you- she said.’

Besides, it won’t be long ‘til you’re squirming beneath me.

Or even on top of me. Either will do.’ she laughs, her eyes on mine, gazing at me in a way so knowing, so intimate, so deep, my stomach can’t help but have.

‘I’ll leave the details to you. But no matter how much you may want to; you won’t go after me either. Mostly because I do have what you want. The cure to the antidote for what you suffer from. I assure you of that, said Naddalin. You're just going to have to find a way to earn it, she also said. You're just going to have to show me how bad you want it.'

I gape, dry-mouthed and slack-jawed, remembering last Friday when Naddalin claimed the very same thing, to me saying that she likes owned me, and in a way, I am okay with that.

So-o distracted by Naddalin awakening- I forgot all about it 'til now- to have it type down as another chapter in the book of my life.

I- Emmah press my lips together as my gaze meets she's... awe- my hope rising for the first time in days.

knowing it's just a matter of time until the antidote is mine. I just need to find a way to get it from her.

'Oh, look at that.' She grins. 'Seems you forgot all about our date with destiny.'

Part: 11

She lifts her arm and I start to plow through, then she lowers it just as quickly, laughing as she locks me in place.

'Deep breaths,' her coos, lips grazing the edge of my ear, fingers sliding over my shoulder, leaving an icy cold wake in their path. 'No need to panic. No need to get all spaz-ed out o'er.

I'm sure that between us, we can come to some sort of mutual agreement, find a way to work something out.'

I narrow my gaze, disgusted by the price that she's set, words slow and cautious when I say, 'Nothing you could ever say or do could convince me to sleep with you!' just as Milley opens the door, allowing the entire class to overhear.

'Whoah' Naddalin smiles, hands raised in pretend admission of defeat as she backs into the room. 'Who said anything about bumping' ugliest, pal?'

She will throw her head back and laughs, allowing her creepy Ouroboric tattoo to flash in and out of view. 'I mean, not to disappoint you, darlin', but if it's a good shag I'm after, virgins about the last place I'd look!'

I storm toward my desk, cheeks burning, gaze fixed on the floor, spending the next forty minutes cringing as my classmates burst into hysterics every time Naddalin directs a disgusting wet smooch sound my way, despite Milley's numerous attempts to quiet them down.

-And-

The moment the bell rings, I make a run for the door. Frantic to get to Naddalin before Naddalin can convince Naddalin will push her too far and she'll snap - an act neither of us can afford now that Naddalin holds the key.

Nonetheless- just as I turn the knob I hear, 'Ever? Got a minute?' Her mocking laughter trailing behind as I turn toward Milley to see what she wants.

I pause, classmates piling up behind me, eager to get to the hall where they can follow Naddalin's lead and taunt me some more.

'I did it.' Her smiles, posture stiff, voice anxious, but still eager for me to know.

I shift uncomfortably, moving my bag from one shoulder to the next, wishing I'd taken the time to learn remote viewing so I could keep an eye on the lunch tables and ensure Naddalin sticks to the plan.

'I approached her- just like you told me to.' She nods.

I squint, returning my focus to her, gut-churning as I begin to understand. I saw her the morning on the day had passed. We even talked for a while, and- ' she shrugs, gazes drifting away, obviously still very taken by the event. I stand before her, breathless, knowing I have to stop it, whatever it takes before it gets out of hand.

'And you were right. She is nice to me. In fact, I probably shouldn't tell you but we're having dinner tonight.'

I nod, numb, shell-shocked, the words glancing at me as I peer into her energy and watch it unfold in her head:

She is standing in the line of the cafeteria massive hall with all its stain glass windows and gothic feel of a castle, minding her own business until Milley approaches - causing her to turn and grant her a smile that's- that's- shamefully flirtatious!

Except that there's no shame at all. Those two couldn't be happier. At least not on Sabine's part. Nor Milley for that matter. No, the shame is all mine.

That cannot happen. For too many reasons to mention the dinner can never take place. One of them being that she is not just my aunt, but my guardian, my caretaker, my only living relative in the whole entire world!

And another, possibly even more urgent reason, is the fact that thanks to my pathetic, maudlin, overly sentimental, ill-advised moment of weakness last Friday, Milley knows I'm psychic while she does not!

I've gone to great lengths to keep my secret from her, and there's no way I'm going to be out by my love-struck history teacher of enchanted.

But just as I'm about to tell her that she absolutely cannot, under any circumstances whatsoever, take my aunt to dinner and reveal any information I might've accidentally admitted during a weak moment when I was sure I'd never see her again, her clears her throat and says, 'Anyway, you should get to lunch before it's too late. I didn't mean to keep you the long, I just thought-'

'Oh, no, it's okay,' I say. 'I just-'

But she doesn't let me finish. Pushes me out the door as she waves me away, saying, 'Go on now. To find your friends. I just thought I should thank you, that's all.'

When I get to the lunch table, I sit beside Naddalin, relieved to find everything as normal as any other day. Naddalin's gloved hand squeezing my knee as I quickly scan the campus, looking for Naddalin as she thinks: she's gone.

Gone? I gape, hoping her means gone as in not around, as opposed to going as in a pile of dust.

But Naddalin just laughs, the smooth melodious sound reverberating from her head to mine. Not annihilated. I assure you. Just-absent-that's all. Drove off a few minutes ago with some guy I've never- ever seen before.

Did you talk...?

Did she try to invite you?

Naddalin shakes her head, her eyes peering into mine as I add: Good. Because we can't afford to go after her no matter what! She has the antidote! She admitted it! This means all we have to do now is find a way to- constantly. She frowns... You can't perhaps believe her!

This is what Naddalin does. She lies and manipulates everyone around her. You have to stay away from her- she's using you-her can't be trusted- I just shake my head.

Part: 12

I can feel it.

The time is different. And I need for Naddalin to feel it too. She's not lying-seriously-her said- Not even finishing the thought before Haven leans forward, eyes darting between us as she says, 'Okay, that's it. Just what the heck is going on here? Seriously, enough already.'

I turn, noticing how her friendly yellow aura beams in such sudden sharp contrast to the deliberate harshness of her all-black ensemble. Knowing she means no ill will though she's definitely-disturbed by us.

'Totally, completely, and entirely- It's like you guys have some kind of creepy way of communicating. Like twins speak or something. Only yours is silent. ...And eerier.'

I shrug and sit there with my lunch, going through the motions of unwrapping a sandwich, I've no plans to eat, figured out to hide just how alarmed her question has made me feel.

Knocking my knee against Naddalin's, telepathically urging her to step in and handle the since I've no idea what to say.

'Don't pretend it's not happening.' Her eyes narrow in suspicion. 'I've been watching you guys for a while now, and it's really starting to creep me out.'

'What's creeping you out?' She gazes up from her phone, but only for a moment before she's back to texting again.

'Those two.' She points a short, black painted nail with a chunk of pink frosting stuck to its tip. 'I swear, they get stranger every day.'

Naddalin nods, setting down her phone as she takes a moment to look us over. 'Yeah, I've been meaning to mention that. You guys are weird.' She laughs.

'Oh, and the whole glove thing?' She shakes her head and purses her lips. Showing her hand looking all cracked with fishes and red. 'So not working for you, I said jokingly.'

Haven frowns, annoyed by my joke when she's trying to be grave.

'Laugh all you want,' she says, gaze steady, unwavering. 'But something's up with those two. I may not know what, but I'll figure it out. I'll get to the bottom of it. You'll see - you'll see.'

-And-

I'm just about to speak when Naddalin shakes her head and swirls her red drink, leaning toward Haven as she says, 'Don't waste your time. It's not as sinister as you think.'

She then smiles, gazes fixed on me.

'We're practicing telepathy powers of mind-reading, that's all.'

'Attempting to read each other's minds in place of talking all the time.'

'So, we stop getting in trouble in class over it took over the face we take over each other's bodies and movements too at times, a real headache for the professors.'

She snorts, causing me to squeeze my sandwich so hard the mayonnaise oozes out and squirts grossly out the backside. Gaping at my significant other who is just arbitrarily decided to break our number one rule- do not tell anyone who we are or what we can do! This is something we worked hard to do, looking at the library in the restricted section of dark magic.

Calming only slightly when Haven rolls her eyes and says, 'Please. I'm not an idiot.'

'Wasn't implying you were.' Naddalin smiles. 'It's quite real, I assure you. Would you like to try?'

I freeze, body solid, unmoving, as though seeing a disaster on the side of the road-only the particular disaster is me.

‘Close your eyes and think of a number between one and ten.’ She nods, sincere gaze meeting her. ‘Focus on that number with all of you might. See it in your mind as clearly as you can, and silently repeat the sound of it repeatedly, got it?’

She shrugs, brows merging as though in deep concentration. Though Choosing to concentrate on blue instead of a random number like Naddalin said.

All it takes is a quick glance at her aura, morphing into a dark deceitful green, and a brief-peek- at her thoughts to see she’s only pretending.

She was holding her ground as she rubs her chin and shakes her head, saying, I glance at them, ‘I don’t seem to be getting anything. Are you sure you’re thinking of a number between one and ten?’ Knowing she’s baiting her, sure that her one in ten chances of hitting the right number works too much in her favor.

She nods, deepening her focus on a beautiful shade of pulsating blue.

‘Then we must have our wires a-crossed.’ She shrugs. ‘I’m not getting a number at all.’

‘Try me!’ Emmah abandons her phone, and her books and wand and leans toward Naddalin.

Eyes barely closed, thoughts hardly focused before Naddalin gasps, ‘You’re going to Haven?’

She shakes her head also.

Part: 13

(A week back)

‘Three... For your data, the number was three.’ She rolls her eyes and leers. ‘And everyone knows I’m going to France. So nice try...’

‘Everyone but me,’ Naddalin says, jaws clenched, face gone suddenly pale.

‘Well, I’m sure everyone has told you-you of all. You know, telepathically.’ she laughs, returning to her phone again, saying ‘sometimes old school kicking it is not the way to go anymore I prefer these,’ and she held up the phone, that links all the magical networks together.

I peer at Naddalin, wondering why he's so upset over the trip. I mean, yeah, so she used to live there, at one time when she was alive- after her boyfriend passed away in an industrial accident or something like that- she was vague about did not really want to say... all that much, she said she was in her late 20's. she said something odd on her tombstone and it read- (I have not stuck with me all my whole life, so there-) and I think I got what it meant. Yet I think it said, 'I will live on forever...' or something like that, or 'I don't need you!' - 'Or even suck on that!' Like- I thought that's what it may have said- but- but Nah- it can't be- yet maybe?

...After all it is a cracked heart-shaped stone...

Part: 14

But- but that was hundreds of years ago, and the stone is crumbling and reads the rest has disintegrated to dust into just the wind!

I squeeze her hand, urging her to look at me, but she just stares at Haven with that same stricken look on her face.

~*~

'Nice try with the whole telepathy angle,' Haven says, swiping her finger across the top of her cupcake until it's coated with strawberry frosting, and she was licking her finger and kissing the end of it too.

'But I'm afraid you're going to have to try a little harder than that. All you have managed to prove is that you guys are even weirder than I thought. But no worries, I'll get to the bottom of it. I'll expose your dirty little secret before long.'

I hold back a nervous laugh, hoping she's just messing around, then peering into her mind only to see that she's serious.

'When are you leaving?' Naddalin asks.

But only to appear conversational, has already uncovered the answer in her head.

'Soon, but not soon enough,' she thought, eyes lighting up, as she stared the look at her. 'Let the countdown begin!'

Naddalin nods, gaze unstiffening as she says, 'You'll love this.

Everyone loves it, France is a lovely, delightful place.'

'You've been...?'

...?...?

I and Haven both ask at the same time.

Naddalin nods- 'I's have,' gaze far away in the back of her on the mind and thought looking somewhat- blank to us looking at her color fading from her eyes. 'I lived there once a long time ago.'

'That's what we gathered...' they both said it unanimously!

Haven glances between us, eyes narrowed again when she says, 'Jaylynn and Naddalin lived there too, around the same time, she looks at her one eyelid squinting.'

Naddalin shrugs, expression noncommittal, as though the connection means nothing to her.

'Well, don't you think that's a little strange? All of you living there at the same time, in the same place, then all of you ending up here-within months of each other?' She leans toward her, abandoning her cupcake and letting it drop in search of some answers.

She just sips her blue drink and lifts her shoulders again, as though it's hardly worth going into, in the past she thought, to her, in through conversation.

But Naddalin's solid, refusing to cave or do anything that might give it away.

'Is there anything I should see while I'm there?' Haven asks, more to break the tension than anything else. 'Anything that shouldn't be missed?'

Naddalin squints, pretending to think, even though the answer comes quickly.

~*~

'All of France is worth seeing... yes is it not?'

But you should definitely check out the Ponte Vecchio, which is the first bridge to cross the Arno River and the only one left standing after the war- were ever inch of Frances was cover in their blood.

Oh, and we must visit the Galleria dell' Accademia which houses Michelangelo's David among other important works, and perhaps the- 'Definitely hitting David,' Emmah says wanting this so badly.

'We... yes, we're taking you to a girl- surprise!'

'We did not want to tell you.'

'As well as the bridge, and the famous Il Duomo, and all the other items that make every travel guide top ten lists, but I am more absorbed in the smaller, off- the- beaten path kind of places- you know, where all the cool Florentines go.

Naddalin was raving about the one place, I forget the name, but it's supposed to house some incomprehensible revitalization artifacts and paintings and stuff few people know about.

Did you get anything like that? Or even clubs, shopping, that kind of thing?'

Naddalin looks at her, gaze so intense it sends a chill down my spine.

'Nothing offhand,' she says, trying to soften the look through her voice betrays a definite edge.

'Though any place that claims to house great art but isn't in the guidebook is probably a fake. The antiquities market is loaded with forgeries.

You shouldn't waste your time on that when there are so many other, far more interesting things to see.'

Haven shrugs, bored by the conversation and already back to texting again. 'Whatever,' she mumbles, thumbs tapping quickly. 'No worries. Naddalin said she'd make me a list.'

(Back home)

'I'm amazed by the progress you've made- Dariez.' Naddalin smiles. 'You learned all on your own?'

She nods, and gazing around the small, empty room, pleased with myself for the first time in weeks, when I walked into the tiny house.

The moment Naddalin mentioned she wanted to rid the place of all the overly slippery furniture, that was cheap she had filled it with during Naddalin's reign of fear, I was on it, to make this place fit for to young lady's- all cute and such.

Taking aim at each piece with such unchecked enthusiasm that-well-I'm not even sure where it went. All I know is it's no longer there I want to be- and she points at the old home she was half-grown in- and you were right.

'Looks like you're no longer in need of my lessons. She shakes her head, saying you're wringing I need you more now than ever.'

'Don't be so sure.' I said back quickly.

I turn, smiling as I push her dark wavy hair off her face with my newly gloved hand, hoping we'll get that cure from Naddalin soon, or at least come up with a less hokey alternative. Dariez a good kid... you'll do fine.

'I have no idea where all this stuff even went-not to mentioned, how I can't possibly fill up space, even more, when I have no clue where I am stashing all the stuff you used to have and me before getting all this.'

Reaching for her hand a second too late, and frowning as she walks over to the window - I feel as if I have lost my sister.

'The furniture'-she gazes out at her manicured lawn, voice low and deep-'is right back where it started, what seemed like forever ago, yet was only about a year.

'I don't like change-' she said- out of breath.

Returned to its original state of pure vibrating energy with the potential to become anything at all. She looks in the glass ball- and see her new life coming.

And as for the rest-' She shrugs, the strong lines of her shoulders rising ever so slightly before settling again. 'Well, it hardly matters anymore, does it? I've no need of it now.'

I stare at her back, taking in her lean form, her casual stance. Doubting how she could be so - o blasé in reclaiming the precious artifacts of her past... -The pictures of her in the plain pink dresses back in the day, the astride a rearing white stallion-not to mention all the other amazing relics dating back centuries.

‘Nonetheless, those objects are priceless, see her life now within mine forever! You have to get them, back didn’t you? They can never be replaced, yet you can with new lives, can’t you?’

~*~

‘Ever so, relax. It’s just stuff.’ Her voice firm, resigned, as she turns toward me again. ‘None of it has any real meaning. The only thing that means anything is you.’

And even though the sentiment is undeniably sweet and heartfelt, it does not affect me in the way that it should.

The only thing she seems to care about these days is apologizing for her karma and me. ‘But that’s where you’re wrong. It’s not just stuff- too.’

Oh, I sorry, I felt so bad hugging her from the one side.

And while I’m perfectly fine with those inhabiting the number one and two spots on her list, the problem is the rest of the page is blank.

I move toward her, voice wiles, wheedling, hoping to reach her and make her listen the time.

And just like that, my mind is ripped into another time and place...

(Back into a week into the trip)

It’s history for God’s sake, we need to get books and have them signed, it was said this man write 30 books in one year, yet I am not sure if he was still alive! I so he would be over 90 now, you can’t just shrug it off as though it’s nothing more than a box of old tired books, of tired old objects you donate to Goodwill, I thought they were worth remembering- like the one about a would lose without color or feeling, or the one about a girl that was fight for her place, as an equal- the youngest over her class.’

Look at this thing the covers are all tattered, and the pages small.

She then looks at me, gazes softening as she trails the tip of her gloved finger from my temple to my chin. 'I thought you hated my 'dusty old room' as you once called it.'

'People change, and so did I.' I shrug, thank about that asking why?

Wishing, not for the first time, that she'd change back to the Naddalin, I knew before she was her-

'And speaking of change, why are you so freaked by my's trip to France?'

Noting the way, her hardens at the mere mention of the word.

'Is it because of the whole Haven and Nevaeh- become Naddalin thing of remembering the past- and not wanting to? The connection you don't want her to know about?'

Yet, were there the good times- I don't know...? She thought...

She looks at me for a moment, lips parting, about to speak, then she turns away and mumbles insanely, 'I'm hardly what you'd call freaked.'

'You know what...?'

You're absolutely right.

For a normal person, that was hardly what you'd call freaked.

But for the girl who's always the coolest, calmest one in the room-all it takes is the slight narrowing of your eyes and the most minute clenching of your jaw to know you're upset.'

She sighs, eyes searching mine as she moves toward me again. 'You saw what happened in France.' She then squints. 'Despite all its virtues, it's also a place of unbearable memories, ones I'd rather not explore.'

I swallow hard shaking looking into her past- like a faded movie, remembering the images with her, I viewed in looking deep into her memories, lost in her mind, 'like a penny on the floor... worthless- my depression a sickness that keeps me, spring-like atop- my mind turning, my curse- or just my illusion? Until my death, until we part for better or for worse - locked in your heart-shaped box forever, I thought or was thinking to note but decillions, what little time we spent lost in my mind forever- whatever never mind.' -Naddalin is hiding in a small dark cupboard, watching as her parent was murdered, seeing it along with me, she and I shared recalling the moment, back when she was in her playpen.

By thugs' intent on obtaining the elixir-then later, abused as a ward of the church until the Black Plague swept through France and her encouraged Haven and the rest of the orphans to drink the immortal juice, hoping only to heal and having no idea it would grant eternal life-and I can't help but feel like the world's worst girlfriend for bringing it up.

'I prefer to focus on the present.' She nods, gesturing around the large empty room. 'And right now, I really need your help furnishing the space. I am starting to really like a nice, clean, contemporary look when shopping for home decor.

-And-

Though- I was thinking of leaving it more than empty, to really emphasize the size of the rooms- that is well very tiny after all, I suppose we should try-' I gasp, practically choking on the word as my voice raises several octaves at the end, think that this girl is now a woman!

'I'm selling the house- in a year and moving on with my life.' She shrugs. 'I thought you would understand?'

But- you can your one of us now...

I gaze around, longing for that ancient velvet sofa with the lumpy cushions, knowing it would give the perfect landing for when my body with I am so tired I collapse, and my head quietly explodes, for all the chatter- that it has to hear and there are no ways of to turn them off- they just keep babbling in my mind. I need to have a real-life with real- real- things you no- like all thing that is really- REAL, like real friends too, not just the fantasy world that you refuse to see that is not a reality.

'Don't look so upset. Nothing's changed It's just a house. A seriously under the oversized house, I need to move on from. And just like that she was gone and said okay if that is what you want Dariez... and Naddalin vanished right before her eyes. Nonetheless, I just stand there instead, determined to keep it together. Gazing at my ridiculously gorgeous girlfriend of the last years as though it's the first time we've met. Besides, I have needed all the space anyway, I have a new boyfriend, as you may or may not know me and Stan are going to have a baby. they're never going to be enough rooms or room for three.'

‘And what exactly are you planning to replace it with, then? A tent?’

‘I just thought I’d move in with him, that’s all.’ Her gaze is pleading, begging me to understand, I did yet I thought she was throwing her new life away that I got for her, ‘Nothing sinister, Ever- yet a way of what could be power- and taking my place someday- ever one said the next. ‘Nothing meant to hurt you, but I don’t want it’

I did not say- yet I thought you're stuck with regardless, your hexed, and at that point, I was out of her mind- for good- yet them- them- they were in it forever, and I was not going to stop it now.

I was studying her closely, wondering what is gotten into her, wanting to just say it was all over, and where they will end up without her- yet she said to me- he’s looking for innocents and he has found it- so-o go-o.

‘I mean, Naddalin, if you’re seriously looking for a fight, I don’t want it, why not just manifest something in your crazy head about how wrong I am and can go on?’

I flick my gaze over her, moving from her glorious heard of longish dark glossy hair to her perfect rubber flip-flop-shod feet, remembering how, not so long ago, I longed to be normal again, just like everyone else. But now that I’m getting used to my powers, I don’t see the point.

‘What’s this really about- I thought?’ I squint, feeling more than a little betrayed.’

‘I mean, you’re the one who got me here.’ Oh, I was- mortified.

You’re the one who made me the- way- I am.

Right- and now that I’m finally adjusted, you decide to jump ship?

‘Seriously! Why are you doing?’

But instead of answering, she just closes her eyes.

Projecting an image of the two of us laughing and happy, frolicking on a beautiful, black-sand beach- remember all the good times. Saying this is it... thanks for the memories. But I just shake my head and cross my arms tighter, refusing to play until my questions are answered, about her and them...

She sighs and stares out the window of the tiny home for the last time looking back me with the sun shining brightly, then turning toward me when she says, 'I've already told you, my only recourse, my only way out of the hell making- as I should have, it all karma- and I want what I lost.

And the only way to do that is to relinquish the manifesting, the high life, the big-spending, and all the other extravagances- I've indulged myself in for the last hundred years, so I can live the life of an ordinary citizen, too. I understand, Honest, hardworking, and humble, with the same day-to-day struggles as anyone else- if not more- go for it.'

Intermission-

Your times are limited, so don't be it... living someone else's life, that is what my tombstone said along with 1991 to 2094, I have seen a century- yet stayed the age of 14, all those days after my own ending.

~Emmah~

Part: 15

Portion: 1

I stare at her, replaying her words in my head, hardly believing what I just heard. 'And how exactly are you planning to do that?' I squint. 'Seriously. In your one century of living, have you ever even held a real job?'

But even though I'm dead sober and not at all joking, she throws her head back and laughs like I was.

Eventually calming down enough to say, 'You reliably think no one will hire me?'

'I could have had a job if I wanted to but, back home how - and when could I have - you're working for a town that thinks your less then they, in every way you could think of, the kids you work with don't like you and their dad that is now your boss thinks you're a waste of life; so get a job - yah-right.'

She shakes her head and laughs even harder. 'Forever, please. Don't you think I've been around long enough to have improved a few skills?'

~*~

I start to respond, wanting to explain that while it's truly remarkable to watch her paint, better than Picasso with one hand while at the same time outdoing Van Gogh with the other by cutting... I really don't think that'll help her land that coveted barista position at the Starbucks on the corner, yet something about girls well never change, just like every girl has that one boy that is her bitch, and I get that I had mine and she now has hers... so-o!

Nonetheless, before I can say it, she's standing beside me, moving with such speed and grace all I can manage is, 'Well, for someone who's turned her back on her gifts, you still move awfully fast, for a girl that doesn't want to see any more of her past even if it's showing in the painting.'

Aware of that warm wonderful tingle swarming - turning and swimming like within my skin as she slips her arms around my waist and pulls me close to her chest, carefully circumventing skin-on-skin contact, yet it could not be helped.

-And-

'Besides what about telepathy?'

I, myself murmur.

Thinking- Your mind spends about 70% of its time replaying memories and creating scenarios of perfect moments. Waiting- like a painting- is linked to depression, at times- and shows the picture within. Time spent waiting for something that may never happen is mentally painful. The best feeling in the world is knowing that you actually mean something to someone. This can literally add years to your life. Sometimes- good people make bad choices. It doesn't mean they are bad people; it means they're human. Yet we're not human.

Then the talking started up-

'Are you planning to ditch that too- for your B*TCH?'

So, overcome by her juxtaposition, I can barely eke out the words.

'I've no plans to ditch anything that brings me closer to you,' she says, gaze on mine, steady and still.

'As for the rest-' SHE- shrugs, glancing around the large empty space before finding me again. And 'Tell me, what matters more, NEVER- Ever? The size of my house or the size of my heart?'

I bite my lip and advert my gaze, the truth of her words left me feeling small and ashamed-like first time sex- when your 13, and can now consent.

I swallow hard, focusing on anything but her, thinking back on my life and all the flashbacks come.

It's not that I care about her past, I mean, if I want those things then fine, I'll just clear them myself. An instant mood change from happy to sad usually indicates that you're missing someone, I have noticed...

Even so then again even though they aren't important- THERE LIKE- JUST- moments lost in time, if I'm going, to be honest, then I have to admit they were part of the preliminary attraction-adding to her sleek, shiny, mysterious persona, that lured me in right away. Then when I finally am held at her again, standing before me, stripped bare of all the usual dazzle and flash, honed down to the very essence of who SHE really is, I realize she's still the same, warm, wonderful girl that she's been all along.

Which just proves her point even more. None of that other stuff really matters. None of it has anything to do with her soul at all.

I smile, suddenly remembering the one place where we can be together-safe and secure and protected from harm.

Reaching for her gloved hand as I grasp it in mine, saying, 'Come on, I want to show you something,' and pulling her along.

At first, I was concerned she'd refuse to visit a place that not only requires a certain amount of magic for entry, but that is nothing but magic once you arrive.

Formerly just after landing in that vast sweet-smelling field, she wipes the BUTT of her jeans and offers her hand, gazing all around as SHE says, 'Wow, I don't think I was ever able to make the portal so-o quickly.'

'Please, you're the one who taught me.'

I smile, gazing at the meadow of pulsating flowers and shivering trees, noting how everything here is reduced to its absolute purest form of beauty and energy.

I tilt my head back, closing my eyes against the warm hazy glow, that she makes with me within the shimmering mist of the day.

Remembering the last time, I was here, how I danced with a manifest Naddalin in the very same field, delaying the moment when I'd have to let go.

~*~

'So, you're okay with being here?' I ask, unsure just how far the ban on magic outspreads. 'You're not mad?' I WANT TO MAKE SURE THAT SHE IS comfortable!

She then shakes her head and takes my hand.

'I never grow tired of seeing THIS world WITH ITS UNWORLDLY COLORS AND CREATURES.'

It's a display of loveliness and potential in its unadulterated form.'

We make our way through the pasture, sustained by the grass just under our feet as our fingers graze the tops of golden wild-flowers, that bend and sway alongside us.

Knowing anything is possible in the wonderful place, anything at all, including just maybe -us.

'I missed them... everything...'

She leers, gazing all around...

‘Not that I reminisce about the last few weeks without it, even still, it seems like such a long time since we were last here - just like this.’

‘It felt strange coming without you,’ I say, leading her toward a beautiful Balinese-style bathhouse balanced beside the blue-green tinted stream.

‘Though I did discover a whole other side I can’t wait to show you. Only later - not now.’

I push the gossamer pink fabric aside and plop onto the soft white cushions, smiling as Naddalin lands right beside me, the two of us lying side by side, gazing up at the decoratively carved coconut beams.

Heads together, the soles of our feet just a few inches shy - the results of my elixir-fueled growth spurt.

‘What is the...?’

She turns onto her side...

And then I draw the curtains closer with my mind to me and her. Keen to shut out all that environs she and I, so-o we can enjoy our own private space.

‘I saw one on the cover of a travel magazine featuring some exotic resort, and I liked it so much I thought I would appear one. You know, so we could hang out-and-stuff.’

I prevent my gaze, heart racing, face blushing, knowing I’m quite possibly the most pathetic seductress she’s met in her one hundred years.

Nonetheless, she just giggles, pulling me so close we just nearly touch.

Separated only by the slimmest veil of shimmering energy, a pulsating screen that hovers between us - allowing us to be near without harming each other.

I close my eyes, surrendering to the wave of warmth and tingle as our bodies come together. Two hearts pumping in perfect unison, reaching, and retreating, expanding and retracting, the tempo perfectly synchronized as though beating as one.

Everything about it feels so good, so natural, so right, I snuggle closer. Nestling my face in the hollow where her shoulder meets her neck, longing to taste her sweet skin and inhale her warm perfumed scent. A

A low moan absconding from deep in her throat as I close my eyes and press into her hips, my tongue tipped toward her skin, only to have her spring from my reach so fast I'm met with a mouthful of the cushion.

I scrambled upright, seeing her move so quickly she's reduced to a blur. Stopping only when she's safely ensconced on the other side of the curtain, eyes blazing, body trembling, as I beg her to tell me what occurred.

I move near her, wanting to aid.

But then again, just as I get close, she moves, yet, again handheld before her, observation cautioning me away.

'Don't touch me,' SHE says. 'Please, stay right where you are. Don't come any closer.'

'But why?'

My voice is hoarse, uneven, hands trembling by my side as if I was feeling my old, ways and old life- AS it was when I was getting older- not a young girl any longer.

'Did I do something where I was mistaken in doing so?'

I just thought- well- since we're here- and since nothing bad can happen- I just thought it would be okay- if we maybe tried to- re-kindle in some kind of reconciliations.'

'Never- Ever, it's not that it was's-' she shakes her head, her eyes darker than I've ever seen them- for being sky blue.

So dark the irises are indistinguishable from the pupils, blending right in. 'And who says nothing bad can happen here?' Her tone so edgy, gaze so harsh, it's clear she's traveled a very long way from her usual state of infallible calm.

I swallow hard and stare at the ground, feeling foolish, ridiculous to think I was so desperate to be with my girlfriend, I risked taking her life- if I do- if they know- if they...

-And-

'I guess I just assumed...'

'I'm sorry.'

My voice fades, knowing very well what happens when one assumes. I don't know what to say.' Not only do you make an ass out of you and me, but in the case, that very same you just might end up dead for the final time with no more lives given to you.

'I-I guess that- I didn't think it through and then I shake my head, knowing it's completely insufficient considering the life-and-death circumstances we're in.

I mean, if we're not safe here, then where? I pull my shoulders in, wrapping my arms around my waist, trying to make myself smaller, so small I'll disappear from her sight.

And yet, I can't help but wonder precisely what kind of bad thing could happen in a place where magic comes easily, and wounds are healed promptly.

Naddalin looks at me, answering the thought in my head when she says, 'School contains the possibility of all things. So far, we've only seen the light, but who's to say there's not a dark side? Maybe it's not at all what we think.'

I gaze at her, remembering when I first met Neville and Rayne and how they said something similar. Watching as she manifests a beautifully carved wood bench, then motions for me to sit.

'Come,' she nods, urging me toward her as I take a seat at the far end, not wanting to get too close and risk setting her off again.

'There's something you need to see something you need to understand. So please just close your eyes and clear your mind of any random thoughts and clutter as best you can. Keeping yourself open and receptive to any visions I send. Can you do that?'

I nod...

My eyes shut tight...

I was doing my best to sweep my mind of such thoughts as- What is going on I thought, and thought more pondering? Is she mad at me- or just mad?

Unquestionably, she's mad at me - I know it!

How could I be so stupid? But how mad is she beyond? Is it possible to change her mind and start over again? My usual paranoid play-list set on permanent repeat.

But even after clearing it out and waiting for what feels like a reasonable amount of time, all I have gotten so far is a heavy void of dense solid black.

'I don't get it,' I say, opening one eye, and peeking at her.

Nonetheless, she just shakes her head, eyes shut tight, brows merged in concentration, as she endures to focus with all her might.

'Listen,' she says then and there.

'And look deep down inside.'

'Just close your eyes and obtain.'

I take a deep breath and try again, but still, all I get is a foreboding silence and the feeling of black empty space.

'Um, I'm really sorry,' I aware, not wanting to upset her but sure that I am missing the point.

'I'm not getting much of anything other than silence and darkness.'

'Faithfully,' she whispers, unfazed by my words. 'Now please, take hold of my hand and go deeper, delve past the surface using all your senses, then tell me what you see.'

I take a deep breath and do as she asks me to do, reaching for her hand, and pushing past the solid wall of the dark.

...But all- I get is more of the same.

Pending-

While waiting for-

I'm sucked into a black hole, limbs flailing, unable to stop or slow down. Free-falling into the darkness, my horrible high-pitched scream the only sound.

And just as I'm sure that the fall has no end-it stops. The Shriek... The fall... It... all.

Everything...

Leaving me to hang there, released, and suspended. Completely alone in the solitary place with no beginning or end.

Lost in the dark and dismal abyss with no trace of light coming in. Abandoned in the infinite void, a lost and lonely world of permanent midnight. The horrifying comprehension slowly dawning on me- this is where I live now.

Hell, with no escape...!

-Then-

I try to run, scream, cry for help but it's no use.

I'm frozen, paralyzed, unable to speak-completely alone for all of infinity.

Expressly held apart from everything I know and love-cut off from everything that exists.

Knowing I've no choice but to surrender as my mind goes blank and my body limp.

There's no use in fighting when no one can save me.

I stay like that, solitary, eternal, a shadowy awareness creeping upon me, tugging from a place just outside of my reach-

'Till-

Pending-

I am tugged out of that hell and into Naddalin's arms, relieved to see her beautiful, anxious face hovering over me.

'I'm so sorry I thought I'd lost you-I thought you'd never come back!' She cries, holding me tight, her voice like a sob in my ear.

I cling to her, body shaking, her heart racing, clothes drenched with sweat. Never have felt so isolated before-so disconnected from everything. From every-living-thing. Hugging her tighter, unwilling to let go, my mind connecting with her, asking why she chose to put me through that.

She pulls away, cupping my face in her hands as her eyes search mine. 'I'm sorry. I was not trying to punish you, or harm you in any way. I only wanted to show you something, something you needed to experience firsthand to understand.'

I nod, not trusting my voice. Still shaken by an experience so awful it felt like the death of my soul.

'My God!' Her eyes widen. 'That's it! That is exactly what it is. The soul ceases to exist!'

'I don't understand,' I say, voice hoarse, shaky. 'What was that horrible place?'

She looks away, fingers squeezing mine when she says, 'The future, the eternal abyss I'd thought was meant only for me that I'd hoped was meant only for me...' She closes her eyes and shakes her head. 'But now I know better. Now I know that if you are not careful, extremely careful-you'll go there too.'

I look at her, starting to speak, but she cuts me off before I can get to the words. 'The past few days I've been getting these flashes- glimpses, really- of various moments from my past-both distant and near.' She looks at me, carefully searching my face.

'But the moment we came here-' Her gestures around. 'It started trickling back, slowly at first until it all came surging forth, including the moments I was under Naddalin's control.'

I also relived my death. Those few brief moments after you broke through the circle before you had me drink the antidote, as you know, I was dying. I watched my entire life flash before me, a hundred years of unchecked vanity, narcissism, selfishness, and greed.

Like an endless reel of all my actions, every misdeed that I had done-accompanied by the impact I had on the mental and physical effect of my mistreatment of others.

And though there were a few decent acts here and there, the majority, well, it amounted to centuries of me focusing on nothing but my own self-interest, giving very little thought to anything or anyone else. Focusing solely on the physical world to the detriment of my soul. Leaving me no doubt I was right all along, my karmas to blame for what we're going through now.'

She shakes her head and meets my gaze with such unflinching honesty- I want to reach out and touch her, hold her, tell her it will all be okay. But instead, I stay put, sensing there is more and it is about to get worse.

'Then, now of my death, instead of coming here-' Her voice cracks but she forces herself to continue. 'I-I went to a place the exact opposite of them.

A place so dark and cold it is more like a home than I wanted it to be or thought it could be. Experiencing the same thing you just did. Solitary, suspended, alone-left to stay that way for all of eternity.' She looks at me, willing me to understand. 'It was exactly like you felt. It was as though I was isolated, soulless-with no connection to anything or anyone else.'

I stare into her eyes, an ominous chill blanketing my skin, never having seen her so tired, so jaded, so-regretful-before.

'And now I understand the very thing that's escaped me all these years-'

I pull my knees to my chest, shielding myself from whatever comes next.

'Only our physical bodies are immortal. Our souls are most certainly not.'

I avert my gaze, unable to look at her, unable to breathe.

'This is the future you're facing. The one I've granted you, if, God forbid, anything should happen, that is.'

My fingers instinctively fly to my throat, remembering what Naddalin said about my compromised chakra, my lack of discernment and weakness, wondering if there is some way to guard it. 'But how can you be sure?' I look at her as though caught in a dream, some horrible nightmare with no way to escape.

'I mean, there's a good chance you're wrong since it happened so fast. So that was just a temporary state. You know, as I brought you back to life so fast you didn't have time to make the trip here.'

She shakes her head, her gaze meeting mine when she says, 'Tell me, Ever, what did you see when you died? How did you spend those few moments between the time when your soul left your body and I returned you to life?'

I swallow hard and look away, gazing at the trees, the flowers, the crystal-clear stream flowing nearby-remembering that day I found myself in the very same field.

So, taken by its heady fragrance, its shimmering mist, the all-encompassing feel of unconditional love, I was tempted to linger forever, never wanting to leave.

'The reason you didn't see the abyss is that you were still mortal. You had died a mortal's death. Nevertheless, the moment I had you drink from the elixir, granting you infinite life, everything changed. Instead of eternity in School or the place beyond the bridge-the Shadowland became your fate.'

She shakes her head and looks away, so deeply mired in her private world of regret I am afraid I will never reach her again. But just as quickly her eyes meet mine when she says, 'We can live an eternity in the earth plane, you and I together. But if something should happen, if one of us should die-' she shakes her head. 'The abyss is where we'll go, and we'll never see each other again.'

I start to speak, desperate to refute it, tell her here's wrong, but I can't. It is of no use. All I must do is look into her eyes to see the truth.

'And as much as I believe in the powerful heralding magic of the place-just look at the way it heralded my memory-' she shrugs and shakes her head.

'I can't afford to give in, no matter how safe my desire for you may seem. It is too risky. Besides we've no impervious it will be any different here than on the earth plane. It is a gamble I cannot afford to take. Not when I need to do everything I can to keep you safe.'

'Keep me innocuous?' I gape hard. 'You're the one who needs saving! It is my fault all the happened in the first place! If I had not-'

'Always, please,' She says, voice harsh, willing me to listen.

‘You’re in no way to blame. When I think about the way I’ve lived-the things I’ve done-’ She shakes her head. ‘I deserve nothing better, and if there was any inquiry that my karma was to blame, well, I think it ends here.’

I have spent the better part of hundred years devoting myself to physical pleasure and neglecting my soul-and the is the result-the wake-up call, and inopportunely, I have dragged you along.

So-o makes no mistake, my concern is for you and you only. You are my only priority. My life is only important in that- I stay well long enough to protect you from Naddalin and whoever else she might hurt. And that means we can never be together. Never. It’s a risk we can’t take.’

I turn toward the stream, a thousand thoughts storming my brain. Besides even though I heard everything she just said, even though I qualified the gorge for myself, I still would not change what I am.

‘And the other orphans?’

I whispered, remembering how I counted seven, including Naddalin at one point. ‘What happened to them? Do you know if they turned evil like Naddalin and Haven?’

Naddalin shrugs, rising from the bench and pacing before me. ‘I always assumed they were too old and feeble by now to ever pose a real threat.’

That is what happens after the first one hundred years- you age- some yet slower than the rest. And the only way to reverse the process is to drink the tonic again if you want an end.

My guess is that Haven amassed it while we were dating and slipped it to Naddalin who eventually learned how to make her own and then passed it to the other.’ She then shakes her head more.

‘So that’s where Haven is now,’ I whimper, overcome with remorse when I realize the truth. No matter how evil she was, she did not deserve that. Nobody does. ‘I sent her here -and-now she’s-’ I shake my head, unable to finish.

‘It wasn’t you who did it, it was me.’

She fills the space beside me, sitting so close there is only a sliver of energy pulsating between us.

‘The moment I made her an immortal, I sealed her fate.’

I was not sure she wanted it or not, yet it was for the best I thought and my selfishness.

‘Just like I did yours.’

I swallow hard, reassured by her warmth along with her wanting to assure me that - I am truly not responsible for sending my number-one enemy through all my lives straight into that hell.

‘I’m so sorry,’ she whispers, gazes full of remorse.

‘I’m sorry- I complicated you in any of them. I should have left you alone should have walked a long time ago. You would’ve been so much better off if you’d never met me -’

I shake my head, unwilling to even visit that place, it is far too late for looking back or second-guessing. ‘But if we’re destined to be together-then maybe she is our fate.’ Knowing her stays unconvinced the second I read her countenance.

‘Or maybe I’ve forced something that was never meant to be.’ She frowns and looks down. ‘Did you ever think of that?’

I look away, taking in the surrounding beauty, knowing words alone can never- ever change any of them, the only action can help; and fortunate for us, I know just where to begin.

I stand, pulling her up alongside me as I say, ‘Come on. We don’t need Naddalin-don’t need anyone-I to know just the place!’

We head for the Countless Halls of Learning...

Stopping just shy of its steep marble steps as I peer at her, wondering (eager!) her can see what I see-the ever-changing façade that is needed for entry.

‘So, you really did find it,’ she says, voice tinged with awe as we watch the revolving collection of the most sacred and beautiful places on Earth.

The Great Pyramids of Giza, the Taj Mahal morphing into the Parthenon, which turns into the Lotus temple, which becomes and so on. Our mutual acknowledgment of its beauty and wonder allowing us into the grand marble hall lined with elaborately carved columns straight out of ancient Greek times.

Things I never thought of living in a small town that was the world to me, yet more to them. Naddalin gazes around, face a mask of absolute wonder as she takes it all in. 'I haven't been here since -'

I peer at her, holding my breath, dying to know the details of the last time she was here.

'Since, I came to find you.'

I squint, unsure what that means.

'Sometimes-' She looks at me. 'I was lucky enough to just happen upon you, ending up in the same place at just the right time. Though often I'd have to wait a few years before it was proper to meet.'

'You mean you were spying on me?' I gape, hoping it was not as creepy as it sounds. 'When I was a kid?'

She cringes, averting her gaze when she says, 'No, not spying, Never- Ever. Please. What do you take me for?' She laughs and shakes her head. 'It was more like keeping tabs.'

Patiently waiting until the time was right. Nevertheless, the last few times when I was unable to find you, no matter how hard I tried and believe me, I tried, living like a wanderer, itinerant from place to place, sure I'd lost you forever-I decided to come here. And I ran into some friends who showed me the way.'

'Neville and Rayne.' I nod, neither hearing nor seeing the answer in her head, but somehow sensing it is true. Overcome by an immediate rush of guilt for failing to even think of them until now. Not even wondering how they might be, where they might be, until a second ago.

'You know them?' She squints, surprised.

I press my lips together, knowing I will have to tell her the rest of the story, the parts I had hoped to abandonment.

'They led me here too-' I pause, taking a deep breath and looking away, preferring to take in the room than meet her quizzical gaze. 'They were at Ava's-or at least Rayne was. Neville was out-' I shake my head and start again. 'She was out trying to help you when you -'

I close my eyes and sigh, deciding to just show her instead. Everything. All of it. Including the parts, I was too ashamed to put it into words. Projecting the events of that day until there are no more secrets between us. Letting her know how hard they fought to save her, while I was too stubborn, refusing to listen.

But instead of being upset as I feared, she places her hands on my shoulders, gazing at me with forgiveness as she thinks, what is done is done. We must move forward, there is no looking back.

I swallow hard and meet her gaze, knowing she is right. It is time to get started, but where to begin?

‘It’s better if we split up.’ Her nods, her words a surprise to my ears, and I’m just about to speak when she adds, ‘Ever, think about it. You’re trying to find something to reverse the effects of the elixir I drank, while I’m trying to save you from the Shadowland, not the same thing.’

I sigh, disappointed but have to agree. ‘I guess I’ll see you back at the house then. My house, if that’s okay?’ I place my hand over her and give it a squeeze, reluctant to revisit her depressingly barren room and unsure where she stands on the whole karma curse thing now that her memory is returned.

And no sooner has she nodded and closed her eyes that she vanishes from sight.

So, I take a deep breath and close my eyes too, thinking: I need help. I have made a huge and horrible mistake and I do not know what to do. I need to either find an antidote to the antidote - something that will reverse the effects of what Naddalin’s done - or find a way to get to her, convince her to cooperate with me - but only in a way that will not need me to - um - seriously compromise myself in a way I am not comfortable with... if you know what I mean...

Focusing my intention, replaying the words repeatedly. Hoping it will grant access to the Akashic Records, the permanent record of everything that has is or ever will be done. Praying - I will not be shut out again like the last time - I was here.

But the time, when I hear that familiar buzz, instead of the usual long hallway leading to a mysterious room, I find myself right smack in the middle of a cineplex, its lobby empty, snack bar abandoned, with no clue of what I should do a set of double doors opens before me.

I step into a dark theater with sticky floors, worn seats, and the scent of buttery popcorn permeating the air. Squeezing down the aisle and choosing the best seat in the house, the one halfway down and dead center, I prop my feet on the chair just before me as the lights go dim and a big tub of popcorn appears in my lap. Watching the red drapes retract as the large crystal screen begins to flicker and flare in a profusion of images that quickly race past.

But instead of the solution I had hoped for, all I get is a series of clips from movies I have already seen. Resulting in a homemade montage of my family's funniest moments, lifted straight from my old life in Oregon and unfolding to a soundtrack that only Riley could make.

Portion: 2

Watching a clip of Riley and me, both of us hamming it up on a homemade stage in our den, dancing and lip-synching for an audience consisting of our parents and dog. Soon followed by an image of Buttercup, our sweet yellow lab. Tongue straining toward her nose, licking like mad, trying to get to the chunk of peanut butter Riley had dabbed there.

And even though it is not at all what I had hoped for, I know it is important all the same. Riley promised she would find a way to communicate with me, assuring me that just because - I cannot see her anymore does not mean she is not still around.

So, I push my quest aside and sink down into my seat. Knowing she is sitting beside me, silent and unseen. Wanting to share the moment together, two sisters sharing the home-movie version of what used to be.

By the time I make it back to my room, Naddalin is waiting, sitting on the edge of my bed, cradling a small satin pouch in the palm of her gloved hand.

~*~

'How long was I gone?' I asked, plopping down beside her as I squint at my bedside clock and figure the math.

'There's no time in School,' she reminds me. 'But on the earth plane, I'd say you were gone for a while. Did you learn anything?'

I think about the home movies I watched, Riley's version of 'The Bloom Family's Funniest Videos,' then I shake my head and shrug. 'Nothing useful. You?'

Her smiles, handing over the silk pouch as she says, 'Open and see.'

I pull on the drawstring, slip a finger inside, and retrieve a black silk cord bearing a cluster of colorful crystals held together by thin gold bands. Watching it catch and reflect the light as I dangle it before me, thinking it is beautiful if not a bit odd.

'It's a charm,' she says, watching me carefully as I take in the individual stones, each of them bearing a different shape, size, and color.

'They've been worn through the ages and are said to hold magical properties for heralding, protection, prosperity, and balance. Though the one, being created solely for you, is heavy on the protection element since that's what you need.'

I look at her, wondering how they could possibly harp. Then I remember the crystals I used to make the antidote that saved her, and how it really could've worked - if Naddalin had not tricked me into adding my blood to the mix.

'It's completely unique, assembled and crafted with your own personal journey in mind. There is not another one like it, not anywhere. I know it doesn't solve our problem, but at least it'll hurt.'

I squint at the bundle of rocks, unsure what to say. Just about to slip it over my head and give it a go, when she smiles and says, 'Allow me...' Gathering my long hair and draping it over my shoulder as she reaches behind me and secures the small golden clasp, before tucking it under my tee where no one can see.

'Is it a secret?' I ask, expecting the crystals to feel cold and hard against my skin and astonished to find them quite warm and comforting instead.

~*~

She brushes my hair back over my shoulder, letting it fall just shy of my waist. 'No, it's not a secret. Though you probably shouldn't flaunt it either. I have no idea just how far Naddalin's advanced, so it's better not to draw her attention to it.'

‘She knows about the chakras,’ I say, seeing the surprise in her gaze and choosing to omit the fact that she’s actually responsible for that. Having unwittingly revealed all kinds of secrets while under Naddalin’s spell. She feels bad enough already, so there is no reason to make it any worse.

I tap my fingers against the amulet beneath my shirt, surprised by how solid it feels from the outside, compared to the inside, the part that rests on my skin. ‘But what about you? Don’t you need protection too?’ Watching as she unearths a similar amulet from under her long-sleeved tee, smiling as she dangles it before me. ‘How come yours looks so different?’ I ask, squinting at the cluster of sparkling stones.

‘I told you, no two are alike. Just like no two people are alike. I’ve got my own issues to overcome.’

‘You have issues?’ I laugh, though seriously wondering what they could possibly be, she is good at everything she does. And I mean everything.

She shakes her head and laughs, a wonderful sound I do not get to hear nearly enough anymore. ‘Believe me, I’ve got my share,’ she says, laughing again.

‘And you’re sure these will keep us safe?’ I press it against my chest, noticing how it feels like a part of me now.

‘That’s the plan.’ She shrugs, getting up from the bed and heading for the door as she adds, ‘But, Ever, please do us both a favor and try not to put it to the test, okay?’

‘What about Naddalin?’

I ask, taking in her long, lean form as she rests against the jamb. ‘Don’t you think we should come up with a plan? Find a way to get her to give us what we need and be done with all the?’

Naddalin looks at me, gaze narrowed on mine. ‘There’s no plan, NEVER- Ever. Engaging with Naddalin is exactly what she wants. We’re better off finding a solution on our own, without relying on her.’

‘But how? Everything we’ve tried so far has been a total bust.’ I shake my head. ‘And why should we run ourselves ragged, searching for answers, when Naddalin’s already admitted to having the remedy? She said all I have to do is pay the right price and he’ll hand it over- how hard can that be?’

‘And you’re willing to pay her price?’ Naddalin asks, voice steady and deep as her dark eyes sweep mine.

I avert my gaze, cheeks hating to a thousand degrees. ‘Of course not! Or at least not the price that you think!’ I bring my knees to my chest and wrap my arms around them. ‘It’s just-’ I shake my head, frustrated at having to plead my case. ‘It’s just that-’

‘She wants to divide us, make us question each other, break us apart. She also wants us to go after her and start a war.

‘NEVER- Ever, the is exactly what Naddalin wants.’ Her jaw tightens, her features harden, before meeting my gaze and softening again.

Then while I promise to do everything in my power to protect you, you must help me - and her too. You’ve no motive to trust her, she will lie, operate, and make no mistake, it’s a very dangerous game that she plays.

You should promise you will stay away from her, ignore all her taunts, and will not rise to her bait. I will find a solution. Figure something out. Just please, look to me for the answers, not Naddalin, okay?’

I switch my gaze back to her, an idea beginning to form-one that might work. I press my lips together and look away, wondering why I should promise any of that when the cure is right there for the taking. Besides, I am the one who caused the situation. I am the one who got us into the mess. So, I should be the one to get us both out. ‘So, we’re clear about Naddalin?’ She tilts her head and lifts her brow, unwilling to leave until I consent.

I nod, just barely, but still enough to convince her to head down the stairs so fast I cannot distinguish her form. The only hint of her having been here are the stones against my chest and the single red tulip her left on the bed.

Thinking in my head it has happened my prophecies- the country with the flag with the star remember that, launched rockets of war for our homeland in the USA, makes me glad to be where I am at, and remember the one that has fought and died for us, like Kristen! Now she is out there fighting with them the man and strong woman, yet once more in a new life, as one of us... the USA, it turns on the rest of the world, and they are turning on us. I foresee a day when like all just become nothing but impressions of just that... imitations!

Part: 16

‘NEVER- Ever?’

Since as nice as it is lying beside Naddalin, the beat of our hearts connecting as one, eventually, it is just not enough. It will never- EVER- NEVER- EVER be enough. I want a normal relationship with my immortal boyfriend- NOT A GIRL! As you could think she is missing something is that I need and want- is she not? One with no walls.

Oh, yes boy- and I will pretty much stop at nothing to get it... One where I can truly enjoy the feel of skin as opposed to the way I remember it in my head.

(3 hours later, after sleeping in the same bed in the same room, drooling on one another as we sleep, our-ta-dur- obviously.)

‘Did you eat yet?’

She places her hand on my shoulder as she peers at the screen- I was working on my next part of my life’s to story- to add to the book- in my own words, hoping my words would stand the test of time like the girls before me, I find my story lackluster and boring at times- yet it’s the story of my life- like theirs.

-And-

Since I did not prepare, did not guard myself against her touch, that is all it takes to see her version of the infamous girls stand before me, I was part of this all, which, unfortunately, is not so different from Milley’s version- the two of them acting all happy and giddy, smiling at each other with an abundance of hope, yet still on the inside nothing has changed.

Then even though she seems really happy, and no doubt deserves to be happy especially after all that I’ve put her through, I still comfort myself with the vision I had a few months back- the one where she clearly ends up with some cute boy she used to know- from back home when she goes back in time to relive- days gone by- like me too, always looking for more in the past than in the here and now- why?

(THE QUESTION IS WHY?)

Now I'm right back where I started. Sober and miserable. I guess by now I should know enough about the loss of realizing that you never really stop missing someone you just learn to live around the huge gaping hole of their absence. Just like Our past may shape us, but it does not define who we become if only that was tried for us. The only thing a person can ever really do is keep moving forward. Take that big leap forward without hesitation, without once looking back. Simply forget the past and forge toward the future.

I'm egotistic, impatient and a little unconfident. I make mistakes, I am out of control and at times hard to grip.

Nevertheless, if you can't grip me at my nastiest, then you sure as hell don't earn me at my finest- wondering if I should say or do something to temper her excitement since it is not like the little flirtation is going anywhere. Nonetheless, knowing I have already taken too big of a risk by outing myself to Milley, I do not say a word. I cannot afford to tip her off too.

I swivel around in my chair, releasing myself from her grip.

Wanting to avoid seeing anything more than I already have, waiting for her energy stream to fade.

'Naddalin made me dinner,' I say, voice steady and low even though it is not exactly true. Unless you count the solution, I drank.

She looks at me, gazes suddenly troubled as it narrows on mine. 'Naddalin?' She steps back. 'Now there's a name I haven't heard in a while.'

I cringe, wishing I had not just put it out there like that. I should have broken her in slowly, gotten her used to the idea of seeing her again.

'Does the mean you're back together?' 'Yeah, um, we're still-friendly.' I shrug. 'I mean, actually, we're more than friends, we're more like-' I shrug, allowing my hair to fall on my face so it is partially hidden. Grasping a chunk and twisting it around, pretending to inspect for split ends even though I no longer get them.

Dating and doomed-destined to spend an eternity in the abyss-madly in love but unable to touch- 'Well, yes, I mean, I guess you could say we're back together again.' Forcing a smile so wide my lips practically split down the middle, but holding it anyway, hoping it will encourage her to join in.

'And you're okay with that?'

She runs her hand through her long hair, a shade we used to share the same color until I started drinking the solution which turned mine even lighter- then her hers then perches on the edge of my bed, crosses her legs, and drops her portfolio onto the floor-four very bad signs that she is become peaceful in for one of her long, awkward talks.

Her gaze moves over me, taking in my faded jeans, my white tank top, searching for symptoms, hints, clues, telltale sign of adolescent distress.

Having only recently ruled out anorexia and or bulimia when my solution-fueled growth spurt added four inches to my height and bulked up my frame with a thin layer of muscle even though I never work out.

But the time it's not my arrival that's got her unnerved, it's me - on-again-off-again-relationship with Naddalin, that is the issue. And even though that may be true, nothing about Naddalin and my relationship could ever be condensed into a chapter in a book. Having recently finished yet another parenting book claiming that a tumultuous relationship is a major cause for concern.

Like she's somehow too old for you-or-' She shrugs, unable to place it. 'Don't get me wrong, Never- Ever, I like Naddalin, I do.

She's nice and polite, and she's certainly very composed and yet, there's something about that cool self-assurance, something that seems rather odd for a young man her age.

First, it was Haven with the whole telepathy thing, and now Jaylynn's taking issue with her maturity and poise.

I push my hair off my face, so I can see her better. She's the second person today who's noticed something off about her about us. And even though it's easy enough to explain, the fact that they're even noticing in the first place is what worries me.

‘And while I know there are only a few months between you, she somehow comes off as more experienced. Too experienced.’ She shrugs. ‘And I’d hate for you to feel pressured into doing something you’re not quite ready for.’

I press my lips together and try not to laugh, thinking about how she could not have gotten it more wrong. If I am the innocent maiden being chased by the big bad wolf, never imagining that I am the predator in the tale, dangerously pursuing my prey to the point of risking her life.

‘Since no matter what she may say, you are in control of you, Never- Ever.

You are the one who decides who, where, and when. And no matter how you may feel about her, or any boy for that matter, they have no right to push their agenda on-’ ‘It’s not like that,’ I tell her, cutting in before she gets any more embarrassing than it already has. ‘Naddalin’s not like that. She’s a perfect girl, an ideal girlfriend. Seriously, Jaylynn, you’re way off course. Just trust me on the one, okay?’

She looks at me for a moment, brittle orange aura wavering, wanting to believe, unsure if she should.

Then she picks up her bag and heads for the door, stopping just shy of it when she says, ‘I was thinking-’

I look at her, tempted to peek at her thoughts, despite my vow to never intentionally breach her privacy like that unless it has an emergency of course, which she clearly is not.

‘Since school is letting out soon even if we’re back on Earth as normal-looking girls we still have to go to school as if we were normal girls of our age, and since I have not heard you mention any summer plans, I thought it might be good for you to find a job, spend a few hours each day working at something.’

‘What do you think?’

‘What do you think of as normal?’

What do I think...?

I gape, with bugging eyes, mouth dry, at a complete loss for words... I was, well, I think I should have peered into your head, after all, think over your thoughts more than my own, for the reason that, clearly, she does succeed as a major agony call!

‘Nothing full time or anything like that. There will be plenty of time for the beach and your friends. I just thought it would be good for you too-’

‘Is the about money?’

My mind reeling, frantic to find a way out...

If it is a simple matter of pitching in for the mortgage and groceries, then I will gladly come up with whatever she needs.

Not even a day. Un-huh. No way, hell, she can even take whatever’s left of my parent’s life insurance policy for all I care, after all, it did set me for life, after the fact... but what she cannot have is my summer.

‘Ever, of course, it’s not about money- is it not yet that’s also life no?’ She averts her gaze as her cheeks flush soft pink.

Mysteriously averse to discussing all things economic for someone who makes a living as a nurse, on and off with the Earthing she chooses to be in within her life spans or within her old body too.

‘I just thought it might be good for you to, you know, meet some new people, learn something new.

Get out of your usual environment for a few hours each day, and -’ And get away from Naddalin.

Not needing to read her thoughts to know what she is really about, now that she knows we’re back together she’s more strong-minded than ever to break us apart.

Besides, while I get how troubled she was by all the moodiness and despair, I lay open to her to when we were apart, the time she’s got it all wrong.

It is not like she thinks. Though I’ve no idea how to explain that to her and keep my secrets intact. ‘-and as it so happens, a summer internship just opened for me, working with her as an LPN, and I’m sure, it’s just a matter of speaking with the senior partners, and the job will be mine.’ Then she grins, face radiant, eyes bright, expecting me to join the fête as well- when I do it at last.

‘But aren’t those positions usually reserved for law students?’ I ask, sure I’m pathetically underqualified to fill those particular shoes.

But she just shakes her head. ‘It’s not that type of internship. This is more of a filing and phone answering assignment. And there is really no money in it either, though you will get school credit and a small end of the season bonus. I just thought it might do you some good. Not to mention how it will really beef up those college applications of yours.’ College- yet, another thing I used to obsess about but not anymore.

I mean, what possible use could I have for all those classes and professors when all I must do is place my hand on a book or peek inside my teacher is hard to know all the answers? Cheating is too easy, yet miss honesty wants me to do it the hard way, I question why?

This is something that I have question her with for years if you have the power to take then do so-o, you are not hurting anyone but yourself.

‘I’d hate for anyone else to get in there when I know you’re just perfect for the job.’

I stare at her, unsure of what to say.

‘It’s a pleasant experience for a person your age,’ she adds, her indignant tone a result of my silence.

‘It’s suggested in all the books. They say it builds charisma, promise, and the chastisement to show up on time and get the job done.’

Great, So, I have Dr. Phil to thank for ruining my summer- I thought.

It is my fault she changed, I am totally annoyed with Jaylynn until I remember how she was when I first got her- calm, tranquil, and completely laid back, allowing me all the space and freedom I needed.

My postponement, my rejection to ingest anything other than the pink solution, and all the drama with Naddalin are what sent her over the edge.

Besides the is where it led to the dreaded summer internship, she is bent on securing for me.

But no way can I spend the summer juggling a mountain of files and incessantly ringing phones when I am going to need all the free time, I can get to find an antidote for Naddalin.

And working in Jaylynn's office- within the nursing department within the Rosman building, with her and her colleagues prying over my shoulder, just will not do, sometimes I was just a little school girl still- I miss that day, and I think about and say within my mind not really- am really meant to be truly happy?

Though it is not like I can say that outright. It will set off her alarms. I need to play it cool, let her know that while I've nothing against discipline and character building, I prefer to tackle those things on my own.

'I'm totally cool with working,' I say, trying not to press my lips together, fidget, or break eye contact, three definite giveaways that I am not being entirely honest. 'But since you do so much for me already, I'd feel a lot better if I could find my own job. I mean, I am just not sure I am cut out for office work, so maybe I could look around a little. See what my options are. I will even pitch in on the mortgage and food. It's the least I can do.'

'What food?' She laughs, shaking her head at me.

'You barely eat! Besides, I do not want your money, ever... though, I will help you establish a line of credit if you'd like.'

'Sure,' I shrug, forcing an enthusiasm I do not really feel since I've absolutely no need for such conventional things. 'That would be great!' I add, knowing that the longer I can keep her mind off the internship, the better for me.

'Okay then,' she drums her fingers against the doorjamb as she completes her plan. 'You've got one week to find something on your own.'

I gulp, trying to keep the eye-bugging to a minimum. One week? What kind of a head start is that when I do not even know where to begin? I have never had a job before. Is it possible to just manifest one?

'I know it's not much time,' she says, reading my face. 'But I'd hate for them to fill the position when I know you'd be perfect.'

She heads into the hall and closes the door between us, leaving me sideswiped, dumbstruck, staring at the flickering remnants of her orangey aura, her magnetic energy field, hovering insistently in the space where she stood. Thinking how ironic it is that I was just making fun of Naddalin for assuming she could land a job without any experience only to find myself facing the same exact fate.

I toss and turn all night. Bed a tangled mess of sweat-dampened pillows and blankets, body and mind exhausted by dreams. Waking briefly, gasping for air, only to be pulled under again, returning to the very same place I fought to escape.

And the only reason- I want it to stop is that Riley is there. Laughing happily as she grabs hold of my hand, taking me on a tour of a very strange land. But even though I skip right alongside her, pretending to enjoy the trip too, the moment she turns her back, I scramble for the surface, eager to remove myself from the scene.

Because, the truth is, it is not Riley. Riley is gone. Having crossed the bridge at my urging, moving on to some unknown place. And even though she keeps yanking me back, yelling at me to pay attention, to just trust her and stop running- I refuse to obey. Sure, that it is punishment for harming Naddalin, sending Haven to the Shadowland, and putting everything I care about at risk-allowing my subconscious to produce these guilt-induced images, so sugar-coated with happiness, there is no way they are real.

But the last time, just as I am about to run, Riley appears right before me, blocking my exit, and yelling at me to stay put. Standing before a large stage and slowly drawing the drapes, revealing a tall, narrow, rectangular cube-like a prison of glass-containing a desperate and struggling Naddalin inside.

I rush to her aid as Riley looks on, pleading with her to hang in there while I help her break free. But she cannot even hear me. I cannot even see me. Just continues to fight until so overcome with exhaustion, with the absolute futility, she closes her eyes and fades straight into the abyss.

The home for lost souls.

I bolt from my bed, body shaking, chilled, drenched with sweat, standing in the center of my room with a pillow clutched to my chest. Overcome not only by the feeling of utter defeat but by the horrible message my imagined sister has sent-telling me that no matter how hard I try; I cannot save my soul mate from me.

I run for my closet, changing into some clothes before grabbing some sneakers and heading for the garage. Knowing it is too early to go to school, too early to go anywhere. But I refuse to give up. Refuse to believe in nightmares. I must start somewhere. I must use what I got.

But just as I am about to climb into my car, I think better. Realizing the entire process of opening the garage door and starting the engine will risk waking Jaylynn. And even though I can easily step outside and manifest another car, bike, Vespa, or whatever else I might want, I decided to try running instead.

I have never been much of a runner. Far more used to dragging my feet through every forced lap in P.E. than striving for any sort of personal best. But that was before I became immortal. Before I was bestowed with incredible speed. A speed I have not even begun to test the limits of since the last time I ran was the first time I realized I even had the potential. But now that I am faced with the perfect opportunity to see just how far and fast, I can go before stopping, dropping, or crumbling to the ground with a debilitating case of side cramps, I cannot wait to try it out.

I slip out the side door and head for the street. At first thinking, I should warm-up, start off in a nice slow jog before hitting the asphalt at full throttle. But no sooner have I started than a major surge of adrenaline kicks in, coursing through my body like the highest-grade rocket fuel. And the next thing I know, it is full speed ahead. Running so fast my neighbor's houses are reduced to a visual blur of stucco and stone. Jumping fallen trash cans and dodging poorly parked cars, as I race from street to street with the grace and agility of a jungle cat. Having virtually no awareness of my legs or my feet, just trusting they will not fail me. That they will get me to my destination in miraculous time.

And no more than a few seconds have passed when I am standing before it, the one place I swore I would never return to, prepared to do the one thing I promised Naddalin I am wouldn't- approaching Naddalin's door, hoping to broker deal.

But before I can even raise my hand to knock, Naddalin is there. Clad in a deep purple robe over blue silk pajamas, her matching velvet slippers with embroidered golden foxes peeking out from the hem. Her gaze sleek, narrowed, looking me over without a trace of surprise.

'Ever.' She cocks her head to the side, allowing for an unobstructed view of her flashing Ouroboros tattoo. 'What brings you to the neighborhood?'

My fingers play with the amulet just under my shirt, heart racing beneath it, hoping Naddalin's right, that it will give the necessary protection-should it come to that.

'We need to talk,' I say, trying not to cringe as her eyes sail over me, enjoying a nice, long, leisurely cruise.

She squints into the night, then back at me. 'Do we?' She lifts her brow. 'And here I had no idea.'

I start to roll my eyes, but remembering my purpose for coming here, I settle for pressing my lips together instead.

'Recognize the door?' She raps her knuckles hard against the wood, eliciting a nice solid thump, as I wonder what she could possibly be up to. 'Of course, you do not,' she says, lips quirking at the sides. 'That's because it's new. I was forced to replace the old one after your last visit. Do you remember? When you busted your way in so you could toss my supply of elixir down the drain?' She laughs and shakes her head. 'Very naughty of you, Ever. And quite a mess I must say. I hope you'll manage to behave better today.' She leans against the door frame and waves me in, gazing at me in a way so deep, so intimate, it is all I can do not to squirm.

I heard down the hall and into the den, noticing how the door is not the only thing that is changed since I was last here. Gone are the framed Botticelli prints and abundance of chintz, all of it replaced by marble and stone, dark heavy fabrics, rough plastered walls, and black iron things shaped into scrolls.

'Tuscan?' I turn, startled to find her standing so near I can see the individual dark purple flecks in her eyes.

She shrugs, refusing to back up and give me some space. 'Sometimes I get a little hankering for the old country.' Her smiles, a slow widening of her cheeks, displaying shiny white teeth. 'As you well know, Ever, there's no place like home.'

I swallow hard and turn away, trying to decide my quickest escape since I cannot afford to make even the slightest mistake.

'So, tell me, so what do I owe the magnificent Jewell?' She glances over her shoulder as she heads for the bar. Removing a bottle of elixir from the wine refrigerator and pouring it into a cut crystal glass, before offering it to me. But I just shake my head and wave it away, watching as she carries it over to the couch where she plops herself down, spreads her legs wide, and rests the glass on her knee. 'I'm assuming you didn't drop by in the dead of night to admire my latest decorating scheme. So, tell me, what's the purpose of the?'

I clear my throat, forcing myself to look her square in the eye without flinching, wavering, fidgeting, or showing any other sign of weakness. Aware of how the whole situation can change in an instant- how easily I can turn from mild curiosity to irresistible prey.

'I'm here to call a truce,' I say, alert for a reaction but getting only her penetrating gaze. 'You know, a cease-fire, a proclamation of peace, a-'

'Please.' She waves her hand. 'Spare me the definition, Liv- I can say it in twenty languages and forty dialects, you?'

I shrug, knowing I am lucky to have said it is the one. Watching as her swirls her drink, the iridescent red liquid flashing and sparking as it runs up the sides and splashes back down.

'And just what sort of truce are you after? You of all people should know how it works. I've no intention of giving you anything unless you're willing to give up something of your own.' She pats the narrow space just beside her, smiling as though I would consider joining her there.

'Why do you do them?' I ask, unable to hold my frustration. 'I mean, you're decent looking, you're immortal, you've got all the gifts that go with it you can pretty much have anyone you want, so why do you insist on bothering me?'

She throws her head back and laughs, a giant roar that fills up the room. Finally calming down enough to level her gaze, looking at me as she says, 'Decent looking?' She shakes her head and laughs again, placing her glass on the table and retrieving a pair of golden nail clippers from a jewel-encrusted case.

'Decent looking,' she mutters, shaking her head, taking a moment to check out her nails, before returning her focus to me. 'But you see, liv, that's just it. I can have anything I want. Anything or anyone.'

It all comes so easily. Too easy.' Her sighs, getting to work on her nails, so absorbed by the task, I'm wondering if she'll continue when she says, 'It all gets a little tedious after the first-oh-hundred or so years. And while you are far too new to understand any of them, someday you'll realize just how big of a favor I've done you.'

I squint, having no idea what she could possibly mean. A favor? Is she serious?

'You sure you won't have a seat?' She wags her nail clipper toward the overstuffed chair just to my right, urging me to take it. 'You're making me out to be a very bad host, insisting on standing there like that. Besides, do you have any idea how fetching you look? A little-bedridden-sure, but in the sexiest way.'

She narrows her eyes until they are sleek as a cat's, lips parting just enough for her tongue to escape. But I just stay put and pretend not to notice. Everything with Naddalin is a game, and taking a seat would be conceding defeat. Though staying like the, being careful wet her lips as her gaze lingers in all the wrong places, does not feel like much of a win.

'You're even more delusional than I thought if you think you've done me a favor,' I say, voice hoarse, scratchy, a long way from strong. 'You're crazy!' I add, regretting it the instant it is out.

But Naddalin just shrugs, unfazed by my outburst as she returns to her nails. 'Trust me, it's more than just a favor, liv. I have given you a purpose. A- reason d'être as they say.' She glances at me, brow raised. 'Tell me, Ever, are you not completely fixated on finding a way to-consummate-with Naddalin? Are you not so desperate for a solution you actually convinced yourself it was a clever idea to come here?'

I swallow hard and stare at her. I should have known better, should have heeded Naddalin's advice.

'You're too impatient.' Her nods, smoothing the edges of her freshly clipped nails. 'What's the rush when you have all of the infinity laid out before you? Think about it, Ever, how exactly would you spend your eternity if it were not for me? Showering each other with huge bouquets of bloody red tulips? Having at each other so often it couldn't help but grow boring?'

'The is ridiculous.' I glare. 'And the fact that you see it like the-like it is some chivalrous deed that you've done-' I shake my head, knowing there is no need to continue. She is delusional, insane, figured out to see things in her own selfish way.

‘Hundred years within my body and others- it all the same, I yearned for her,’ she says, tossing her nail clippers aside, gaze never once leaving mine.

‘And why, you ask? Why would I bother with the same woman for so long when I can have anyone?’ She looks at me as though waiting for the answer, but we both know I’ve no intention of going there.

‘It wasn’t just her beauty like you think-though I will admit, it did spur things at the start.’ Her smiles, eyes reminiscent. ‘No, it was a simple fact that I couldn’t have her. No matter how hard I tried, no matter how long I pined, I was never allowed’ -she looks at me, gazes heavy, intense-admittance-if you will.’

I roll my eyes. I cannot help it. The fact that her wasted centuries pining for that monster is of no interest to me.

But she just continues, ignoring my pained expression when she says, ‘Make no mistake, Ever, I am about to share something very important, something you really should keep in mind.’ She leans forward, arms on knees, voice steady and low, filled with new urgency. ‘We always want what we can’t have.’ She leans back, nodding as though she just shared the key to enlightenment. ‘It’s human nature. We are hardwired that way. And as much as you would prefer not to believe it, it’s the only reason Naddalin’s spent the last four hundred years longing for you.’

I look at her, face placid, body still, aware that she is trying to hurt me, prodding the usual spots, knowing she has been one of my fears from the moment I first learned of our history.

‘Face, it, Ever, even Haven’s incredible beauty wasn’t enough to keep her interest. I’m sure you’re aware of just how quickly she tired of her?’

I swallow hard, stomach like a hard-bitten marble. Since when is two hundred years considered quickly? But I guess when you are dealing with eternity everything is relative.

‘It’s not a beauty contest,’ I say, cringing when I hear the words spoken aloud. I mean, seriously, is that the best I could do?

‘Of course, it is not, luv.’ Naddalin shakes her head, pity in her gaze. ‘If it was, Haven would win.’ She settles back, arms spread across the cushions, glass resting on top, daring me to respond. ‘Let me guess, you've convinced yourself it's about two souls meeting as one, destined for each other, and all of the that-puppy love?' She laughs, nodding when she adds, 'That is what you're thinking, right?'

'You don't want to know what I'm thinking.' I narrow my gaze, decided to get to the point now that my patience's dissolved. 'I didn't come here to be bored by your philosophical litanies; I came here because-'

'Because you want something from me.' Her nods, setting down her drink, glass meeting wood with a solid, wet thwomp. 'In which case, I am in the driver's seat, which means you're in no position to set the pace.'

'Why do you do them?' I shake my head, having grown bored with the game. 'Why do you bother where you know I'm not interested? Surely you realize that no matter what you do to Naddalin and me, it will never bring Haven back. What is done is done. It can never be changed. And, in the end, all the game playing, all of the nonsense you engage in all it really does is prevent you from living your life-from moving on.' I continue to stare, gaze unwavering, convincing. Projecting an image of her handing over the antidote and cooperating with me. 'So, I am asking you, in as reasonable away as I can please help me undo what you have done to Naddalin, so we can all coexist.'

She shakes her head; lids squinted tight. 'Sorry, darlin', the price is set. Now it's just a matter of whether you're willing to pay.'

I lean against the wall, tired, defeated, but not letting on. Knowing the one thing she wants is the one thing I will never give. The same old game Naddalin warned me about. 'You'll never have me, Naddalin. Never, ever, for as long as I-'

Not even getting to the more degrading, insulting part that comes next when she rises from the couch, moving so quickly her breath hits my cheek long before I can blink.

'Relax,' she whispers, face looming so close I can make out each flawless pore on her skin. 'As much fun as that might be, giving an amusing diversion at least, I'm afraid that's not it. I am after something far more esoteric than a virginal shag. Though, if you would like to make a go of it, no strings attached, then I assure you, darlin', I'm certainly up for the task.' Her smiles, deep blue eyes boring into mine, projecting the movie she plays in her head, the one starring her, and me, and a king-sized bed.

I look away, breath coming ragged, too fast, summoning every ounce of my will not to slam my knee in her groin when her nose glances my ear, my cheek, my neck, inhaling my scent.

‘I know what you’re going through, Ever,’ she murmurs, lips brushing the tip of my ear. ‘Longing for something so close and yet you can never quite taste it. It is the kind of pain most people will never experience. But we know, don’t we? You and I are joined in that way.’

I relax my fists and fight to steady myself. Knowing I cannot risk doing anything rash, cannot afford to overreact.

‘Not to worry she said.’

She smiles at me, slipping just out of my reach.

‘You’re a nifty girl.

I am sure you will figure it out.

And if not-’ Her shrugs. ‘Well, nothing changes, right? Everything stays the same. You and I with our fates intertwined-for all of infinity.’

She slips down the hall, moving so fast it is a moment before I can make out her form. Tilting her head and urging me toward the door, practically pushing me onto her stoop when she says, ‘Sorry to cut them so short. Though I do so with your reputation in mind. If Naddalin ever found out you were here-well, that could be rather tragic for you, couldn’t it?’

Her smiles, all shiny white teeth, golden hair, tanned skin, and blue eyes-the ultimate California poster boy beckoning-Come live the good life in Laguna Beach! And I am furious with myself-furious for being so stupid for not listening to Naddalin-for putting us further at risk. Handing Naddalin yet one more thing to lord over my head.

‘Sorry you didn’t get what you came for, Liv,’ she purrs, her attention pulled by a vintage black Jaguar that pulls into the drive, having a gorgeous dark-haired couple who head right inside. Closing the door behind them as she adds, ‘Whatever you do, avoid Marco’s car on your way out, she’ll flip if you so much as smudge it.’

I walk home... Or at least, that is the direction I originally heard it. But somewhere along the way, I take a turn. And then another. And another. My feet moving so slowly they practically drag, knowing there is no need to run, nothing to prove. Despite my strength and speed, I am no match for Naddalin. here is the expert of the game and I am merely her pawn.

I continue, deep into the heart of Laguna, or the Village, as it is called. Too awake to go home, too ashamed to see Naddalin, making my way through the dark, empty streets until stopping before a small, well-tended cottage, with flowering plants flanking either side of the door and a woven welcome mat placed just so, making it appear warm, friendly, completely benign.

Only it is not... Not even close. Now it is more like a crime scene. And unlike the last time I was here, the time I do not bother knocking. There is no point. Ava's long gone. After stealing the elixir and leaving Naddalin to fend for herself, she has no intention of returning.

I unlock the door with my mind and step in, taking a quick look around before I move past the den and into the kitchen. Surprised to find the usually well-ordered room reduced to an absolute mess-the sink piled high with dirty glasses and dishes as the trash overflows to the floor. And even though I am sure it has not Ava who has done the, clearly someone is here.

I creep down the hall, peering into a series of empty rooms until I get to the indigo door at the end the one that leads to Ava's so-called sacred space where she used to meditate and try to reach the dimensions beyond. Opening the door just a crack and squinting into the dark, making out two sleeping figures sprawled on the floor. Skimming my hand along the wall and fruitlessly searching for a light, before remembering my ability to illuminate the room on my own only to find the last two people I ever expected to see.

'Rayne?' I kneel beside her, holding my breath as she rolls over and opens one eye.

'Oh Henry, Ever.' She rubs her eyes and struggles to sit. 'Only I am not Rayne, I'm Neville. Rayne's over there.'

I glance at her twin at the far side of the room, noting the scowl that crosses her face the second she realizes it is me.

'What're you doing here?' I ask, focusing on Neville again since she's always been the nicer of the two.

'We live here.' She shrugs, tucking her wrinkled white shirt into her blue plaid skirt as she gets off the floor.

I glance between them, taking in their pale skin, large dark eyes, and straight, black, shoulder-length hair with the razor-slashed bangs, noticing how they are both still dressed in the same private school uniforms as the first day we met. But unlike in School where they always appear so clean and pristine, now they are pretty much the opposite - sadly disheveled and completely uncared for.

‘But you can’t live here. This is Ava’s house.’ I shake my head. The idea of them squatting here leaves me extremely unnerved. ‘Maybe you should think about going home. You know, back to school with the other girls?’

The Pretender of Secrets

Partition: 1

(Back at Skaufyceol castle - and at the school)

‘We can’t...’

Rayne pulls on her knee socks, making sure they are of an exact equal height, accidentally giving the only real clue that helps me tell them apart.

‘Thanks to you, we’re stuck here forever,’ she mumbles, taking a moment to glare at me.

I glance at Neville - and Killie too, hoping she’ll and she would explain.

But she just shakes her head at her sister, before looking at me. ‘Ava’s gone.’ She shrugs. ‘But don’t let Rayne give you the wrong impression. We are quite happy to see you. We had a running bet on how soon you’d show.’

My gaze darts between them, laughing nervously as I say, 'Oh, really? Who won?'

Rayne rolls her eyes and points at her sister. 'She did. I was sure you'd abandoned us for good.'

I pause, something about the way she just said that-'Wait, you mean you guys have been here the whole time?'

'We can't get back.' Neville shrugs. 'We've lost our magic.'

'Well, I'm sure I can help you return. I mean, you do want to return- right?' I look at them, seeing Rayne smirk as Neville just nods.

Knowing they will be a lot easier than they think since all I must do is make the portal, get them settled, then say my goodbyes and make the return trip back to Laguna alone.

'We'd like that very much,' Neville says.

'And we would like to leave now,' Rayne adds, eyes narrowed. 'After all, it's the very least you can do.'

I swallow really hard.

I deserve that, but I still wonder who is more desperate for them to leave, them or me?

I motion toward Rayne as I heard for the futon, wondering why neither of them thought to sleep on it instead of the floor.

'Come,' I say...

I was glancing over my shoulder.

'You sit here on my right, and Neville, you sit here.'

I pat the lumpy cushion of the sofa.

'Now grab my hands and close your eyes, then focus on seeing the portal with all of you might.'

Imagining that golden shimmer of light as though it is before you.

Besides as soon as the image is clear, I want you to see yourself stepping right through, knowing I am right there beside you, keeping you safe. Okay...?’

I peek at them, seeing them nod before we go through the motions, recreating all the right steps.

But just as I step through the light and into that vast fragrant field, I open my eyes and find I’m alone.

‘Told you,’ Rayne says, the second I return. Standing before me, eyes angry, small, accusing, pale hands clutching her plaid skirted hips. And it’s all because we tried to help you!’

‘Told you our magic is gone. We are stuck here now with no way to get back.’

‘Rayne!’ Neville shakes her head at her sister, then glances at me with an apologetic look on her face.

‘Well, it’s true!’ Rayne glares. ‘I told you we shouldn’t risk it. I told you she would not listen.

Partition: 2

I saw it clear as day. The overwhelming possibility she’d make the wrong choice- which, I might add, she did!’ She shakes her head and frowns. ‘It went exactly as predicted. And now we’re the ones paying the price.’

Oh, you’re not the only ones, I think. Hoping they’ve lost their ability to read minds as well since I’m immediately shamed by the thought. No matter how much she’s annoying me, I know she’s right.

‘Listen,’ I say, swallowing hard as I glance at them, needing to defuse them. ‘I know how bad you want to get back. Trust me, I do. And I’m going to do everything I can to help you.’ I nod, seeing them glance at each other, two identical faces marred by complete disbelief. ‘I mean, I’m not exactly sure how I’m going to do it, but just trust that I will. I’ll do everything I can to help you get back. And in the meantime, I’ll do everything I can to keep you both comfortable and safe. Scout’s Jewell. Okay?’

Rayne looks at me, rolling her eyes and having a sigh. ‘Just get us back to school,’ she says, arms crossing her chest. ‘That’s all we want. Nothing short of that will do.’

I nod, refusing to let her get to me when I say, 'Understood. But if I'm going to help you, I'll need you to answer some questions.'

They look at each other, Rayne's gaze signaling a silent: No way, as Neville turns, nodding at me as she says, 'Okay.'

And even though I'm not quite sure how to phrase it, it's something I've been wondering for a while now, so I just dive in. 'I'm sorry if that offends you, but I need to know are you guys dead?' I hold my breath, fully expecting them to be mad, or at the very least insulted - pretty much any reaction but the laughter I get. Watching as they fall all over themselves, Rayne doubled over, slapping her knee, as Neville rolls off the futon, practically convulsing. 'Well, you can't blame me for asking.' I frown, definitely the one who's insulted. 'I mean, we did meet in School where plenty of dead people hang out. Not to mention how you're both unnaturally pale.'

Rayne leans against the wall, fully recovered from her laughing fit and smirked at me. 'So, we're pale. Big deal.' She glances at her sister, then back at me. 'It's not like you're exactly rocking' a tan. And yet, you don't see us assuming you're a member of the dearly departed.'

I wince, knowing it's true, but still. 'Yeah, well, you had an unfair advantage. Thanks to Riley you knew all about me long before we met. You knew exactly who I am and what I am, and if I have any hope of helping you, then I'm going to have to know a few things too. So as much as you may resent it, as much as you may want to resist, the only way we're going to get anywhere is if you tell me your story.'

'Never,' Rayne says, staring at her sister, warning her not to rebel.

But Neville ignores her and turns right to me. 'We're not dead. Not even close. We're more like - refugees. Refugees from the past, if you will.'

I glance between them, thinking all I have to do is lower my guard, focus my quantum remote, and touch them for their entire life story to be revealed, but figuring I should at least try to get their version first.

'A long time ago,' she starts, peering at her disapproving sister before taking a deep breath and forging ahead. 'A very long time ago, in fact, we were facing a -' She squinches her brow, searching for just the right word, nodding at me when she says, 'Well, let's just say we were about to become victims of a terribly dark event, one of the most shameful times in our history, but we escaped by fleeing to School. And then, well, I guess we lost track of time and we've been there ever since. Or at least until last week when we came to help you.'

Rayne groans, dropping to the floor and burying her face in her hands, but Neville just ignores her, still looking at me when she says, 'But now our worst fear has come true. Our magic is gone, we've nowhere to go, and no idea how to survive in the place.'

'What sort of persecution did you flee?' I ask, watching her closely, searching for clues. 'And how long ago is very long ago? Just what are we dealing with here?' Wondering if their history stretches as far back as Naddalin's, or if they belong to a more recent past.

They gaze at each other, communicating a wordless agreement that shuts me right out. So, I move toward Neville, grasping her hand so quickly she has no time to react. Immediately pulled into her mind- her world- seeing the story unfold as though I'm right there. Standing on the sidelines, an unnoticed observer, fully immersed in the chaos and fear of that day, witness to images so horrible I'm tempted to turn away.

Watching as an angry mob swarm their home, voices raised- torches high- their aunt barring the door as best she can, making the portal and urging the twins toward the safety of School.

Just about to step through the portal and join them when the door gives way and the twins disappear. Separated from everything they once knew, having no idea what became of their aunt until a visit to the Great Halls of Learning showed them the torturous trial of false accusations she was forced to endure. Refusing to confess to any kind of sorcery, having taken the Wiccan Rede of 'An it harms none, does what ye will,' and knowing she'd done nothing wrong, she rebuffed her oppressor and held her head high all the way to the gallows where she was brutally hung.

I stagger back, fingers seeking the amulet just under my tee, something about their aunt's gaze so eerily familiar, leaving me shaky, unsettled, reminding myself that I'm safe, they're safe- that things like that don't happen these days.

'So now you know.' Neville shrugs as Rayne shakes her head. 'Our whole story. Everything about us. Do you blame us for choosing to hide?'

I glance at them, unsure of what to say. 'I-' I clear my throat and start over. 'I'm so sorry. I had no idea.' I glance at Rayne, seeing how she refuses to look at me, then over at Neville who solemnly bows her head. 'I had no idea you guys escaped the Salem Witch Trials.'

'Not exactly,' Rayne says, before Neville cheers in.

'What she means is we were never tried. Our aunt stood accused. One day she was revered as the most sought-after midwife, and the next, she was rounded up and taken away.' She sucks in her breath, eyes welling up as though it were yesterday.

'We would've gone with her, we had nothing to hide,' Rayne says, lifting her chin and narrowing her gaze. 'And it certainly wasn't Clara's fault that poor baby died. It's the father who did it. She didn't want the baby or its mother. So, she did away with them both and blamed Clara. Crying witch so loud the entire town heard- but then Clara made the portal and forced us to hide, and she was just about to join us when- well, you know the rest.'

'But that was over three hundred years ago!' I cry, still unused to the idea of existence that long despite my immortality.

The twins shrug.

'So, if you haven't been back since-' I shake my head, the monumental size of the problem just beginning to unfold. 'I mean, do you have any idea how much things have changed since you were last here? Seriously. It's like a whole different world from the one that you left.'

'It's not like we're idiots.' Rayne shakes her head. 'Things progress in School too, you know. New people arrive all the time, manifesting the things they're attached to, all the stuff they can't bear to let go.'

But that's not what I meant, in fact, not even close. I wasn't just referring to cars versus horse-drawn carriages, and trendy boutiques versus hand-sewn- but more their ability to get along in the world- blending in, adapting, not standing out in the glaring way that they do! Taking in their razor-slashed bangs, their large dark eyes and extremely pale skin, knowing their twenty-first-century makeover is far less about a uniform change than a complete and total overhaul.

'Besides, Riley prepared us,' Neville says, eliciting a loud groan from Rayne, and my full attention from me. 'She manifested a private school and convinced us to enroll. That's where these uniforms came from. She was our teacher, coaching us on all the modern ways, including our speech. She wanted us to return and was determined to prepare us for the trip. Partly because she wanted us to look after you, and partly because she thought we were crazy for missing out on our teens.'

I freeze, suddenly grasping a new understanding of Riley's interest in the - one that's got far less to do with me, and everything to do with her. 'How old are you guys?' I whimper, looking to Neville for the answer. 'Or should I say, how old were you when you first arrived in School?' Knowing they haven't aged a day since.

'Thirteen,' Neville says, knitting her brow. 'Why?'

I close my eyes and shake my head, stifling a laugh as I think: I knew it!

Riley always dreamed of the day she'd be thirteen, a bona fide teenager having finally made it to the important double digits. But after dying at twelve, she chose to hang around the earth plane, living her adolescence vicariously through me. So, it only makes sense she'd try to convince Neville and Rayne to return, not wanting anyone else to miss out like her.

And if Clara can find the strength, and Riley the hope, in situations so incredibly dire and bleak, surely, I can overcome Naddalin.

I glance between the twins, knowing they can't stay here on their own or come home to live with Jaylynn and me, though there is someone who's quite able and ready, if not entirely willing to lend us a hand.

'Grab your stuff,' I say, heading for the door. 'I'm taking you to your new home.'

The second we step outside I realize we'll need a car. And since I'm more interested in speed than comfort, especially after seeing the way the twins cling to each other as they gaze around warily, I manifest something that'll get us there fast and quickly herd them in. Ordering Neville to sit on Rayne's lap as I get myself settled and step on the gas, navigating the streets with surprising skill, while the twins practically hang out the window, gaping at all that we pass.

'Have you guys been inside the whole time?' I glance at them, never having seen anyone react to the beauty of Laguna Beach in quite the same way.

They nod, never once averting their gaze. Squirming in their seat as I pull up to the gate. Allowing the uniformed guard to peer through the window and scrutinize them, before letting us in.

‘Where are you taking us?’ Rayne eyes me suspiciously. ‘What’s with the guards and big gates? Is some kind of prison?’

I head up the hill, glancing at her when I say, ‘Don’t you have gated communities in School?’ Never actually having seen one myself, but then again, I haven’t lived there for the last three centuries as they have.

They shake their heads, eyes wide, clearly on edge.

‘Not to worry.’ I turn onto Naddalin’s street and into her drive. ‘It’s not a prison, that’s not what the gates are for. They’re more to keep people out rather than in.’

‘But why would you want to keep people out?’ they ask, two childlike voices blending into one.

I squint, having no idea how to answer since it’s not like I was raised like the either, all the communities in my old hood were open access. ‘I guess it’s meant to keep people -’ I start to say safe, but that’s not really it either. ‘Anyway.’ I shake my head. ‘If you’re going to live here, then you better get used to it. That’s pretty much all there is.’

‘But we’re not going to live here,’ Rayne says. ‘You said it was just a temporary fix until you find a way to get us back, remember?’

I take a deep breath and grip the wheel harder, reminding myself how scared she must feel, no matter how bratty she gets.

‘Of course, it’s temporary.’ I nod, forcing a smile. Or at least it better be, because if not, someone’s going to be extremely displeased. I climb out of the car and motion for them to follow, saying, ‘Ready to see your new temporary home?’

I head for the door, the two of them close at my heels as I stand right before it, debating whether or not I should knock and wait for Naddalin to open it or just stride right in since she’s probably asleep. And I’m just about to do the latter when Naddalin swings the door open, takes one look at me, and says, ‘Are you okay?’

I smile, tacking on a telepathic message of Before you say anything- anything at all just tries to stay calm and give me a chance to explain her eyes curious, questioning as I say, 'Can we come in?'

She moves aside, eyes wide with shock when Neville and Rayne step out from behind me and barrel right into her. Skinny arms wrapped around her waist, gazing up at her adoringly as they squeal, 'Naddalin! It's you! It's really you!' And as nice as the little reunion is, I can't help but notice how their reaction to her, with all the love and excitement, is pretty much the opposite of their reaction to me.

She smiles, ruffling their hair and bending down to plant a kiss on the top of their heads. 'How long has it been?' She pulls away and squints.

'Last week,' Rayne says, complete adoration displayed on her face. 'Seconds before Ever added her blood to the antidote and wrecked everything.'

'Rayne!' Neville glances at her sister and me, shaking her head. But I just let it go. The is one battle I'll never win.

'I meant before that.' Naddalin squints into the distance, trying to remember the date.

They look at her, a mischievous gleam in their eyes when they say, 'It was just over six years ago when Ever was ten!'

I gape, eyes practically popping out of my head as Naddalin laughs. 'Ah, yes. And I have you two to thank for helping me find her. And since you know how much she means to me, I would appreciate your kindness toward her. That's not too much to ask is it?' Her chucks Rayne under the chin, causing her to smile as her cheeks flush bright pink.

'So, to what do I owe the incredible Jewell?' She leads us into the still empty living room. 'Of being reunited with my long- lost friends, who, I might add, hasn't aged a day since we met.'

They look at each other and giggle, clearly prepared to be charmed by anything she says. And before I can even think of a reply, find the right words to slowly break her in and get her used to the idea of their living with her, they look at each other and shout, 'Eversaid we could live with you!'

Naddalin glances at me, smile still planted on her face, as a look of pure horror creeps into her eyes.

‘Temporarily,’ I add, gaze meeting her, sending a barrage of telepathic red tulips her way. ‘Just until I find a way to get them back to school, or their magic returns, whichever comes first.’ Tacking on a mental note of Remember when you said you wanted to improve your karma, to make up for your past? Well, what better way than to help someone in need? And the way you can keep the house since you will need the extra space. It is the perfect solution. Everyone wins! Nodding and smiling so eagerly I am like a bobblehead doll.

Naddalin glances first at me, then the twins, laughing and shaking her head when she says, ‘Of course you can stay. For as long as you need. So, what do you say we all head upstairs, so you can pick out your rooms?’

I sigh, my perfect boyfriend proving herself even more perfect. Following behind as the twins race up the stairs- happy, giggling, completely transformed now that they are in Naddalin’s care.

‘Can we have the room?’ They ask, eyes lighting up as they stand in the doorway of Naddalin’s special room that is still devoid of her things.

‘No!’ I answer too quickly, wincing when they turn, eyes narrowed and glaring at me. But even though I feel bad about the negative start, I am decided to return the room to its normal state, and there is no way I can do that if they are camping in it. ‘It’s taken,’ I add, knowing it did nothing to soften the blow. ‘But there is plenty more, the place is huge, you’ll see. There’s even a pool!’

Neville and Rayne glance at each other before marching down the hall heads bobbing together, whispering quietly, not bothering to hide their annoyance with me.

You could have just given it to them, Naddalin thinks, close enough to send a charge through my veins.

I shake my head and walk silently alongside her, telepathically replying, I want to see it filled with your things. Even though they no longer mean anything to you, they mean a great deal to me. You cannot just toss out the past- cannot just turn your back on the things that defined you.

She stops, turning to me as she says, ‘ever, we are not defined by our things. It’s not the clothes that we wear, the cars that we drive, the art we acquire- it’s not where we live- but how we live that defines us.’ Her gaze bores into mine, as she gathers me into a telepathic embrace, the effect seeming so real, it robs me of breath. 'It's our actions that are remembered long after we're gone,' she adds, smoothing my hair as her lips telepathically meet mine.

True- I smile, enhancing the image her created with tulips and sunsets and rainbows and cupids and all manner of clichéd Dadaistic themes that make us both laugh. Except that we are immortal, I add, decided to sway her to my side. Which means none of that really applies. So, with that in mind, maybe we can just-

But I do not even get to finish before the twins call for us, shouting, 'The room! I want the one!'

Since the twins are so used to being together, I was sure they would want to share the same space and even get bunk beds or something. But the moment they checked out the size of the next room, and the one after that, they each staked their claim and never looked back. Spending the next several hours directing Naddalin and me to decorate down to their most minute specifications, demanding we manifest beds, dressers, and shelves, only to change their minds, have us empty the room, and start all over again.

But if Naddalin was using her magic, I did not complain. I was far too relieved to see her manifesting again, even if she was still refusing to manifest anything for herself. By the time we finished, the sun was starting to rise, and I knew I had better return home before Jaylynn woke up and noticed I was gone.

'Don't be surprised if I don't make it to school today,' she says, walking me to the front door.

I sigh, hating the thought of going without her.

'I can't leave them here on their own. Not until they get settled in.' She shrugs, hooking her thumb over her shoulder and pointing upstairs where the twins are finally, mercifully, asleep in their beds.

I nod, knowing she's right and vowing to get them back to School soon before they get too comfortable here.

'I'm not sure that's the solution,' she says, sensing my thoughts.

I squint, unsure where she's going, but getting an uncomfortable ping in my gut nonetheless.

‘I’ve been thinking-’ Her cocks her head to the side, thumb tracing her stubble-lined chin. ‘They’ve been through a lot- losing their home, their families, everything they’ve ever known, and loved their lives taken so abruptly, they hadn’t had a chance to even live them-’ Her shakes her head. ‘They deserve a real childhood, you know? A fresh start in the world...’

I gape, wanting to respond but the words just won’t come. Because while I also want them to be happy and safe and all of those things, as far as the rest goes, we’re no longer on the same page. I was planning a short little visit, a couple of days, or at the very worst- weeks. Never once did I entertain the idea of becoming surrogate parents, especially to twins who’re just a few years younger than me.

‘It was just a thought.’ She shrugs. ‘Ultimately, the decision is theirs. It’s their life.’

I swallow hard and avert my gaze, telling myself there is nothing that has to be settled just yet, heading toward my manifested car when Naddalin says, ‘Always - Seriously? A Lamborghini?’

I cringe, flushing under her gaze. ‘I needed something fast.’ I shrug, knowing she’s not buying it the second I see her face. ‘They feared to be outside, so I needed to get them here quickly.’

‘And did it need to be shiny and red as well?’ She laughs, glancing between the car and me and shaking her head.

I press my lips together and look away, refusing to say anything more. I mean, it is not like I was planning to keep it. I will get rid of it the second I get home and pull into my drive.

I open the door and climb in, suddenly remembering the thing I meant to ask her before. Taking in the elegant lines of her face as I say, ‘Hey Naddalin- how’d you open the door so quickly? How’d you know we were here?’

She looks at me, eyes meeting mine as the smile slowly fades from her face.

‘I mean, it was four in the morning. I did not even have a chance to knock and you were already there. Weren’t you asleep?’

- And-

Like even though a chunk of flashy red metal stands between us, it is as though she is right there, gaze sending shivers over my skin when she says, ‘Ever, I can always sense when you’re near.’

After a long day at school without Naddalin, the second the final bell rings, I get in my car and head for her house. But instead of making a left at the light, I pull an illegal U-turn. Telling myself I should allow her some space, give her a chance to bond with the twins - when the truth is, between their hero worship of Naddalin and Rayne's glaring animosity toward me - well, I am just not ready to face them again.

I head toward downtown Laguna, figuring I will stop by Mystics and Moonbeams, the metaphysical bookstore where Ava once worked. Thinking maybe Lina, the store's owner can help me find a solution to my more mystical problems without my divulging just what it is that I am after. Which, considering how suspicious she is, should prove to be quite a feat.

After manifesting the best parking space, I can, which is overcrowded Laguna happens to be two blocks away, I stuff the meter full of quarters and make my way toward the door, only to be met by a big red sign reading: BE BACK IN TEN!

I stand before it, lips pressed together as I glance all around, making sure no one is watching as I mentally flip the sign over while making the deadbolt retreat. Silencing the bell on the door as I slip inside and head for the bookshelves, relishing the chance to browse on my own, free of Lina's scrutiny.

The tips of my fingers graze the long row of spines, waiting for a signal, sudden warming, an itch at the tips, something to alert me to just the right one. But not getting anything, I grab one near the end and close my eyes, pressing my palms to the front and back covers, eager to see what is inside.

'How'd you get in here?'

I jump, bumping into the shelf just behind me, knocking a pile of CDs to the floor.

Cringing at the mess at my feet, scattered jewel cases everywhere, some of them cracked, as I say, 'You scared me - I -'

I drop to my knees, heart racing, face flushing, wondering not just who she is but how she could have possibly managed to sneak up on me when it should be impossible to do so. A mortal's energy always announces itself long before its actual presence does. So, is it possible that she - is not mortal?

I sneak a quick peek as she kneels beside me, taking in her tanned skin, defined arms, and a heavy clump of golden-brown dreadlocks spilling over her shoulder and halfway down her back.

Watching as she gathered the damaged jewel cases into her hands, searching for a sign that will out her as an immortal, maybe even a rogue.

A face that's too perfect- a Faith tattoo- but when she catches me looking, her smile in a way that not only displays the most disarming set of dimples perfectly punctuating each cheek but a set of teeth that are just crooked enough to prove she's nothing like me, I say.

'You okay?' She asks, gazing at me with eyes so green I can barely remember my name.

I nod, standing awkwardly and rubbing my palms on my jeans, wondering why I'm so breathless, unnerved, forcing the words from my lips when I say, 'Yeah. I'm - fine.' Inadvertently taking a nervous laugh onto the end that is so high pitched and foolish I cringe and turn away. 'I, um - I was just, browsing the merchandise,' I add, realizing just after I have said it that I probably have more right to be here than she does.

Glancing over my shoulder to find her gazing at me in a way I cannot read, I take a deep breath and pull my shoulders back. 'I think the real question is, how'd you get in here?' Taking in her sandy bare feet and wet board shorts hanging dangerously low on her hips, averting my gaze before - I can see anything more.

'I own the place.' She then nods, stacking the fallen CDs, the ones that are not cracked, back onto the shelf before turning to me.

'Really?' I turn, eyes narrowed when I add, because I happen to know the owner, and you don't look a thing like her.'

She then cocks her head to the side, squinting in faux contemplation and rubbing her chin as she says, 'Really? Most people claim to see a resemblance. Though I have to admit, I'm with you, never seen it myself.'

'You're related to Lina?' I gape, hoping my voice didn't sound as panicked to her ears as it did mine.

'She's my grandmother.' She nods. 'Name's Naddalin, by the way.'

She offers her hand, long, tanned, fingers extended, waiting for mine. But even though my curiosity's piqued, I can't do it. Despite my interest, despite my wondering why she makes me feel so - flustered and off-balance- I cannot risk the barrage of knowledge a single touch brings when my psyche is disturbed.

I nod, responding with the stupid, embarrassing sort of half-wave, as I mumble my name. Trying not to wince when she gives me an odd look and lowers her hand again.

‘So, now that that’s covered-’ She slings her damp towel over her shoulder, sending a spray of sand through the room. ‘I’m back to my original question, what are you doing in here?’

I turn, feigning sudden interest in a book on dream interpretation when I say, ‘I’m sticking with my original answer, which was browsing, in case you’ve forgotten. Surely you allow browsers in here?’ I turn, meeting her gaze- those amazing sea-green eyes reminding me of an ad for a tropical getaway. Something about them so- indefinable- startling- and yet- strangely familiar- though I am sure I have never seen her before.

She laughs, pushing a tangle of golden dreads off her face and exposing a scar slicing right through her brow, gaze landing just to my right as she says, ‘And yet, after all the summers I’ve spent here, watching customers browse the merchandise, I’ve never once seen someone browse quite like you.’

Her lips pull at the sides, as her eyes study mine. Then I turn, cheeks hurting, heart racing, taking a moment to compose myself before turning back to say, ‘You’ve never seen someone browse the back cover? That is a little odd, don’t you think?’

‘Not with their eyes closed.’ She tilts her head to the side and focuses on the space to my right once again.

I swallow hard, flustered, shaky, knowing I need to change the subject before I sink any deeper. ‘Maybe you should be more concerned with how I got in here instead of what I am doing in here,’ I say, wishing I could take it back the second it is out.

She looks at me, gazes narrowed. ‘Figured I left the door open again. Are you saying I didn’t?’

‘No!’ I shake my head, hoping she does not notice the way my cheeks color and heat. ‘No, that’s- that’s exactly what I’m saying. You did leave the door open,’ I add, trying not to fidget, blink, press my lips together, or otherwise give myself away. ‘Wide open in fact, which is not only a waste of air- conditioning but totally- I’ I stop, my stomach going weird when I see the smile at play on her lips.

‘So, a friend of Lina’s, huh?’ She moves toward the register, dropping her towel on the counter in a wet, sandy thud. ‘Never heard her mention you before.’

‘Well, we weren’t exactly friends.’ I shrug, hoping it did not look as awkward as it felt. ‘I mean, I met her once and she helped me with- wait, why did you just phrase it like that? You know, all past tense. Is Lina okay?’

Her nods, perching on a stool, grabbing a purple cardboard box from a drawer and flipping through a bunch of receipts. ‘She’s on one of her annual retreats. Picks a different one each year. The time it is Mexico. Trying to decide if the Mayans were right and the world will end in 2012. What’s your take?’

She looks at me, green eyes curious, insistent, boring right into mine. But I just scratch my arm and shrug, never having heard that theory before and wondering if it applies to Naddalin and me. Is that when we will head for the Shadowland, or will we be forced to wander barren Earth- the last two survivors responsible for repopulating the land-only- irony alert- if we touch, Naddalin dies- I shake my head, eager to escape that thread before it can really take hold and mess with my head. Besides, I am here for a reason and I need to stick with the plan.

‘So how do you know her? If you weren’t exactly friends.’

‘I met her through Ava,’ I say, hating the feel of her name on my lips.

She then rolls her eyes, mumbling something unintelligible and shaking her head.

‘So, you know her?’ I look at her, allowing my gaze to travel her face, her neck, her shoulders, her smooth tanned chest, making my way down to her navel, before forcing myself to look away again.

‘Yeah, I know her.’ She then pushes the box aside, gaze meeting mine. ‘Just up and disappeared the other day- into thin air from what I can tell-’

Oh, you do not know the half of it, I think, carefully watching her face.

‘Called her house, her cell, but nothing. Finally did a drive-by to make sure she was okay, and the lights were on so it’s clear she’s been dodging me.’ She shakes her head. ‘Left me with a bunch of angry clients, demanding a reading. Who would’ve thought she’d turn out to be such a flake?’

Yes, who would have thought? Certainly not the person who was foolish enough to place her deepest darkest secrets right into her greedy, outstretched, hands...

‘Still, haven’t found anyone good enough to replace her though. And let me tell ya, it’s pretty much impossible to give readings and take care of the store. That’s why I stepped out just now.’ She shrugs. ‘Surf was calling, and I needed a break. Guess I left the door open again.’

Her eyes meet mine, sparkling and deep. And I can’t tell if she truly believes she left the door open, or if she suspects me. But when I try to peer into her head to see for myself, I’m stopped by the wall she’s erected to safeguard her thoughts from people like me. All I have to go by is the brilliant purple aura I failed to see before- it is color waving and swaying, beckoning to me.

‘So far all I got are a stack of applications from amateurs. But I’m so desperate to get my weekends back, I’m ready to toss their names in a bowl and pick one just to get it over with.’ She shakes her head and flashes those dimples again.

- And-

Even though part of me can’t believe what I’m about to do, the other part, the more practical part, urges me on, recognizing the perfect opportunity when it’s standing before me.

‘Maybe I can help.’ I hold my breath as I wait for her reply. But when my only response is a set of narrowed lids accompanied by the slightest curling of lips, I add, ‘Seriously. You don’t even have to pay me!’

She squints even further, those amazing green eyes practically disappearing from sight.

‘What I meant was you don’t have to pay me all that much,’ I say, not wanting to come off as some weird desperate freak who gives it away for free. ‘I’ll work for just over minimum wage - but only because I’m so good I’ll be living off the tips.’

‘You’re psychic?’ She folds her arms and tilts her head back, gazing at me with complete disbelief.

I straighten my posture and try not to fidget. Hoping to appear professional, mature, someone she can trust to help run her store. ‘Yup...’ I nod, unable to keep from wincing, unused to confiding my abilities to anyone, much less a stranger. 'I just sort of know things- the information just sort of comes to me it's hard to explain.'

She looks at me, wavering, then focusing just to my right as she says, 'So what exactly are you then?'

I shrug, fingers playing with the zipper on my hoodie, drawing it up and down, down and up, having no idea what she means.

'Are your clairaudient, clairvoyant, clairsentient, clairgustance, Clair-sent, or clairt-agency? Which is it?' She shrugs.

'All of the above.' I nod, having no idea what half those things mean, but figuring if it's got anything even remotely to do with psychic abilities, then I can probably do it.

'But you're not mediumistic,' she says, as though it's a fact.

'I can see spirits.' I shrug. 'But only the ones that are still here, not the ones who've crossed-' I stop, pretending to clear my throat, knowing it's better not to mention the bridge, School, or any of that. '-I can't see the ones who've crossed over.' I shrug, hoping she doesn't try to push it since that's as far as I'll go.

She squints, gazes roaming from the top of my pale blond head and all the way down to my Nike clad feet. A gaze that makes my whole- body quiver. Reaching for a long-sleeved tee stashed under the counter and yanking it over her head before she looks at me and says, 'Well, eternally, if you want to work here, you're going to have to pass the audition.'

Naddalin locks the front door then leads me down a short hall and into a small room on the right. I follow behind, hands flexed by my sides, staring at the peace sign on the back of her tee and reminding myself that if she does anything creepy, I can take her down quickly and make her regret the day she ever went after me.

She motions toward a padded foldable chair facing a small square table covered by a shiny blue cloth, taking the seat just opposite me and propping her barefoot on her knee as she says, 'So, what's your specialty?'

I gaze at her, hands folded, focusing on taking slow deep breaths while trying not to squirm.

‘Tarot cards? Runes? I Ching? Psychometry? Which is it?’

I glance at the door, knowing I could reach it in a fraction of a second, which might cause a stir, but so what?

‘You are going to give me a reading, right?’ Her gazes' levels on mine. ‘You do realize that’s what I meant by audition?’ Her laughs, displaying a matching set of dimples as she swings her dreads over her shoulder and laughs some more.

I stare at the tablecloth, tracing the bumpy raw silk with my fingers, heart rising to my cheeks when I remember Naddalin’s last words, how she can always sense me, and hoping she was just saying that- that she can’t sense me now.

‘I don’t need anything,’ I mumble, still unwilling to meet her gaze. ‘All I need is a quick touch of your hand and I’m good to go.’

‘Palmistry,’ she nods. ‘Not what I would’ve expected, but okay.’ She leans toward me, hands open, palms up, ready to go.

I swallow hard, seeing the deeply etched lines, but that’s not where the story lives - at least not for me. ‘I don’t actually read ’em,’ I say, voice betraying my nervousness, as I work up the courage to touch her. ‘It’s more the- the energy- I just- tune into it. That’s where all the info is.’

She pulls back, studying me so closely I can’t meet her eyes. Knowing I need to just touch her, get it over with.

- And-

I need to do it now.

‘Is it just the hand, or- ?’ She flexes her fingers, the calluses lining her palms rising and falling again.

I clear my throat, wondering why I’m so nervous, why I feel like I’m betraying Naddalin when all I’m trying to do is land a job that’ll make my aunt happy. ‘No, it can be anywhere. Your ear, your nose, even your big toe- doesn’t matter, it all reads the same. The hand’s just more accessible, you know?’

‘More accessible than the big toe?’ She smiles, those sea-green eyes seeking mine.

I take a deep breath, thinking how coarse and rough her hands appear, especially compared to Naddalin's whose are almost softer than mine. And somehow, even just the thought of that makes the whole moment feels off. Now that our touch is forbidden, just being alone with another guy feels sordid, illicit, wrong.

I reach toward her, eyes shut tight, reminding myself it's just a job interview - that there's really no reason I can't land the thing quickly and painlessly. Pressing my finger to the center of her palm and feeling the soft, gentle give of her flesh.

Allowing her stream of energy to flow through me - so peaceful, serene, it's like wading into the calmest of seas. So different from the rush of tingle and heart I've grown used to with Naddalin - at least until the shock of Naddalin's life story unfolds.

I yank my hand back as though I've been stung, fumbling for the amulet just under my top, noting the alarm on her face as I rush to explain. 'I'm sorry.' I shake my head, angry with myself for overreacting. 'Normally I wouldn't do that. Normally I'm way more discreet. I was just a little surprised that's all. I didn't expect to see anything quite so -' I stop, knowing my inane babbling is only making it worse. 'Normally, when I give readings, I hide my reactions much better than that.' I nod, forcing my gaze to meet her, knowing whatever I say won't hide the fact that I choked like the worst kind of amateur.

'Seriously...' I smile, lips stretching in a way that can't be convincing; 'I'm like the ultimate poker face.' Peering at her again and seeing the isn't quite working. 'A poker face that is also full of empathy and compassion,' I stammer, unable to stop the runaway train. 'I mean, really - I'm just - full of it -' I cringe, shaking my head as I gather my things so I can call it a day. There's no way hell he will hire me now.

She slides to the edge of her seat, leaning so close I struggle to breathe. 'So-o, tell me,' she says, gaze like a hand on my wrist, holding me in place. 'What exactly did you see?'

I swallow hard, closing my eyes for a moment and replaying the movie I just saw in my head. The images so clear, dancing before me, as I say, 'you're different.' I peer at her, her body unmoving, gaze steady, allowing no clues as to whether or not I'm on track.

‘But then, you’ve always been different. Ever since you were little you’ve seen them.’ I swallow hard and avert my gaze, the image of her in her crib, smiling and waving at the grandmother who passed years before her birth now etched in my brain.

‘And when-’ I pause, not wanting to say it, but knowing that if I want the job, then I’d better get to it. ‘But when your father- shot herself- back when you were ten- you thought you were to blame. Convinced your insistence on seeing your mother, who, by the way, passed just one year before, somehow sent her over the edge. It was years before you accepted the truth, that your father was just lonely, depressed, and anxious to be with your mother again. Even so, sometimes you still doubt it.’

I gaze at her, noting how she hasn’t so much as flinched, though something in those deep green eyes hints at the truth.

‘She tried to visit a few times. Wanting to apologize for what she did, but even though you sensed her, you blocked it. Sick of being teased by your classmates and scolded by the nuns- not to mention your foster dad who-’ I shake my head, not wanting to continue, but knowing I must.

‘You just wanted to be normal.’ I shrug. ‘Treated like everyone else.’ I trace my fingers over the tablecloth, throat beginning to tighten, knowing exactly how it feels to long to fit in, all the while knowing you never truly can. ‘But after you ran away and met Lina, who, by the way, is not your real grandmother- your real grandparents are dead.’ I look at her again, wondering if she’s surprised that I knew that but she gives nothing away. ‘Anyway, she took you in, fed you, clothed you, she...’

‘She saved my life.’ She sighs, leaning back in her seat, long tanned fingers rubbing her eyes. ‘In more ways than one. I was so lost and she-’

‘Accepted you for who you really are.’ I nod, seeing the whole story before me, as though I’m right there.

‘And who’s that?’ She asks hands splayed on her knees, gazing at me. ‘Who am I really?’

I look at her, not even pausing when I say, ‘A guy so smart you finished high school in tenth grade. A guy with such amazing mediumistic abilities you have helped hundreds of people and asked very little in exchange. And yet, despite all of that, you are also a guy who’s So-o-’ I look at her, lips lifting at the corners. ‘Well, I was going to say lazy- but since I really do want the job, I’ll say laid- back instead.' I laugh, relieved when she laughs along with me. 'And given the choice, you'd never work another day. You'd spend the rest of eternity just searching for that one perfect wave.'

'Is that a metaphor?' She asks, a crooked smile on her face.

'Not in your case.' I shrug. 'In your case, it's a fact.'

She then nods, leaning back in her chair, gazing at me in a way that makes my stomach dance. Dropping forward again, feet flat on the floor when she says, 'Guilty.' Eyes wistful, searching mine. 'And now, since there are no secrets left since you have peered right into the core of my soul- I must ask, any insights into my future- a certain blonde perhaps?'

I shift in my seat a little, preparing to speak when she cuts me right off.

'And I am talking the immediate future, as on Friday night. Will Emmah ever agree to go out with me?'

'Emmah?' My voice cracks as my eyes practically pop out of my head. So much for the poker face, I was bragging about.

Watching as she closes her eyes and shakes her head, those long, golden dreadlocks contrasting so nicely with her gorgeous dark skin. 'Anastasia Pappas, aka Emmah,' she says, unaware of my sigh of relief, thrilled to know it is some other horrible Emmah and not the one I know.

Tuning in to the energy surrounding her name and knowing right away that it is never going to happen at least not in the way that she thinks. 'You really want to know?' I ask, knowing I could save her a lot of wasted effort by telling her now, but doubt she really wants to hear the truth as much as she claims. 'I mean, wouldn't you rather just wait and see how it plays?' I look at her, hoping he will agree.

'Is that what you're going to say to your clients?' She asks, back to business again.

I shake my head, looking right at her. 'Hey, if they're fool enough to ask, then I'm fool enough to tell.' I smile. 'So, I guess the question is, how big of a fool are you?'

She pauses, hesitates for so long that I worry that I took it too far. But then she smiles, right hand extended as she rises from her seat. 'Fool enough to hire you. Now I know why you wouldn't shake hands the first time around.' Her nods, squeezing my hand for a few seconds too long. 'That's one of the most amazing readings I've ever had.'

‘One of?’ I lift my brow in the mock offense as I reach for my bag and walk alongside her.

She laughs, heading for the door and glancing at me when she says, ‘Why don’t you stop by tomorrow morning, say around ten?’

I pause, knowing there is no way I can possibly do that.

‘What? Do you prefer to sleep in? Join the club.’ She shrugs. ‘But believe me, if I can do it, you can too.’

‘It’s not that.’ I pause, wondering why I am so reluctant to tell her. I mean, now that- I have the job what do I care what she thinks?

She looks at me, waiting, gaze adding up the seconds.

‘It’s just- I have class.’ I shrug, thinking how class sounds so much older than a school like I am in college or something.

She squints, looking me over again. ‘Where?’

‘Um, over at Bay View,’ I mumble, trying not to wince when I say it aloud.

‘The high school?’ Her eyes narrow further, newly informed.

‘Wow, you really are psychic.’ I laugh, knowing I sound nervous, stupid, coming clean when I add, ‘I’m finishing my junior year.’

She looks at me for a moment too long a moment- then she turns and opens the door. ‘You seem older,’ she says, the words so abstract I am not sure if they were meant for me or for her. ‘Stop by when you can. I’ll show you how to work the register and a few other things around here.’

‘You want me to sell stuff? I thought I was just giving readings?’ Surprised to hear my job description expanding so quickly.

‘When you are not giving readings, you’ll be working on the floor. Is that a problem?’

I shake my head as she holds the door open. ‘Just- just one thing.’ I bite down on my lip, unsure how to go ahead. ‘Well, two things actually. First- do you mind if I go by a different name- you know, for the readings and stuff? I live with my aunt, and while she's totally cool and all, she doesn't exactly know about my abilities, so-

'Be whoever you want.' She shrugs. 'No worries. But since I need to start booking appointments, who do you want to be?'

I pause, not having thought the through until now. Wondering if I should choose Rachel after my best friend in Oregon, or something even more common like Anne or Jenny or something like that. But knowing how people always expect psychics to be about as far from normal as it gets, I gaze toward the beach and choose the third thing I see, bypassing Tree and Basketball Court as I say, 'Avalon.' Immediately like the sound of it. 'You know, like the town on Catalina Island?'

She nods, following me outside as she asks, 'And the second thing?'

I turn, taking a deep breath and hoping she will listen when I say, 'You can do better than Emmah.'

She looks at me, gaze moving over my face, clearly resigned to the truth if not exactly thrilled to hear it from me.

'You have a serious history of falling for all the wrong girls.' I shake my head. 'You do know that, right?'

I wait for a response, some recognition of what I just said, but she just shrugs and waves me away. Still watching as I head to my car, having no idea I can hear her when she thinks: Do not I know it.

The moment I pull into the drive Jaylynn calls my cell, telling me to just go ahead and order a pizza for dinner since she has to work late. And even though I'm tempted to tell her about my new job, I don't. I mean, obviously, I need to inform her, if for no other reason than to spare me the one she's lined up, but still, there's no way I can admit to getting the particular job. she will think it is weird. Even if I omit all the stuff about getting paid to give readings (and believe me, I would never dream of mentioning that) she will still think a job at a metaphysical bookstore is strange. Maybe even silly. Who knows?

Jaylynn's far too reasonable and rational to ever get behind such a thing. Preferring to live in a world that is sturdy and solid, that makes perfect sense, versus the real one that is anything but. And while I hate always having to lie to her, I really do not see how I have much of a choice. There is just no way she can ever learn the truth about me, let alone that I will be giving readings under the code name of Avalynn.

I will just tell her I got a job somewhere local, someplace normal, like a regular bookstore, or a Starbucks perhaps. And then, of course, I will have to find a way to back the story up in case she decides to follow up on all that.

I park in the garage and head up the stairs, tossing my bag onto my bed without even looking, then heading for my closet as I yank off my tee. Just about to unzip my jeans when Naddalin says, 'Do not mind me, I'm just sitting here enjoying the view.' I cover my chest with my arms, heart beating triple time as Naddalin lets out a low, sweet white and Jasmine at me.

'I didn't even see you. I didn't even sense you for that matter,' I say, reaching for my tee again.

'Guess you were too distracted.' Her smiles, patting the space right beside her, face creasing with laughter when I pull on my shirt before joining her.

'What're you doing here?' I ask, not really interested in the answer, just glad to be near her again.

'I figured since Jaylynn's working late-'

'How'd you-' But then I shake my head and laugh. Of course, she knows. She can read everyone's mind, including mine, but only when I want her to. And even though I usually leave my shield down, making my thoughts accessible for her to view, right now I just cannot. I feel like I need to explain, tell my side of the story before she can peek in my head and draw her own conclusions.

'And since you did not come by after school-' She then leans toward me, eyes seeking mine.

'I wanted to give you some time with the twins.' I pull a pillow onto my belly and finger the seam. 'You know, so you could get used to being together and- stuff-' I shrug, meeting her gaze, knowing she's not buying it, not for a second.

'Oh, we're quite used to each other.' She laughs. 'I assure you of that.' She shakes her head. 'It's been quite a day- very busy and very interesting, for lack of a better word. But we missed you.' She smiles, eyes grazing over my hair, my face, my lips, like the sweetest lingering kiss. 'It would've been so much better if you'd been there.'

I avert my gaze, doubting any of that is the slightest bit true. Muttering under my breath when I say, 'I bet.'

She touches my chin, making me face her, face masked with concern when she asks, 'Hey, what's the about?'

I press my lips together and look away, scrunching my pillow so tight it threatens to burst, wishing I hadn't said anything because now I have to explain. 'I'm just-' I shake my head. 'I'm just not so sure the twins would agree.' I shrug. 'They pretty much blame me for everything. And it's not like they don't have a point. I meant-'

But before I can finish, I realize something- Naddalin is touching me.

Like touching me touching me.

For reals.

No glove, no telepathic embrace, just good old- fashioned skin-on-skin contact- or at least, almost contact.

'How'd you-' I look at her, her eyes shining with laughter when she catches me gaping at her bare, gloveless hand.

'You like?' She smiles, grasping my arm and lifting it high, both of us watching as the thin veil of energy, the only thing separating my skin from her, pulsates between us. 'I've been working on it all day. Nothing's going to keep me from you, Ever. Nothing.' Her nods, her gaze meeting mine.

I look at her, mind racing with possibilities, of all that could mean. Enjoying the almost feel of her skin, separated only by the thinnest shroud of pure, vibrating energy, invisible to everyone but us. And while it does somewhat temper the usual rush of tingle and heart, and while it could never compare to the real thing, I miss her so much- just being with her- I will take what I can get.

I lean into her, watching the veil expand until it stretches from our heads to our toes. Allowing us to lie together in the way that we used to or at least almost in the way that we used to.

‘Much better.’ I smile, hands roaming her face, her arms, her chest. ‘Not to mention how it’s far less embarrassing than the black leather glove.’

‘Embarrassing?’ She pulls away and looks at me, mock outrage displayed on her face.

‘Come on.’ I laugh. ‘Even you have to admit it was a total fashion faux pas. I thought Jasmine was going to have a seizure every time she saw it,’ I murmur, inhaling her wonderful, warm, musky scent as I bury my face in her neck. ‘So, how would you, do it?’ My lips grazing her skin, longing to taste every inch. ‘How’d you harness the magic of School and bring it back here?’

‘It’s got nothing to do with School,’ she whispers, lips at the curve of my ear. ‘It’s just the magic of energy. Besides, you should know by now that most everything you can do there, can be done here as well.’

I gaze at her, remembering Ava and all the elaborate gold jewelry and designer clothes she used to manifest there, and how upset she always was when they did not survive the return trip home.

But before, I can even mention it, she says, ‘While it has true that the things manifested there cannot be transferred here, if you understand how the magic works, if you truly get how everything is just made up of energy, then there’s no reason you can’t manifest the same things here. Like your Lamborghini, for instance.’

‘I’d hardly call it my Lamborghini,’ I say, cheeks flushing even though it was not so long ago when she had a thing for exotic cars too. ‘The second I was done with it I sent it right back. I mean, it’s not like I kept it.’

She smiles, burying her hand in my hair and smoothing the ends between the tips of her fingers. ‘In between manifesting things for the twins, I perfected it.’

‘What kinds of things?’ I ask, moving so I can better see her, at once distracted by the sight of her lips, remembering how warm and silky they once felt on mine, wondering if the new energy shield will allow us to experience that again.

‘It all started with a flat-screen TV.’ Her sighs. ‘Or, should I say flat screens since they ended up needing one for each of their rooms, plus another two for the den that they’ll share. And not long after I got them all hooked up and working, they sat down to watch and not five minutes in they were inundated with images of things they couldn’t live without.’

I squint, surprised to hear that, since the twins never seemed to care all that much about material things back in School, but maybe that's because material things tend to lose most of their value once you can manifest whatever you want. I guess losing their magic has made them just like anyone else- longing for everything just out of their reach.

'Trust me, they're an advertiser's dream.' She smiles, shaking her head. 'Falling right into that coveted youth market of thirteen to thirty.'

'Except for the fact that you did not actually buy any of those things, did you? You just closed your eyes and made them appear. Hardly the same as going to the store and charging it on your credit card. In fact, do you even have a credit card?' Never having seen her even carry a wallet, much less a pile of plastic.

'No need.' She then laughs, finger skimming the bridge of my nose before her lips meet the tip. 'But even though I didn't actually go out and buy all of those things as you so generously pointed out...' She smiles. 'That does not make those commercials any less effective, which was really my point.'

I pull away, knowing she's expecting me to laugh, or at least say something lighthearted in reply, but I can't. And even though I hate to disappoint her, I still shake my head and say, 'Either way, you need to be careful.' I shift my body, so my gaze can better meet her.

'You shouldn't spoil them so much, or make them so comfortable they're reluctant to leave.' She squints at me, clearly not following my meaning, so I rush ahead to explain. 'What I mean is, you need to remember that living with you is a temporary solution. Our main goal is to look after them until we can restore their magic and get them back to school, which is where they belong.'

She rolls onto her back and stares at the ceiling. Turning her face toward mine as she says, 'About that.'

I hold my breath and look at her, my stomach dipping ever so slightly.

'I've been thinking-' Her squints. 'Who's to say School is where they belong?'

I balk, an argument pressing forth from my lips until she raises her finger and stops it right there.

‘Eternally, the question as to whether or not they return, well, don’t you think that’s something they should decide? I’m not sure we’re the ones who should be making those choices.’

‘But we’re not choosing,’ I say, voice shrill, unsteady. ‘That’s what they want! Or at least that’s what they said the night I found them. They were furious with me, blaming me for the loss of their magic, for stranding them here- or at least Rayne was; Neville- well, Neville was just Neville.’ I shrug. ‘But still, are you saying that’s changed?’

She closes her eyes for a moment, before leveling her gaze back on mine. ‘I’m not sure they even know what they want at the point,’ she says. ‘They’re a little overwhelmed, excited by the possibilities of being here, and yet too terrified to even step outside. I just think we should give them some time and space and keep our minds open to the possibility of them staying a little bit longer than planned. Or at least until they’re fully adjusted, and better able to decide for themselves. Besides, I owe them, it’s the least I can do. Don’t forget they helped me find you.’

I swallow hard and avert my gaze, torn between wanting what’s best for the twins while worried about the impact it’ll have on Naddalin and me. I mean, they’ve been here less than a day and I’m already mourning my access to her, which is a totally selfish way to view two people in need. Still, I don’t think you have to be psychic to know that with the two of them around, requiring all kinds of assistance, times like the- when it’s just Naddalin and me- will be severely limited.

‘Is that the first time you met? In School?’ I ask, seeming to remember Rayne saying something about Naddalin helping them, not the other way around.

Naddalin shakes her head, eyes on mine when she says, ‘No, that was just the first time I’d seen them in a long time. We actually go way back all the way back to Salem.’

I look at her, jaw dropped, wondering if she was there during the trials, though she’s quick to dispel that.

‘It was just before the trouble started, and I was only passing through. They’d gotten into some mischief and couldn’t find their way, home- so I gave them a ride in my carriage and their aunt was never the wiser.’ She laughs some...

- And-

I'm just about to make some crappy little comment, something about her spoiling and enabling them from the very start, when she says, 'They've suffered an extraordinarily hard life- losing everything they've ever known and loved at a very young age- surely you can relate to that? I know I can.'

I sigh, feeling small and selfish and embarrassed that I even needed to be reminded of that. Determined to stick to the practical when I say, 'But who's going to raise them?' Hoping it will seem like my concerns are far less about me and more about them. I mean, with all of their unmitigated weirdness, not to mention their totally bizarre history, where would they go? Who could possibly look after them?

'We're going to look after them.' Naddalin rolls onto her side and makes me face her again. 'You and I. Together. We're the only ones who can.'

I sigh, wanting to turn away, but drawn to the warmth of her all-encompassing gaze. 'I'm just not sure we're fit to be parents.' I shrug, hand moving over her shoulder, getting lost in her tangle of hair. 'Or role models, or guardians, or whatever. We're too young!' I add, thinking it's a good and valid point, and expecting just about any reaction but the laughter I get.

'Too young?' She shakes her head. 'Speak for yourself! I have been around for a while, you know. Plenty long enough to qualify as a suitable guardian for the twins. Besides.' She smiles. 'How hard can it be?'

I close my eyes and shake my head, remembering my feeble attempts to guide Riley both in human and ghost form, and how I failed miserably. And to be honest, I'm just not sure I'm up for it again. 'You have no idea what you're getting into,' I tell her. 'You can't even begin to imagine what it's like to guide two headstrong, thirteen- year- old girls. It's like herding cats- completely impossible.'

'Eternally,' she says, voice low, coaxing, determined to ease my concerns and chase all the dark clouds away. 'I know what's really bothering you, believe me, I do. But it's just five more years until they turn eighteen and head off on their own, and then we'll have the freedom to do whatever we want. What're five years when we have all of eternity?'

But I shake my head again, refusing to be swayed. 'If they head off on their own,' I say. 'If. Believe me, there are plenty of kids who stick around the house long after that.'

‘Yes, but the difference is, you and I won’t let them.’ She then smiles, eyes practically begging me to lighten up and smile too. ‘We’ll teach them all the magic they’ll need to gain their indie pen dance and get by on their own. Then we’ll send ‘em off and wish ‘em well and go somewhere on our own.’

- And-

The way she smiles, the way she gazes into my eyes and smooths my hair off my face makes it impossible to stay mad, impossible to waste any more time on a topic like when my body’s so close to her.

‘Five years is nothing when you’ve already lived for six hundred,’ she says, lips at my cheek, my neck, my ear.

I snuggle closer, knowing she’s right, despite the fact that my perspective’s a little different from her. Having never spent more than two decades in any one incarnation makes five years spent babysitting the twins seem like an eternity.

She pulls me to her, arms locked tightly around me, comforting me in a way I wish could last forever. ‘Are we good?’ She whispers... ‘Are we finished with the?’

I nod, pressing my body hard against her, having no need for words. The only thing I want now, the only thing that’ll make me feel better is the reassuring feel of her lips.

I shift my body so it’s covering her, conforming to the bend of her chest, the valley of her torso, the bulk near her hips. Hearts beating in perfect cadence, vaguely aware of the slim veil of energy pulsating between us as I lower my mouth to her- pressing and pushing and kneading together- weeks of longing rising to the surface- until all I want to do is infuse my body with her.

She moans, a low primal sound coming from deep within, hands clutched at my waist, bringing me closer ‘til there’s nothing between us but two sets of clothes that need to be shed.

I fumble at her fly as she pulls at my tee, breath meeting in short, ragged gasps as our fingers hurry as fast as they can, unable to complete their tasks quickly enough to satisfy our need.

- And-

Just as I’ve unbuttoned her jeans and start to slide them down, I realize we’ve gotten so close, the energy veil was pushed out.

‘Naddalin!’ I gasp, watching as she leaps from the bed, breath coming so heavy and fast, her words are clipped at the end.

‘Eternally - I’m-’ She shakes her head. ‘I’m sorry I thought it was safe - I didn’t realize’

I reach for my tee and cover myself, cheeks flushed, insides aflame, knowing she’s right, we can’t take the risk- can’t afford to get caught up like that.

‘I’m sorry too- I think- I think maybe I pushed it away and-’ I bow my head, allowing my hair to fall into my face, feeling small and examined, sure I’m to blame.

The mattress dips as she returns to my side, the veil fully restored as she lifts my chin and makes me face her again. ‘It’s not your fault- I- I lost focus- I was so caught up in you I couldn’t maintain it.’

‘It’s okay. Really,’ I say.

‘No, it’s not; I’m older than you- I should have more control-’ Her shakes her head and stares at the wall, jaw clenched, gaze far away, eyes suddenly narrowing as she turns back to me and says, ‘eternally- how do we know if she is even real?’

I squint, having no idea what she means.

‘What kind of proof do we have? How do we know Naddalin’s not just playing us, having a bit of fun at our expense?’

I take a deep breath and shrug, realizing I have no proof at all. My eyes meeting her as I replay the scene from that day, all the way to the end where I add my blood to the mix and make Naddalin drink, realizing the only proof I have is Naddalin’s extremely unreliable word.

‘Who’s to say she is even legit?’ Her eyes widen as an idea begins to form. ‘Naddalin’s a liar- we’ve no reason to trust her.’

‘Yeah, but it's not like we can test it. I mean, what if it’s not a big game, what if it is legit? We can’t take the risk, can we?’

Naddalin smiles, rising from the bed and heading for my desk where she closes her eyes and manifests a tall white candle in an elaborate gold holder, a sharp silver dagger, its blade pointy and smooth, its handle encrusted with crystals and gems, and a gold-framed mirror her sets down beside them, motioning for me to join her as she says, 'Normally I would say ladies first - but in the case -'

She holds her hand over the glass and raises the knife, placing the edge to her palm and tracing the curve of her lifeline, watching her blood flow onto the mirror, pooling, coagulating, before closing her eyes and setting the candle aflame. The wound already healed by the time she passes the blade through the blaze, cleansing, purifying, before handing it to me and urging me to do the same.

I lean toward her, inhaling deeply as I quickly slice through my flesh. At first wincing at the sharp stab of pain, then watching fascinated, as the blood pours from my palm and onto the mirror where it slowly creeps toward her.

We stand together, bodies still, breath halted, watching as two ruby red splotches meet, mingle, a coalesce - the perfect embodiment of our genetic makeup joining as one - the very thing Naddalin warned us against.

Waiting for something to happen, some sort of catastrophic punishment for what we've both done - but getting nothing - no reaction at all.

'Well, I'll be damned -' Naddalin says, eyes meeting mine. 'It's fine! Perfectly -'

Her words cut short by the sudden spark and sizzle as our blood begins to boil, conducting so much heat a huge plume of smoke bursts from the mirror and fills up the air - crackling and spitting until the blood evaporates completely. Leaving behind only the sheerest layer of dust on a burnt-out mirror.

Exactly what'll happen to Naddalin if our DNA should meet.

We gape, speechless, unsure what to say. But words are no longer necessary, the meaning is clear.

Naddalin's not playing. Her warning was real.

Naddalin and I can never be together.

Unless I pay her price.

'Well...' Naddalin nods, struggling to appear calm though her face is clearly stricken. 'Guess Naddalin's not nearly the liar I accused her of being at least not in the case.'

‘Which also means she has the antidote - and all I have to do now is-’

But I can’t even finish before Naddalin’s cutting me off. ‘Ever, please, don’t even go there. Just do me a favor and stay away from Naddalin. She’s dangerous and unstable, and I don’t want you anywhere near her, okay? Just-’ Her shakes her head, and runs her hand through her hair, not wanting me to see how distraught she really is and heading for the door as she says, ‘Just give me some time to figure things out. I’ll think of a way.’

She looks at me, so shaken by the events she’s determined to keep her distance. Manifesting a single red tulip into my newly herald palm in place of a kiss, before heading down the stairs and out my front door.

The next day, when I get home from school, Haven’s on my front steps, eyes smeared with mascara, royal blue bangs hanging limply in her face, with a blanketed bundle clutched tight in her arms.

‘I know I should’ve called.’ She scrambles to her feet; the face is red and swollen as she sniffs back the tears. ‘I guess I didn’t really know what to do, so I came here.’ She rearranges the blanket, showing me a solid black cat with amazing green eyes that appears very weak.

‘Is she yours?’ I glance at them, noticing how both of their auras are ragged and frayed.

‘She-’ Haven nods, fussing with the blanket and raising it back to her chest.

‘I didn’t know you had a cat.’ I squint, wanting to help but unsure what to do. My dad was allergic, so we always had dogs. ‘Is the why you weren’t at school today?’

She nods, following me into the kitchen where I grab a bottle of water and pour it into a bowl.

‘How long have you had her?’ I ask, watching as she places the cat in her lap and brings the bowl to her face. But the cat’s not the least bit interested and quickly turns away.

‘A few months.’ She shrugs, giving up on the water and smoothing the top of her head. ‘Nobody knows. Well, outside of Josh, Austin, and the maid who’s sworn to secrecy, but nobody else. My mom would flip. God forbid a real living thing to mess up her designer decorating scheme.’ She shakes her head. ‘She lives in my room, mostly under the bed. But I leave the window cracked so she can get out and wander around now and then. I mean, I know they’re supposed to live longer if you keep 'em inside, but what kind of life is that?' She looks at me, her normally bright sunshiny aura turned gray with worry.

'What's her name?' I peer at the cat, keeping my voice to a whisper, trying to hide my concern. From what I can see, she's not long for the world.

'Charm...' The corners of her lips lifting ever so slightly as she glances at us. 'I named her that because she's lucky- or at least it seemed that way at the time. I found her just outside my window the first time Josh and I kissed. It seemed so Dadaistic.' She shrugs. 'Like a good sign. But now-' She shakes her head and looks away.

'Maybe I can help,' I say, an idea beginning to form. One I'm not sure will work, but still, from what I can see I've got nothing to lose.

'She's not exactly a kitten. She's an old lady now. The vet told me to keep her comfortable for as long as I can. And I totally would've kept her home since she really likes it under my bed, but my mom's decision to redo all the bedrooms even though my dad's threatening to sell, and now the decorator is there, along with a Realtor, and everyone's fighting and the house is a mess.

And since Josh is auditioning for the new band, and since Jasmine is getting ready for her performance tonight, I thought I'd come here.' She looks at me.

'Not that you were last choice or anything.' She cringes, realizing what she just said. 'It's just that you're always so busy with Naddalin and I didn't want to bother you. But if you're busy, I don't have to stay. I mean, if she's coming over or something, I can just-'

'Trust me.' I lean against the counter and shake my head. 'Naddalin's-' I stare at the wall, wondering just how to phrase it. 'Naddalin's pretty busy these days. So, I doubt she'll be dropping by anytime soon.'

I glance at her and Charm, reading her aura and knowing she's even more distraught than she seems. And even though I know it's not right, ethical, or whatever, even though I know it's the circle of life and you're not supposed to interfere, I can't stand to see my friend suffer like them, not when I have a half bottle of elixir sitting inside my bag.

'I'm just sad.' She sighs, scratching just under Charm's chin. 'I mean, obviously, she's lived a good long life and all, but still. Why does it have to be so sad when it ends?'

I shrug, barely listening, mind buzzing with the promise of a new idea.

‘It’s so weird how like one minute everything’s fine- or maybe even not so fine- but still, you’re at least here. And then the next- gone. Like Evangeline. Never to be seen or heard from again.’

I drum my fingers against the granite counter, knowing that’s not exactly true, but unwilling to refute it.

‘I guess I just don’t get the point. It’s like, why should you bother getting attached to anything if, A: It’s never- ever going to last, and B: It hurts like hell when it’s over?’ She shakes her head. ‘Because if everything’s finite, if everything has a definite beginning, middle, and end, then why even get started in the first place? What’s the point when everything just leads to The End?’

She blows her bangs out of her eyes and looks at me. ‘And I don’t mean death-like-’ She nods toward her cat. ‘Although that’s where we all end up no matter how hard we fight.’

I glance at her and Charm, nodding as though I’m right there. Like I’m just like everyone else. Waiting my turn in a long morbid line.

‘I mean death in a more metaphorical way. In a nothing lasts forever way, you know? Because it’s true, nothing’s built to last. Nothing. Nothing- thing.’

‘But Haven-’ I start, stopping the second she shoots me a look meant to silence.

‘Listen, before you try to sell me all that bright side nonsense you’re just dying to spout, name one thing that doesn’t end.’ She narrows her gaze in a way that sets me on edge, making me wonder if she knows about me if she’s trying to bait me somehow. But when I take a deep breath and look at her again, it’s clear she’s battling her own set of demons, not me.

‘Can’t do it, right?’ She shakes her head. ‘Unless you were going to say God, or universal love, or whatever, but that’s not what I’m talking about, anyway. I mean, Charm is dying, my parents are on the verge of divorcing, and, let’s face it, Josh and I are going to end eventually too. And if it’s purely an inevitable fact, then-’ She shakes her head and wipes her nose. ‘Well- I may as well take control of the situation and be the one who decides when.’

Hurt her, before she can hurt me. Because two things are for sure, A: It’s going to end, and B: Someone’s bound to get hurt. And why should that someone be me?’ She looks away, nose runny, lips twisted. 'Mark my words, from the point on, I'm Skaufyceol Girl. Everything runs right off me, nothing can stick.'

I look at her, sensing the isn't quite the whole story, but willing to take her at her word. 'You know what? You're right. You're absolutely right,' I say, seeing her look up in surprise. 'Everything is finite.' Everything but Naddalin, Naddalin, and me! 'And you're also right that you and Josh will probably end at some point, and not just because everything ends as you said, but because that's just the way it goes. Most high school relationships don't make it past graduation.'

'Is that how you see you and Naddalin?' She picks at Charm's blanket while looking at me. 'That you guys won't make it past grad night?'

I press my lips together and avert my gaze, knowing I'm pretty much the world's worst liar when I say, 'I- I try not to think about it too much. But what I meant was, just because something ends doesn't mean it's a bad thing or that someone's bound to get hurt, or that it should've never happened in the first place, or whatever. Because if each step brings us to the next, then how will we ever get anywhere, how can we ever grow if we avoid everything that might hurt us?'

She looks at me, nodding only slightly, as though she sees my point but won't fully concede.

'So-o, we pretty much have no choice but to continue, to just get out there and hope for the best. And who knows, we might even learn a thing or two along the way.' I look at her, knowing I haven't completely sold it, so I add, 'I guess what I'm trying to say is, you can't run away just because something won't last. You have to hang in there, let it play out. It's the only way you'll ever advance.' I shrug, wishing I could be a little more eloquent, but there it is. 'Think about it, if you didn't rescue your cat, if you didn't say yes when Josh asked you out- well, there's a lot of wonderful moments you would've missed.'

She looks at me, still wanting to argue, but not saying a word.

'Josh is a really sweet guy, and she's crazy about you. I don't think you should throw her overboard so soon. Besides,' I say, knowing she hears me but is not truly listening, 'you shouldn't make those kinds of decisions when you're feeling so stressed.'

'How about moving, then? Is that a good enough reason?'

'Josh is moving?' I squint. I hadn't seen that coming.

She shakes her head, scratching Charm on the spot between her ears when she says, 'Not Josh; Me. My dad keeps talking about selling the house, but damn if she'll discuss it with Austin or me.'

I look at her, tempted to peer inside her head and see for myself, but sticking to my earlier vow to allow my friends their privacy.

'All I know for sure is that the phrase resale value comes up all the time.' She shakes her head, looking at me when she says, 'But you know what the really means if any of them is actually true? It means I won't be going to Bay View next year. I won't get to graduate with my class. I won't be going to any Orange County high school for that matter.'

'I won't let them happen,' I say, gaze locked on her. 'There's no way you're leaving. You have to graduate with us-'

'Well, that's very nice and all.' She shrugs. 'But I'm not sure you can stop it. It's a little out of your league, don't you think?'

I glance at her and her cat, knowing it's not at all out of my league. Finding an antidote for Naddalin? Maybe. Helping my best friend stay in her zip code and save her cat? Not so much. There's plenty I can do. Plenty. But still, I just look at her and say, 'We'll work something out. Just trust me, okay? Maybe you can move in here with me and Jaylynn?' Nodding as though I mean it, even though Jaylynn would never have it. But still needing to put something out there, provide some kind of comfort since it's not like I can voice what I'm hoping to do.

'You'd do that?' She squints- 'Really?'

'Of course.' I shrug. 'Whatever it takes.'

She swallows hard and gazes around, shaking her head when she says, 'You know I'd never take you up on it, but still, it's nice to know that even with all our rough spots you're still my best friend.'

I squint, having always assumed it was Malcolm, not me.

'Well, you and Malcolm.' She laughs. 'I mean, I can have two best friends- an heir and a spare, as they say?' She wipes her nose again, shaking her head when she adds, 'I bet I look like crap, right? Go ahead, tell me, I can take it.'

‘You don’t look like crap,’ I say, wondering why she’s suddenly focused on her looks. ‘You look sad. There’s a difference. Besides, does it matter?’

‘It does if you’re considering whether or not you should hire me.’ She shrugs. ‘I’ve got a job interview, but there’s no way I can go looking like the. And it’s not like I can bring Charm.’

I gaze at her cat, watching the life- force energy slowly slipping away, knowing I have to move fast before it’s too late. ‘I’ll keep her. It’s not like I’m going anywhere anyway.’

She looks at me, wavering on whether or not she should leave her poor dead cat in my care. But I just nod, coming around to her side of the counter and lifting Charm out of her arms as I add, ‘Seriously. Just go do what you need to do, and I’ll babysit.’ I smile, urging her to agree.

She hesitates, glancing between me and Charm, then rummages through her oversized bag for a small, handheld mirror, before wetting her finger and clearing the mascara tracks from her cheeks.

‘I shouldn’t belong.’ She grabs a black pencil and draws a thick, smudgy line around each eye. ‘Maybe for an hour? Two at the most?’ She looks at me, trading the pencil for blush. ‘All you have to do is hold her and give her some water if she wants. But she probably won’t. She doesn’t want much of anything now.’ She coats her lips with a swipe of gloss and rearranges her bangs, before slinging her bag over her shoulder and heading for the door. Climbing into her car as she turns to me and says, ‘Thanks. I need the job more than you think. I need to start saving some money so I can emancipate myself like Naddalin. I’m tired of the crap.’

I look at her, unsure of what to say. Naddalin’s situation’s unique. Not at all what it seems.

‘And yeah, I know, I probably won’t be able to support myself in quite the same style as Naddalin, but still, I’d rather live in some crappy studio somewhere than be subject to my parents’ impulsive decisions and whirs. Anyway, you sure you’re okay with the m?’

I nod, hugging Charm tighter, mentally urging her to hold on, just a little bit longer, until I can help.

Haven slides her key into the ignition, the engine turning as she says, ‘I promised Naddalin I wouldn’t be late. And if I hurry, I might be on time.’ Checking her appearance in the rearview mirror as she shifts in reverse.

‘Naddalin?’ I freeze my expression one of pure panic but unable to change it.

She shrugs, backing out of my drive as she calls, ‘She’s the one who scored me the interview.’ Waving as she disappears down the street, leaving me with a dead cat in my arms, and no words to warn her.

‘You can’t do it,’ she says, barely having opened the door before she’s already shaking her head.

‘You don’t even know what I’m here for.’ I frown, hugging Charm tightly to my chest, wishing I hadn’t come here.

‘The cat is dying, and you want to know if it’s okay to save it and I’m telling you it’s not. You can’t do it.’ She shrugs, reading the situation more than my mind, which I purposely blocked so she can’t view my visit to Naddalin, which would really set her on edge.

‘Do you mean can’t as in not possible? Like the elixir won’t work on a feline? Or can’t as in the moral sense, as in don’t play God, always?’

‘Does it matter?’ She lifts her brow, stepping to the side and allowing me in.

‘Of course, it matters,’ I whisper, TV noise drifting down from upstairs, the twins’ daily dose of reality shows.

She heads into the den, plopping onto the couch and patting the space right beside her. And even though I’m annoyed by the way she’s acting, not even giving me a chance to explain, I still join her, rearranging the blanket, hoping one look at Charm will convince her.

‘I just don’t think you should jump to conclusions,’ I say, shifting my body so I’m facing her. ‘It’s not as simple as you think. It’s not black or white, it’s mostly all gray.’

She leans toward me, gazes softening as she moves her thumb back and forth under Charm’s chin. ‘I’m sorry, Ever. Really.’ She gazes at me before pulling away. ‘But even if the elixir did work- which, by the way, I’m not sure it would since I’ve never tried it on an animal before, but even if it did-’

‘Really?’ I look at her, surprised to hear that. ‘You’ve never had a pet you couldn’t bear to part with?’ My eyes graze over her, taking her in.

‘Not one that- I couldn’t bear to lose, no.’ She shakes her head.

I narrow my eyes, not sure how I feel about that.

‘Always, back in my day, we didn’t keep pets in quite the same way. And after I drank the elixir, I wasn’t interested in owning anything that might tie me down.’

I nod, catching the way she gazes at Charm and hoping there’s room to negotiate. ‘Fine. No pets. I get it,’ I say. ‘But do you get how someone might become so attached to their kitty they can’t bear to say goodbye?’

‘Are you asking if I know about attachment?’ She looks at me, gazes heavy, steady, fixed right on mine. ‘About love, and the unbearable grief that comes when it’s lost?’

I gaze down at my lap, feeling juvenile, foolish. I should’ve seen that coming.

‘There’s much more at stake than just saving a cat or granting eternal life - if there even is such a thing in the animal kingdom. The real question is, how will you explain it to Haven? What will you tell her when she returns only to find the dead cat, she left in your care is now miraculously cured - maybe even becoming a kitten again, who knows? How will you possibly explain that to her?’

I sigh, not having thought about that. Hadn’t really considered that if it does work, Charm won’t just be heralded, but physically transformed.

‘It’s not about it not working - I’ve no clue about that. And it’s not about your right to play God - you and I both know I’m the last one who should judge such a thing. It’s more about safeguarding our secrets. And while I know you have only the best intentions at heart, in the end, helping your friend will only ignite her suspicion. Raising questions that can never be answered simply or logically without revealing too much. Besides, Haven’s already onto us, or onto something at least. So now, more than ever, it’s important for us to lay low.’

I press my lips together, swallowing past the lump in my throat, hating that I’ve got so many amazing tools at my disposal, all of these magical abilities, but unable to use them, to help those whom I love.

‘I’m sorry,’ she says, hand hovering over my arm, hesitating to make contact until the veil comes along. ‘But as sad as it seems, it really is just the natural course of events. And believe me, animals accept these things far better than people do.’

I lean into her shoulder, into her touch, amazed by her power to comfort me no matter how bad things get. ‘I just feel so bad for her- her parents are always fighting- she might have to move- it’s making her question the point of everything. Kind of like I did when my world fell apart.’

‘Always -’ She starts, gazes soft, lips looming so close I can’t help but press mine against them- the moment cut short when the twins squeal their way down the stairs.

‘Naddalin- Neville won’t let me-’ Rayne stops, standing before us, dark eyes wider than usual when she says, ‘Omigod is that a cat?’

I glance at Naddalin. Since when does Rayne use words like - ‘Omigod’ - ‘An exclamation of surprise, pleasure, dismay?’

But she just shakes her head and laughs. ‘Don’t get too close.’ She glances between them. ‘And keep your voice down. The is a very sick cat. I’m afraid she doesn’t have very long.’

‘Then why don’t you save it?’ Rayne asks, prompting Neville to nod in agreement, the three of us gazing at Naddalin, our eyes wide and pleading.

‘Because we do not do things like that,’ she says, voice stern and parental. ‘That’s not how it’s done.’

‘But you saved Ever, and she’s not nearly as cute,’ Rayne says, kneeling before me ‘til her face is level with Charms.

‘Rayne-’ Naddalin starts.

But she just laughs, glancing between us when she says, ‘Just joking. You know I’m joking, right?’

I look at her, knowing she’s not, but not willing to press it. Just about to get up, wanting to get Charmed back before Haven returns when Neville kneels beside me and places her hand on Charm’s head, closing her eyes as she chants a series of indecipherable words.

‘No magic,’ Naddalin scolds. ‘Not in the case.’

But Neville just sighs and sits back on her heels. ‘It’s not like it works anyway,’ she says, still gazing at Charm. ‘She looks just like Jinx at that age, doesn’t she?’

‘Which time?’ Rayne giggles, nudging her sister as they both start to laugh.

‘We may have extended her life a few times,’ Neville says, cheeks pink as she glances at us, prompting me to look at Naddalin and think: See?

But she just shakes her head. Again- Haven?

‘Can we get a cat?’ Neville asks. ‘A black kitty like the?’ Tugging on her sleeve while gazing at her in a way that is hard to resist. ‘They’re wonderful companions and very good around the house. What do you say? Can we? Please?’

‘It’ll help us get our magic back,’ Rayne adds, nodding at her.

I look at Naddalin, reading her expression and knowing it is as good as done. Whatever the twins want, the twins get. It is as simple as that.

‘We’ll discuss it later,’ Naddalin says, trying a stern look, but the gesture’s empty, everyone knows it but her.

I get up from the couch and head for the door, needing to get Charmed back to the house before Haven returns.

‘Are you upset with me?’ Naddalin grasps my hand and leads me to my car.

I shake my head and smile. It is impossible to be mad at her, or at least not for very long. ‘I’m not going to lie; I was hoping you’d be on my side.’ I shrug, coaxing Charm into her carrier, before leaning against the door and pulling her close. ‘But it’s not like I don’t get your point. I just wanted to help Haven, that’s all.’

‘Just be there for her.’ She nods, dark gaze on mine. ‘That’s all she really wants from you anyway.’

She leans in to kiss me, gathering me into her arms, her hands moving over me and warming me to my core. Pulling away to gaze at me with those deep soulful eyes, the rock to my feather, my eternal partner, whose intentions are so solid and good- I can only hope she never learns of my betrayal, renegeing on my promise not to visit Naddalin just after saying I would not.

She then cups my face between the palms of her hands and peers into my eyes. Sensing my mood shifts so easily it is as though they are here.

I avert my gaze, thinking about Haven, Naddalin, the cat, and all the mounting mistakes- I cannot seem to stop making. Then clearing the thoughts and shaking my head, unwilling to visit that place when I say, 'See you tomorrow?' Barely finishing the words before she leans in to kiss me again, a slip of energy pulsating between her lips and mine.

Holding the moment for as long as we can, neither of us willing to break away, until a twin chorus of, 'Ew! Gross! Do we really have to watch that?' trails from the window upstairs.

'Tomorrow-' Naddalin smiles, seeing me safely into my car before heading inside.

Everything started out fine. As fine and normal as any other day. I woke up, showered, dressed, stopped by the kitchen to toss some cereal down the sink before chasing it with some OJ I'd swished in a glass- my usual morning routine so Jaylynn will think I ate the breakfast she made.

Nodding and smiling the whole way to school as Jasmine yammers on and on about Holt, or France, or Holt and France, as I sit there beside her, stopping, turning, speeding, slowing, chasing yellow lights, waiting for the moment when I can see Naddalin again. Knowing the mere sight of her will turn all darkness to light, even if the effect is just temporary.

But the moment- I pull into the lot the first thing I see is a mammoth-sized SUV parked right next to the space Naddalin's saving for me. And I mean mammoth, as in big and ugly. And something about the sight of Naddalin leaning against that whale of a car fills me with dread.

'What the hell?' Jasmine gapes. 'You give up riding the bus, so you can drive a bus instead?'

I climb out of my Miata, glancing between Big Ugly and Naddalin, hardly believing my ears when she starts quoting a slew of statistics about its superb safety rating and roomy back seats. I mean, I don't remember her ever once caring about the safety rating when she was chauffeuring me.

That's because- you're immortal, she thinks, sensing my thoughts as we head for the gate. But may I remind you, the twins are not, and since they are now in my care, it's my job to keep them from harm.

I shake my head, gaze narrowed as I try to think of a snappy reply. My thoughts interrupted by Haven who says, 'You're doing it again.' She crosses her arms and glances at us. 'You know, your whole, weird, pseudo telepathy thing.'

'Who even cares about that?' Jasmine screeches. 'Naddalin's driving a bus!' She hooks her thumb over her shoulder, jabbing toward the big, black monstrosity and wincing at the sight of it.

'Is it a bus or a mom car?' Haven squints, shielding her eyes from the sun. Glancing at each of us. 'Whatever it is, one thing's for sure, it's tragically middle-aged.'

Jasmine nods fully warmed up to the subject now. 'First the glove and now the?' Her frowns at Naddalin, disappointment clouding her face. 'I have no idea what you're up to, but dude, you are seriously losing your edge. You're not even close to the rock star you were when you first came to the school.'

I glance at her, eyes narrowed in silent agreement. But Naddalin just laughs, too concerned with the proper care and feeding of the twins to bother with what anyone thinks- including me. And while that's obviously the way a good, responsible, parental- type figure should think, something about it really bugs me.

Jasmine and Haven continue, teasing Naddalin about her new, surprisingly stodgy ways, as I tag along, a sliver of energy pulsating between us as she grabs my hand and thinks, what's going on? Why are you acting like the? Is the because of the cat? I thought you understood all of that?

I stare straight ahead, focused on Jasmine and Haven, sighing loudly as I mentally reply: It's not the cat. We settled that yesterday. She's back at Haven's, marking her days. It's just well, it's like, here I am, making myself crazy, trying to find a solution so we can be together, and all you seem to care about is manifesting HDTV's and the world's ugliest babyproof car so you can cart the twins around town! I shake my head, knowing I need to stop before I go any further and really have something to regret.

‘Everything’s changing,’ I say, not realizing I said it out loud until the words ring in my ears. ‘And I’m sorry if I’m acting like a brat, but I’m just so frustrated that we can’t be together in the way that we want. And I miss you. I miss you so bad I can’t stand it.’ I pause, eyes stinging, throat hot and tight, threatening to close up completely. ‘And now that the twins are living with you, and with my new job starting and all, well, it’s like, we’re suddenly thrust into the super stressful, middle-aged life. And trust me, seeing your new car just now didn’t help.’

I peer at her, thinking there’s no way I’m riding in that thing. Instantly ashamed when I see her looking at me with such love and compassion, I can’t help but fold. ‘I guess I was hoping the summer would be great, you know? I was hoping we could have some fun- just the two of us.

But now it’s not looking so good. And, just to top things off, did I even mention that Jaylynn is dating Milley? My history teacher? The Friday night, dinner at eight!’ I scowl, hardly believing the pathetic life actually belongs to a supposedly powerful, newly immortal, almost seventeen- year- old girl.

‘You got a job?’ She stops in place as her eyes search mine.

‘Out of everything I just said that’s what you’re focusing on?’ I shake my head and pull her along, laughing in spite of myself.

But she just looks at me, gazes fixed on mine as she says, ‘Where?’

‘Mystics and Moonbeams.’ I shrug, watching Jasmine and Haven wave as they turn down the hall and head for class.

‘Doing what?’ She asks, not ready to drop it just yet.

‘Retail stuff, mainly.’ I gaze at her. ‘You know, working the register, restocking shelves, giving readings, stuff like that.’ I shrug, hoping she won’t pay much notice to that last part.

Psychic readings? She gapes, stopping just shy of our classroom.

I nod, staring longingly at my classmate’s spill through the door, preferring to join them than having to finish what I started.

‘Do you think that’s smart? Drawing that kind of attention to yourself?’ Back to talking again now that we’re alone in the hall.

‘Probably not.’ I shrug, knowing it’s most definitely not. ‘But Jaylynn insists the discipline and stability will do me some good. Or so she says. She just wants to watch me. And short of installing a nanny cam, this is the easiest, least invasive way. She even had the horrible, soul-sucking, nine-to-five gigs all set up and ready to go, so when Naddalin said she needed some help around the store, well, I didn’t have much choice but to what?’ I pause, seeing the look on her face, eyes guarded, hard to read.

‘Naddalin?’ Her eyes narrowing to where I can just barely see them. ‘I thought you said someone named Lina owned the store.’

‘Lina does own the store. Naddalin’s her grandson,’ I say, only that’s not entirely true. ‘Well, she’s not her real grandson, it’s more like, she looks after her. Helped raise her after she runs away from her last foster home- or- whatever.’ I shake my head. The last thing I wanted was to start a conversation about Naddalin, especially with the way Naddalin’s gone high alert. ‘I thought it might help, you know, allow unlimited access to books and things that might help us. Besides, it’s not like I’m working there under my real name. I’m using an alias.’

‘Let me guess.’ She peers into my eyes, seeing the answer displayed in my thoughts. ‘Avalynn. Cute...’ Her smiles, but only briefly before she’s gone seriously again. ‘But you know how it works, right? It’s not like a confessional where you’re shielded by a screen. People expect to face-to-face contact. They want to see you know whether or not they can trust you. So, what exactly are you planning to do when someone you know just happens to walk in for an impromptu tarot card reading? Did you even think about that?’

I frown, wondering why she has to take what I thought was a pretty good deal and turn it into a problem. And I’m just about to deliver some snappy reply, say something like- Hello? I’m a psychic. I’ll know before they even get through the door! when Naddalin appears.

Naddalin and- someone else- someone vaguely familiar- someone named Marco who was last seen in a vintage Jaguar, pulling up to her house.

Walking side by side, legs moving swiftly, eyes focused on mine. Naddalin’s gaze taunting, mocking, the proud owner of my dirty little secret.

Naddalin moves to shield me, gaze on Naddalin as she thinks: Stay calm. Don’t do a thing. I’ll handle them.

I peer over her shoulder, watching as Naddalin and Marco barrel toward us like an oncoming train. Gazing at me with eyes so deep, so blue, everything blurs but her moist grinning lips and flashing Ouroboros tattoo. And the last thing I think, before I'm sucked in completely, is that this is my fault. If I'd kept my promise to Naddalin and stayed away from her, I wouldn't be facing this now.

Her energy swirls toward me, tugging, pulling, luring me in, sucking me into a spiral of darkness, bombarding me with images of Naddalin- the tainted antidote- my ill-advised visit- Haven- Malcolm- France- the twins- all of it coming so quickly I can barely distinguish between them. But the individual images themselves aren't important- it's the whole she wants me to see. All of it meant to illustrate one single thing: Naddalin's in charge now- the rest of us are just puppets, pulled by her strings.

'Morning', mates!' She sings, releasing me from her grip as my body falls limp against Naddalin's.

But despite her sweet murmurings as she ushers me away from Naddalin and into the room, despite the soft reassurances intended to soothe, convinced that we've just dodged a bullet and it's over, for now, I happen to know it's only begun.

More is coming.

There's no doubt.

Naddalin's next shot is aimed solely at me.

After lunch, I head for Mystics and Moonbeams. Eager to start my on-the-job training, hoping it'll provide a nice distraction from the mess otherwise known as my life.

It was bad enough when Naddalin kept disappearing between classes so she could check in on the twins, but by lunch, when I assured her I was fine, that Naddalin wouldn't bother me, and that she should just stay home, I headed for our table only to learn that Haven has boarded the Naddalin train. Picking apart a vanilla-frosted cupcake while gushing about the big part she played in securing her the job at the vintage store, despite her arriving at the interview ten minutes late.

And all I could do was mumble an occasional word of dissent, which didn't go over so well. So, after her third excruciatingly dramatic eye roll, after telling me to relax and unclench for the umpteenth time, I tossed my uneaten sandwich and made for the gate. Vowing to keep an eye on her, do whatever it takes to keep them from getting together. Just one more item on my growing to-do list.

I pull into the alley, parking in one of two spaces behind the store before heading toward the front, half expecting to find the door locked, figuring Naddalin couldn't resist the call of killer waves on such a beautiful day and surprised to find it wide open, with Naddalin behind the register, ringing a sale.

'Oh hey, here's Avalynn now.' She nods. 'I was just telling Susan about our new psychic reader, and you walk in on cue.'

Susan turns, looking me over, scrutinizing, accessing, adding up all the parts in her head. Sure, she's aced the equation when she says, 'Aren't you a little young to be giving readings?' She gives me a smug look.

I smile, an awkward slanting of lips, as my gaze darts between them, unsure how to respond, especially with the way Naddalin's looking at me.

'Being psychic is a gift,' I mumble, nearly choking on the word. Remembering a time, not long ago, when I scoffed at the thought, sure it was anything but. 'It's got nothing to do with age,' I add, watching her aura flicker and flare, knowing I've failed to convince her. 'You either have it, or you don't.' I shrug, digging myself a very deep hole.

'So, should I book you reading?' Naddalin asks, smiling in a way that's hard to resist. But not for Susan; shaking her head and clutching her bag, she heads for the door, saying, 'You just give me a call when Ava comes back.'

The bell clangs loudly as the door closes behind her. 'Well, that went well.' I shrug, turning toward Naddalin and watching her file the receipt before adding, 'Is my age going to be a problem here?'

'You sixteen?' She asks, barely glancing at me.

I press my lips together and nod.

'Then you're old enough to work here. Susan's a psychic junkie, she won't resist for long. she'll be on your sign-up sheet before you know it.'

'Psychic junkie? Is that anything like a groupie?' I follow her to the office in the back, noticing she's wearing the exact same trunks and peace-sign tee as before.

‘Can’t make a move without consulting the cards, the stars, what have you.’ She nods some. ‘Though I’m guessing you gathered your share of regulars during all the readings you’ve given.’ She glances over her shoulder as she opens the door, eyes narrowed, knowing, in a way I cannot miss.

‘About that-’ I start, figuring I may as well confess since she is obviously on to me anyway.

But she just turns, hand raised, decided to stop me when she says, ‘Please, no confessionals.’ Smiling and shaking her head. ‘If I have any hope of enjoying those huge swells out there, then I don’t have the luxury of regretting my decision. Though you might want to rethink that bit about it being a gift.’

I look at her, surprised to hear her say that since all the psychics I have met, which, okay, pretty much consists of just Ava, but still, most of them think it is most certainly something you are born with.

‘I’m thinking of adding some classes to the schedule, psychic development stuff, maybe even throw in some Wicca as well, and trust me, we’ll get a lot more sign-ups if everyone thinks they have a fair shot.’

‘But do they?’ I ask, watching as she heads for an extremely messy desk and riffles through a pile of papers near the edge.

‘Sure-’ She nods, picking up a sheet, looking it over, then shaking her head as she swaps it for another. ‘Everyone has the potential, it’s just a matter of developing it. With some it comes easy, they could not ignore it if they tried, with others- they must dig a little deeper to find it. And you? When did you know?’

She looks at me, those sea-green eyes meeting mine in a way that makes my stomach dance. I mean, one minute he’s talking abstractedly, thumbing through papers as though she’s barely minding her words, then the next everything stops, her gaze is on mine, and it’s like time has stood still.

I swallow hard, unsure what to say, part of me longing to confess, knowing she’s one of the few who would understand, but the other part resists- Naddalin’s the only one who knows my story, and I feel like- I should keep it that way.

‘Just born with it, I guess.’ I lift my shoulders, cringing at the way my voice rose at the end. My eyes dart around the room, hoping to avoid the topic as well as her gaze when I add, ‘So- classes; who are teaching those?’

She shrugs, tilting her head in a way that allows her dreadlocks to fall into her face. ‘Guess I will,’ she says, pushing them back and revealing the scar on her brow. ‘It’s something I’ve been wanting to do for a while anyway, but Lina’s always been against it. I figure I may as well take advantage of her not being there to see if it works.’

‘Why’s she against it?’ I ask, stomach-settling when she leans back and props her feet on her desk.

‘She likes to keep it simple- books, music, angel figurines, with the occasional reading thrown in. Safe. Benign. Mainstream mysticism where no one gets hurt.’

‘And your way? People get hurt?’ I study her, trying to pinpoint just what it is about her that sets me on edge.

‘Not at all. My goal is to empower people, help them live better, more fulfilled lives, by accessing their own intuition, that’s all.’ She glances at me, green eyes catching me staring, making my stomach go weird again.

‘And Lina doesn’t want to empower people?’ I ask, feeling all fluttery under her gaze.

‘With knowledge comes power. And since power tends to corrupt, she thinks it’s too big a risk. Even though I’ve got no plans to go anywhere near the dark arts, she’s convinced they’ll find their way in, that the classes I teach will only lead to harder, darker stuff.’

I nod, thinking of Naddalin and Haven and definitely seeing Lina’s point. Power in the wrong hands is indeed a dangerous thing.

‘Anyway, you interested?’

My eyes meet her, unsure of what she means.

‘In teaching a class?’

I balk, wondering if she's joking or serious, then seeing she's neither, just putting it out there. 'Trust me, I don't know the first thing about Wicca, or- or any of it really. I've no idea how it works. I'm better off just giving the occasional reading, and maybe even trying to organize the mess.' I gesture toward her desk, the shelves, just about every available surface that's buried beneath a mound of papers and junk.

'I was hoping you'd say that.' She laughs some. 'Oh, and just so you know, I clocked out the moment you walked in. Gone surfing if anyone asks.' She gets up, moving toward the surfboard leaning against the far wall. 'I don't expect you to get it completely organized or anything, it's too big a mess. But if you could get it into some kind of order, well-' Her nods, looking at me. 'You just might get a gold star.'

'I'd rather have a plaque,' I say, pretending to be serious. 'You know, something nice that I can hang on the wall. Or even a statuette. Or a trophy- a trophy would be good.'

'How about your own parking space outback? I can probably swing that.'

'Trust me, you already have.' I laugh.

'Yeah, but the one will have your name on it. Reserved for you only. No one will be allowed to park in it, not even off-hours. I'll post a big warning that reads: CAUTION! THE SPACE RESERVED FOR AVALYNN ONLY. ALL Other's WILL BE TOWED AWAY AT THEIR OWN EXPENSE.'

'You'd do that? For reals?' I laugh, eyes meeting her

She grabs her board, fingers gripping the edge as she heaves it under her arm. 'You get the place cleaned up and there's no limit to the rewards that await you. Today Employee of the Month, tomorrow-' Her shrugs, tossing her dreads off her forehead and exposing her amazingly cute face.

Our gazes lock, and I know she's caught me again- caught me looking- wondering- thinking she's cute. So, I quickly look away, scratching at my arm, fiddling with my sleeve, anything to move past the moment toward something less awkward.

'There's a monitor in the corner there.' She nods toward the far wall, back to business again. 'That, combined with the bell on the door, should alert you to anyone coming in when you're working back here.'

‘That, the bell on the door, and the fact that I’m psychic,’ I say, trying to sound lighthearted, though my voice is a little shaky, having not fully recovered from the awkwardness before.

‘Like the way, you accessed your powers when I snuck up on you?’ She asks, smiling in a nice open way, though her eyes are holding back.

‘That was different.’ I shrug. ‘You obviously know how to shield your energy. Most people don’t.’

‘And you know how to shield your aura.’ She squints, head cocked to the side, those golden dreadlocks falling halfway down her arm as she focuses in on my right. ‘But I’m sure we’ll get to that later.’

I swallow hard, pretending not to notice how her vibrant yellow aura goes a little pink at the edges.

‘Anyway, it’s all pretty self-explanatory. The files need to be alphabetized, and if you could separate ‘em by subject, that’d be great. Oh, and don’t bother tagging the crystals or herbs if you’re not familiar with them, I’d hate to get ‘em confused. Though if you are familiar-’ Her smiles, brow raised in such a way I immediately start scratching my arm again.

I gaze at the gleaming piles of crystals, some of which I recognize from the elixirs I made and the amulet I wear at my neck, but most of which are so foreign they’re not even vaguely familiar.

‘Do you have a book or something?’ I ask, hoping her do since I’d love to learn more about their amazing abilities. ‘You know, so I can’ - Find a way to sleep with my immortal boyfriend someday - so I can get them all tagged properly - and - stuff.’ I nod, hoping to appear like a hard worker rather than the self-motivated slacker I am. Watching as she drops her surfboard and turns back toward her desk, shuffling through a pile of books and retrieving a small, thick, well-worn tome from the bottom of the stack.

Turning it over in her hands, and gazing at the back when she says, ‘The has it all. If a crystal’s not in it, it doesn’t exist. It’s also loaded with pictures, so you can identify them. Anyway, it should help,’ she adds, tossing it to me.

I catch it between the palms of my hands, its pages vibrating with life as the contents surge through me. The entire book now imprinted on my brain as I smile and say, ‘Believe me, it already has.’

I stare at the monitor, making sure Naddalin has left before taking the seat behind the desk and gazing at the pile of crystals. Knowing the book alone wasn't enough - they need to be handled to be understood. But just as I reach for a large red rock marked by streaks of yellow, my knee knocks against the side of the desk, and my entire body grows itchy and warm - a sure sign that something needs my attention.

I push the chair back and lean forward, peering under the desk, noticing how the sensation grows stronger the lower I go. Following the feeling, until I've slid off my seat and dropped to the floor, fumbling around for the source, the tips of my fingers growing unbearably hot the second I touch the bottom left drawer.

I lean back on my heels, squinting at the old brass lock - the kind of deterrent meant to keep honest people honest and dissuade those who don't know how to manipulate energy like me - closing my eyes as I ease the drawer open, only to find a pile of hanging files that are no longer hanging, an ancient calculator, and a pile of old and yellowed receipts. Just about to close it again when I sense the false bottom beneath.

I scoop up the papers and toss them aside before lifting the hatch and exposing an old, worn, leather-bound tome, its pages curled and fraying like a lost ancient scroll, the words Book of Shadows inscribed on its front. I place it on the desk before me, then sit there and stare. Wondering why someone would go to so much trouble to keep the book hidden - and from whom?

Is Lina hiding it from Naddalin?

Or is it the other way around?

-And-

Since there's only one way to find out, I close my eyes and press my palm to its front, planning to read it in my usual way until I'm slammed by a surge of energy so intense, so frenetic, so chaotic - it practically snaps crackles my bones.

I'm hurled backward, my chair hitting the wall with such force it leaves a huge dent. The flickering remnants of random images still quivering before me and knowing full well why it was hidden - it's a book of witchcraft and spells. Divinations and incantations. Containing powers so potent it would be completely catastrophic in the wrong hands.

I steady my breath and stare at the cover, calming myself before I attempt to thumb through it. Fingers twitching, touching only the edges, as I peer at a cursive so small it's nearly impossible to decipher. The bulk of the pages inscribed with all manner of symbols, reminding me of the alchemical journals Naddalin's father used to keep- carefully written in code in order to protect the secrets within.

I flip to the middle, taking in a fine, detailed sketch of a group of people dancing under a full moon, followed by those of similar people engaged in complex rituals. Fingers hovering above the scratchy old paper and suddenly knowing deep in my bones that it is no mistake. I was meant to find the book.

Just like Naddalin hypnotized my classmates and put them all under her spell, all I should do is weave the right incantation to convince her to divulge the information I need!

I turn the page, eager to find the right one, just as the bell on the shop door rings and I peer at the monitor to confirm it. Unwilling to budge 'til I'm sure they're not going to turn right around and leave, that they're truly committed to staying. Watching as the small, slim, black- and- white figure makes her way through the room- nervously glancing over her shoulder as though expecting to find someone there. And just as I'm hoping she'll leave, she goes straight to the counter, places her hands on the glass, and waits patiently.

Great- I get up from the desk. Just what I need a customer. Calling, 'Can I help you?' before I've even had a chance to turn the corner and see that it's Jewell.

The second she sees me she gasps, jaw-dropping, eyes widening, appearing almost-frightened? The two of us gape at each other, wondering how to move past them.

'Um, do you need something?' I say, voice sounding more confident than I feel, as though I really am in charge around here. Taking in her long dark hair, the recent addition of copper streaks glinting under the lights, realizing I have never seen her alone until now. Never once been confronted by her, just the two of us, without Emmah or Mireille.

My mind wanders to the book in the back, the one I left on the desk, the one I need to return to at once, hoping whatever it is that she wants can be handled quickly and easily.

‘Maybe I’m in the wrong place.’ She pulls her shoulders in, twisting a silver ring around and around as she cheeks spot bright pink. ‘I think I-’ She swallows hard and glances back at the door, motioning awkwardly as she says, ‘I think I made a mistake, so I’m- I’m just going to go-’

I watch as she turns, her aura glowing a tremulous gray as she heads for the door. And even though I do not want to do it, even though I have a potential life-changing, problem-solving book to return to, I say, ‘It’s not a mistake.’ She stops, shoulders hunched, looking small and diminutive without the aid of her bully friend. ‘Seriously,’ I add. ‘You meant to come here. And who knows? Maybe I can help.’

She takes a deep breath, pausing for so long I am about to speak again when she turns. ‘There’s the guy.’ She picks at the hem of her shorts and gazes at me.

‘Naddalin.’ Sensing the answer without reading her thoughts or touching her skin, just knowing the moment my eyes meet her.

‘Yeah, um, I guess. Anyway, I um-’ She shakes her head and starts again. ‘Well, I was just wondering if she was here. She gave me the.’ She pulls a crumpled piece of paper from her pocket and lays it flat against the glass, smoothing the creases as she peers up at me.

‘She’s not here,’ I mumble, eyes grazing over the flyer advertising her Psychic Development Class level 1, thinking how she wasted no time. ‘You want to leave a message? Or sign up?’

I then study her carefully, never- ever having seen her so shy and uncomfortable before- with the ring twisting, eye darting, knee twitching- and knowing it is because of me.

She shrugs, gazing down at the counter as though fascinated by the jewelry inside. ‘No, um, don’t say anything. I’ll just come back some other time.’ She takes a deep breath and pulls her shoulders back, trying to summon some of the usual revulsion reserved just for me, but failing miserably.

-And-

Even though part of me wants to soothe her, calm her, convince her there is really no reason to act like the- I do not. I just watch as she leaves, making sure the door closes behind her before heading back to the book.

I do not think you ever really fall out of love with someone. I think when you fall in love, like true love, it is love for life. All the rest is just experience and delusions.

Partition: 3

(Back to Black, and the paper)

And Scary- looking' fang, indeed? said Stan, who had been watching Naddalin read.

Then she- murdered thirteen people ha? said Naddalin, hand sing she- page back to Stan,
And with one curse?

-And-

Yep, said Stan, in front of witnesses and all.

It was in broad daylight even.

Big trouble it caused said Ern darkly, didn't it, Ern? She said not long after, to Stan who was looking over at her adjacently siting within also in the same booth, Stan swiveled in his armchair, his hands on the- back- better to look at Naddalin.

- And-

Besides Black encourages a big supporter of- You- Know- O-oo, she- said.

Then said Naddalin, without thinking. And what about, Ava? Even Stan's pupils went white- as if dark energy when in him; and was being controlled by another person.

Then the train jerked back so hard that a whole farmhouse had to jump aside what looked like to the one side to avoid being streamed over with the darkness- still on top of it with the lamp beam in front shining upon it, and then looking again the farmhouse was Nevaeh's old home, as we make our way to yet another porthole to the other side. And as Emmah said, it feels a whole lot safer when inside a vehicle.

And you outta be glad you're in here and not thinking you are being run over by it, he said- I knew a girl? She was nuts!!!...yelped Stan...

Sorry, said Naddalin hastily, but I know her too and it's not all how you make her out to be, she was in an accident, and traumatized by it, not mental. And Sorry, I - I forgot - that you know everyone... and everything.

...And forgot- that you were just another dumb boy! Besides, she said weakly.

And Joannah, my' heart's going' that fast... overall of this... one being over you too, two being over the rail line being all crazy, and three being over all the news of Black.

-And-

So-o, - so Black was a supporter of the mother and her girls?

And Naddalin prompted apologetically, said I don't think So-o.

And yeah, and said Stan, still rubbing her chest, he is and was, and still is I feel, sorry to disagree with you.

And Yeah, that's right, now that you feel that way?

He is very close to them even related- by blood.

Partition: 4

They say... anyway, when little Naddalin- got her- better of You- Know-'O-oo- the mother of the four girls. And ava's object of desire- forever, NEVER- EVER letting go of her longing for lust- and love, even if... even if she has no looks at the former girl she once was. This is why she called her the tower to see her the tarot card... the show's a strong force to be reckoned with, the mother then?

'Yes!'

Then - Naddalin nervously flattened her bangs down again - 'And All- You- Know-'Oo's supporters were tracked down, wasn't they, Stan?

Most of' em knew it was all over, when- You- Know-'O-o-o went absent for both worlds, and they came silently for years. Like us, we knew she was planning and was up to no good.

But not Trirus Black.

I heard her- thought I'd be second- in- command once You- Know-'O-o' taken over your mind body and soul. But no- it went down her side of the family more than his- Chiaz Naztherth, somehow Emmah would have been a little niece, why she was also tinted by the evil hands of the hex of the girl's family and mother, some say that Emmah was Chiaz unborn child, child that he never had, that only lived for 48 hours, within Nevaeh, and passed, over running out of air, she was baby number two, also a hex within the family ever baby that is number two passes. Yet this was never really talked about, Jaylynn's death was more hart barking.

-And-

Anyway, they cornered Black in the- middle of a street full of humans and Black took out his revenge on the would kill all that was in his path and blasted 'em right in the- street all apart brain splatted the roadway, and a wizard got it to see it all, that wizard was- Naddalin dad, who understood the why... of it all, know it was the hex, nothing more nothing less, it took over his mind, she um- his little girl in pain always.

-A reporter for the press said about her story after her death- in not so many words. 'Someone like Nevaeh- if they believe in the supernatural, that she was losing her wit and mind. it was said to me that she says- GhOsT'S- OOO- HA!' AND HIS HANDS SHOOK MUCKING HER.

Hum so maybe that unborn child was a hunt for years- that she was is in the glass that leads to the other side, the mother was seeing her baby, maybe that it- she was never crazy- said Naddalin swiftly.

They typewriter print out would give the clues to that also, matching her story.

'Horrible, eh? And you know what Black did then? And Stan continued in a dramatic whisper.

And what, are you trying to say? Said Naddalin.

Then laughed, Stan, and just stood there and laughed. It's a good thing I like you for you said Naddalin or I would walk away now and not look back. 'Hell- you have your head so far up your ass, you need to fart to breath!'

And when reinforcements from the- Bureau of Magic got there're everything went quiet as everything, went still all quite in its place of, closes to mad he is or surpasses, indeed, Ern? Indeed, mad he is they say, and I say too.

-And-

Besides If she- weren't when the- went to Dizeryland, she- will be now, said Ern in she slow voice, so you could not remember this, as you could you? So, you must be her... aren't you?

'I must- then- if you say so...'

'I say so- Oo...'

...Confess!!!

Besides like- I'd blow myself up before I set foot in that place, said Emmah, and undoubtedly, they all agreed. Serves him right, to have been locked up for whipping innocent people down mind you... after what he- did... was so heinous that I can wrap my mind around it.

'Heinous-' Think of treason, torture, the bashing of babies such as children shot at point black rage in the freaking head- he did not care most over them where under the age of 14. She yells' hurling her hands about!

-And-

They had a job covering it up, of the fact he was one of them, didn't they?

Then and there- said Stan.

And 'whole street blown up and all them nonmagical peoples dead, Dariez said in her small-town talkative way that only she could- with babbling in- between. Ern- What was it they said joining in? 'No!'

They said thinking she had no place in the conversation, now's he's out to do it again- and we could be his next manslaughter, said Stan, investigative-ly retelling the- newspaper... moving text and picture.

An explosion, groaned Evelyn with her truly light blonde hair and blue eyes say- we overheard her saying- in a soft sweet voice- 'I am glad that love, is like- now a thing- ie again like along with like- feeling and is no longer band to the world we live, it was said there was a time that love was forbidden.

...Of course!

Thought Naddalin, not saying anything just overhearing, think poor girl is here over not feeling or having love, and wanted to go back and life live as if she could have. Black's gaunt face again is making want to spit out my coffee'.

There has never- ever been a breakout from the prison before... God, they are even placed on a rock Island with sheer drop-offs on all sides.

'How did he get a boat...?'

They knew about it and let him out? Ern questioned.

Beats me how we did it, said Dariez all frightened, eh.

Mind you, I can't understand to think that he would have some within the wall of the jail a guard even remotely bribed, to make this kind of escape. Eh, said Ern?

- And-

Evelyn suddenly shivered, saying with if he here, or even within one of us?

And talk about meeting different face what if that face is him, yet looks like Stan, there is a good lad; that you just met.

Them guards give me the- collywobbles.

- And-

Stan put the- paper away reluctantly, And Naddalin leaned against the- the window of the- Knight train, and sighed, feeling worse than ever in her given lives. She- couldn't help imagining what Stan might be telling the passengers in a few nights' time, about her even, she was still the same old girl after all so paranoid and trusting no one.

And hear about this and that and no- truths-? And- maybe- about me being someone I am not, and then some I might be.

Killed up his own aunt, family grandmother and six little ones! Along with all those others... my- God!

We admire all the gossip on the- Knight train, didn't we that go down into the otherworld- the underworld of all things lovely in its dark whimsical, ghoulish, and magical, do we not Ern? Whom- was sitting in the next booth over at this point chipping in now and then on the ride.'

He was trying' to run for it... and found the tracks of the magic railways, and made it, by getting so far and become one of us- I just know it- I just know, said Naddalin.

- Then-

Formerly, Naddalin had broken wizard law just like Trirus Black, saying that she was for helping a girl on the outside of the world, yet it was all for the right reasons. Over the Aunt uncle bad enough she was charged with 1,500 dollars in having a lawyer, and a mug- shot- and fingerprints? Nothing really came out of help Dariez though in her mind.

Her hand so tiny they thought she was underage...said the judge, he even said you're like a child.

Naddalin didn't know anything about the- prisoner- yet, looking back in her mind and thoughts remembering her own life as the girl in the story and her times sitting in a jail cell over them, on rations, though everyone she'd ever heard speaks too did not want to remember or was withheld from remembering So-o in the- same fearful tone, of pretending not too, even if they looked deep into their thoughts to remember all this; the memory was altered.

She replayed to that saying and to think, that everyone then that thought they knew you thought you that you did nothing but lay around with your fingers in your puss, said Dariez.

Well your damned one way or the other in that hometown- you do one thing and is said to be another is another you say one thing and they think your another- if you do or don't it now and with or as they want to see and read it to be in their low comprehension and mental existence- or lacking one...

...A life and brain, said the girls unanimously filling the end of the sentence!

Confess!!! Said the girl in her face noses almost touching.

Remember this- 'It's just all right to have some defecated in your mouth and you have to swallow it, yet don't you dare say anything back, they will not take your shit.' Said Naddalin.

I am not- entitled to a mistake, no one ever at any age for 3 and up, I cannot have one! Best to remember that also... when questioning the why- of it all. I cannot take the blame for my past when my soul was soled agents my well and I had no say- in the matter- of whatever fact they said for the day or week to week contracts.

And so-o in saying all that, I cannot say that I am or not.

‘At the school for girl’s gamekeeper, had spent two months there only last year, showing girls what could happen if they’re bad- or bad- er’ then bad.’ Said Dariez using poor English as only she could...

Naddalin would not soon forget the- look of terror on Emmah and some of the other girl's faces when she- had been told where she- was going, and Emmah was one of the- bravest people Naddalin knew. She was going there... if she did not change her ways... and spending the night might just make her love life that she was given, and not complain, about seeing the thing go her way - even if that’s playing God or destiny. Even if you have power now over that too by being her you don’t always- have all the cards to play. Even if there is a thing as hell’s purgatory, you need to see the light - to either go up or down. Or be happy here with all of us that love you!

The- Knight train rolled through the- darkness, scattering bushed and trashcans, junked cars, windmills, telephone booths and trees alike, on its old winding path hidden in all the tall grasses, you could not even see the track or rail ties, as she was laying on her bed looking out that arched windows of the Pullman car, there Naddalin lay, restless and miserable, on single bed with her sheets jumbled around her.

Partition: 5

I look at my (Retro Style) Flip Desk Shelf Clock and think about home, and think that time doesn’t mean a thing here...

Stan is over there singing- ‘you put your penis in, and you put your penis out, you put your penis back in, and then have her shake it all about; you do the sex together and turn her back around, and that’s what it is all about!’

The girls in the train car are rolling their eyes and giggling and shaking their heads.

Though- I'm sure to love this boy to death, ha- remember death and remembering boys like that and your dumb love that is so cute it hurts to look at when you are not, I see the looks on the other girl's faces, I remember that too.

So, in other words back on earth if I was to back when I was a pre-teen and teenage girl if I would frap more, and I would have thought about death less- hum?

After a while, Stan remembered, that Naddalin had paid for hot chocolate, but poured it all over Naddalin's pillow when the- train moved brusquely from Lackawanna ruining the path of the Susquehanna hitting all the ghost towns, on a rail line that just should not be there; like a ghost town trail, a haunt of the past, and like a- whistle echoing in a squall of wind.

Making quick stops along the way, one by one, wizards, fallen angels, and witches in dressing gowns and slippers go downhill to meet this stopped steam train on its way- down to the other world- of all things magic, leaving the stations. they all looked very pleased to go, down under- some for the first time- after their death. Finally, Naddalin was and they were not the- the only passenger on.

And right then and there, Neville, and said Stan, clapping their hands- saying, new souls, and whereabouts in Pennsylvania- are you from as they announced their name over the intercoms?

-And-

And- Hellhole Alley, said Naddalin, going up to her old stomping grounds.

'How would you know?' Emmah said suspiciously.

And the right to said Stan- looking at Haven and hold on tightly- is what she said.

- Then-

BOOM!!!

The- moment it opened, then set off short pinching screams within all the cars - where are we, they- didn't know, only- I. The- would lie low for what felt like a couple of hours, they were thundering along Cross Road- light flashing in a blur. Naddalin sat up and observed buildings and benches enfolding themselves out of the Knight train's way. The- sky was getting a little lighter.

The train slammed on the- brakes and the- Knight train skidded to a halt in front of a small and shabby-looking pub called the Susquehanna- house, next to The- Freeman hotel, and the A- J's feed mill, behind which lay the- magical entrance to my railway- almost next the village of Chery- Tree- home of The Cozy Corner Café.

Thanks, Naddalin said to Ern.

(Thought the porthole sparks flew- and everything went dark and another world- glowing in shades of green shadowy dark trees that are black in color seem to be lunging at us as the flickers of the lanterns on the outside of the coach's lit them slightly.)

They- jumped down the- steps, and the- leaped- Stan lower the trunk down with baby Raven's cage onto the- tarmac or gravel. And Well, said Naddalin. And Bye then- along with Dariez yet, again!

-And-

Nonetheless, Stan was not paying attention, or maybe- that is just part of the act with him too- yet, I do think he is okay- I really do. Still standing in her- the doorway to the- train she- was goggling at the- shadowy entrance to the- dripping stone arched passageway up to the castle.

Before Naddalin could turn, the- bend there was a hand on her shoulder. Besides there you are, Naddalin, said a voice, it was Maiara Chenoa. It was a sweet reunion, with hugs and kiss too...!

At the- same time, Stan shouted, Joannah!

Ern, come here...!

Come here...!

They were reacquainted in what seemed like- forever to them.

- And-

Naddalin looked up at- in her hand was her old notebook, and she saw her old handwriting, within a random page, a note that did not make into her published book- that she never saw- until after her days of days, it said.

“Even in someone else’s body, with my mind, I may like to perceive things differently as if I was them; then in my own mind, with thoughts shared.”

It was rolled out over the facet it made her sound crazy! She ponders the why and said even my words are still being twisted, over some putting the thoughts to mine, about my thoughts.

The- owner of the- hands-on her shoulder and felt a warm cascade into her body- she- had walked right into her old friend that she had does not see for years, after she moved away.

Stan then leaped onto the- gravel beside them.

And What did- jah call Neville, Martita?

No this her- this girl standing her is- Maiara.

‘Oh!’ He said. ‘Sorry for mispronouncing your name-’

She said it happens more than you would think.

WELL Then- it was said- eagerly.

a small little girl in a long, pinstriped Housecoat and PJ’s, looked cold and exhausted- yet aglow within her body and a new spark in her eyes seeing an old friend.

Also, Neville- questioned the friendship of the two of them.

Then she- repeated, frowning, saying- ‘I KNEW IT- I KNEW IT ALL ALONG, Naddalin- IS _____.’

(GASP!)

-And-

Besides I knew it- ALL ALONG!

Besides Stan shouted elatedly.

‘Ern! Ern!’ Guess- WHO SHE IS-?

I can see the mark!

-And-

I can see the blemish too!

Partition: 6

'Yes,' she said crossly, saying think it doesn't say it my life is on the line and well end up at the mercy of her, I'm very glad the- knight train picked Naddalin up- Maiara said, but she- and I need to head inside and have a private girl chat, just she and I to remember all things of days gone by.

She amplified her the- pressure on Naddalin's shoulder saying come one we have a lot to do just you and me, and Naddalin found herself being steered inside yet, overjoy- d at the same time.

A slouching figure bearing a lantern appeared through the- door behind them- now sting at the public- house- for refreshments. A hermit, toothless, saying beware of HER- she is back, and running- her mind within the body of a killer- and that killer I just become- YOU!

And you've got her, Martita- UNDER YOUR THUMB! The creature said- SAID, with no face- in a creepy- creepy whisper.

She said yes, I know who she is, and like old times nothing has changed with her, I will kill her- you can put that in your report back... And Will you be wanting anything more if not-

NOW GET THE HELL OUT OF MY FACE! She could odor of must coming from his breath, and the chill of death within the voice.

'YOU HAVE BEEN WARNED-' it said as if faded away within the gust of chill wind. Now back to you and me, it's good to see you, it's been So-o long! Would you girls like something a waitress asked, 'Um- perhaps a pot of tea, for she and me,' she still hadn't let go of Naddalin- using riddle's- over that fact her worlds got in the way, back in the day.

'You have not changed at all on the inside, have you?'

'Sh- h.' She put her finger up to her lip.

See your forgetting, that I can foresee the future, and tell the past and change the present- fortune-telling. I am here to tell you that you're in grave danger, and I am here for you always, like before... you may have passed down the globe, yet it has not moved on the hex is with you, party her in a sense yet your still the one they want to rip apart- not her- even if, she has the prophecy and has become the old you, they have found you out, and she after your very soul!

(Back to the group)

There was a loud scraping and puffing from behind them, as they got off the train and Stan and ern appeared- slowly out of it as it was encircling them, carrying Naddalin's trunk and Baby Raven's cage- after all, it was the manly thing to do, and looking around excitedly, and it was turning Dariez on, she was wanting to be all clingy.

And how come you didn't think she would tell us who she was, eh, Neville - what do you think?

I think thereafter her or just she!

'Who's she?'

'The mother...!' said Stan, beaming at Naddalin who was holding has with her girlfriend of the past, while Evelyn's a school girl's flying horse peered interestedly over Stan's shoulder, snorting and nah- ing.

Besides a private parlor, please, for us girls- Naddalin said pointedly. It would be nice to have one of the larger rooms tonight to tête- à- tête about boys- girls, all things that contain to love- and a pillow fight.

And 'Bye- boys' the girls said as some of them skipped on the backs of their hills to their new room for the night, waving too.

'We have all had the pleasure of meeting her... Unfortunately!'

'She has all given us SHIT!' IT WAS SAID- AROUND THE ROME IN SO MANY WAYS- REFERRING TO THE FACT.

I met her! And they went to the group talking about the girl that should not be named, and her mother. You could see this world's sun drop, and the flying creatures' bed down for the night, like the flying horses, and birds only know this magical world too.

Besides, I must have been the- last to know that she- killed all the people! Said Maiara. You- being one of the Lily... so it as true, it was she did it, and you were just at the wrong place at the wrong time...

Naddalin- I can say- and yes, I would say that- would be what is implied.

(In the girl's washroom)

And then showing a haunt, a ghost of Nevaeh appeared- It was me what rescued you, Lily, over- Alyssa's and AVA- and those sisters, and all the girls did what they did you, and I spent so much time at your house after you were killed!

Little did they know that this was the sole of the body of the girl they knew too well, and her mind was in a body of Naddalin next to them. And her heart had stopped beating a long time ago, yet it never grows cold to her girlfriends in the room.

They Just got to her before I, and her father's death... not long after, and my life- was going on- and on forever, and I still feel as if I could have done more, she was nothing but- remains, poor little thing, I never forgot, with a great slash across Lily's temple, she was remember- all the times they played to gather in a flashback of their youth, it was moving like a film strip- in sepia, ripping way, you could see the blush- of small N a marking they made on her saying- someday this well marking on you will bring us to a girl- that you once knew, that we will kill- in front of you, and them too, and you'll bring us to her- Lilly, she washed for bed- and said- I should let you know your name starts with an N, and So-o did yours- she takes her by both hands saying- Neveah- be careful.

(Odd like the letter missing on my old typewriter- oop- ie's, and she covered her mouth- at that moment she flew into her arms.)

Lily- Never occurred to me what she- was doing there, yet I prayed for her death dearly. And I want to say thank you, and I am sorry for you having live with my sins- even if I did not have any, as a teen girl, under the thumbs of the girls that were every part of me over being begrudging of me being more them, I was not and could never- ever, but to them, I must have been a threat?

I knew Lily was my Secret- Keeper, for years, I always trusted her, yet- yet I was wondering if this was a pot or if she was really her- never did I think in my life did I think that someone could take over your mind and thoughts- yet it seems like my mind can be raped at any moment by them, I knew she wanted to me, and to understand my new being- yet I was reluctant.

Yet, I knew that she knew- and would understand; she always did... thought she'd just heard the- news- about all the attack and come to see what she- could do for me, or to see if I was- taken over by them again.

Even if, it looked like- I may have killed you just remember- there the one that had control of my- mind, body, and soul. They may have my soul and damn it to hell now, and they had their fun with my body, yet no one will take my mind from me, even I have to split in in other bodies.

White and shaking she was, and yep's know what I did? I COMFORTED her- MURDERING- they all think they lost their minds, yet it was her getting her revenge within their minds, going back was worth it to see them die- said sweet little Lily, with her hair ribs hand on either side of her sweet little childlike face.

You know what... good for you- because, I would have killed them too! 'I am salivating just think about it!'

And Lily roared saying- 'I am not a little wimpy pussy of a girl anymore for them to diddle- now it's my time to diddle them.'

I never knew you to talk like that... I said. My mouth dropped... such language out of her mouth- remember her as So-o sweet and oh so innocent and a church mouse.

'Please!' She said- 'innocent?'

That's not a bad thing to be remembered for Lily- like at Karly- which is better? They were going through her chapters and photos of her former life, later that night, saying well this could be your legacy.

She said at least I would have had one...

Then said Professor McDermott was walking past the girl's room- arched wood door, that is medieval- also in the look, the room softly touched lit. she said- 'girls- keep your voice's down!'

- And-

And How was I to know she- wasn't upset about Lily and Adriane's, after all, there still girl-girl and girlfriends, fear is why they're not- you would understand. I have to kiss her always and do as she takes- still, yet I learn to love her. Adriane has changed... she is sweet now- to all, and the cutest dark angel, you ever did see- and she winked at me. Her look and attitude have completely changed, you would not even know her- she's so sympathetic, nice, and gentle; she has also disowned her family- for me, and that was the deal, or I would not have agreed.

'I can forgive... even in the dark world, and I get to say, that I have done that for her.'

'I cannot-' Naddalin said back.

Alyssa with you?

Not yet- she is happy to be with my ghost- she has not found me yet- you know who is trying!

Naddalin- the funniest thing- is that I see here every day in class too and she has known idea who I am... And I am trusting you to keep it that way- you understand.

Lily- It was You- Know- Who she- cared about, getting at you, not all the girls- they just followed what she said to do!

Naddalin- The mother and that- girl... well never change- what do they want from us? They want you to bow to them, and worship their every word and want and desire.

(The tower card that will never fall...) said Naddalin.

Partition: 7

...And then Lily- says, 'Give Naddalin to me, she is saying it with inflamed eyes all controlled- by another's dark mind, I'm your garden of you, after all, it was all creepy and her head tilted to the one side, I'll look after her- she said back in a possessed whisper overpowering the possessed with her power of worlds-' Ha, it said- you're too incompetent!

Nonetheless, I'd had my orders from Duriez's mom and dad, about her wanting her own life. That said me, and my type was no longer welcome, with their family, to help in her life in any way I was at blame for them losing their little girl- they said, yet she must of not taking to the hex, that I want to pass down- that I try to selfishly give to her solely, it's all back with me- why? I questioned, I could feel it, that now meaning that they could track me down- like radar, and maybe she ratted me out too... or did Lily? Or has my luck run out? And even Duriez was acting odd- as if she was- NOT- herself.

I knew they got to her and took over her body and mind- and her soul was banished over me anyway, so in the way, it was all my fault.

I know who- I have my money on- do you? And I told know no one about me, yet they both know- it seems they are all getting to know the real me- and that scars met the most, Duerre said I was to go to her aunt and uncle's, to get her and my things, she was leaving forever- and not to come back.

That is when Back ran into our room- when I was thrown up into the air ready to be ripped to pieces, that is when he lipped protecting me- coming out of hiding, as one of the professors and pulling all the entities out of my body and take them in himself, into his body.

Black argued- with me saying 'I'm one of the good ones- I am here for you, they did the same to me, before you- there was my girl- they were after, she was a lot like you.'

Her name was- Naddalin, and you become her! I, after all, am your biological father, and even if you became her, I will protect you from them! Now and always...!

She is always with me you know that... I'm saying to him- with a true running down my face.

Black- but in the- end the- same way you did do ever gave in. I even changed my name and look yet they still got me to kill for them- and be their simple fool- and pulled the strings if you well!

'They made me give you to them that night up or I would be punished- and oh was I, when you were just in your playpen- all those years back- Naddalin, I am living- too like you be only existing. I even had to sleep with the mother- or I would have been killed, chopped up into little bits- and marched nude about the streets- stoned and locked in a dungeon chained to a wall with no lights and no sounds other than the bats dropping shit on me and the cold ground around me, it was open to the elements- rain, sleet, hell, and high water too- winters to distorting hot summer days- also stripped of my pried- they tried to break me at the prison!'

So, I backed off- and let them do this to you- and for that, I am remorseful for- yet there was nothing I could do.

I won't need to live on anymore,' he- says if mean's that you do. I may not be your dad, yet I feel as if I am, I know who you are!

NEVAEH!

I know...

Partition: 8

I should have known-

There was something devious going on then. She- loved her dad more than anything, what was she- given- was a chance to live on and she did not take it so I took her body, she did it for me to live undercover? Her dad never really- knew until now- that I was all to blame and felt if I was, and I feel shame yet once more for being alive and causing pain to others, yet as I said- they will not let me die- even if I have tried over and over to do So-o. They want me to feel pain, aching, and discomfort- always- in everything, that was the plain alalonga remember?

Why wouldn't' she- need him it anymore, after all, that all I ever wanted was my dad back- and you know who was at the bottom of us all losing out on love and loved ones alike?

What the freak her is a problem? I thought... The fact was, I was too easy to trace.

Duriez knew she'd been the Secret- Keeper, with her crystal, and about me- I wonder if she squealed and give them the ball of my life and lives after. And just like that, a small voice in my had said, 'NO!' this is not my fault- blame the one you always trusted! She has gone bad for them, she was charmed- into this you know.

I's did not know what to think- still in shock of all the overwhelming information coming into my mind- everything like always- seeming as if, all at one time.

'I would bust the crystal ball yet all the stories of the past and your old life would vanish in the shards of glass.' She said holding the ball in her little and with it aglow - seeing the old me, that could be life go to shards of the floor at any moment, yet I was looking through her eyes- also with tears saying maybe it's time to let the life of the past go- I was inside of her my eyes were now her eyes looking in and reflected both me and her in the stare of the glass- I could see the colors of visions- looking in- and then it hit the floor, and part of me died over them yet again.

I never give much to see a life come to end, not my own through new- younger eyes other than my own- reflecting back at me- yet at that moment, I felt my life come to an end closing chapter, I was lost between souls and bodies, of other girls- that saved me from ending- to them, when it was my choice all along... right? Now the only thing documented about me is in the text, and to me is what is retold about me in its light, it's not the same as seeing everything for it really was within the glass ball- for day one and up like a movie flashback. All my memories- I put in there for safekeeping- out of my own head so they could not corrupt them over being mean- shattered to the wind in one night never to get back- ever.

Yet that is what they wanted- maybe- just maybe, now they will leave me alone...! I thought this uncertain, shyly, and indefinitely.

'Oh well, what is the use of thinking at all at this point, just for my thoughts to be shattered- too- by them, the real me was gone.

Black knew this was a blow to me- and he said- 'I would not plan on it...'

'...It really came along and knocked my wind out- God's honest- truth!'

Subconsciously, it takes at least 6- 8 months for the brain to process complete forgiveness for someone who hurt you emotionally. Yet that has been my life... so you would think by now I would be used to it.

He- was going to have to run for it that night- and he did and lied to me, he knew it was a matter of hours before the- Bureau was going to be after him not her- she always gets away with everything- she always did and always well.

But what if I'd given- you Naddalin up to her then... eh?

Do you think you should have?

No, and she avoided the dialog, 'everyone thought that you were lost and drowned sea- we until they found out otherwise.'

‘The best friend’s girl- girlfriend was you if you were under the spell! That is why I was okay with this along.’ Nonetheless, when one of us goes over to the- Dark Side, there is nothing and no one that matters to them anymore...

- And-

A long silence followed the story of how he escaped- not only the jail by having them in his mind.

About the time asked about the latter, Madam Rosette walked in asking if I was okay, she said with some satisfaction, seeing Black- that she knew for years, I see you have made it back to us, and she- said I see that you didn’t manage to disappear- completely, did you- even if you should have and know how too-?

The- Bureau of Magic caught up with you- and they have you to have they not- NADDALIN? She said in a demeaning way.

‘You can face your problems if you’re not facing them,’ she said rapidly.

‘Why would I want to I have don’t that all my life’s and yes, I said lives’.

- And-

That is when she said you need to come with me Black- I know that you are not the blame- not the bad guy yet that is not how they feel... and even I, have to say that you’re the one they saw doing the act of crimes.

(Some time has passed)

Black is locked in the castle dungeon- he could overhear them talking, and sadly, if only we had, and said Harlan bitterly, the evidence saying you’re not to blame for it all.

And It was not we who found her- it was him that led us to you- missie and you think you're so smart and cute- they said this as they were marching to the washroom, to have their way with her- like in the past before- making her their sexual bitch before asking her to kill for them- so they could live on in new bodies. Or to just kill me and end it all here.

It was little Kellie- another of her' friends that walked in and saw it all go down. Annoyed by grief, no doubt, and knowing that Black had been Neveah Secret- Keeper all these years, Mazel Amsel went after Black herself, along with her girls, torture him in mid-evil ways- right down to castrating the man, until he gave in to saying, like- were Naddalin was and all. It was either do it or die a final death, of hell in their wrath.

- And-

Kellie... that little girl who was always tagging around after I was one of their brainwashed spies at the school? Said Madam Rosette- one of the eldest woman- to teach if not the older at 1,606 years old, to me later that evening, at the lunch table.

'She has seen this before, yet never quite like this, she said they she was always, like that even when she was a little girl want everyone's attention, or you have to pay for not giving it to her, she was always a sneaky odd child, she said, even then... very dark in her ways- and eyes that would like and pass through you in a jolting wave- of then run a terror, I would know she made me feel, that way even in my own classroom, pass me or I will kill you, and pass your soul to waste- I never figure out how she becomes so powerful maybe you can?' She said in a whisper- of fear.

'She- worshipped Black, yet he would never give her the time of day, he would not give himself up to her in a way, and that drove her farther into madness, some say- I too. Odd that your only choices here in bodies were her own daughter, that you have become, and also this was chosen for you out of resentment in fate- twisted by them, I am sure to say to you. Ava was the mother of you do you see?'

That is why she is inside you and you can hear, and she knows your thoughts, just like her with black you were the élite of her soulmate and you refused, so she will take. Yet some say you belong to the mother, that also is a mystery shrouded within secrecies- covered up.

Then and there said Professor McDermott, that all I know about this yet you may want this it is her child hold a crystal ball, like yours she to your life memories now you take hers, still them and then smash this if you can?

'If I can?'

'Yes...'

Good luck I have been trying for years now, the shard shatter and then moments later come back together, looking her power, within it of how she got where she is, you destroy this you have broken into a part of her soul that she will never get back and that good maker her weaker - and you more powerful.

‘How do I destroy it?’ She squalled having her old high-pitched childlike voices come through her.

‘This for you to search your soul and hers - and others that were finds and foes to like to find out - the key lies within you.’ She said vaguely.

‘She was never quite about her union, talent-wise, she wanted you me us - them to all to know - her claim to fame, and cheating her way to - using whatever or whomever it took to get there. It’s all in the ball, a lot of NASTY - NASTY SEX! Things I have never heard off... yet that how a woman gains power - NO? IT ALL LAY WITHIN HER - private parts. I SHOULD know to be a Catholic school girl and having a priest, use me, for years has his - lover, yet I became a Nun, I even had a baby girl to the man that was 7 mounts in - she was cut out of me - he committed manslaughter - burn her in the firebox to heat the larger school - that was only for girls like me - and the ashes scattered and then buried within the old school grounds in the basement - I was not alone in this there lots of girls baby’s down there in the lowest level of that private rich school in Cresson, Pennsylvania, known for their mercy...’

‘...Yet the habit covered that too, like the churches compassion - towards us girls having been prayed on by the holy - and made to fear. That is why I am here... that is why, and I not saying - that I am wrong that is why - I, 606 years passed - I not caving, I am right - and I have my rights - as a woman.’

‘I was often hasty sharp with her, in my class for she was lazy. You can imagine how I am - now - I was more strict then - how I regret that now... maybe I should have just let her have her way, and none of this would have happened? Maybe the blame for this all is on me?’

-And-

She - sounded as though she’d - had a sudden head cold, and lost all strength within her old decrepit body - that was dropping with age - gray hair all stingy - yes faded without much color, yet that was my punishment to age, and not stop, till I admitted - I was wrong - for being used as a rubbish can - in every way a girl could be used as one. And there, now, Minerva, she was hysterical crying about the events she just witnessed and said Harlan kindly to take her to the hall for ice cream- as the good little girls do, and Madam Rosette died in her shoe's- her last death, she was the key to the next step.

Eyewitnesses - of course, yet not to their worlds of cover everything up or else, we rubbed their memories out later- we were told this, so there would be no panic. Everything that we saw with- Black, and them know who I am- it bad enough have them against me I don't need this whole world too- by them making an army- with her being the all- mighty power over all- yet I feel that will happen at some point- don't you?

They say, Minerva- was sobbing, ' Lily and Alyssa, over know more about Trirus- than any of the others! That she was seeing him on and off, after the escape, romantically. How could you? They said to her, she was so weak she could not speak for the tears.' And then she - went for the crystal ball- for them- not us, yet it was a lost journey on her part.

Well, of course, Black was quicker, he had all of them deceived in think it was someone other than himself, he tried places with her, yet the somehow did not see that just happen.

Blowing Alissa's memories of her and Chiaz smithereens be she dropped the ball... her past life... No-? Yes! ...Gone in a blink of an eye, that is what Minerva did for me by bringing this ball, the wrong one, yet the right one for me- little did she know I ready know the plan. IT WAS PAYBACK!!! And this all reviled the spell she had him under, it's not going to get him back to me - yet I feel justice has been made. She can burn in hell now- where she should be- that one less I have to fight!

Then- Professor McDermott blew her nose, in her slave and said thickly, and said 'Stupid girl... foolish girl... you are- always hopeless at clashing... a fantasy of freedom and choice- that you'll never have. I should have left it to the- Bureau, over this all I am sick of cover your ass!'

'You're blaming me?' She said with an airy breath within a gasp.

And I tell yen's, if I'd got to Black before little Emmah did, I wouldn't've messed around with wands or crystal ball with children she said, after all, you cannot trust them, if your you and all - no you're going to be ripped her limb- from- limb, over having these children to your personal business, and that all this is personal, and that how you're taking it, and you are putting our children at risk, I will tell you this now as she was slamming her middle finger hard into her chest, '...you have any of our children in any danger- I will kill you myself, by ripped you limb- from- limb, you understand!' and she was screaming two inches from her face at this point.

In the background looking out the castle's large ornate arched windows, you could see children at play innocently- who are fallen angel is flying in the dusking sky.

Professor McDermott- 'Playing tag, or hid and seek and juvenile games like that... as children do, after all even here they are still children. There here over the fact they wanted freedom, and out of a life that was overbearing, you- yes, you there- girl, don't take that away from them over personal- Baby-field- BABY SHIT!'

'When is this war going to be over with you?' She asked. And you do not know what you're talking about, Emmah, Dariez- and you too with the eyes and the face... she said sharply- your just kids; they were backtalking, her word and authority.

-And-

Nobody but trained Success Sorcerers from the- Magical Law Enforcement Squad would have stood a chance against Black once he- was waylaid, so what makes you think you would, or that they could stop her- even if... Mazel Amsel and her family of girls, are more powerful then all of us combined, she can and will not be stopped ever- and you're the blame- YOU. What you did was shitty- and self-centered.

Naddalin- 'YET IT'S A-OKAY FOR THEM TO WHATEVER THEY WANT TO ME WITH NO CONCUBINES, AND THAT'S FINE, I DARE NOT SAID UP FOR MY RIGHTS- NO- FUCK NO, THAT WOULD BE WRONG! And her fist is clenching her caller, you'll kill me... ha- ha?

'I was junior in the- Division of Magical Upheavals at the- time, and I was one of the- first on the- scene after Black murdered all those people, I was there I know that he is the one that did this, I saw it with my own eyes.'

'You don't know half of what you think you do!' Said Naddalin.

Professor McDermott- 'Oh there she goes again playing the victim.' She said when she was finally, let go of, and she had enough strength after her knees shaking- out of tear to speak. I, I will never forget it. I still dream about it sometimes.'

'Your dream is nothing like my nightmares! I can assure you of that.' Said Naddalin, as Nevaeh, her real personality was coming through her more than ever before, within her transformation. He blasted a hollow in the- middle of the- street, so deep it had cracked the- sewer below.

‘Yes, that maybe So-o yet was it all him- or all in his mind.’

‘I knew it you are crazy!’

‘Yes- we know’ said one of the girls landing on her feet her back feathered wings retracting back into her back drawing quickly and almost unnaturally- ‘Bodies everywhere- blow to pieces nothing left but nude kids body parts laying on one another- down in the hole, when they picked thought all the remnants- there was nothing to bury- that was identifiable other than the sex, so they just covered everything over and said we don’t care and made the road on top of the mass grave, there is not even a headstone, marking the day in history.’

All the nonmagic people were screaming. ‘WE KNOW’ - they screamed- and by the way, we are more intelligent than just unintellectual kids.

And Black standing there laughing nude- completely mad- foaming at the mouth even, as the day he was born- shackled in his holding cell, with what was left of the shards of the ball within his feet that are bleeding blood that is only of this world... leaking blood, covering bloodstained roots of neighboring lingering, haunting, and melancholy tree on the outside working their way in, of the ground underneath- start grabbing around his body weaving vines, and veins- like charming bowling constrictors- those too were linking his body snacks- and the worms for the ground were eating into his mind, everything was sucking the life out of him feeding the land, and the castle ground was breaking it all up- life was given back.

And the oddest thing in the moment of darkness there was a small ray of light showing down on him on his face, and he was in a world all of his own in paces. Even if it was also sucking the life out of him- he had done his afterlife missions.

A few- just a few fragments of the glass were sucked up within him- overpowering his awareness, seeing all the memories, of one the girl’s life that terrorized his daughter, he teared up, thinking how said they are and pathetic.

All voices stopped abruptly- as he made a link with all of her minds and conscientiousness- they saw what he saw about Alissa Amsel the blonde hair, blue-eyed girl, everything about her life even the things that a girl would never show to others, was reviled- and how she was a bully and terrorist- in the sweet-looking covering body of yearning, to all that were under her spell. He screamed and inside coming out of his mouth with this black steam like gushing vapor with creepy crawlers, bugs, and insects- come out along with the demons of the girl in a wispy diaphanous hooded ghost, fighting the death- scream ear pricking, and world shook- yet in death she took a soul down with her, it was his.

(Later on, that day talking with Emmah and the girls at the table.)

‘It’s just like you running a moment thinking about the past and dwelling on it, it’s what you want to think that you have created in your own mind, about things and not really knowing the truths - just what is indirect, it’s what you want to believe and not know- and that is stopping you from what could have been really wonderful. And that is why a lot of my old-time, possible interests did not work with me they did not see me- Just like making love to him after he found out the truth about me was to him like the perfect kiss he could have... and the right fight to him, and me you understand?’

Not at all they were shaking their head at her as if she had lost what was left of her mind. ‘Well, there at least you have her thoughts, girls,’ Dariez said in a slurred voice, after being well drunk off magical potions- to get the demons out. And also said was Naddalin forgiveness to her about the events of the day, she understood that her mind was not her own at the time.

That night Black dead body was taken away by twenty members of the- Magical Law Administration in a carriage along with fifty others in a funeral procession to the graveyard of those that past for a final time- to pass to the leaves of hell below- to be licked by the flames of fire and heat.

‘He acutely gets the first-class serve,’ some the townsfolks said under their breath, grudgingly and disgracing him to the tune of voices, that they were using to dishonor him. ‘It’s a way to be remembered.’ Said one elderly gentleman, nevertheless, I- Naddalin, think was some kind of a comfort to the poor older elders- and the parents of the children that have lost their lives to Black’s within the town, that has never- ever been the same since the massacre- yet little do they know the truth. The girls look on seeing him being pulled into the sunset, feeling the same as she in their thoughts, saying goodbye for the last time, in that short time he had become part of them that would last within them for years to come.

- And-

Madam Rosette lets out a long sigh.

And is it true she was mad, Minerva, and was a snitch- and was also taken too with him today within the procession, for the tallest tower of the castle? It’s comical to me nobody really knew here either, only for what she was known for doing, it made me think back and wonder if this was right or wrong to do to a child. After all, she was possessed- by them- and you know who- her. And another death at the behest of her doing and her girls- yet nothing is said about it other than that girls were to blame for it all.

- Then-

And, I wish I could say that she- was, said Harlan hoarsely. And I certainly believe she master's defeat with her crazy her for a while, and well cool off, despite the fact and then well start it all back up again- like always said Naddalin with the hate and all- that's what she does, starts crap and then get scare goes into hiding and then lets dye down for a while- for us to feel safe and then starts it back up again; that is the joy of it for her- you know who... she and her girls.

'She is the- murder then?'

Naddalin- 'Yes and know you would have to prove that- and good luck.'

And all those nonmagic people were the- accomplishment of a confronted and desperate man revenge- cruel... pointless. Yet, I met Black on my last scrutiny of Dizeryland, and he said it was over you- and Nevaeh, and some who you were both linked in he is going nuts on them- or something like that.

And You know, ladies, if you're dining with the - headmaster, we'd better head back up to the- castle.

(Dinner)

Nothing but the low light of lanterns- glowing young faces, you know, most of the kids don't you, there sit muttering to themselves in the- dark about all this; there's no sense in them... being here in the first place, I mean really there just kids, after all, what could they have really done, nothing compared to him for an instant. Yet there here in this underworld wasteland that is so dark and mysterious, yet magical and wonderfully beautiful at the same time, it's them like always that rune everything. This was said over conversations with the group of girls.

'Like- I was shocked at how normal Black seemed when he hugged me it was for real, you know...' Said Naddalin. 'He was with her it felt like... said the one, that was coming around to understanding.' It was unnerving, he- spoke quite sensibly to me.

You'd have thought he- was merely tired- by his look know he was exhausted over them playing with his mind and heart. It was asked if I'd finished with my newspaper- so they could see the stories- I thought, cool as you please, Emmah said, she- missed doing the- mind-bender in the back, she had enough of the headlines- she dove into them frantically, doing one right after another. Yes, I was almost astounded at how little effect the- dementors and all and everything seemed to be having on her- and the voices that played in her head too, was not getting her down.

She- was one of the- most heavily safeguarded in the- place, by others how loved with her leaves of powers and smarts within the type of angelshe is, you know, she did not need them playing with her mind she had the power to stop them- she just need to believe that she could, like me also, that part of their plain to wearing you down, so you don't have the straight to fight back. Dementors outside the door day and night- sucking the thoughts right out of your head- for them- for them to use agents you- me and her over there too.

'What their problem?'

'I- we- you and me- we don't know?'

-And-

'But what do you think he's broken out to do?' And said Madam, she was sitting down the ways from the girls.

'What Is a Paranormal Spirit Attachment?' I have read about this in the library's restricted section of dark magic, Said Karly.

'It was to ad in him killing one part of her soul, I's think- that she spit lay within the objects like the crystal ball, it helps kill her seeing her precious children fail, in not getting or keep what they want- or wanted, In these objects, she has made them, and herself the most power one of us could ever be- by stilling and taking- and not caring if she is slaughtering someone's babies doing it, this is what she has made for herself to last for eternity- lasting power within objects, along with keep her kids locked in theirs as well, that's was what it was all about- 'she was dumb and I knew more.' Said Naddalin, back all jittery.

Professor Rosette... 'Karly you should not be looking into those books in there... end up with two heads or something, just by reading something that you and I both would not understand, or know how to fix.'

'Well anyways I have this book saying- what she did, how she did it, and why she did, it's her story- take it.'

Naddalin opened the book reluctantly, and before her eyes, the pages all went blank. Odd it only was left for your eyes to see, I wonder why?

Karly- I have a thought... and that is all she said skipping off down the hall, with the large tattered brown leather-bound book that looked way to odd and big for her small body, that was under her arm, the book was even starting to pull on her long blue hair by the pages grabbing at her, being nasty to her, she said have to keep this thing locked up. (There is a big lock that needs a skeleton key on around it with a ribbon holding the evil inside.) Odd she said- to Naddalin, and I had the key- as a necklace for years... and did not know why till now... 'they want you to know- she said back, to - PROVE IT!'

Just like us and how we the dead jump into the living for life, overseeing what we missed.

'And Good gracious,' Martita, said, 'I remember that happening to me when I was a child and now, I doing to it to children, it scares me, I really don't want to think that Lilly is trying to join You-Know- Who is she-?'

'She did, the one I's could always trust has gone bad.' The girls all shook their heads uneasily.

- And-

'Also, I feel like you in daresay that is there- ultimate plan,' said instructor Harlan ambiguously. And But we hope to catch them in the act of her controlling her long before that, to see if it really here feeling this way to me or them making her feel that way. I must say, You- Know- Who- her and her girls alone and friendless is one thing... at this point, nobody really likes them yet there still afraid, of them. So-o giving her back to them as her most devoted servant, maybe in the cards, as she lays them all out for them to see in her reading- the cards jump- leap and daces, out of her hand in moments of magical performances. At this point, I have my own set made to my liking and artwork approved. THE DEVIL card says it all to me.

And I shudder to think how quickly she'll rise again...

- Then-

There was a small chunk of glass on the heavy handcrafted wood table in front of me and them, and well us- it like started glowing, shacking, and moving about as if possessed. Look, girls, its Alissa Amsel the badass bully of the school that took Neveah lovers away- look now girls she all-powerful now. Overcome it was- it really was- it was the last fragment of Alissa Amsel's life and excrescences. Someone had set down their glass down to see this shard fight for it the last snuffle of life, and Emmah watched it like a bad puppy, with her, rolled up newspaper, (saying bad - bad,) which then led into Naddalin- smashing it down to dust with her flats school girl shoe from her left foot. And the maliciously evil girl was dead never- ever to be again in any lives!

One by one, the- pairs of feet in front of Naddalin took the- weight of their owners once more, all minds were back to where they should be by their magical contacts- as the Bureau of magic knows them to be; everything was back in order, that is when all the teacher and professors got up and walked down the lengths of tables after the fest- of commencement ceremonies took places after the death marches.

They all march down the middle all them in their elegant robes swung into sight, for all the students still sitting there in their uniforms, an order has been reclaimed; to the school and castle and Madam Rosette's glittering shekels disappeared behind the- bar... were she orders a drink and said- 'that is the last time we shall be dealing with them for a while.'

Yet Naddalin sat in the background next to the fireplace sitting on the large rock hearth- looking around all suspicious, think it was too early to celebrate. The girl's stat to get up from their tables, looking at them you can see three with wings opened again for a fight, there was another flurry of snow outside, making the perfect backdrop for them to start to fly in this world.

Just like that the heavy wood doors flew open, with a gush and rush of air blowing the hair back on most of the girls, yet that did not stop the children from rushing for the door in flight as they all took off for the outside- it was the time of altering secession, as well- flares were covering the graveyard, the castle grounds, and the homes within the many villages; of this land that was so otherworldly, that it's hard to comprehend if you're not one of us that has fallen, with a large squall and swell arrived the winter storm, ending a year, it looked as if they all disappeared, as they fly off into the distances, come back to their homes- for the break.

‘Just in time she said for us all to go home,’ said Naddalin.

As she looked around for the last time and slow strolled out the door, saying fitting to them, the party is over now. It is their party is it not? Hum- she sighed, saying this is their time for the brake too- by the time we're all back there will be another round for us, more me than any of them, yet - well that my life. She was murmuring like a crazy girl, as she walked slowly into the deepening snowdrifts, not caring that she could fly, she just wanted to remember what it was like to walk - away from her problems.

Jinger's And Emmah's faces appeared under as the train steam ever so slowly - with the beam of light glowing a soft yellow- tracks grounding as if scream in the pain of the brakes- and large red wheels- the cowcatcher looking as if it was going to nip their uncover school girl legs, cold and raw from the air, and flats style unfarmed shoe they were all wearing, the train was tumbling in a rhythm as it was pulling into the station for them to go back home, even if not a long trip in real-time, it felt like it was going to be on their time. book- bags field with overdue homework- and note hanging out about- many spells, potions, and all things dark and magical, and let's not forget flying, and a new set of cards given, to them by their best friend in their world Naddalin- that was her Holiday gift to them, after all.

‘Don't ya just hate it when they give homework over Christmas break.’ Said Emmah in sitting now by moving one of the old benches to face backward, to face the other girls. ‘Um- like- look at the overelaborate metalwork on these things god... only you would notice something like that- there really old and made well- aren't they, like look at this woodworking and these lights- and red velvet covered sets.’ she all so said.

They were both staring at her, lost for words, of her being taken back by what was inside, and them more on what was happen out the foggy windows.

Bye, Neville! She called too us, then one by one there was going home - to their stations- and to their homes on Earth.

Naddalin made her way along the- narrow channel cover into stone that is so tight that only one person can walk through at a time- sometimes needing to sidestep, though jagged rock faces, damp and musty, a passageway called Hayvannah's channel within the castle she walks human skulls littering the walls- of years past, holding a lantern, and then into it leads out to parts of the villages were there are small shop. She then keeps walking onward till she found an inn where she planned on spending her time off, it was vacant- and eerie, could and all walks of life just about gone for the Holidays. She then clicked her fingers, a fire burst into life in the- great fireplace within her large room- that she rented out, and she- bowed herself into her warm cozy bed, and soft sheets- and sleep for what would be two days in Earth time- she was just that played out from the voice in her head and others playing with her emotions- that being alone and quiet was almost defying- with the ringing in her ears of nothingness.

When Naddalin finally woke up from her slumber, she sits down in one of the Victorian chaises in her room, by the- fire, she began to replay all the memories of the past weeks in her mind, and already it was playing her out in new leaves of fatigue that she never felt before, and then she went to lie down more, and sleep- saying along with thinking in many ways saying the same thing of- 'I can't do this' in foolish mumbles of incoherencies.

Naddalin didn't have a very clear idea of how she- had managed to get back into tunnel in the first place, yet she did- she had this idea in her mind for some time to come here a place where she knew that nobody knew where she was, and that was just fine with her. A small-town hotel and first-class service, where she could just relax and reflect... it was an escape from the girl's room in the turret of the castle.

She was thinking about a cousin that she played with some when she was a child that also was forbidden, over the fact that she was in love with him, it was wrong, yet she never let go of think about what could have been if they would have been left be, even if... Is Love- love know? Blood is blood- even if- she thought- even if... this or that- it does not matter how it's in the past- is it not?

She was thinking far too much about things, things like the end... and of all ends- 'Death well squeeze your mind, creep in and play and in far too long, and stay even if you don't want it too, death well linger and pounder, and drain you of all wonder, it with fiddle with your brain, like taking blood from the veins- 'till it kills you.' She thought.

I said her mafia would never get me, and that is what it is, and was- and what is going to say being; I also said that she would never- ever get me, never- ever- ever never... yet she did- she did- and sad to say, like- I don't think I care anymore- really. All I have are my lost thoughts of questions that lead to more questions of wonder and ponder of the questions why, and that leads to more inquiries of why? She thought.

~*~

She thought more- and more- 'till her mind was at a stroke.

And into the- castle once more she went.

All she knew- was that she- return back after her trip to find herself and seemed to take no time at all in caring for her on losses- her mind concern- about nothing but the past and all the days lost and that she; hardly noticed what she- was doing- did not seem to make any scene... even if the only ones looking were the otherworldly animals around her, because her head was still pounding with the - conversation she- had just heard.

She pondered- they why of it all... why had nobody ever told her? Duerre, McDermott, Mr. Railie, Cornelius Harlan... why hadn't anyone ever mentioned the - fact that Naddalin's parents had died because- their best friend had deceived them?

Jinger And Emmah watched Naddalin nervously all through dinner, not daring to talk about what they'd overheard, because- Serafina was sitting close by them.

When they went upstairs to the- jam-packed public room, it was to find, Freeanna and Katy had set off half a dozen or more Fertilizer bombs in a fit of an end- of- term high spirits.

Naddalin, who didn't want Freeanna and Katy asking her questions about if she had reached the Claepsiara- yet of, the Skoufyceol of Wizardry or not, sneaked quietly up to the - empty student house and headed straight for the bedside dresser.

She- pushed the books aside from her life not even think that she had everything in black and white, and then quickly found what she- was looking for.

Then and there, and at that moment at that time: she had found it- the leather-bound photo album- McDermott had given her two years ago, which was full of wizard pictures and all things magical. Like her life as both fallen dark and holy white angel- and then even further back to when she was a child with her daddy; and her human life.

She- sat down on the bed, drew the- curtains around her that were hanging from the canopy that was around her, and started turning the- pages, searching, until... she found all the memories that she had lost within her own mine- kind of like an old backup hard drive; she planned for this moment and knew it was going to happen she could foresee it a long time ago; she was horrified loss of her own mind- yet relieved that she had a plan like always; she was not yet, defeated- by her and her girls.

She- stopped on a picture of her own' wedding day- and then was looking for her own parents- day as well and then she recalled that they were never married, even more terrified- she became- over her own loss of memories- after the crystal ball broke, thinking her mind was finally gone- and given up to them- unwillingly.

There was her daddy waving up at her- she could see the photo yet that was all that was there the movement of her thoughts like films were gone, beaming, she- untidy her black hair Naddalin had inherited standing up in all instructions- not having any more wit in her mind then they said- she had when she was just a little girl, by what they had made her become, back in elementary school- the mind of 2nd grader- she lost the thought of reading and was like starting over.

There was her mother, alight with happiness, arm in arm with the dad. And there... that must be her. There best man... Naddalin had never given her a thought before.

If she- hadn't known it was the- same pergirl, she- would never- ever have guessed it was Black in the old photograph, that was holding her.

The face wasn't sunken and deceived to dust before her eyes, but handsome thoughts yet they were, full of laughter- lost in her mind like she was the day she passed the first time.

Had she- already been working for Ava when the picture had been taken? Was she, already planning the deaths of her, two people next; the closest to her- she wondered, yet it was muddy? The- dormitory door opened- and the lights went out.

Did she- realize she- was facing twelve years in Dizeryland, twelve years that would make her unrecognizable? Or has the twelve years already past she did not know she was lost in her on the mind and did not have one left- for the taking- she was broken- like the shards of glass- with her memories.

Naddalin slammed the- album shut- the tears staining the pages, reached over and stuffed it back into the dresser, and took off her robe, and glasses and got into bed, making sure the- long curtains were hiding her from view.

Lost in her dreams- the- dementors do not affect her- she was still strong in the subconscious she sits in a cold and damp cell- time has passed yet not sure when- where and why, not even understanding how or why she is there...

Naddalin thought- and thought more, staring at her- hand- increasingly more, and more that were scared trying to remember her life, laughing face- tears streaming- lost in insanity. She got me she screamed- and the crows fly wildly, that was right above her oven cell that was exposed to the elements- and had no heat and lights.

Jaylynn- 'I hear my mom screaming and there is nothing- I can do nor do I really feel I need to or want too. We all can hear her screams- like a haunted train whistle of the past- in a screech that is so ear piercing that its deafening- to her loved ones that were still link mentally with her even if they did not want to be.'

The next day- and what is going to happen to Naddalin? Said Jinger's, like smooth- Bella- like voice yet with uncertainty. She- heard Jinger leave again, and rolled over on the back, her eyes wide open.

But Naddalin lay still, pretending to be asleep- as the guard was screaming above her jail cell that he would cut her head off and no one would care if she did not shut up, the blade was gleaming in the moonlight his breath was making a stream of heated vapor ice crystals.

A hatred such that she had never known before was pouring through Naddalin mind as if the knife went into her brain between the eyes. (And maybe it did- after all, she would not die... even if...)

Just a thought an after one at that I knew the guard worked for her... I knew.

She- could see Black laughing at her through the- darkness- a spirit, as though somebody had pasted the- moving picture of from the album over her eyes and face- and tattooed the word retard on her forehead- (And maybe it did- after all, she was sold to them... even if... she was fallen she was noting.)

She- watched, as though somebody was playing her a piece of film, Trirus Black blasting through her mind was things that she had forgotten about for years. (A child she played with who resembled Neville) into them, moment then and there just shattered into a thousand pieces- lost she could not think of who it was.

She- could overhear... (though having no inkling or clue what Black's voice might sound like) a low, excited murmur.

My Lord... It has happened she has made me their Secret- Keeper- come out of me thought there world out of my mouth and reveal themselves- she alleged then, at that time it started the harassment within her mind- that was not in her control, taunting her to have a nervous breakdown- And then came another voice, it was them...

The girls and you know who- her- she is standing over her tall and towering yet again- if only in her mind, something she thought she would never take over yet did- more powerful than ever and Naddalin- she is nothing but yet again a weak little child in her wrath of shamelessness- asking for her forgiveness- for being blameless laughing herself piercingly- yet not her own if was you know who's evil snicker- and the cackles of the sisters...

The- same laugh that Naddalin heard inside, yet now coming out of her- she had taken over- and dementors drew near...and did as she said- she was the most powerful, yet again.

And Naddalin, you- you look awful, lost like a child that is re- traded- that can't read write or even think for herself.

'Awh- baby wants to cry?' The girls say...

This was the comment she had to here without consent to them, her mind, body, and soul were sold to them... or face the fury- of final death by those that would help her.

- And-

(Then just like that it was all over- and she saw a light a glow and someone saved her for the hell that she was in, a girl in white with wings.)

But who was it?

Who...?

Naddalin hadn't gotten to sleep until daybreak. She- had awoken to find the- dormitory dressed, deserted, and gone down the- spiral staircase to a common room that was completely empty except for Jinger, who was eating a Peppermint candy massaging the other girls that she was back- even if not full yet, And Emmah, who had spread her homework over three tables - was more involved in that then saying hey- even if she was not trying to be self- absorbed.

And like- where is everyone? Said Naddalin.

Gone, she said! It's the- the first day of the- holidays, remember?

'Of this year-?' She stated, the date- not understanding, that 6 years have gone by- 'like a shot of tequila and a good butt-kicking.'

And said Jinger, watching Naddalin closely. And it's near- dinner time; I was going to come and wake you up in a minute- are you feeling up to eating with us today and not being feed in bed?

- And-

Naddalin slumped into a chair next to the- fire, as if her personality was still there even if she was not physically. The snow was still falling outside the- large ornate arched windows, that were stained glass- and somewhat frosted by the cold, and were glowing a tint of yellow due to the warmth of the fire- that made her feel as if she was not dead inside- even if she was.

Cookies were spread- out for all in front of them- behind was the fire like an underneath was a large, ginger rug matching the medieval gothic feel of the castle.

And you really do not look well, you know, and Emmah said, peering anxiously into her face - maybe you should lay down. 'And I'm fine, good all I do is sleep any more I going to get fat also-' said Naddalin.

'Naddalin,' listen, and said Emmah, exchanging a look with Jinger, and you must be really upset about what we heard yesterday. But the- thing is, you mustn't go doing anything stupid.

- And-

And- like what? Then and there said Naddalin.

And- like trying to go after Black, and said Jinger sharply- who was brought back to the life you know. By the healing touch- of the dark lord- seeing into his mind and life's story just like yours- that is was why- you were saved too- he is and understand lord- no? And he takes care of his children.

Naddalin could tell she had rehearsed the tête-à-tête while she- had been asleep- she knew there was talk going on about her. She- didn't say anything- she really did not care- or feel there was a point in doing So-o.

'I don't think I will ever be who I was before...' She said.

'And you won't, will you, Naddalin? and said Emmah.'

'Yet, you are alive no...?'

'Like- after all they did put you through an abyss- or a hell that most if not all here have ever seen or heard of! Tortured until you were like in a petrified of decay.' Emmah alleged.

'And because, Black's not worth dying for, and said Jinger, they said they needed to say you even if there was a wrath to face regardless- that we girls all love you more than eternal life, and Black was found innocent of you- also- all is good don't you see.'

Naddalin looked at them, like someone that had a stroke- or was not able to move their body full to smile. They did not seem to understand at all, why she was so distraught. Yet, Dariez, looking over at all of them next to the fire- she felt as if she was the blame everything, even if she'd still didn't apologize.

And- did you know what I see- every time a dementor gets too near me- I see her face laughing insanely in my ripping thought my face as if it wants to come out of mine? In addition to that, Jinger and Emmah shook their heads, looking apprehensively.

Also, I can hear my mom screaming- she is not really my mother, she was the girl mother in- which I took over her mind, body, and soul- and to have a body to linger in... yet she and I have become close as if I was her girl- in a way I am- half her still... a soul is broken in too many minds and bodies.

...And pleading with Ava, saying that she has won, do you have to keep going.

Naddalin- And if you have heard your Mom screaming like that, just about to be killed, you wouldn't forget it in a hurry- I also live with those memories also, I live with nothing but horrifying bad memories. Not just my own, the ones- I have to share over her wanting me too; maybe this is just payback of me being a baby about my own life- like a sick twisted joke the God's have played on me when I was a teen girl... God's lesson learned- and why I turn my back on a God and all God's. And for not understanding why someone that was all ways good, and did the right thing- like would be tortured- as I was- in all existences. Yet, this Lord gets me, and I get him- even if I don't feel the same about everything, and I have to be thankful for life given back to me for a devil- such as he.

And if you found out someone who was supposed to be a friend of yours betrayed you and sent Ava after you... you would feel dead inside too- as I do.

- And-

Besides, there is nothing you can do!

And said Emmah, looking stricken. And the- dementors will catch Black and she'll go back to Dizeryland and serve her right! Said Alyssa who was still there taunting her, the only one that was not there... at Dizeryland- even if they just got off with a slap on the wrist and are going to be out in the week.

- Then-

Portion

And you heard what Harlan said then anyways. Black is not affected by Dizeryland jail like normal people are- like us, he is wild and foolish, irrational, thoughtless at times for the ones he cares about- when it comes to his life and others- other than his own. It's not a punishment for him- it's just whatever- and more of the same- in a life that will not end, to him he is what he hates the most an idealized fake hero- to some and adversary to others.

- And-

So-o, what are you saying?

Then said Jinger, looking very tense. 'And do they still want to- kill Black or something-'

'...And have him on final death row?' The girls unanimously asked these questions in the same whys, yet in different terms of speech.

'...Besides and do not be silly, the only ones that need to die a final death here is them...'
Naddalin squeaked out in a shrill voice.

Then said Emmah in a bizarre voice. And Naddalin doesn't want to kill anyone, do you, Naddalin?

'No! - I have no enemies here...'

In addition to that, Naddalin didn't answer the if's... about it or not- for she did not know any more the why's of life or death or not and the because... even- she was done- talking to those that did not see it her way- and was too tired to give explanations.

She- didn't know what she- wanted to do. All she- knew was that the- idea of doing nothing, while the mother and the girls were at freedom- in a week or two, was almost- more than she- could stand.

Hi- this young sweet little girl said with blond locks and big blue eyes batting- I am Mallerie, I have been assigned to you... as your aid.

'Awh...' she said sound like less than moved.

(Though- even here they make me out to be SPED- mm- mm- hmm.)

And Mallerie knows, and she- said abruptly- and she is your bodyguard- here to look out for you have nothing here at the school to have anxiety about- you're in good hands.

She was holding my hand as if I was more than gifted now...

Sweet...

yah- no...

And remember what she- said to me in Potions?

She said- that she was looking for one to make me feel new again.

I then thought- 'hum- maybe I like this child.'

'If it was me, I'd hunt her down myself... I'd want revenge, said the after their first class together.'

- And-

And you're going to take Mallerie's advice instead of ours? And said Jinger furiously, you're going to trust her with your life, after knowing that is fragile now, and this could be the last time you have a life to live... said Jinger and Emma even more angrily. Like we said you should be happy with what you have not trusted some girl- you just met last night- with drinks she makes in a urinal experimentally- like as if sipping from a water fountain. Like- like- um- you could end up looking like two-headed foaming at the mouth dog, that we could name 'Fuffie,' said Emma.

'If... ..If I have to live like this... I don't want to; it's worth it to me.' Naddalin said.

'Listen... to us girl, and don't be dumb...'

This is why I doing it, I am sick of being called dumb, so I might as well live up to my image- right girls?

Do you know what Pettigrew's mother got back after she and those girls were had finished with her? A girl like you- that was still their child, yet she did what you wanted to do, and she is out there in the graveyard for the last time, with the cows dumbing shit on her stone to remember is that what you really want? Besides not even a spring flower pops up for her for being dumb.

Pettigrew's finger was on the brown boxes, just printed the first copies of all the girl's stories of their lives, no longer just pages being spewed out of the charming Typewriter, places in large piles, of stacks of paper. My dad told me- that I would be getting the first copies... Look this one is called the Pretender of Secrets! First Class mail girls, open the boxes! She said, all excited.

'That was the- biggest bit of her- a life not yet said, they could find- out about me now,' said Naddalin- 'like this all was meant to be confidential.'

'Ladies... please- forgive her she is cranky and paranoid,' said the professor.

I thought you would be thrilled- she said, along with saying- after all the work was done for you in all of these ones- and the editing too, and have you not done this before? She said raising an eyebrow, of inquisitorial.

It said here... that magical world thinks that she- you know who- is a madwoman- the sister's mother, and it says here they think Naddalin, she's dangerous to herself and others... now, this is proving it said Naddalin more making more controversy for me too- fix- fix- fix?

-And-

'Hey look...' said the one professor girls, that actually read... too bad that it's not in their studies... 'gossip- nonetheless,' she wrinkled up her nose.

And Mallerie's dad must have told her, said Naddalin, ignoring Jinger, that I want to see what this all said. So, she played into having them published.

'Sweet thank you- but you shouldn't have...' Said Naddalin. Why is my name on the covers- I did not write these?

'In a way you did... you started this project; you can keep it going- right?' At that moment she grabs her shoulders.

'If... ..you say- So-o.' She said looking up into her eyes, with the joy of doing this for her lost.

Emma- Besides, She- YOU- Naddalin- was right along- she was in Ava's inner circle, after all, said another skipping to the end of the first book, spoiling it- all for everybody that really want to find out on their own.

'She...?'

'Lily...'

- And-

Besides interjected Jinger angrily, saying- 'I think the point here was, so we would not jump to conclusions, also actually read, and think for ourselves- besides not start a bunch of girls- fights over this all to read in privet, in addition, have our own thoughts.'

A moment or two later she whispered '...THANKS!' in her ear.

'Also, like- just say her name, will you? It not like they will burn you for witchcraft!' said one of them yelling it from the back of the room.

'They might...?' Alleged- Naddalin.

I have a question- 'yes child...?' why did you become a new name, in the book- and whom were you before?

‘So-o, it's true your: NEVAEH?’

‘I would say, honey- that you need to start from the beginnings- this does not book one- I’ll give you a hint, and read between the lines of a story like mine to find out, who I am and not what they say I am...’

...?...?

‘The girl just looks dumbfound and walked away muttering, I UNDERSTAND SHE’S AFRAID- even if... its likes in black and white, even then it all in how you want to read it and take it... whatever it is... I don’t know... if I care to know it... or about it all.’

And - so obviously, the- Mallerie knew Lily was working for Ava... or she would not want you to know to prove it!

‘Hush...’ one girl said in taunting way, or bullying- Naddalin, who was withering away by the moment.

- And-

‘Get a grip... girl... this is all in your head.’

Besides - Also Mallerie would love to see you blown into about a million pieces! I feel that you should not trust her... Said the one girl. She is just trying to blow this up for you all to make drama.

‘...Why she is not even part of the story...’ There were whispers coming from the back, saying that she should not even be here she was to goodie-goodie.

‘Do you think So-o?’ She said all fretfully.

See and all the girls in the room start to laugh. At Naddalin how was question everything- that was said in the room.

Mallerie’s just hoping you’ll get yourself killed before she - has to play you at Claepsiara, that is if you’re up to it by then, yet that is half a year away.

- Then-

And Naddalin, please, also said Emmah, her eyes now shining with tears, please be sensible, and think about what you're doing to others, and not just about yourself, and then all the time, it is driving you insane.

Black did a terrible, terrible thing, but do not put yourself in danger, anymore for him saving you, just to save himself, it's what Black wants... Oh, Naddalin, you'd be playing right into her hands if you went looking for her... with a sharp mind, and revenge in your still- and silent heart.

'Your mom and dad wouldn't want you to get hurt, would they, Naddalin?'

'I don't have parents... um- in a way- I do, yet I don't- um- you would not understand... and it would take long for me to explain, don't worry yourself about me I will be fine.'

They'd never want you to go looking for her in the first place! She said.

'I didn't since you ask...' was her reply.

-And-

And I'll never know what they'd have wanted, because thanks to Lily, I've never spoken to them, said Naddalin shortly- along with Black, doing what he did, saved me kind of- and is killing me slowly also.

'If they wanted anything...' said- Emma, along with saying slightly after in the next breath- 'I would not worry yourself about it all, it's not worth it after all- is it?'

There was a silence in which stretched lavishly bending her nails and left hand down on to the books, her middle fingernail snapped under the stain.

(Lunch)

Naddalin looks through her food on her tray- pulling out a slimy worm-

'Are you going to eat that?'

'I want not planning to...' She said.

Jinger's pocket quivered, she said-

Jinger- 'I found this raven outside- fall out of her nest next to the tower, I going to keep her 'till she big enough to fly.'

The bird chirps...

Naddalin- 'I see it's always good to help the defenseless.'

And Look, said Jinger, obviously casting around for a change of subject, and it's the - holidays! It's nearly Christmas!

Let's - let's go up to our rooms now- and be with our roommates. Last visited for what well feel like ages- girls say your goodbyes!

-And-

'Like this may be the last time, that some of you do- you never know.' Said one of the professors.

'...Oh... No...!' Some of them making the most shocking faces they have ever in their lives. Said Emmah quickly.

Then Naddalin isn't supposed to leave the - castle, Jinger- even if we're all gone?

- Besides-

Come on girls- she whispered softly- and all the girls heard Emma's thoughts in their minds- of the way- and it was not good- not good.

('The thoughts that were shared in their brains... And- yeah, let's go, and leave her to her thoughts, I can see she is lost in them and wants to be left alone.')

And said Naddalin, sitting up, I can ask her how- come she- never mentioned Lily when she- told me all about my parents! Or why she wanted me brain- dead so bad.

Above and beyond the girls roll their eyes, and walk out the room thinking she is complete... mad.

-And-

Some time had passed... with further discussion of Trirus Black plainly wasn't what Jinger had had in mind, and that Naddalin was nowhere to be found.

Or we could have a game of fallen angel chess where all the pieces are different angles- and powers, on the train ride home... Emma- said discussed and hurriedly- to all the other girls we gotten to know.

Otherwise or checkers; Serafina left a set, and said 'I bet I'll bet yah!'

-And-

And no, let's visit with all the girls, for this light night we have and not fight said Emma, and then also said Naddalin firmly, agreeing that she did not want to be the blame for them fighting among themselves- just over a book.

So, they got their fine clothes from their dormitories and set off through the - portrait hole- into the station- back to the real world, and their hometowns. On the train, the games start and they're very competitive. All the girls with their magical board games- in the competition were the pieces of the board come alive in front of their eyes.

Down through the- empty castle- Naddalin did her nightly walks, and her seances in witchcraft contacting the dead- from her room, and out through the- oak front doors, to the one oak tree she brought back for her homeland and property for seedlings.

She made her way now flying down the- lawn, weak yet making flight along with a shallow trench in the- glittering, powdery snow, her socks and the- hems of her glitter- almost gray and silvery sparkling- yet at times transparent- and translucent Robes was soaked completely and totally and freezing, yet she was able to fly ones more. A moment of delight for her... in a time of sadness, and feeling alone.

Not even thinking rationally she- went into the forbidden forest looked as though it had been enchanted- with all that is dark creepy mysterious, each tree smattered with silver, and McDermott's Victorian cottage in white looked like an iced cake, she had her own home, not far away...

Jinger knocked, but there was no answer when she made her rounds little did Naddalin know- that she was teleporting back and forth to make sure that she did not do anything crazy, foolish, and irrational or just plain stupid- and she did...

'Christ-' she did what I was afraid of... and she looks out and sees a- girl 100 feet up, flying wildly- at times, like- as if she going to snag the weathervanes on some the towers.

'I think this girl is trying to see how many times she can test fate and die...' Then in thought, she said- 'she has to be out of her mind, with wondering why- yet, I am standing here looking at her asking the same very thing.'

'Hum- nothing surprises me anymore...' she modeled. Then in the next thought- (Well so much for spending time with the girls on the train... playing games and having fun, I see here that I'll be babysitting, I see... I see- yah, happy Christmas to me.) ...She was clapping her hands; then and at that moment said Emmah, who was shivering under her robe when off into the star-filled moonlight of night after her. It was an odd night, unlike others there was a large crescent moon.

Jinger had her ear to the- door- and then crack it open slightly, just after getting her to come down and get inside take a bath and get ready for bed, yet there is Naddalin talking to the marrow, seeing if there were any writings of messages for the other side coming through- on what to do next.

The marrow of dishonesties in the girl's massive bathing room... and she is standing there in the nude, looking into it, in a trance... but showing perfectly, in a gray dimly lit room, with heavy steam- and candle everywhere. She was mumbling insanities... eyes rolling in the back of her head all you could see were the whites of the ball.

And- there is a weird noise, coming out of the body in places I don't want to say... as if hell was going to break throw... her face was changing, into others, that were neither one of the bodies in- which she keeps.

The voices coming out of her mouth I knew it was HER, and that she was not crazy... yet me saying it would make me look crazy... in trying to prove it... that Naddalin was right, you can prove them to blame, there always blameless and find a way- out.

'Naddalin she-' said...

'Listen- come, come to bed it's time...' She said over and over.

She turns to like, and the hunt of the woman ripped through her, the candles blow out with no warning, a child through her body of evil, a terror that she never felt before...

'Is that Fang, I see?' (She thought- and that thought was being shared if she liked it or not.)
I'll kill you- by clawing your eyes out- the possessed - Naddalin said, and feed on your eyeballs... for a snack. Leave...! And Jinger ran... fast than ever before in this life, she was given.

-And-

Emmah put her ears to the- door too...after seeing this girl running for what she said was her life into the girl's dorm- room, Emmah transported back to the castle, over what was called an emergency- of attempted final- homicide.

From inside low, throbbing moans, of a girl laying on the floor nude, that looked as if she was in a coma of dangerous unconsciousness as if the loss of all fallen- angel- azure unoxygenated blood.

'And- I think we'd better go and get someone?'

'A doctor?' She said.

'More like a witch- doctor... to perform and exercise.'

'...And that to- DON'T, STAND, THERE, GO- AND GET HELP!' And said Jinger tensely.

And professor- McDermott- she may be able to get inside them- soul at this point, and end this!

And called- out for others that may be here, that can help even the ghosts, that haunt the halls.

Naddalin, thumping the floor in compulsions- door slammed and no one was there just them. Then what seemed like an eternity- McDermott, and some other girls were there at her side? As Jinger was showing in a hologram what she saw in her mind played out for them to see before their eyes. Tombstones litter the front yard, black trees with curly branches that look as if they would nab at you. With a gray-blue, sky, in the background, hints of sinful lime- green are glowing around the- home, one light one in a cracked arch window, glowing in wicked.

-And-

I'm meeting Emmah Kizziah for what feels like the first time when I wake up a year or two has passed.' Hayvannah raised her eyebrows, to me I don't know you either... yet maybe I did, I was lost...

'You almost passed for the last time,' Hayvannah she said.

Emmah said... 'Hi- you know me... even if you don't want to at times... ha- like- I have changed, yet not that much my hair is longer and a different color.'

'You're meeting Emmah Kizziah? Today?' the new girl asked, as she helps Naddalin up and out of her bed... for what seemed like a lifetime- of reliving a part- of the girl's life she took over to hide inside a lingering soul.

'Er... listen, do you want to come with us- there are girls flying for the first time, before lunchtime- we know you like that? Said- Emmah.

'Do you want to come with me?'

'Yeah... well, she- asked me to, so I thought I would.'

'She would-' you even said it wouldn't matter if she did.'

'Oh... well... that was nice of her.'

But then again, Hayvannah did not sound as though she would have- thought it was nice at all. On the- divergent, her manner was cold and suddenly, she would- looked rather unfriendly.

A few more minutes passed in total silence, Naddalin drinks her coffee so fast that she- would soon need a fresh cup, just to keep going- she seemed to be drinking more and more- to feel as if she was not half-dead on the inside.

Beside them, Riley Davies and her girlfriend seemed glued together at the- lips.

Hayvannah's hands were lying on the- table beside her coffee and Naddalin was feeling a mounting pressure to take hold of it after already drinking her cup of coffee.

'Just do it,' Naddalin- told herself, as a fount of circulated alarm and pleasure and excitement surged up inside her chest; just reach out and grab it- she thought. Emmah seemed even more clingy then before, the attack like she was living one day at a time with her as if it would be the last, she would spend with her ever.

Amazing, how much more difficult it was to extend her arm twelve inches, and touch Emmah's hands, feeling love, than it was to snatch, about her past, to her when she already could understand, then a speeding bat fly by and she caught it from midair... and its fangs bit into her flesh and started to suck out life from her body, where her precious blood.

But just as she- moved her hands forwards, Hayvannah took hers off the- table, thinks she could be a need in the unwanted heart throb of lust and love with someone, she did not know - and to she liked boys.

Some of the girls just look, and smiled as Emmah was saying- to Hayvannah- 'you well- in time, like US girls...' and she winked at her in a playful way.

She would- was now watching Riley Davies kissing her girlfriend with a mildly interested expression.

'She- asked me out, you know,' she'd- said in a quiet voice.'

A couple of weeks ago. 'Riley, I turned her down, though.'

Naddalin, who had grabbed the- sugar cookies on the platter to excuse the sudden lunging movement across the- table, could not think why she would- and was telling her that she was falling too. Yet she was... falling for a girl, all over again.

If she would- wished- d she'd- was sitting at the- next table being she- artily kissed by Riley Davies, why had she'd- agreed to come out with her?

She- said nothing... Their scab threw another handful of confetti over them; counting down the new year- of their world, some of it landed in the- last cold dregs of coffee Naddalin had been about to drink, that was not hers.

'I came in there with Lily last year,' said Hayvannah.

In her- second or so it took for her to take in what she would- had said, Naddalin's insides had become glacial.

She- could not believe she would- wanted to talk about Lily now, while kissing couples surrounded them and a cherub floated over their heads.

Hayvannah's voice was rather high when she'd- yet spoke again.

'I've been meaning to ask you for ages... did Lily- like did she- ever in a chat mention me at all before she- died?' I like this girl yet, only knew her by her last name; what was her name?

'Why do you care-? It doesn't really matter... now she was gone forever.'
One girl said, back that was kinda snotty... in a hast.

Well most of the girls, looked at her- like it was not nice, yet very true.

If you say- that you think, you were falling for her we can see what we can do to bring her back to life?

'You- a looking for a girlfriend?' Emmah said, in a kiddish way.

'I don't know if I am ready for a girlfriend?' Said Hayvannah.

She was the- very last subject on earth Naddalin wanted to discuss, and least of all with Hayvannah.

'Well no,' she- said quietly. There wasn't time for her to say anything. Erm... so... did you... did you get to see a lot of others over the- holidays- or is she the one for you?

'I just thought she was cute, that all.'

'Like- boys never get it right... the last one I had called me a bitch, looking for a dinner plate also.'

'Come to the dark side... as you can see, we've got cookies.' Said Riley.

Well, support you-? And- the game moves one with the next move, her voice sounded falsely bright and cheery, saying- 'there a girl out there for me I'm- sure here, I just need to finder she or she finds me, I not looking.'

To Naddalin's horror, she- saw that her eyes were swimming with tears again, just as they had been after the- last meeting before Christmas, back before her change as some call it.

Everyone was contented, yet not truly of fully happy- 'life is life is not...?' Said Naddalin, along with saying moments after in a murmur- and with the shakes, of some that were deceased- in the real world, with something like Parkinson's- and dementia...

'...You can get close- yet never fully there- in the life of happiness and or keep it- just like them and/or of things.'

Naddalin- 'Look,' she- said desperately, leaning in so that nobody else could overhear, 'let's not talk about Lily right now... let's talk about something else, 'Oh like you and Emmah and the PDA'n you to have been- doing.'

Portion

But she, apparently, was quite the- wrong thing to say about.

'I thought,' after saying, she'd- said, tears spattering down on to the- table,'

'I thought you'd you would understand! I needed to talk about it, and that I was falling more than just what I am! Surely- you need to talk about it too!'

'I mean, you saw it happen, didn't you?' I really don't want to talk about it said Naddalin, my mind has had enough.

Everything was going nightmarishly wrong; Riley Davies's girlfriend had even unglued herself to look round at Hayvannah crying.

'Well I have talked about it,' Naddalin said in a mumble,' to Jinger And Emmah, but and also to the new girl now...'

'She is not to be trusted don't fall in love with that...'

Like you would know?

'I know you better than you think- a little girl, I was also...'

'I am not you...' She said.

‘Then do it...’ Said Naddalin.

‘Oh, you’ll talk to Emmah Kizziah! Also, about this you find someone here that you love, and I know her>This Girl< here she will help- you do So-o.’

She’d- said shrilly, her face was now shining with tears- that sparkled in the light like glass shards.

Several more kissing couples broke apart to stare, at the sight of the girl that was crying what looked to be glass crystals, and so hurt over lust- and love, and what she could not have- that was feeling like her old life of forbidden.’

‘Um- maybe it would be best if we just... paid for this food... cram it, and you went and met up with Emmah Kizziah like you noticeably wanted to!’

‘And..., (sniffle) and..., (sniffle) and..., (sniffle) ... I’ll well go to my room and rot and cry, like a little girl that I am.’

‘But you see none of these girls won’t talk to me!’ she said walking down the halls, of the schools.

Naddalin stared at them, utterly bewildered, as she’d- seized a frilly napkin and dabbed at her shining face with it- cutting her face and the blue azure color ran like blood from the gashes and was making the glassy tears look as if their shards of Arctic glacier ice.

‘Hayvannah...?’ She- said weakly, wishing Riley would seize her girlfriend and start kissing her again to stop her ogling at her and Emmah.

‘Go on, leave!’ she’d- said, now crying into the- napkin.’

I do not know why you asked me out in the- first place... if it was not for real... Naddalin said don’t feel bad, I have to say here to... not everyone wants me here, and it’s going to be the same for you- for you do not like them. ‘That’s- a life- even in the afterlife.’”

‘Like if you’re going to make arrangements to meet other girls right after me... staying here in my room you can save it...’ ‘How many are you meeting after Emmah? Like... you have been through a lot?’ Why can’t you keep them?

‘That was compounded questions... well...?’

‘I will say with you- if you like...? (She just looked up at her blushing,) I have to! I don't have to save anything to a child like you, after all, you have to respect me, and that really is not you thought to have; but if you must know it was over trust... and falling out of love with them- or the other way around.’

‘It’s not like that!’ Said Naddalin, and she- was so relieved at finally understanding what she’d- was... yet annoyed about that too, she- laughed, and the tears stopped, which she- realized a split second too late was also a mistake- to start doing in the first place.

Hayvannah sprang to the feet at that moment. The- whole team was quiet and everybody was watching them now, even if they were on the train ride back home half of their mind, was looking tough to them on the other side and was looking at them talking to one another about their personal lives, though one side of their face and put one of those girls eyes, as if they were there too- they could see, hear, and feel it all.

I will see you around, she’d- said to the girl, that was been nasty dramatically harsh, and hiccoughing slightly Naddalin- dashed to the- door, wrenched it open and hurried down the halls and long corridors out the first door off into the- pouring rain, to have a moment alone, even if she is never.

‘Naddalin!’ Hayvannah called after she left, but the- door had already swung shut behind her, looking them apart, and she was not able to open without a scalation key... (that was always around her neck,) she was feeling better and worse about the mean things she said to her.

There was total silence within the- café Hayvannah walk to town in the grays of colors and the flurries of snow all around, looking for her, when everyone eyes were on her over not liking what she said to Naddalin after all this was the girl that said it was okay for her to be here and took her out a pure hell.

Naddalin- She- threw a Galleon of milk down, at the town market, on to the- table, a golden longstanding register was all she could see, not even her eyes at this point would pick over, the counter, she shook pink confetti out of the hair; from it littering the areas- outside...

Just before she walked into the store, the clocks- like the one that was just like the one from her hometown, with the big was a glowing face was making a showed with hand on the hour...

That ticked- talked down, the new year- she saw a girl getting wind blows down the pathway; she did not see Naddalin, behind her as she followed Hayvannah, as she went out of the - door.

It was snowing hard now and she would- not have even noticed her, that she was nowhere to be seen; even if she did not realize that she was walking right behind her. Getting ever so closer with every step.

She- simply did not understand what had happened; half an hour ago they had been getting along fine, and they were fighting.

‘Lady!’ She- muttered furiously, sloshing down she- the now knee-deep snow, felling the street with her hands in the pockets, to keep them from the cold and frostbite.’

What did she would- want to talk about Lily for, anyway?

Why does she- always want to drag up a subject that makes her act like a wild mare- that wants to buck off the rider?’

She- turned right and broke into an icy run, and within minutes she- was turning into the doorway of the- the tree graveyards into the up to the pathway that leads to the bridge that leads up the school and castle, thousands of feet up, she knew that she could not fly over this even if she wanted too, yet another reason why she went to town, for an ointment for the feathers on her wings, to help them mend, and have them groomed, by trusted hands- by a man she has known for years, in what looks like a 1920s barbershop.

She knew the flight was risky, even if she did not fear final death at this point, it was not worth it when she real- at this point was contented to live.

Naddalin- she- knew she- was too early to meet Emmah, at this point, and was not ready to meet up with the one, that she was following behind, and she was already in the air making her flight a- crossed- a remarkable sight the gush to wind would knock you back- from the speed that she was able to capture- and the majesty was brilliant- as she would score- higher than an American Eagle.

After that, she went to a coffee shop- within the walls of the castle- on the 13th floor, but she- thought it likely there would be someone in there with whom she- could spend the- dominant time, of her night.

She- shook the wet hair out, that fall longer than her butt, her eyes needing rubbing she looked around, and yet again there was no one around, just a waiter.

Then moments have passed, then hours, then night become day, she dozed off, just to wake up in nods to see McDermott was sitting alone in a corner; looking down- too, she did not have anything to go home to So-o she stayed too.

‘Hi, McDermott!’ She- said, when she- had squeezed through the- cramped both, and pulled up a chair beside her.

McDermott jumped and looked down at Naddalin as though she - barely recognized her, EVEN IF HER FACE WAS INCHES FORM HERS.

Naddalin saw that she- had two fresh cuts on the faces and several new bruises, yet was feeling stronger and stronger on the inside- she was making a full recovery- she just needs everyone out of her head and some time to be nothing but quiet.

‘Oh, it’s you, Naddalin,’ said McDermott.’ Yeah, all right- ‘Yeah, I’m fine,’ lied Naddalin who was like 75% healthier than the day before; but, next to the battered and mournful- looking McDermott, she- felt she- didn’t really have much to complain about, that was looking like rotting death, walking.’

‘Er- are you sure you're- OKAY?’

‘Me?’ said McDermott.’

‘Oh yeah, I’m grand and still full of life, Naddalin, was grand with excitement- saying, ‘I feel I will am a lot like you someday.’”

She- gazed into the- depths of the aquarium tankard- of fish-like creatures inside, which was the- the size of an of a room, that was in the on the one side of the room, and sighed, saying- ‘...and they think back home, that we came from that if the monkey was not bad enough.’

Portion

Naddalin did not know what to say to her, when she said, ‘I feel you will outlive me, your blood is far more valuable than mine- and you are far more power than- me.’

They sat side by side in silence for a moment. Then McDermott said brusquely, 'In the- same boat, yeh and me, ant' we, honey?'

'Er' said Naddalin, followed by saying- 'I suppose So-o.'

'Yeah... I have said it before... both outsiders, alike like- none of them will ever be fully you- even if they still,' said McDermott, nodding wisely.

'And both orphans inside you to make one with the strength of two, you become your more than them, and most- even if... even if... yeah... orphans- they are- that- odium, and you too but remember- why? Why... you have made it more than them- and have not fallen too them, it's a question of why- in the first place, that made you become whom you were meant to be- part of your story- to make there's, yet you're at the top, remember why- the true way.'

She- took a great swig from the mug- more and more coffee- it seems I need to keep going, she thought.

'Makes a difference, having a decent family,' she- said, back.

'Yes, maybe So-o; yet I feel that you have always had one you just failed to notice, in your own thoughts of feel as if you were not wanted.'

'My dad was decent, I loved my Dad and lost him too young, my Mom was not, and the same for the second time around, Dad was decent, and now look what I did to him like the other it was all over me being in their life that their end too soon.'

'If they had lived, life without me, or them interfering would- a bit different, eh?'

'You can't change a plan even you have said that in your own story- be proud of your story- in black and white- its best to remember that.'

'Yeah... I'm spouse,' said Naddalin cautiously.

McDermott seemed to be in a very strange mood, she thought yet motherly and that was nice when she never- ever really had that.

'Family,' said McDermott gloomily. 'Whatever yeah say, the blood's important... yet is not everything,' She- wiped- saying 'I have had the bodies of 4 girls before me, as I am now- I have life now-for around 4,000 years a trickle of it out of her eye, saying take them and see my memories, this may be the night, that I must say goodbye- forever, ...I have seen more than one millennium, it is time to lay at rest- next to the other bones in the yard.'

'Ms. McDermott,' said Naddalin, unable to stop herself, 'where are you getting all these injuries, on your hands and limes?'

'All those!' said Naddalin, pointing at McDermott's face, saying you are being eaten by the death- and part of death is time.

'I not- okay, I am disintegrating like the blacked dart- that I am made of showing thought- over time, nothing lasts forever, soon if I choose not to lay at rest; I will become black dust blowing in the wind- with nothing left by to be sweep away in a dust pain.'

'Eh?' said McDermott, looking startled- at the look of the young girl carrying.'

'Oh... that's just normal bumps an' bruises, Naddalin,' said, wanting to think that, McDermott dismissively- said... "don't be afraid of death, I was not, the first time, and I not going to be this time ...even if... this time is to burn, for a life of not wanting too."

She- drained the mug, set it back on the- table, booth... as Naddalin got too she feet.

'I'll be seeing' yeah, Naddalin... take care of now.' Naddalin knew she would not be seeing her ever again.

And she- lumbered out of the- pub looking wretched, and disappeared into the- torrential blizzard, after walking, yet again all the corridors- for something to do, out in the weather for air, even if she was high up long a veranda of the castle.

Naddalin watched her go to the beyond that night, feeling miserable, as she tried not to look back, even if she had to stop- to defog the shop's window with her palm, to look at her one last time before walking on.

McDermott was unhappy and she- was hiding something, but she- seemed determined not to accept help. What was going on? But before Naddalin could think about it any further, she- heard a voice calling her name.

'Naddalin! Naddalin, over there!'

Emmah was waving at her from the tower above- for her side of the- room and veranda, saying... 'come inside and met me up here, instantly she was there, in a spell of teleport, Emmah was in her head and making her no if and or butts, to get inside, and be by her side.'

She- got up and made the way towards her through her- saying, 'well you stand by me forever- and never leave me? I am scared, of being alone and the unknown.' She said to Emmah in a strong hug, that would not break- away.

She- was still a few feet away when she- realized that Emmah was alone- too and feeling about the same in low.

She'd- was sitting at the end of her bed with the- unlikeliest pair of slippers on her feet, that were so old they were crusty. 'I can't let them go...' she said 'there like part of me...' she- could ever have imagined: a night without them just like her pillow- and blankie too.

Danna Lovegood was the same she had a stuffed pink bunny, and still sucked her middle and ring fingers as she sleeps- and it sounds inappropriate at times. All girls- like us come with corks...

Rita Skeeter, journalist on the- Star press and one of Emmah's least favorite people in the- world, was on her way to get the story, about McDermott final passing, and I had nothing to say, yet I was the last to have said anything, like- why is always me, that gets the spotlight when I don't want it?

I thought you were with Hayvannah, I wasn't expecting you for another hour at least!' 'You're early!' Said Emmah, moving along to give her room to sit down for the interview.'

'I'm- a-going to say this now- the shit...! ...you put into this better make this one here, look good- she been through enough- or kick your ass to your head- got that.'

'Hayvannah? - Whom came back to see all the fuss, just for some moments before teleporting back with them on the train ride home with the others.'

Rita said at once- if they were really having sex- and all that girl like them do, twisting around on her butt to stare avidly at Naddalin- Emmah did.' Who was a loss of wards...?'

'A girl... can be a friend to other girls here without you dating her right?' That was said back...

Emmah- 'And even if we are, that for us to care about not you... get to talk about why you're really here or get lost.' Hayvannah- in a rage!

'It's none of your business if Naddalin's been with a hundred girls,' Emmah told Rita coolly, this is not what this story is about after all.

'So, you can put that away right now.'

'This is about final memory and obituary- not my sex- life...'

Rita had been on the- the point of withdrawing a corrosive blue quill from her bag... to override the words, that are always type automatically.

Looking as though she'd- had been forced to swallow hard- Naddalin said- 'I don't care what you say in this paper' ...and then she kissed Emmah on the lips just to make her happy, say whatever you want- both agreed at this point to get her away from them, and both were saying everything or anything she wanted to her, or she would not leave... 'till she got here story her way- she sat there for 3 hours- looking into Naddalin's eyes spine-chillingly, she'd- snapped her bag shut again; saying- 'I think I have my story here.'

'What are you up to- girlie?'

Danna her friend, was saying come one we need to get back to the town, pressroom, I will walk with you I need some air anyways, the girls knew this was just a diversion- yet worked.

Naddalin asked, sitting down- after getting up to meet Danna saying- 'OMG thanks,' (in a whisper) and staring at Rita, walking away bouncing out the door with every footstep... uniform skirt fluttering...

Emmah- 'yep,' she said looking dazed, her eyes were crossed, Naddalin said, 'well- well- well- this is going to be rich- no?'

'Little Miss. Perfect was just about to tell me when you arrived- when you walked in a took my story away,' said Rita, taken a large slurp of her drink, walking with Danna.'

Emmah- I suppose was allowed to talk for you to her, I- was right?' She'd- shot at her looking back with one brow up.

'Yes, I suppose you are,' said Naddalin said aloofly.

Unemployment did not suit Rita, so she shut up after the last threats of having her shitty job.

Emmah's- her- hair that had once been set in elaborate curls now hung lank and unkempt around the face.

Naddalin- 'You are looking more like me every day- in the not caring...' and she touched her hair loose- curls, saying 'I still love yeah.'

'Same back...'

'It's what on the inside that counts...right... he - he.'

The- crimson paint, hand on the light post matched the holiday feel, and the color of Rita two-inch nails- that was chipped, shorter and shorter with every bit she made, and there were a couple of false jewels missing from her ring to on her hand, her nerves were that bad, that she was even picking her scabs again.

She'd- took another great gulp of her drink and said out of the- corner of her mouth, 'Pretty girl, she is... Naddalin?'

'What you're saying this all over the fact that you like her- you have a piss- poor way of showing it.'

(We/us- Naddalin- and I, were) Looking into Danna's mind- she was doing everything she could to keep calm. 'One more word about Naddalin's and Emmah's love life and the- deal is off, of helping keep this job, and that's a promise,' said Emmah irritably -

'What deal?' said Rita, wiping her mouth on the- back of the sleeve of her right hands.'

'You haven't mentioned a deal yet, Miss. Prissy, you just told me to turn up- and you had something in it for me.'

'Yes, but you are taking it to far- and blowing it all out- a proportion...'

'What's that mean? ...Out- a proportion...?'

'So-o, this was a way to get to her, you never- ever read a card about me... is that it, God that's low and creepy?'

Find someone who cares, why do not you?'

‘Yes, yes, one of these days you will write more horrible stories about Naddalin and me- and others, I am sure of this, yet you’ll be doing it without a job, said Emmah indifferently- you’re going to say shit about the wrong person- okay- you have been warned.’ This is what was said in a letter to her boss, 3 or so day’s latter.

She’d- took a deep shuddering breath, I will am the one to kiss and love her- and her eyes glitter- as she graded both of her hand in a tight hold.

They’ve run plenty of horror stories about Naddalin this year without my help- she said- and I have to do as they say,’ said Rita, shooting a sideways look at her over her- top of her glass, when she met up with her the next day over yet more coffee and adding in a rough whisper,’ how has that made you feel, Naddalin...? Distraught...? Betrayed...? Misunderstood...?’

‘It’s all in the fact, that I want you!’ she said sheepishly. Naddalin looked at her astonished and completely flabbergasted.

‘She- feels angry, of course,’ said Emmah in a hard, clear voice. She is not into you so back off.’

‘For the reason that she told she- Martita for Magic she- truth and she- Martita’s too much of an idiot to believe her.’

‘So, you actually stick to it, do you, that She- who must not be named is back- and I can turn you over to her and her girls if you don’t become my lover?’ Said Rita. Now how do you like that...? ...Lowering her glass and exposing Naddalin, in ways that were wrong with a piercing stare while she fingers strayed longingly to the- clasp of her bra, in the low light of the café.’

‘Your mine... all mine, now- I have paid to them for this... you can do this for me.’

Emmah did not like it, yet there was not a thing she could do, looking at this girl have her way, like always- you know who was at the bottom of it all, even in the press- it was rigged.

You stand by all the garbage Duerre’s been telling everybody, even if you cannot prove a thing, about you, know who return, and be the blame, and you being the- sole witness, about Lily too, being in on it, like I am now- try it- and you be the one, looking crazy, and disport- and then I’ll say you raped me- and I have the press behind me to say it... also- hey- you can sit your pretty little ass in the jail!’

Emmah ran and attacked, yet a magical beam of energy- from her hand pushed back flying and hitting the wall, wings out, and the fight was bloody between the two of them, fang ripping even, Emmah left limping away, and left-wing next broken if not completely, and her neck ripped open.

‘There will never- ever be- sole witness,’ snarled Naddalin, we get it- I know it.

There were dozen-odd death devourers there as well- all tricked too feel, I was the bad girl.

(Thought Naddalin-)

‘Want their names- Rita screamed it you feel you have a case?’

‘I’d love them all’ she said. And then moments after stated, ‘even if you don’t get that kind of love- do you understand- So-o you say whatever you like, and do whatever you like to me - quite honestly...

I don’t care either way,’ breathed Naddalin. Now fumbling in her bag once more - for a tissue, and gazing at her as though she- was the- most beautiful thing she would- had ever seen- yet she had too as if she was under her spell and she was- or just playing the game of not have a choice.’

A great bold headline: ‘- Blames...’ A subheading- saying: Culpability, ‘Naddalin -

The name was there as the mastermind to a story that was too hard to believe: all of them were there, and newly named- ‘The Death Sisters’ are still among us, and the mother the most powerful of all- has been reviled.’

In addition, then beneath a nice big photograph of you, ‘Disturbed teenage survivor of you know who’s attacks the innocent, like Naddalin-, for over 100 years, and it also reviled that she was- NEVAEH, causing outrage all day, by accusing respectable and prominent members of the - magician and fallen angel community...’’

There was a sound of heavy footsteps, then the - door creaked open slightly.

Emmah stood there with her eyes red and swollen, tears splashing down her - in front of her face, say you never told me this, yet I realize why you could not.

For once, someone did something for me... and you know they're going to kill her for this... yet, I have to say thank you, and move on- or it will eat at me like cancer.

‘Also, you’ve heard everything now? Has it changed anything with you?’

‘Not at all...’ she said back.

And the screams were heard for Malcolm- the girls burrowed, their- fangs into her flesh, sucking the life out of Rita's neck, yet she will always be remembered - in the graveyard with a stone, that is the largest around- for helping me, for her outspoken words of having a voice, and courage, sometimes a friend is a girl, that you would least expect.

The question for me though is still- WHY!

‘If Only in My Mind’

Introduction: Burning Books

x

(I am the daughter of Marcella)

Remember- ‘This world wants us all to be gay over the fact of overpopulation, and rights, yet having rights were some taken away- by letting us have our way?’

This is what he meant, for me to do with my life be his... anytime he wants it-girl and nothing more and nothing less, and it makes his rejection easier to accept... almost. Yet, the money is why, like- I am here- and the love too... yah that... I have been working on my studies more than them being with him or her... I would say it was to clear my head. I was looking over the paper that was said I wrote, I pretend to read the article, that Katie made for me. Above and beyond its suddenly, blindingly obvious.

He's too gloriously good-looking, not to think about non-stop. I know he loves me, yet he has a hard way of really showing just that.

I, understand, yet not so- her words make more sense than mine- I questioned this... He's not the man for me. I can live with this.

It's only when I'm in bed, that I try to sleep, that I allow my thoughts to drift off some - yet all the voices run through me- never hushing up. Never slowing- never stopping, for me to have a moment- in time to think alone.

'Katie, she is very good,' 'I'm going to study, is what I said to her... just wanted to get away from her mouth.' I am not going to think about him again, for now, I vow to myself, and opening my revision notes, I start to read. Thus far, his face keeps looking it to mine, and I see him looking back in the glass.

I put my pen down, which makes all the font that I write out and comforts it into text in word. I am finished, with my re-write of her draft. My final exam is over, I said- this will do- just fine the grin spread across my face can be helped.

It's probably the first time all week that I've smiled at something other than him. It's Friday, and we shall be celebrating tonight, really celebrating.

Paris- with Katie not him, I need this- the city the lights the sound- of something other than me inquiry all that is me - and him. She slanted her head and smiled at her companion, with grace seated her at the best table in the restaurant; her smile, at least, was honest, though almost nothing else about her was. The pale gray of her eyes was warmed to by sweet colored contact lenses; her blond hair had been darkened by the low light of the tower in the background, then subtly streaked with lighter shades. in her arms mentally begging her with every fiber of my being to kiss me, is what I really needed, just her true love for me - not asking... never demanding.

He didn't want me as a girlfriend, this week he was off doing what he does. I turn on to my side, now at the hotel, with her in the single bed, Frivolously, I wonder if perhaps he's with a new younger girl?

Think back to: 'Ah!' settled in his chair with a contented sigh, returning her smile. she is so beautiful woman in her teen years; she looks the US, with glossy dark hair and liquid gray eyes, and a luxurious mouth.

(Bed)

I close my eyes and begin to drift, and she nudges me, groggy as I - she had gambled that he wouldn't have his people dig any deeper than that, that he would run out of the patience required to wait for the answers before, she made a move on me. Her manufactured background was only a few layers deep; I knew she and I wanted too so why not; she hadn't had time to prepare more. Maybe he's saving himself. Well not for you, my sleepy subconscious has a final swipe at me before unleashing itself on my dreams.

I might even get drunk! I said - we can hear it's not agents the law here, I've never been drunk before, I know that the trill was wearing off, I glance across the sports hall at Katie, and she's still scribbling furiously, five minutes to the end of foolish. This is it, the end of my academic career if he tunes in...

She'd done the best she could in the time she had, she knew that she would have to be off doing her study's even on this run over the sea that takes less than a day now.

He made a point of keeping himself in shape and his hair hadn't yet started to gray - either that or he was as skilled as she at touch-ups. 'You look especially lovely tonight; have I told you that yet?

'I shall never have to sit in rows of anxious, isolated students again. Inside I'm doing graceful cartwheels around my head, knowing full well that's the only place I can do graceful cartwheels.

...And that night, I dream of her and I live long ever after, and I'm running through dark places with eerie strip lighting doing things we shouldn't, and I don't know if I'm running toward something, that I should want or not - the dream, leads me to choices, it's just not clear.

Katie stops writing and puts her pen down. She glances across at me, and I catch her Cheshire cat smile too. We head back to our apartment together in her Mercedes, refusing to discuss our final paper. Katie is more concerned about what she's going to wear to the bar this evening. I am busily fishing around in my purse for my keys.

'Merry, there's a package for you, there flowers from him...' she said.

Odd, I haven't ordered anything from Amazon recently.

Katie is standing on the steps up to the front door holding them.

'No.' Katie's eyes are wide with disbelief.' I nod.

'You have, she said, he loved you more than anything, I starting to believe it.' But then her gaze was warm, wet whit tears for she was in love with me more than he, at that moment.

I knew... she had trained long and hard to acquire it, I knew she was the one that would always care about me. 'Thank you again... I said to him in a mind message.' I recognize the quote was something slandered, where was the love in it?

I have not let myself dwell on RICHARD C. MAST - for the past week. Okay... so his blue eyes are still haunting my dreams, as she plays with me in them too, and I know it will take an eternity to expunge the feel of his arms around me and his wonderful perfume from my brain. Why has he sent me this?

'Can't think of anyone else, that would do this for me, like him though.' 'What does this card mean...?' 'I have no inkling; I think it's a warning - scrupulously he keeps threatening me off, with gifts. I have no idea why- he thinks I will keep coming back- just for the coming.

It's not like I'm beating his door down- and the wood hard- with only him.' I frown some... 'I know you don't want to talk about him, Merry, but he's seriously into you. Warnings or no.' 'I don't know, and I don't care. I can't accept these from him, yet not feeling as I did in the past some of the caring went away.

I love Katie, she's so loyal and supportive. I repack the books and leave them on the dining table. Katie hands me a glass of champagne.

'To the end of exams and our new life in NY,' she grins.

'To the end of exams, our new life in NY, and excellent results.' We clink glasses and drink.

The bar is loud and hectic, full of soon to be graduates out to get trashed. Katie joins us. He won't graduate for another- year, but he's in the mood to party and gets us into the spirit of our newfound freedom by buying a pitcher of margaritas for us all. As I down my fifth, I know this is not a good idea on top of the champagne.

‘So, what now Merry?’ She shouts at me over the noise, Katie has the constitution of a she-ass. ‘That is doubtful,’ she calmly replied. ‘I have never liked any wine.’ She’d made that plain from the start, who disliked the taste of wine, I thought sitting over here looking at her thinking that. Her taste buds were deplorably working-class. She, in fact, enjoyed a glass of wine, (I thought) now she is drinking only coffee or bottled water; order coffee for her, of that... I giggle.

‘I think I’d better have a beer.’

‘I’ll go get us a pitcher.’

‘More drink, Merry!’

Katie bellows...

‘Classy- in France?’

Sure!

Her eyes for Katie, are glittery and wet for her. I move out of her way to hold and get up from our table. She is taking photos, yes, of her in her tight jeans, her usual stunning self, and high heels, hair piled high with tendrils hanging down softly around her face. I giggled over it like I have no idea what the time is, maybe I’ll wake with her over to the tower and well go up and kiss at the top. Good thinking, Merry. I stagger off through the crowd, she yells at me, and I whisper in her mind that I am over here. Of course, there’s a line, but at least it’s moving fast to the top. I’m suppressing a drunken smile, hit me like an involuntary, looking out over with her in my arms and the kiss.

Back at the hotel my head, ponding so-o... I go for swims uncomfortably, with all the others, a lot of kids but even so it was nice, Well, the object of the exercise was to get drunk, on it’s the other way ‘round. I have succeeded, in working it off. I stare blankly over and over in a fast way - at the poster on the back of the toilet door that extols the virtues of safe sex. Yah- NO! like that is going to happen.

Holy crapping piss bucket, did I just call the RICHARD C. MAST in my mind? Shit. My phone rings for him it’s all in my mind though, and it makes me jump when he says ‘what do you want.’ I squeak in surprise; by how the man he is being to me for what see to be noted on my own doing.

This is what it’s like - probably not an experience to be repeated. The line has moved, and it’s now my turn.

‘Howdy,’ I bleat timidly into the handset. I hadn’t calculated on this.

‘I’m coming to get you,’ he says and hangs up... before I said I did want him too. The only RICHARD C. MAST - could sound so calm and so threatening at the same time. I pull my jeans up after the poster said not to do what I just did. My heart is thumping. Coming to get me? Well, I am coming to get her- ha. Hang on, I’m fine. Oh no.

I’m going to be sick... no... He’s just messing with my head.

I said- ‘Holy freaking crap nugget.’

I for one looked flushed and slightly unfocused. He can’t find me here, I would say so with GPS within my body as we all have now, ‘You’ve been gone so long.’ Katie reprimands me. Besides, it will take him 4 hours to get here from NY, and we’ll be long gone by then. I wash my hands and check my face in the mirror. ‘Where were you?’ I wait at the bar for what feels like an eternity for the pitcher of beer and eventually return to the table. ‘The girl’s room on a call, that I shouldn’t have made.’ Mind dealing- I said... ‘ah-h-ha’ were sitting out said at a bar café. ‘All- out- in the - fresh air- and yeah.’ ‘Katie, I think I’d better think that you and I have a thing... ‘Merry, you are such a softie with him- grow some lady nuts and say- freak you.’

‘I’ll be five minutes...’

‘Going to MASTURBATE-?’

xx

I make my way through the crowd another time, thinking of how I was going to get off like three more times, in 15. I am beginning to feel nauseous, my head is spinning uncomfortably, see in the little girl in the open stall next to me get there faster than I! and she’s like freaking 10! and I’m a little unsteady with my frapping 3 figurings, or have girl gotten even more slutty. More unsteady than usual, she got it down. God, I turn on- you? No- nope ...?... didn’t think so prev.

‘I think I’ve just had a bit too much to drink, I feel like more pee than that is coming out of me.’ I smile weakly at her and say- GOD FOR YOU HUNNY- good for you. ‘and you too,’ she murmurs, and her dark eyes are watching me intently, saying why you doing this on your own at your age... is a young girl thing to do. ‘Do you need a hand?’

She asks and steps closer undies at her feet, putting her arm around me some. I’ve got this. I try and push her away rather weakly, of age, yet there nothing wrong with it.

‘Merry, please,’ she whispers, its Kate in my head saying don’t do it, yet the young child is holding me in her arms, pulling me close, like a lover.

These days’ free love is love! No matter the age...

‘You know I like you, Merry, please.’ He has one hand at the small of my back holding me against him, the other at my chin tipping back my head. Holy freak... he’s going to kiss me.

Her hand has slipped into my hair, and she’s holding me.

She whispers against my lips. His breath is soft and smells too sweet - of candy and Kool-Aid. She gently kisses me on my jaw, and lips and moves up to the side of my mouth and then right on my parted lips. I feel frightened, drunk, and out of control, yet I love having free love like this - it like I was her age all over. The feeling is sickly sweet.

You are my friend, no and for life, I said to her, and I think, I’m going to throw up, so you should runoff. A voice in the dark says quietly. Holy shit! In my mind - RICHARD C. MAST - he’s at this juncture, see what I have done.

I glance anxiously up at RICHARD C. MAST. He’s glowering at Katie, and he’s furious, like me for doing a young one as he said. Crapping, fly trap- my stomach hauls, and I double over, worse than when blood is shooting out of my hole, I’ll hold you.’

She grabs my hair and pulls it out of the firing line- my body no longer able to accept the alcohol, and I vomit outstandingly on to the ground at me and the little French girls’ feet her name was - Willow.

She has her arms around my middle body - holding my hair in a makeshift ponytail down my back so it's off my face, her hands the other is I try awkwardly to push her hair out of the way, but I vomit again... and again, even on to her half nude body.

Even when my stomach's empty, and nothing is coming up, oh shit... 'If you're going to throw up again, I note, with deep thankfulness, that it's in relative darkness. I vow silently that I'll never ever drink again, yet that like say I cannot have a day without sex. It's going down in me at some point.

My hands are resting on the block wall... How long is this going to last? I questioned... she takes her T stands, and I wipe my mouth, on she said she did not care... love at first sight... I questioned it. This is just too appalling for words, Katie said... I have to go out now. So-o horrifying gasping heaves of wackiness- my body feels. Then it concludes... Katie is still hovering by the entrance to the girl's room watching us.

Her (the young girls) hand are barely holding me up -vomiting profusely is exhausting. takes his hands off I say to him- I'm hectic with embarrassment, repulsed with myself. When I come around. My hands in on head I groan, as I place them there. Like that was the solitary worst moment of my lifespan. Twins taking a crap is what I think of at this moment- why I don't know. Oh- yeah- I do- there they are both doing just that- like- looking in at me over in there apparent 5,00 feet up or so all glass too. What should I say to him, for him to forgive this?

RICHARD C. MAST'S rejection will not be something good. I try to remember a worse one, that I have done, and I cannot. I glare at him, in my mind. For he is acting like my dad, not my lover. Oh, the humiliation... my mother was far worse. Marry who are you kidding, he's just seen you hurl all over the ground- nothing more said- Katie, she feels that what I did was nothing. Yet I still look pretty shamefaced to myself, and him- or so I think.

I have a few choice words for my so-called friend, none of which I can repeat in front of RICHARD C. MAST - There's no disguising your lack of ladylike behavior, and I can only come up with- and this is so, so many shades darker in terms of, I risk a glance at him, I see hem looking back at me mirrored back in my stare.

He's staring down at me, his face composed, yet he can help but fall for me fast, giving nothing away about how he was feeling about what I did we fall. Turning, I glance at Katie whom and, like me, scared by the true filling that he heads to me from that day. I personally mutter, staring at the handkerchief which I am furiously worrying with my fingers.

It's so soft, and worm, as slid his fingers in her, he probably would expect her to share his bed tonight, but he was destined to be disappointed once again, in her saying: I don't feel the need after, soloing- so many times today. Her hatred was so strong she had barely been able to force herself to let him kiss her and accept his touch with some temperateness.

There was no way in hell like she'd let him do more than that to her tonight- for the movies running in her had of him acting like an ass and or like her dad. 'I'm sorry, he said for what I have done to you. Just in my thoughts of...' Apologize... and say back off. Katie mutters, derogatory but we both ignore that, and he slinks off back into the of my mind for rest and sleep. I'm on my own with doing me - and just Kate.

'We've all been here, perchance not quite as dramatically as you,' he says dryly.' It's about knowing your limits, Merry.

I mean, I'm all for pushing limits, but really this is beyond the pale. My head rings with excess alcohol and frustration. Do you make a habit of this kind of behavior?'

He was scolding me like an errant child, something you would never do to me I said to Kate that had me held by the butt, arching my back as she is holding me in her arms, for passion and cute kissing- then 69, her butt in my face, I move her lips around using sucking at mouth and teeth and tongue.

xxx

Katie- Put her legs on your shoulders and grab onto her waist or open up her vagina. (the last one feels better) or have her butt hole in your well- nose. Don't fart!!

-And-

At first kiss outside her vagina and then slowly lick her inside and just pretend she's the most beautiful thing you've ever- tasted and if she wants to talk dirty to her but talks to her about that beforehand so she won't be offended. I hope this helps... I love it. It's such a turn on.

- You want to kiss/nibble on her neck first. It's a good way to start turning her on.
- Suck on her nipples and play with them with your tongue.

This too is another great turn on.

• While you're doing these, massage her PUSS-PUSS over her pants just to get her ready for it. Just the night at the party for girls my age, before I had to write a line of silicone members hard core style- from all 10 small to biggest I have ever seen- in sizes, and saying I love it to get the scholarship for in hazing all to his liking- for pledger and at his command- with other girls from cheering me on to be in a frat house at and have honors.

- Work your way down, slowly and sexually.
- Open up her PUS*Y and go straight to the- Cl*t.
- Smack the PUS*Y with your tongue really fast, and suck and tug on it (not too hard though).
- As you're sucking her PUS*Y, slide your fingers in and out of her vagina opening.
- Once you have two fingers in there, and they're facing up, curve them like a hook and without going in and out, stroke her G-spot.

If this is your first time, beware of the smell and taste, as it makes most guys gag at first.

Part of me wants to say, if I want to get drunk every night like this, then it's my decision and nothing to do with him - but I'm not brave enough. Not now that I've thrown up in front of him. Why is he still standing there?

'No,' I said contritely. 'I've never been drunk before and right now I have no desire to ever be again.' Yet, I know that's a- lie...

'Come on, I'll take you home,' she murmurs- do this to me.

I just don't understand why he's here. I begin to feel faint. She notices my dizziness and grabs me before I fall and hoists me into his arms, holding me close to her chest like a child. For sucking and nabbing on her nipples. 'I need you, Katie.' Holy Moses, I say at C-* -M! I'm in her arms again. Where I do the same to her butt in the air, I go for it for like a half-hour.

'Dancing,' with Katie in the club she shouts, and I can tell he's mad at me acting slutty. He's is eyeing me- him the RICHARD C. MAST suspiciously.

I struggle with my black jacket and place my small shoulder bag over my head, so it sits on my hip. I'm ready to go, once I've seen Katie; to party my ass off... yet he is saying NO... No in my mind. And I just having fun. It's earsplitting, packed, and the music is underway, thus there is a huge mass on the dance floor. she sets me down, and, taking my hand, leads me back to the bar.

She knew that- I went out for some air- of him... embarrassed weak I feel dumb, and still drunk, somewhat exhausted, ashamed, and on some strange equal unquestionably off the scale electrified, by the cocktail of things I took down.

He's clutching my hand- I see them all wavy to my sight. Looking at them all swirly. Such a confusing array of emotions, play tricks in my mind like haunted schoolgirl ghosts. I'll need at least a week to process them all, I knew even in this state of mind of senseless.

Katie is not at our table, and Katie has disappeared. She looks lost and forlorn on his own. 'Where's Katie? She was off with some young girl doing what I did the night before.' I see that she had to feel as I did... she was always like that with me... we have to be the same in all- or not...! 'My head is beginning to pound in time to the thumping bass line of the music.'

He rolls his eyes at me and takes my hand again and leads me to the bar. He's served immediately.

'She's on the dance floor,' I touch RICHARD C. MAST'S arm and lean up and shout in his ear, brushing his hair with my nose, smelling his clean, fresh smell. All those forbidden, unfamiliar feelings that I have tried to deny surface and run amok through my drained body. I myself flush, and somewhere deep, deep down my muscles clench deliciously. He is such a - Control-Freak - I said to her- saying: your just having fun. He's watching me intently, mirrored in my- lost a young girl like the look of my eyes.

‘Drink- Drink- drink’ I heard her say, to this young girl in the bar and she was about 14,’ he shouts his order at me. He looks irritated and livid, with me like I am his sex- Dollie, and nothing more...He’s so overbearing, I thought. Give me love- I thought- or is sex now just the love? What is his delinquent? The moving lights are meandering and turning in time to the music casting strange colored light and obscurities all over the bar and the business. He’s alternately white, green, blue, and bloodshot red.

There a dead girl in an ash box sitting on the ground, on the walkway to my home, she was just burnt a day go, and dumped, here, and this is where she is resting- no one cares about her like death and dumping ash that nothing- or that she was only 5 years of age...I take a hesitant swallow; I think about the life she never had- on like all the others thoughts going through my mind I care.

‘All of it,’ shouts in my head- like the way she passed- by some killing her for the dollar in her underwire where she keeps and for the young rape.

I sway slightly, and he puts his hand on my shoulder to steady me. Um- Merry... are you ever going to live this down, and say she slipped away? She was my sister girl- and mom and they just dump her off... to be kicked by passing feet- yah but that is what they do these days- girl.

Cemeteries are wasted spaces of land, why do that when you need to construct things in that space. There is nothing left to remember her by- nothing by the memories in my mind of whom she was.

It makes me feel queasy, as I look in the box 3 x 6-inch books and see nothing but blackened asks... blowing some of the wands of the high walkways... in the glowing tingling light of the smoggy covered skyline. I notice this thought of what she was wearing the last time that I saw her, a blur though- wearing; a loose white linen shirt, snug jeans, playing in the park on the roof of the high-rise, pink converse sneakers, and a pink and white jacket, I would know I see a flick in some of the ash hitting my face as dust in the wind.

Now in bed sleeping pills at my side, taking the glass from me, she places them for me- so sweet. Her shirt is unbuttoned at the top, and I see a sprinkling skin coming at me - and I somewhat out.. then just to see her ass in my face... when I come to it, in my groggy frame of mind, she looks yummy.

He takes my hand once more. Holy cow - he’s leading me onto the dance floor. Shit. I do not dance. He can sense my reluctance, and under the colored lights, I can see his amused, slightly sardonic smile. He gives my hand a sharp tug, and I’m in his arms again, and he starts to move, taking me with him. Boy, he can dance, and I can't believe that I'm following him step by step. Maybe it's because I'm drunk that I can keep up. He's holding me tight against him, his body against mine... if he wasn't clutching me so tightly, I'm sure I would swoon at his feet. In the back of my mind, my mother's often-recited warning comes to me: Never trust a man who can dance.

I looked into him/ his daily thoughts and what he did, just to see that he was with a 15-year-old - not me- saying- 'Such a tight pussy- so tight and young and small and the sucking oh so tight it's letting are out the sides. - he said as I see that he was with a new girl named- Nataliee.

I just was modified...Really likes she likes someone, I gasp. Katie is making her moves go in her mind for me of her hook up, she had with her new friend. She's dancing her ass off, and she only ever does that if she likes someone. It means there'll be three of us for breakfast tomorrow morning. Katie! Outside and inside my head pounding away, loud. I cannot hear what he says, I tuned it out... it was my wishes. I can't tell the color under the pulsating to all the heat of the flashing lights going off, is the day starting a new.

I Katie- curly blonde hair, and light, wickedly gleaming eyes.

Me- She pulls me into her arms, where she is more than happy to be... Katie!

But I never got to talk to her, the girl she had last night- I had to meet her. A new day is all the same- until the night-RICHARD C. MAST propels us off the dance floor in double-quick time. Is she okay? She said- she's not you- though. I need to do the safe sex lecture, for the school, the teacher I know is a lezbo, but yeah...she loves me.

I can see where things are heading for her and him, In the back of my mind, I hope she reads one of the posters on the back of the toilet doors. My thoughts crash through my brain, fighting the drunk, fuzzy feeling. It's so warm in here, so loud, so colorful - too bright. My head begins to swim with so many thoughts of him and her, and her and then him- and what she did- he did- and what I did with all, oh no... The last thing I hear beforehand, I pass out in RICHARD C. MAST -'s arms is his harsh description. It's very quiet, I am comfortable and warm, the light is muted, in this bed. 'Freak!' I open my eyes, Hmm... I'm tranquil for a moment.

'This looks bigger, then I remember,' I said to him- by this time I have a lust for him so- that I need him- oh so much. Oh so...! It's oddly familiar to me yet all-new the love only he can give- odd as only she can too as a girl- and he a boy. I have no idea where I am, halfway in the night- I come to it and see I am in his bed nude, and he going down on me, lovingly hard! I am enjoying the strange unfamiliar surroundings, of him just work- work- working it! Where? ...?... Where am I? My confused brain struggles over its recent painterly memories.

Holy crap- I said- like that is carp the is holy- said Katie in my mind... ha funny. I'm a hotel he owns in Atlantic City. ...In a suite- I see him coming to me, ready for loving making, As I did the last time, we were together, he loves it when I spray all over his face, as he loves doing to me as well! I have stood in a room similar to this with Katie. Oh shit. I'm in RICHARD C. MAST -'s suite. This room is worth more the then-White House- and some of those places that why don't care about- How did I get here?

I questioned... memories of the previous night come slowly- back to haunt me, like my sister young life coming to end fast with someone, that did not love her just for hot young sex. She never had a boy toy. Nothing dead at 5! Holy shit. No socks...No jeans... I see this photo of her playing- where she was just being a kid- I see the first time she cum-med, on her little bed, it was the same night- she found out she was going to have to not see me any longer- so Katie showed her to be happy- I glance at the bedside night table- and see her face on the screen that movies the photos. I don't remember coming here. I'm wearing my t-shirt, bra, and panties. I FEEL Broken- The drinking, oh no the drinking, the handset call, oh no the phone call, the vomiting, oh no the vomiting. Katie and then RICHARD C. MAST. Oh no. I cringe inwardly.

The orange juice tastes heavenly, It's I sit up and take the tablets. On it is a glass of orange juice and two tablets. Advil. He is such a Control freak that he is, he thinks of the whole thing. Essentially, I don't feel that bad, probably much healthier than I personally merit too. Dehydration quenching and invigorating. Nothing beats freshly squeezed orange juice for refreshing a parched mouth.

How are you feeling?' 'Improved better than I earned,' I- gabble.

'How did I get here?' My voice is small, contrite.

Don't worry about it he said- fastly.

Followed by: 'Good morning Merry. I peek up at- him, I for one, like- feels similar to a two-year-old, if I close my eyes when I'm not really here. There's a knock on the door, for it to open. RICHARD C. MAST -'s sweat; the notion does odd things to me. My heart leaps into my mouth, and I can't seem to find my voice, to say come in. He opens the door anyway and strolls in, being all sweet. Holy hell, he's been working out, in tight shorts that show off his backside.

He comes and sits down on the edge of the bed, way, off, like his hair, blowing in the wind as the doors were open to the cityscape. Sweat, hard I take a deep breath and close my eyes, I can't bear to look at the cheat any longer. He's staring at me, blue bright eyes, and as usual, I have no idea what he's thinking, even if it is run hard in my mind of all the facts. He closes enough for me to touch, for me to smell, of him to be overpowering- and I want him- oh no- YES! Do I want him!

The towel, he had was thrown on the bed at my feet.

He hides his thoughts and feelings so well. Grasps is let out of me for he has me around his neck, going in for it. Like his sex toy that is a rag doll, I wriggle hard. He even takes me from behind over the chair without me giving the okay- I was all his! And I look down and see that I am shaved! Oh my... 'Did you put me to bed?' Did you get me this night's top?

His face is blank.

'Yes!'

Um- it was an intoxicating cocktail- 'After you passed out, that he gave me last night my little girl down under is still red- and I can walk- so much better than a margarita, I was out in the la-la land- and I do remember the hardcore FREAKING! and now I can speak from experience, this man goes in hard and deep.

'Did I throw up again?' My voice is quieter. Don't worry about getting knocked up I have taken care of that too... with this. An implant was placed by a dater last night when you were passed out- don't thank me!

Don't say anything- don't even think about it- it for your own good.

Um- is all I got out before his index finger hashed me - up to- my lips.

'Did you undress me?' I whispered...

'Funny you cute- that's the least of your worries!' He said.

Um...?

I thought...! Maybe I think too much...? Maybe he's right...? Or is this wrong...?

'Monday.'

'Clever girl. When do you start?' I press my thighs together at the delicious memory, 'SIIP' and it reminds me that I need to spread my knees. For her, I shuffle them apart. How long will he make me wait?' No- yes... she leans forward and kisses my forehead. I am thrown by his casual command but do as I'm bid, and he undoes my bra and unzips my skirt. He pushes my skirt down, cupping my behind as he does, and kissing my shoulder. He leans against me, I and his nose nuzzle my hair, inhaling deeply. He squeezes my buttocks.

'You intoxicate me, Miss King, and you calm me. Such a heady combination.' He kisses my hair. Grabbing my hand, he tugs me into the shower.

'Ow,' I squeal. The water is practically scalding. RICHARD C. MAST grins down at me as the water cascades over him.

She smiles, I gape at him quizzically. She lifts her head to gaze down at me, a hint of amusement in her eyes, and sighs. She strokes his fingertips down my cheek, then down the length of my body.

'It was a yearning to burn.' The computers and robots have taken over the world, nobody needs to read any of that shit, or think. Everything is at our fingertips with cell phones, I pads, and PC's, without looking through old dusty pages, plus its agents the law to think for yourself, and read any books. We burn books like most have the burning itch to have unpredicted sex.

We burn books like most have the burning itch to have unpredicted sex now morning, like the alarm, going off to let me no so... its 7 am... on a Monday- and the year is 2070. I have great frustration with at myself as I frown at my look in the mirror, not what you call ass ugly- but days like this one you just wish you were dead... all girls no that feeling.

The feeling of worthlessness was over-warming me. 'Look at this hair what a mess- I said- in my mind, rolling my eyes and making faces as I go to pick my nose.' It's just not doing what I want... I said whispering. Hell... look at it- my hair my face- and eyes, like- just freaking sucks today, I finally said it out loud- yet the cat looked like I was crazy too- for talking. Damn Harper for being sick, and lay open to me to this nightmare... of like having to do this... for her.

I don't want to but- it's for her. I feel I have too- n- all.

I should be studying for my final exams, and I am in high school girl- looking forward to graduation- intern work looks good for a job, coming up like I won't be 17 years of age until July of this year- but it looks good to have- the ass-kissing- no? All the test- all the test- God just wants to be done with it all- like which are all this week.

Yet, here I am trying to brush my hair into submission, and look somewhat cute... hard for a girl like me said by the others- not by me. I must not sleep with it wet anymore- God last night just jumped in bad nude... and masturbate 10 times, I use a vibrator, and dildo- but most of the times I use my hands, I started when I was 6- manly to get to sleep by passing out afterward- to get up... and look at all of this that you see here. at the time- 16 as of this today boys ask all the time- Bra size: 34b yah I no.

Underwear type: thongs, boy-shorts, when you developed pubic hair 11 Do you Shave/Wax?
When did you start? 12 Do you masturbate?

Yes, with a dildo going in out coming hard over and over for some boy that you wish was real.
When did you start? That why I said it- Have you had sex? Not yet- How old were you the first time?

Um? That would be nice- so I would not feel like a complete loser.

Have you given oral sex to a guy? How old were you the first time?

Yes, at 9-year-old... Have you been fingered? Ah, yeah like when I was 10. How old were you the first time? I said it... it's true.

Do you change in front of girlfriends? Family? Yes, friends and mom, and my girls. Skinnydip?
Yes, with friends... the top questions boys ask me... about who they think I am. And all they care about.

Anyways- I must not sleep with it wet. Reciting this mantra several times, I endeavor, once more about it all, to bring it under control with the brush as I finger myself- just to get the edge off-maybe getting one rubbed out before the day starts. I roll my eyes in exasperation and gaze at the pale, brown-haired girl with blue eyes too big for her face staring back at me, and give up.

My only option is to restrain my wayward hair in a ponytail and hope that I look semi-presentable. Shannia is my roommate, us- we- are just two girls trying to make it without Mom and Dad holding our hands- you know how it is- I want to be a big girl- playing house they call it.

I would say that she should be the one doing this for me. But I have too... Consequently, she cannot attend the interview she'd arranged to do with me; so-o I would not blow chunks on the poor ass hole like he's some dick- some mega industry-list tycoon that I've never heard of... you the type old crabby dick sucker. That gets joy out of betting off under the desk to girls like me, hand coffee.

Like, I just want to work for the student newspaper, so I really have to do this- for college... and get nothing out of it...?

So, I have been volunteered to do this agent my well and better judgment. I know what is going to be... me getting hurt and having to come home crying, and need to come hard, in my undies- off to the side. I have final exams calls for me to do this, one essay to finish they call- yah sure you suck the man off- for it, and I'm supposed to be working this afternoon and be happy- sure. Smile and walk away- is what I do- in school, not know shit about this job- no education at all- here.

Thanks... I think on the inside... but no - today- like I have to drive one hundred and seventy-five miles, me paying for it all- no question's asked- to sit down and get ass freaked- in a scene- all the way down to downtown New York in order to meet the mysterious RICHARD C. MAST of Ellie Magazine head shit of bad writing- Inc.

As a brilliant businessperson and major sponsor of our school, his time is extraordinarily precious (my school would say not me) - much more precious than, she tells me... my teachers that is I need it with SATs- yeah- right... Damn her extra-curricular activities. If I wanted that I would have suck and blowing a trumpet in the band for 6 years. It's fingering he- he.

Shannia is huddled on the couch, rubbing and humping a pillow- in the living room spread open she turns- like I should be- with her... she's diddling herself as a 17-year-old will do... that just for fun- yelling making the old ass next door pissed. They creep- look at us- shaking their head to what they don't understand, just calling us the slut generation- as they sand on their verandas. Like you can do it on the veranda- of your apartment?

He- he- I get it- she's open... to it... it was said. 'Mary, I'm sorry about cutting out on you. It took me nine months to get this interview... from my dick suckers at school- It will take another six to reschedule, and a reset of my last year but I not going. I'll just drop out... it's what they want... anyways - you're dumb- I said. Come with me so-o we'll both have graduated. As an editor with honors, I can't blow this off- you shouldn't either- come on like what you have done. I would rather just masturbate all the time... okay...? I said... (You can make more doing that... she said under her breath.)

Please,' Shannia begs me in her harsh, sore throat voice for sucking one off the night before. How does she do it? Even sick she looks freaking beautiful, strawberry blonde hair all in place and blue bright eyes, although mine looks wet and water like the way she should look doing what she has just done.

'Nice butt pug... ha- thanks she said.' I ignore my twinge of annoying sympathy for my low self-esteem. 'Of course, I'll go Shannia if you- his- me here- and she points downward. You should get back to bed with me.

Would you like some Nyquil or Tylenol mixed with alcohol?' That such do it...? 'all of the above, please... Here are the questions for you, did I need to do this just to be a writer- of shit. So, her my recorder doesn't pay it back you may get porn sounds of last night. Just press record here- see the button that says recorded. Make notes, I'll transcribe it all- for you, I know you can't do that- without bitching about it.'

'I know nothing about him,' I murmur over and over, trying to find something I may like about him, and failing to quash my rising dread and fear. 'See these here the list in her hand- a crumpled piece of paper- all the questions just ask these and you'll do fine- got them from google- like what I did all the way through high school google well teach you- not your teachers, see- see you through that in a line- and you look smart to this dick- that's what it's all about kissing ass. Go, love- It's a long drive where you don't want to look bad in front of the big-time faggot.

I don't want you to be late- your right- so he's gay.' That what they say- freak him and see and let me no- nice... slut I said to her- you know it- she said back. 'Okay, I'm going- don't hurt yourself there. Get back to bed- and put that thing away or shave it. Going to eat out latter- WHAT? Food- food latter.' I stare at her fondly. Only for you, Shannia, would I do this? 'I will do it all- like all ways- good luck- G- thanks- you care? I said. And thanks to Mary - as usual, you're my lifesaver.' Get'n-together my schoolbag, I smile ironically at her, then head out the door down all the steps to the car. I cannot believe, I have let Shannia talk me into this.

Nevertheless, then Shannia can talk anyone into anything, she was the hot one in school, not me. She'll make an exceptional journalist- I am sure of it so would have I if I would have been given the chance. She's communicative, robust, convincing, quarrelsome, lovely - and she's my sweetheart, sweetie of a friend. The roads are clear wet rain covered yet, I set off from home, it's early, and I don't have to be in New York until three this afternoon to be on time. I'm not sure if my old car, well make the journey in time- she a very old gill.

Oh, a fun drive and the miles slip away as I floor the pedal- backfiring all the way. My journey's end is the headquarters of Mr. Durval 's global enterprise that he so-called made all on his own doing. It's a huge 100-story office building, all curved glass, and steel, an architect's modern imaginary, with Durval wrote inconspicuously in brace over the crystal-like a glass of front revolving doors, and all on the building high up.

It's a quarter to three when I come to my destination, greatly relieved that I'm not late as I walk into the mammoth - and frankly unapproachable - glass, steel, and white stonework antechamber. In arrears, the solid sandstone is the desk of dark wood, a very attractive, dressed up, young girls' smile's all too creepy for my liking- enjoyably at me- like they want to know all about me- be there eye. She's wearing the sharpest charcoal suit jacket and white shirt I have ever seen. She looks immaculate. 'I'm here to see Mr. Durval.

I am - so and so- I said- yeah okay- it doesn't matter take a- number, I call you when I fill it your time to see this man. So, I have- to kiss your ass to do this lady she said all possible- yes or you can walk out the door. FREAK YOU! I said to here no said me up- bossy for me- but 3 hours is too long to be puss- freaked around with. She arches her eyebrow slightly as I stand self-consciously before her. I am beginning to wish I'd borrowed one of Shannia's formal blazers rather than wear my shorts and a tank top. I have made an effort and worn my one and only skirt, my no-nonsense brown knee-length boots, and a blue sweater. For me, this is smart. I tuck one of the escaped tendrils of my hair behind my ear as I pretend, she doesn't intimidate me. 'Miss we've expected you but not looking like you roll out of bed. Please sign in here,

Miss Merry, you'll want the last train over there to go up- on the left, press for the twentieth hounded floor.' She smiles kindly at me, amused no doubt about it, as I sign in - and sigh- and stop and get a dress- for this man that too old to get it up to care about me showing it all off. 'Stuff your eyes with wonder, I always say, live as if you'd drop dead in ten seconds- like most that do these days and your body is bunt on the spot in plain sight for the world to see- just like a book- no one cares about what inside of you- is all cold what on the cover- not the text just the picture. See the world... good now look at it- I don't see anything to live for- It's more fantastic than any dream made or paid for in place of work my way.'

She indicators too me and as I go past security as a GUEST- very confidently and yet shy- stamping on the forward-facing. I can't help my smirk.

Surely, it's obvious that I'm just visiting. I don't fit in here at all. The train beaters with a gust of air moving past me fast- mag-lev- me with incurable swiftness to the floor in under zip time. The doors slide open to let more androids work in and out, I call them a waste of what we- you and I could be doing, and I'm in another outsized antechamber - again all glass, steel, and white sandstone. I look up at the top- seeing the sky go from blue to black... Yet to me and most this is nothing these days.

Nothing changes in my life really just a new day of shit, I- inwardly sigh. Thanking the train for the ride, I walk over to the- bank of silos past the two security men who are both far more vigorously dressed than me, in their blue armed suits.

I'm threatened by another desk of sandstone and another young blonde - no name just a number- looks at me dressed faultlessly in black and white who doesn't even rise to greet me, or care I am there. Other to pop gum- and look at the ID- slightly- that the robots' job she said- I don't get paid to do that or think- so why do it? 'All and sundry I feel that I left something behind when he passed think in my thoughts, my grandfather said- too always' work hard.

A child or a book or a painting or a house or a wall built or a pair of shoes made- you're smart- go for your dreams even if the world is not a nice place. Or a garden planted- now looks at the world- plant things ha. Something your hand touches in some way- has meaning always, like part of your soul has somewhere to go when you die, remember that- yeah right- I roll my eyes- at that too.

'Why...? Why is it?' we go...? That was all I remember before the put him down- and let him up. I was kicking and scrambling- and the ripped me away at 10 years old- it how it has to be- MOM said.

'Too much of a cost on us taxpayers. Death and end of funds... is life.' Miss, could you wait here the bot said, please?' She points to a seated area of white skin covered chairs.

Behind the leather chairs is a spacious glass-walled meeting room with an equally spacious dark wood table and at least twenty matching chairs around it. Beyond that, there is a floor-to-ceiling window with a view of the New York skyline, that appearance out through the city on the way to the Sound. It's a spectacular panorama, and I'm temporarily paralyzed by the view and the look down all glass flooring too. Wow- I said amazed...

I sit down, fish the questions from my satchel, and go through them, inwardly cursing, Shannia for not providing me with a brief biography. I know nothing about this man I'm about to interview. He could be ninety or he could be thirty. The uncertainty is galling, and my nerves resurface, making me fidget. I've never been comfortable with one-on-one interviews, preferring the anonymity of a group discussion where I can sit inconspicuously at the back of the room.

To be honest, I prefer my own company, reading a classic British novel, curled up in a chair in the campus library. Not sitting shuddering apprehensively in an immense glass and stone structure. I just rolled my eyes at myself in the many shiny objects around me just like this showing too much ass.

Like- get a hold of it- it's just a man winkie look at me in the face- why is this okay? I said to myself. Judging building for adding nudes in artwork, which is too scientific and cold-modern, I guess Old is in his thing: fit, tanned, and fair-haired to match the rest of the personnel. I only warmth is the glow of fire lights- just for show- An additional elegant thing- ie- me- bob- er, a more nude girl is compromised sexual poses' flawless girls showing it all, shit look at this compared to that- not good- not good... I see younger no-names blonde comes out of a large- acting mindless door that lights open with their barcode on their rest.

A deep breath, I stand up. 'Miss' it's time. It's like a death march I thought... with the creepy music in the background- playing in my implanted headset... adjusting automatically. Every person the whole dying world must leave something behind when he/she/it dies- it- being the no names- that are just- works that have not met the grade of IQ of 50 or less, my grandfather they are not dumb some are at 10- smoking and drugging- nothing more- just no work in them.

So, this is what they do- make them drummer... hand out money for nothing- they can even come op to a child of 3 making a book or a painting or tie a pair of shoes or make them.

Otherwise, a garden planted... something your hand touched some way so your soul has somewhere to go when you die, and when people look at that tree or that flower you planted, you're there. 'Indeed,' I clear my throat- of what was hard to swallow. 'Certainly.' There, that sounded more confident- when I have voices in my hand say you'll never do SHIT. 'The RICHARD C. MAST will see you in a moment. May I take your jacket- miss the deadbeat said?'

'Oh, sure thing...' I struggle out of the jacket and was nice to the dumb-bum. Can I get you anything to eat or drink, would you like: 'Would you like tea, coffee, water- saltines?' Something at all? 'Um - no- thank you- I said back to this- it- female.' This blonde- glares her eyes- at the task, she now has to do- for hardly any money- she is very young and uneducated- for a woman of her age sitting at the desk she's at doing this work; and as she asks, turning her attention back to me as she stumbles to do the simple job. Here it is- 'A glass of water. Thank you,' I murmur not looking up at her- for she a no-buddy. Olivia scurries up proximately and scurries to an entrance/exit on the other side of the room.

'Olivia, please fetch Miss Marry a glass of water.' Her voice is unyielding- and do your job-NOW. 'My request for forgiveness for her lack of skills, Miss- she's only a 25 IQ-er, Olivia is our new intern- part of will help you suck at life program... Please be seated as I do this to for her. Our RICHARD C. MAST will be an additional five or so moments.' It doesn't matter what you do, so long as you change something from the way it was before you touched, right- the girl asked- thinking- I said- don't... she went on saying something that's like you after you take your hands away- is what matters- right. Shut up! She said too it... Olivia returns with a glass of iced water on a hot plate. Perhaps RICHARD C. MAST insists on all his employees being blonde... dumb shits...?

'Here you go, Miss.' And she dumps it down my lap... 'Thank you.' Dumb Shit! I muttered under my breath... 'We need not be let alone... the dumb one said to me... were a danger to ourselves' and others... We need to be really bothered once in a while to see if we're alive. How long is it since you were really bothered- how about now by you, About something important, about something real?' Stop asking dumb question's... I said to her... that doesn't matter in today's life. Echoing on the sandstone floor this blonde tramp over to the large desk, her heels clicking. She sits down, and they both continue their dumb ass work they don't know how to do well. I have definitely worn the wrong clothes, yet ones more- to sexy, I'm wondering idly if that's legal... do look as I do for this...?

Humm? I questioned it... buying a short low-cut dress. She seems to excel at jumping from her seat. She's more nervous than me... looking at me! Sex is all that it's about- right- it's all they want, these days. Olivia turns and says my job is done as she goes through the door. Good, now I don't have to hear that running in my ears.

Olivia has jumped up and called the trains. I don't hear the reply... to over niceness. The others turn and look at me as I get up showing way too much skin, they are all seeing all of me - upskirt shot here, some girls smile at the look of my vagina- their dark eyes crinkling at the corners getting all they want to remember about me. 'You don't need to knock - just go in.' She smiles kindly. 'Good afternoon ladies this man said to them,' he says as he departs through the sliding door looking at all of my- eyes dropping at then up.

I trying so hard not to overwhelm my nerves, as I stand rather unsteadily. Get-together my schoolbag, I leave my glass of water and make my way to the moderately open door - to be shown the way. The door just thrust open as I stumble through- always trapping and clumsy, tripping over my own feet, and tumbling headfirst into the office- where he sits- looking at me with sex eye. Double dog freaking shit dick suck- bite me- I said- as I walked in- good- entrance miss he said... as I am still falling over my two left feet! I am on my hands and knees in the doorway to RICHARD C. MAST'S office, and gentle hands are around me helping me to stand- they were his- a young hot thing that I was falling for just by the look of well that. I am so embarrassed, damn my clumsiness. I have to steel myself to glance up. Holy cow - he's so young.

He extends a long-fingered hand to me once I'm upright.

'I'm RICHARD C. MAST-. Are you all right would you like to sit?'

So young - and attractive, very attractive. He's tall, dressed in a fine gray suit, white shirt, and black tie with unruly dark copper-colored hair and intense, bright gray eyes that regard me shrewdly. It takes a moment for me to find my voice.

'Um. Actually - 'I mutter. If this guy is over thirty, then I'm a monkey's uncle. In a daze, I place my hand in his and we shake. As our fingers touch, I feel an odd exhilarating shiver run through me. I withdraw my hand hastily, embarrassed. It must be static. I blink rapidly, my eyelids matching my heart rate. I hope you don't mind; I am the RICHARD C. MAST.' 'Are you- so?' His voice warm sexual, perchance entertained, but it's difficult to tell from his impassive expression. He looks mildly interested, but above all, polite. 'Merry. I'm studying English Literature with my girlfriend you no, um... High school intern... 'I see he said nicely,' I reasoned with himself some - I see the flicker of loss in the smile of his expression- given, but I'm not sure. 'Would you like to sit?' He waves me toward a white leather buttoned L-shaped couch.

His office is way too big for just one man. In front of the floor-to-ceiling windows, there's a huge modern dark-wood desk that six people could comfortably eat around. It matches the coffee table by the couch. Everything else is white - ceiling, floors, and walls except, on the wall by the door, where a mosaic of small paintings hangs, thirty-six of them arranged in a square. They are exquisite - a series of mundane, forgotten objects painted in such precise detail they look like photographs. Displayed together, they are breathtaking.

'A local artist. Trouton,' says - when he catches my gaze.

'They're lovely. Raising the ordinary to extraordinary,' I murmur, distracted both by him and the paintings. He cocks his head to one side and regards me intently.

'I couldn't agree more, Miss King,' he replies, his voice soft and for some inexplicable reason I find myself blushing.

'I feel I've known you so many years?' 'For the reason that I like you,' she said, 'and I don't want anything from you.'

Apart from the paintings, the rest of the office is cold, clean, and clinical. I wonder if it reflects the personality of the Adonis who sinks gracefully into one of the white leather chairs opposite me. I shake my head, disturbed at the direction of my thoughts, and retrieve Katie's questions from my satchel. Next, I set up the minidisc recorder and am all fingers and thumbs, dropping it twice on the coffee table in front of me.

RICHARD C. MAST says nothing, waiting patiently - I hope - as I become increasingly embarrassed and flustered. When I pluck up the courage to look at him, he's watching me, one hand relaxed in his lap and the other cupping his chin and trailing his long index finger across his lips. I think he's trying to suppress a smile.

'Sorry,' I hesitated, about me- being me. 'I'm not used to all of this- or always like this- at least I try not to be.' 'Take as much time as you want, Miss,' he says.

‘Once you have taken so-o much worry to set up the recorder on your phone - you ask me now?’ ‘Do you mind if I record your answers- that was my first question?’ I flush up some- beat red. I flutter my eye at him softly and sweetly, unsure what to say or do in front of this young attractive man, and I think he takes misfortune on me for the reason that he sympathizes at my age - and sheepishness. He's playful, mocking, full of fun and life, giving me, I hope not to just cut my wrists with safety scissors - for being dumb. ‘No, I don't mind at all.’ This is what I said.

‘Did my girlfriend- explain what the interview was for?’ Same 10 question all you kids ask- I get it. ‘Oh...!’ ‘Surely, to give the impression in the matriculation issue of the student newspaper - I have to do this part of the graduating- thing... as I shall be discussing the grades at this year's graduation ceremony- with the higher up.’ Oh- um-hum!

This is news to me, ha- not really- your part of my program at the school- yep I said. I frowned some, uninteresting my naughty thoughtfulness back to what I was asked to do - the job. Besides I'm momentarily pre-engaged by the thought that someone, not much older than I- okay, maybe like I'm 17 he's 30 years or so, and okay, mega-successful, likes me a little- like is going to present me with my degree- if I do all that he asks- ALL. ‘Good,’ I swallow nervously. ‘I have some questions, RICHARD C. MAST.’ I smooth a stray lock of hair behind my ear.

My cheeks heat at the realization- he's looking at me- like a boy that wants a hot heated horny - hook up, and I sit up, and fair my shoulders show my dress is not showing to much - in an attempt to look taller- and doing so- his eyes move down- showing that now- just more threatening- kill him with sex and I have him eating me out- my hand that is. Yeah- that's the saying... ‘I supposed you might,’ he says, disapproving.

He's amused at me- as he is looking me over with a- lot of intentions. Pressing the start button on the recorder, I try to look professional. I think- about all the books my granddad had all lost in the great fires, of things not to be known... it's all on here now- I look at my I phone/pad 20 on my wrist licked into my brain waves.

All that is need to be smart is done for you... at the swap of a finger. ‘There must be something in books, something we can't imagine, to make a woman stay in a burning house; there must be something there, there is not the law said as they put my grandmother down - with them in flam. You don't stay for anything- the man in red and black said.’ Remember the stories.

I snap out of my daydream- of all that is him- and the past. 'You're very young to have amassed such an empire. To what are you in debt too with your success?' Like a god? No... I peep up at him- biting my lip. His smile is rueful, but he looks vaguely disappointed.

Yet- 'If you hide your lack of knowledge, no one will hate - on- you and you'll never- ever learn- from it.' 'Maybe you're just fortunate.' This isn't on Katie's list of things to do. However, he's so superior. His eyes flare momentarily in surprise.

'Business is all about individuals- dumber than smart, Merry, and I'm very good at judging people- I can see what you are and what you'll do for me already. 'If you hide your ignorance, no one will hit you and you'll never acquire anything.'

I know how they tick you and me- how they think- and what you're thinking now about me Miss, what makes the show, what makes them cleverer, what motivates them and what doesn't, and how to incentivize them. I play the game to a point- you get what I am saying- I don't have to act- they all just want me- and want to be... for me being me. I am everything more than a God... to my pupates. So, I am a girl on a string for you- know you do as I say or walk. I see- I said shy biting my lip harder... as the strain of his tone.

I personally hire an extraordinary team... I would not stand- for less than that. 'If not, they can take their ass out my door and not waste my time, I have no time for shit on a silver platter- Miss- passed off as good food- aka good work-in this case.' and I give compensation well- to those that earn it.

Um- I said along- 'With school turning out more racers, steeplechasers, competitors, tinkerers, grabbers, snatchers, fliers, and swimmers instead of examiners, critics, knowers, and creative creators, the word 'scholarly,' unquestionably, technologically advanced the swear word it is worthy to be.' I get what your saying- I have always done more than other girls. Um -You do know this is going to a paper- right? Word or word...? Um... he said that's cute and a sweet thought.

He pauses and fixes me with his somber stare- yet lustful- and unfulfilled in his own accomplishments- there was something missing- with him I thought. 'My certainty is to attain victory and many trumpets in any structure one has to make oneself dominant in that structure... I know it inside and out- just like felling you out inside and out, (That's what he was doing felling me out.) -Know every detail- about a young woman.

'I work firm and freak hard- whit the ones that want to freak, very hard. I make decisions based on reason and truths. Figuring all the ass holes and pussies in the process.' Um- like- do you want me to write that down word or word?

Sure...! He said- I am so sick of this... same things by girls like you... what do you want to know... I have an ordinary gut character, that can spot and encourage a good dense inkling and good individuals. The end result is, it's always down to good society.'

'I don't contribute to luck or chance or what some call blessings, Miss. I and I only have done this... The firmer I work the better breaks I seem to have- by curing out those that believe in something that is not real to me. It really is all about having the right individuals on your side and point in the right direction their energies for that reason.

'You sound like someone that has to have full a control not letting it all go till you say or time is do.' The words are out of my mouth before I can stop them, for sounding too sexual.

'Oh, I exercise control in other ways, I said to him,' I bet you do he said, with a trace of wit in his sweet smile. I look at him, and he holds my gaze steadily, impassive. My heartbeat quickens and my vagina tightens, and my face flushes again and he feels me in. I wish he'd stop doing that... looking at me like he wants to freak hard... and not stop until I come 10 or more times on him. Why? Why does he have such a demoralizing result on me, yet so flawless... in everything he says. Um- He continues, his voice soft.

His overwhelming good-looks maybe. The way his eyes intensity blue at me. The way he strokes his index finger in and against his lower lips then touching my face with the other its right... sweet hot steamy lust.

'Do you feel that you have an enormous power of your girls to do as you say?' Taking them for your bitches? You're not like most school girls I had in here... I like that you don't mind speaking your mind, yet I would have to teach you to be humble... wouldn't I? -And obedient... he said. I immense power... of all my workers in here and out... developed by promising control over all things. you were not born into this I would say- you need to stick to the page. It's secret... in that, its reveries that you made your money by having your mom and dad hand it to you?' Nah... cute... go on, he said.

My mouth drops open- when he said you need to shut the freak up. I am staggered by his lack of unpretentiousness; you see... punk kids like you piss me off... so... you want me to freak you has nothing to do with me getting this job? 'Sure, it does... yet you have to be right- in all ways. What are the ways- ye'll see in time?' This is recorded you no... I said shaking my legs together by his hand touching me softly.

'It's all about the influence and feeling it, if you will, with me. If I were to decide, that I was no longer involved in the communications occupational and sell up, twenty-five thousand individuals would skirmish to make their hypothecation expenditures after a month or so has passed.' 'I employ over fifty thousand public, Miss. That gives me a certain sense of obligation to do whatever I do, the way I want to do it, the and how- when, and why... it's all my say... or no say at all.' You get that- Marry Shah?

He said sternly.

'Do I bother you- sir-asking a dumb question, that I have to ask for your freaking program that I give jack shit about... because really, I could be home playing with myself right now... and coming in some boy's photo- I don't need this?'

~*~

'Don't you have a board to answer to?' I ask, disgusted. Why you- I don't have them- your answer to me... and me alone... I over rolled them, and pushed them out- it's all my say. 'I own my establishments, they don't- why the hell would I have ass wipes tell me how to do my shit. I am the Trump of my day and age... what do you say about that? I can go if this is too hard for you? He just smiled. As I lean forward showing my boobs some... just some. I don't have to answer to a board.' If that was the dumb question.

He raises an eyebrow at me just muttering on about nothing.

I flush, even more, unquestionably you're the God, here right? Cute Miss... move on, he said. I would know this if I had done some research. Not knowing all about me shows that your shy and week... and have a lack of respect for who I am, he's so arrogant- I thought. I change tack, and see that I am not even halfway done...

'Do you have anything you love to do outside of your work?' 'Like - That's the question- go for it...'

'I have diverse hobbies, Miss.' A hint of a smile touches his lips- yet those eyes are still locked on mine- not letting go. 'Very wide-ranging.' And for some reason, I'm mystified and frenzied by his firm stare into my heart looking into my eyes... wet at this point from being reamed too hard. His eyes are ablaze, kind of like mine with some fantastic and nasty sexual thoughts of him just pounding the shit out of me with his lusty sex making.

‘Do you believe in love at first sight?’ Why did I ask? ‘Just curiosity...!’ He said... looking in my love-stricken, and totally lovesick eyes. Yes, I was taken back by him... yet could not show it... ‘Nonetheless, if you work so hard, what do you do unwind- or just relax?’ He smiles, revealing textbook and twilight novel white teeth so right yet so wrong, I stop breathing and forget how too-like. He really is beautiful- for an older man- I felt all hot down under. No one should be this good-looking, and make a young lady feel this way about herself. It’s just not fair to us girls.

‘Well, to ‘chill out’ as you put it - I said, I fly, I indulge in- various physical pursuits.’ He shifts in his chair. ‘I’m a very wealthy man, Miss King, and I have expensive and absorbing hobbies.’ I peek swiftly at Katie’s questions, wanting to get off this subject of sex and work. ‘You invest in engineering. Why, precisely?’ Did I enquire the thought- why? Why- does he make me so uneasy, anxious, nervous and troubled. ‘I like to form things into submission bending and shipping them.’

I myself like to know how all things work to crack all that it is- to see what makes it tick: what makes things tick, how to construct and deconstruct. As well as I have a love of ships. ‘What can I say?’ one thing I have not cracked it a woman’s mind... ‘That thuds of a sound to me like your heart speaking rather than reason and specifics.’ ‘Though there are individuals who would say I don’t have any emotions of warmth- that I am just cold and heartless.’ He stares appraisingly at me and his mouth coincidences up, well said- perchance. ‘For the reason that they know me well- or so they think they do.’ His lip ringlets in an ionic beam. ‘Why would they say that?’

‘I’m seventeen and I’m crazy or so they say- yet smart enough to be here. My grandfather said the two always try. When people ask your age, he said, always say seventeen and insane - it- we enlighten them.’

I went on asking- would you say that you’re someone, that makes friends easily; or that you have any? Otherwise are you easy to get to know?’ Plus, I regret the question as soon as I say it. It’s not on Katie’s list, it was on mine to see if he was at all like me one or less true friends.

‘I’m a precise secluded person, Miss. I for one go a long way to defend my disclosure. I personally, don’t often give dialogs out too public,’ he’s voiced softens as the sentence went off into a long one on like lost in a rambling thought. ‘Why did you come to an understanding to do this one then?’

‘The decent writer touches’ on life often like a lusting young girl. The unexceptional ones run a quick hand over her. Feeling in all the voids, the bad ones’ rape her and leave her for the bugs to eat away the leftovers.’ So- for all aims and determinations, I couldn’t get Katie off my back.

I know how stubborn Katie can be. That’s why I’m sitting here wriggling unpleasantly under his all-pervading gaze- that is yet so perfect when I should be studying for my exams- or just doing what she was doing herself- right? ‘Like- she asked again and again, and harried my PR folks, and yours truly respects that kind of stubbornness.’

‘You also invest in unindustrialized knowhow. Why are you absorbed in this area of writing when there are no good books anymore- is it all sexed up media and shit you want to give out to horny kids to read less than 3 lines on their buzzing boxes- to kill their brains even more?’ ‘I have to put up with it- Miss- for it- sales... SEX, DUGS, and be-bop-pop music are what it’s all about- yet I want more out of your text- if you work for me.’

‘NOT- All visuals... without gluten...?’ ‘We can’t consume money if there is no bread, Miss, and there are too many people on this planet who don’t have enough to eat- that is good for you.’ You get what I am saying to you?’ Is it something you feel zealously about? Like - Nursing the world’s poor do you help out the one in this county that are in need?’ ‘That sounds very humanitarian... sure - whatever they want to suck out of me... right?’ Whatever looks good... He moves his shoulders up and down in a way that was not okay to me. ‘Feeding the world’s poor, I can’t see the financial benefits of this, it’s discerning business,’ he murmurs, though I think he’s being insincere. It doesn’t make sense - only the virtue of the idyllic. I peek at the next question that is on my list made by Katie, disorderly by his arrogance I shudder to look up. ‘Is there a method to your madness?’

I asked the question. If so, what is it?’ I really don’t have a- method to the way I do things- I just make it work- for I make it work- how is that? Maybe a supervisory belief - Carnegie’s: ‘A man who gets the ability to take full ownership of his own mind, may take proprietorship of whatsoever else to which he is justly permitted.’ I’m very extraordinary, single-minded. I like order- of myself- and all other things in this thing we call life, and those all around me.’

'You come off like the decisive purchaser.' 'I want to earn to possess them, but yes, bottom line, I do.' 'So-o you want to possess things?' You are a control freak. 'I am... if you want to say I am Miss. Say what you like really- they all do your age.' He smiles, but the smile doesn't touch his eyes.

Again, this is at odds with someone who wants to feed the world, so I can't help thinking that we're talking about something else, but I'm absolutely mystified as to what it is. I swallow hard.

The temperature in the room is rising or maybe it's just me. I just want this interview to be over. Surely Katie has enough material now. I glance at the next question.

'You were adopted- like me, there was a story that came over for another county other than the US. Is that true- or not? Do you think your past made who you are today? Too personal? Yes- but I go there- it has not... I made me. Oh, this is, asking too much... I gaze at him in the love needing eyes, hoping he's not offended- by my stupid. His brows channel together downward and arch. My curiosity is annoyed by him I could tell... 'I have no way of knowing.' 'How old were you when you were approved for a stable home?' I was 5 and used, my mother. 'That's a matter of public record, Miss- you can get that anywhere.' His tone is harsh. I flush up yet again. Crap... I say in my head- yet he heard that also. They all can the ones that monitor all and everything I do, I thought and actions.

I move on quickly... doing whatever it is I am doing. Yes of course - if I had known this, I was doing this interview, and didn't want to be- and the school voices hearing was saying, I was losing grading... I would have done some research more now if I did not shape up. 'You've had to lose a family life for your work life... would you say that is so-o?'

He said: 'I'll embrace on to all God's creatures tight one day. I've got one finger on it now; that's a beginning- by banning all that you call literature. I am the reasons as to why all books were a band, I want complete control.'

Why do you not want us to read? Why- is the question that- you have to crack. If you don't get it- then neither do I. He said... 'That's not a question- or anything to ask.' He's terse me some, with his long lines of wording rambling. 'Apologetic I was to this...' I wriggle some in my set feeling wet down there, and he's made me feel like an errant child. I try again. 'Have you had to sacrifice family life for your work?'

'I have a family. I have a brother and a sister and two loving parents. I'm not interested in extending my family beyond that.' 'So-o is- you quire...?' I rolled my eyes knowing that was not on the list nevertheless, I wanted an A on my report. I may have had a past that I don't like but it was never with another man.

'What are you gay?' He said... I know that you have kissed, and made oral love to a girl your roommate Katie, by your racing thoughts, I heard it all and don't hold it against you... why do you with me? RICHARD C. MAST...? Has nothing to do with the sex or whom you have that with... now does it.'

He inhales suddenly thinking, and see my going down on a girl in his mind, and I cringe, mortified... my thoughts... Crap! I said, yet once more in my mind to cover up. Why, didn't I employ some kind of filter before, I read this straight out? How can I tell him I'm just reading the questions? Damn Katie and her curiosity, said this in my mind, that it would be okay to say to him!

'No, Miss., I'm not the way you are- and your young teen why's.' Yet I can see having fun when you're young. And work hard when you're not. He raises his one eyebrow, with an unruffled glow in his eyes. He does not look pleased, about me and my girlie past- like he wanted me or something. I fastly said- I-man too...The voices in my head... giggle at this point knowing. You're a hopeless romantic,' he said that all not knowing or knowing what you want. The same things could be in the 'business premises families' nowadays. The same immeasurable feature and awareness could be projected through the radios and televisions, but are not. 'It would be funny if it were not serious. It's not booked you need, it's some of the things that once were in books.

No, no it's not booked at all you're looking for! Take it where you can find it, in old phonograph records, old motion pictures, and in old friends; look for it in nature and look for it in yourself. Books were only one type of receptacle where we stored a lot of things, we were afraid we might forget. There is nothing magical in them at all. The magic is only in what books say, how they stitched the patches of the universe together into one garment for us. Of course, you couldn't know this, of course, you still can't understand what I mean when I say all this. You are intuitively right, that's what counts.

'I apologize. It's um... written here.' It's the first time he's said my name. My heartbeat has accelerated, and my cheeks are heating up again. Nervously, I tuck my loosened hair behind my ear. He cocks his head to one side slightly. 'These- 'ant' your own questions, are they?' They are not... I said back. The blood drains from my head, and I feel as if I passed out some- going all black. Oh no, it flashed past in my head. 'Katie - Miss. - she assembled the queries to go on with.' She rushed in with her wording- 'Nobody listens any more. I can't talk to the walls for the reason that, they're screaming at me, walls- - those things you look at all the time like cells and notebooks - 'I can't talk to my loved ones overall this'- he said; she listens to the walls. I just want someone to hear what I have to say. And maybe if I talk long enough it will make complete sense.

Then I asked it as a lost little schoolgirl want more- saying- 'Then I want you to teach me to comprehend what I read.' 'Are you, colleagues, on the student paper?'

'No, she's my roommate not my love of marge - were just leaving together.' Oh, rat crap, I said in my mind- yet I think he knows. I have nothing to do with the student paper, the girl said, he could see snapshots of Katie playing with herself not want to be a part of all this... It's her extra-curricular activity I said, not mine as of this moment.

My face is aflame with embarrassment- of diddling. He rubs his stubbed hair chin, in the quiet debate, his blue eyes assessing me. 'Did you volunteer to do this interview?' He asks, his voice was deadly quiet. Hang on, who's hypothetical to be interrogating whom, His eyes tingle into me - like, and I'm obliged to answer with the certainty.

'I was conscripted to this... She's not well.' My voice is weak and apologetic, for her... yet they know the truth. 'We're not finished here, Andrea. Please cancel my next meeting.'

Where are you from? A small town- she said along with these small towns are funny places; everybody thinks they know everybody. They bought, they sold, live in fear of getting old getting cold. Life to death, it's all a myth just a wish, only to walk in the dark, to make their mark, in the life they embark.

Yet they know what is so, nowhere to run nowhere to go, they come and go, with nothing to show. With some that are high and some low. However, they always know narrow minds never change, only to rearrange, in the exchange. Memories never fade, and the ones that make their lies get paid. It's all slipping away from day to day. There is always someone with something to say. Whatever come whatever may, it's just another day... in a small town, with dreams going in the ground, with only names on rocks to be found.

Were one person runs it all and is crowned, we dance like fools we are her clowns. That's just life bowing down to a small town, it's just the words going around. With so much doom and gloom, lonely nights in a room.

'That explains a great deal.' He said...

'RICHARD C. MAST, forgive me for interjecting, but your next meeting is in two or four minutes.' 'You don't have to burn books to destroy a culture. Just get people to stop reading them.' He said. The girl from before is back speaking out of context. She's appears lost popping in and out. He turns his head slowly to face her and raises his eyebrows. She flushes bright pink in the face at the why I and he is treating her lack of life. Oh good... you did what was asked of you... good for you... no go be somewhere. It's not just me... or kids getting dumb-er...? I asked...

'Where were we, Miss?'

'Some individuals turn sad unpleasantly early in their life. Non-singular motive, it gives the impression, but then again, they seem almost to be innate that way. The staining uncereemonious, tire quicker, exclamation more rapidly, evoking lengthier and, as I say, get melancholy younger than anyone else in the ecosphere. I know, for I'm one of them, back in the days of before.' 'Please don't let me keep you from anything.' Say all that is on your mind. 'Very well, RICHARD C. MAST,' then, he frowns some in his long chat with me and turns his consideration back to the rambling on.

She said: 'There has to be something in books, something we can't visualize, to make a ladies stay in a scorching house; there must be something there that we all need something more unexplained.'

Oh, we're back to 'Miss' now.

He murmurs... on getting softer in his voice, and then he gazes intensely into my love-stricken eyes; all humor was gone when he did that and we locked, and bizarre muscles deep in my lower than my belly clench suddenly in hard lust. His blue eyes are alight with the wicked curiosity of all, that is me and inside my-heart, soul, and more.

Which I should be studying for now rather than sitting in your palatial, swanky, sterile office, feeling uncomfortable under your penetrating gaze.

But you can't make people listen. They have to come 'round in their own time, wondering what happened and why the world blew up around them. It can't last.

'Don't you look so guiltless- over all that took place, why didn't you give me a biography, he made me feel like such an idiot for economical on the basic investigation.' Katie locks a hand to her mouth. Saying: 'Jeez, babe, I'm sorry - I didn't think about it all the way through.' I feel some grumpiness coming over me with my changing mood.

'Typically, he was well-mannered, prescribed, to some extent stuffy - like he's old before his time. He doesn't dialog like a man of twenty-something. How old is he anyway?' 'Twenty-seven. Jeez, I'm sorry, Merry, I should have briefed you, but I was in such dread.

Let me have the mini chip for your headset, and I'll start transliterating the interview, it's the least I can do.' Hell, you just want to replay the video admit it! 'U_NO_IT!' She flashed through my mind, as text to read like a hologram, yet I could see it in front of my eyes passing by like a ticker.

'You look better. Did you eat your dehydrated soup- and mac and cheese?' I ask her to the movie to food not sex to change the subject. That's all you do anymore is eat, sleep, bitch about that and CUM!

Yepper- and I'm-a proud of it- she said- humping her pillow! 'Certainly, and it was delightful, enjoyable, and lovely, as usual. I'm having the sensation of feeling much better than I did.' She smiles at me in gratitude. I check my watch. 'I have to run, I can still make my shift at Macy's, as a clerk, I don't even think; I well- shower off, I'm going to just come home and do this more- like, um- so why bother... right...?'

Um- yeah- that turns me on- I said... NOT! You're getting to be lazy and gross! Yah but you love me so... 'Merry, you'll be exhausted- to see me tonight I just know it.' 'I'll be fine, until you get back, all by myself- a lot of my wandering thoughts. I'll see you later... she runs out the door slip on a dress with nothing under it.' Katie- I'm the shit at any DIY. I've worked at Macy's since I started working when I was 14. It's the major self-determining man/woman's wear store in the New York area, and over the four years I have worked here for too long, I have come to know a little bit about most everything we sell - underwire to even I don't wear them ever- although unluckily, I leave all that to my dad to say it's wrong.

Merry- I'm much more of a curl-up-with-a-book-in-a comfy- chair-by-the-fire-with-coffee-kind-a- of-a girl, and have everything in its place on me and of me, yet she works for me.

Katie- I'm glad I can make my shift, to have some money to play with at the end of the week. I bet I could buy you for a mill. He said to me... Katie and you let him? Yes...I said. To be there whenever he wants, she asked.

No comment... I did I give her.

I am home looking at my report it gives me something to have my emphasis on other than all of him- all. We're eventful- it's the start of the summertime of year, and folks are redecorating their homes. My friends that I work with were happy to see me, as always... it's become custom with us.

'Marry Sue! I thought you weren't going to make it today- I was going in to work a JC Penny's at 5 'till-10.' And then it back home to be with my cuddle bug, she looks forward to me... 'My tasks suck didn't take as long as I thought. I can do a couple of hours of this I said lost in the thoughts of him- and then her and then him and then- him- her- him- her- aww.'

'I'm really pleased to see you, it was him- look down at me I am looking up so much small, he's just so-o right.' She and he start's re-stocking shelves for me say that a short girl should not be doing this job, and I'm soon absorbed in the task, yet lost in love- of being in love. And- aw- yes with him... I stumble backward and he saves me from falling... like to my death... or something... it was sweet. When I arrive home later, Katie is wearing headphones, see all that happen, she is pissed, and working on her laptop, frantically editing by down report that I was okay with leaving as is.

Her nose and puss-puss still pink for having a head could for giving- wellhead to random high school boys, the day before- she a good kid what can I say- it pays, but she has her unfiltered wording into a story now, so she's focused and typing furiously run-ons. I flush, by her and the thoughts of him also... I was feeling both.

I'm methodically exhausted - dog-tired- by the long drive back home even if I was looking over the past days of my life on the windshield screen of the car, the exhausting think about the interview, she had my pc on the luster rock tabletops by my bed, and my cum covered dildo at her feet, she thinks that more loving or something to us mine.

I slump on to the couch with for more- sexy time, foreplay and boob playing, thinking about the essay I have to finish and all the studying I haven't done today because I was holed up with... him and getting her and me off more than 50 times today- yet that is the norm. I flush, and my heart rate inexplicably increases with ever stock in and out of my puss, and her rubbing my clit- That wasn't the reason, surely, He just wanted to show me around so I could see that he was lord of all he surveyed, and I was thanking him and that man too. I realize I'm biting my lip, and I hope Katie doesn't notice. But she seems absorbed in her text. I see he over there giving me the eye - He obviously wanted to spend more time with you, they said- why not take it one noise teacher said.'

I should have- but I feel the task was done to its fullest-no?

'Yes'- 'we all do.'

'You've got some good things said here, Merry, so well done, is what the team says going sitting in the broad room at school as there were reading the copy on their handheld notebooks. I can't believe you didn't take him up on his offer to show you around. I hear what you mean about formal, here in your writing a little to stuff-ie said the same one.

That's fine I would rather have that then what I have been getting- with the other girls it was nothing but sexed up sex- and sex talk, so I'll take this over having to read that. Yet he has asked for you- not them to be with him more... do you want it? Did you take any notes, on being his girl?' she asks. She gives me a short-lived puzzled look, as to why I have made it in.

'Um... no, I didn't,' I said.

Why?

'I didn't think it needed to be that also, to be a writer.'

'That's fine I see the point your making. I made a fine article with this... then right? Good-looking son of a bitch, isn't he? Said the one... yah why her. I overhear when walking out the door getting a pat on the back by the older woman that had some brains.' 'I suppose so, I said looking at her and shyly smiling.' I try hard to sound neutral, and I think I succeed, yah no. 'Oh come on, Marry - even you can't be immune to his looks.'

She arches an eyebrow perfectly at me, in the cute way that only she can. Crap is what I said! I distract her with flattery, and sweetness, always a good ploy on this girl who loves me for doing such. 'You probably would have got a- lot more out of him, if you would have done what you did to me with him and on him- she said.' Think of something - quick, I knew what she was going to ask- and I thought quickly. 'So, what did you really think of him?' Damn it, she's nosey. Why can't she just let this go, about me and him, and what I have to do. 'I doubt that, Merry.

Come on... Like, he nearly accessible you a job. Given that I personally imposed this on you at the last minute, you did very well then.’ She glances up at me speculatively. I make a hasty retreat into the kitchen.

‘You, fascinated by a man, more than me and what I have to give and gave you. That's a first,’ she snorts, you give me more than what I boy can. She rolled her eyes at me. ‘He's very driven about what he really wants in life unlike you, you have no drive to do extortionately, yet unlike you here is controlling, and arrogant with me - scary really, how overpowered he is... but very alluring. I can understand the fascination,’ I add truthfully, as I peer ‘round the door at her hoping this will shut her up once and for all. I started gathering the makings of a sandwich so she can't see my face, as I walk to the counter, there all no walls everything is see-through glass, even the bathroom is open to the world outside.

‘Why, did you want to know if your gay or not, incidentally, that was the most embarrassing question, I am not I just love you’re for you get me, I was mortified.’ I scowl with my nose wrinkling at the memory, of seeing this in my eyes passing by like a movie clip- like It was so-o embarrassing. The whole thing was uncomfortable.

I'm glad I'll never-ever-ever- have to lay eyes on him again.’

‘Oh, Marry Sue, it can't have been that bad- yah no. I think he sounds quite taken with you, like love-ie and shit.’ Taken with me, what's that mean, now don't be ludicrous, in jumping the gun. ‘Would you like a sandwich,’ ‘ha- that all I do for you have sex with you and make you a sandwich- and do your chores.’

‘Please- and think.’

‘Yah- yah- yah- suck it she said. ‘You don't have one or I would.’” I said back. I curl up in my bed with her, wrapping my throw around me, that she made me in 8th grade, then I close my eyes, with her around me, and I'm instantly asleep, could he do this for me I thought before the lights went out. That night I dream of dark places, loss, and death, and sadness.

For the rest of the week, I throw myself into my studies and my shitty ass job that sucks hairy balls.

Katie is busy too do her and, compiling about her last publication of her student in the schools weekly, E-paper; before she has to surrender it to the new editor while also shoving for her finals. Damn, but that girl was in the wrong place at the wrong time in the wrong century with her work life, you stay home back in the 2,000's and play-with-yours back then, not these days, were a girl wants to be independent.

By the time I finish, it's midnight, and Katie has long since gone to bed. I make my way to my room, exhausted, but pleased that I've accomplished so much on a Monday. Basically, she's bored and wants something to occupy her time, but she has the attention span of a guppy. It'll be something new next week.

So, I call my mom using my mind as a phone, to check on her, but also so she can wish me luck for my final exams. She proceeds to tell me about her latest venture into pot making and art - that so bad she can't put it into words. My mother is all about new business ventures, that are flopping.

Katie- By Friday, she's much better the day before I felt, and I no longer have to endure the sight of her PJs, that should have just stayed off. We don't talk all that much more that evening, to my relief. Once we've eaten, I'm able to sit at the banqueting table with Marry and, while she works on her article, I work on my essay about the Holocaust.

Merry- hard to chat, think about how- leaving her behind was wrong in her mind- I hesitate, and I have Mom's full attention. She, my mother that is worried about me - being young and small and what man can do to me. She wants me to be with the girl, not someone that only there to take... I hope she hasn't mortgaged the household to finance this latest organization.

'I'm fine,' I said. Do you need money, honey? You worry me.'

'No- I want to do this on my own.' 'You sure' - 'Mom, I'm fine just leave it alone.'

It's a brief conversation, is even hard to get done with. In fact, it's not so much so a conversation as kicks my guts and make me grunt in response to my gentle sweet-talking of not be mean, Its Friday night, Katie and I are debating what to do with our evening, other than bedtime, - we want some time away from the studying also, and also from our working too hard for less than a $1. 50 an hour, and from student newspapers, that only pays 50 cents a word, and that's if it passes the editor.

Sometimes, like I marvel and have the curiosity to the thoughts of if there's something really wrong with me. Possibly I've spent too long in the company of my literary romantic book or cracking my brainwriting, or gutting on out rubbing it, and consequently my ethics, and opportunities are far too high. Nonetheless, in realism, nobody's ever made me feel like that, by her- yet he could too- maybe? Saturday at the store is a nightmare. And the days keep rushing by without any other's thoughts of him or her... what to do?

I'm engrossed in the task of redoing what was done right in the first place, read-through the items I need to have said in the right ways, and the items I sure I know have missed out on that were there, my eyes are flicking from the order E-book that I have from the past on good writing, to the computer screen and back as I check the entries match.

Then, for some motive, I glance up... and find myself locked in the bold gray gaze of Chiaz who's standing at the counter of my home as a hologram to look into me doing what it is I am doing he can do this at any time look into me, staring at me intently, with lust in his eyes even if it's just a simulation. My heart failure fasts- knowing what is next, sex- with him not there but in my body, I feel that he is.

'Merry... What a surprise, I said walking to my dad her, I lay down for him to the movie though me.' His gaze is firm and intense, and the moment happens fast. Holy crap...!

'He said my name,' In a mutter. 'What can I help you with, RICHARD C. MAST?'

'RICHARD C. MAST,' I whisper at the start, because, that's all I can Marry him as not my lover yet. What the hell is he doing here looking at me this way with my messy-hair and nude boy standing here, my mouth has dropped open- like my legs and vagina for him, and I can't locate my brain or my voice, for sighing too much? There's a ghost of a smile on his lips and his eyes are alight with humor as if he's enjoying some private joke.

'I was in the area,' he says by way of exploration. 'I need to stock up on a few things. It's a pleasure to see you again and feel the insides of you in though out, Miss Mary Sue.' His voice is warm and dry like milk melted chocolate fudge on ice-cream all melt-ie... or something like that- mmm.

My heart is pounding a frantic, and for some reason, I'm blushing furiously under his steady inspection of being perfect in every way possible. He smiles, and again it's like he's privy to some big secret.

My reminiscences of him did not do him justice, in this dim light, He's not simply good-looking - he's the epitome of male exquisiteness, magnificent, I shake my head and take my wits of the dead and prowls, I was humming yet I was with his body and mind with my eyes tight.

Finally, my intellectual functions are restored and re-joined with the rest of my body. I am utterly thrown by the sight of him standing before me, and he's here in my always now. Even at the Store, I feel him.

Go figure...? It is so disconcerting the way I feel after also this being his little salt, yet, I want it so bad. Taking a deep breath, I go down on him hard, one more I said it is fine, I put on my professional life out my mind to be with him.

I've-worked hard today so maybe this is okay. he murmurs, his blue eyes cool but smiling like in mine. I mutter, my voice soft and wavy moving in my mind. Get a grip, I said, after a half-hour or so my legs are abruptly the uniformity of Jell-O. I'm so eager, I decided to wear my best jeans this morning to work just to show him that I love to look this way for him to see through me, like looking into the glass shingling back in his stare, of mine, I try for indifference as I come out from behind the counter, but really I'm concentrating hard on not falling over my own feet.

My voice is a little too bright, walking 'around the store today. I glance up at him in regret yet it's only me that knows he's there like, it almost immediately. Damn, he's handsome. I blush, looking downward... and the others in my day have no idea what the hell has happened to me. Acting nuts... 'After you,' he murmurs in my head space, gesticulating with his long-fingered, gorgeously manicured hand. With my heart almost throttling me to the point of crazy - for the reason that it's in my throat trying to escape from my mouth like he's trying to get out of me from down under.

His fingers trail across the various packages displayed that I have done on the shaving, like the same can be said the way he is touching his fingers over my lips, face, and hair, and for some incomprehensible reason, I have to look away for all in the store and close my eyes tightly for my little girlfriend to release. He bends and selects a packet.

‘These will do just fine this way he said to me looking over my job that is not where I want to be,’ he says with his oh-so-secret smile within me, and I blush, and he finds me to be sweet and cute. ‘Nope, it was so revamping,’ he says quickly then smirks and it shows all over my face, and I have the uncanny feeling that he’s laughing at me, for shacking it out so hard, in public. And the boss knows it, yet that is fist week dating play-no?

Why, why? -Would this beautiful, powerful, urbane man want to see me? No way can I see it! I dismiss it immediately for feeling like this on the job. I asked, and my voice is too high in my thoughts, he gets me like I have got my finger trapped the head site mic too hard. Damn! Try to be cool Marry Sue!

He gazes at the selection of tops and undies, that I have places nicely in their lines, what on this Earth is he going to do with those, I cannot picture him as a do-it-yourselfer at all, doing woman’s work like this... I flush at my foolish wayward thoughts. ‘All part of your feed-the-world plan?’ I tease... in a dirty thought of what happening when I get home.

‘Something like that,’ he acknowledges, and his lips quirk up in a smile showing on my face. ‘Is there anything else, I need to do I said to my boss at the store?’ ‘I’d like to see you do your job faster without daydreaming. Go home... I don’t even want to look at you. You’re a waste of my time.’ ‘Are you redecorating?’ The words are out before I can stop them.

Surely, he hires laborers or has the staff to help him decorate? I glance behind me as he follows, always in my mind now- even going in the girl’s room, Am I that funny, I said shyly or Funny looking down there? Ha- he said- just keep being you! And I give that look of confusion...?

...?...?

Blink- Blink-

-Hair shacking out-

‘This way,’ I murmur uncomfortably about the way I look.

‘Have you worked here long; he is teasing me with- dumb...’

His voice is low and soft make me feel well wet, and he's gazing at me, with blue soulful eyes concentrating hard like his dick sliding inside me, for the first time the days before. I blush even more brightly.

Why the hell does he have this significance to me? Changing into a dress and of uniform- that now gross- cover in girly-ness. I feel like I'm threatening years old down there and in here and there too - awkward, as always, and out of place is everything about me. My eyes drop, yet he has to look me up and down!

‘One week,’ I mutter as we reach our goal, of me, feel good with him in all places. To distract myself to being his lover, I reach down and select the two widths apart and let him go to town on my clit, he at this point I could have the world give to me for him doing so. It's zapping through me like I've touched an exposed wire, I feel it come out, which I pass to him too in the feelings also. Our fingers brush very briefly in hand-holding and mind kissing, and the current is there again, I gasp my boobs and he can feel it in his hands-like unwillingly as I feel it, all the way down to somewhere dark, and unexplored even with my eyes still tight, deep in my belly I feel this rush.

Very much, I scrabble around for my symmetry- as I know the camera's in the bathroom has gotten it all on a video puck (aka thumb drive.) Yet all they see is me have fun with myself - yet the one that looks over this all get it- yet not my boss for now. ‘Anything else I said as he dresses me through my body?’ My voice is dry and breathy, own like my body. His eyes widen slightly in mine.

‘This way to the door I said.’ I duck my head down, as I pass all the snacking girls, I work with like I try to hide my recurring blush, and head for the aisle out of the store, to a floating lot of cars folded up. (The poor girl- said the old lady-looking over it all.)

I halt at his expression going to my car that is just lower my way like a cab, his eyes deepening shad in mine. Color fading like... trembling, yet again his fingers now deep inside me on the drive home, I feel like such a slut- yet I must have it- even if I was good.

This boy will not stop... Quickly, with, I measure aware that his hot I gaze back into my mine of him wanting all of me. I dare not look at him like a little girl, yet I can't help it he is my first.

Holy- jizz'n jeez, could I feel, like any more self-conscious, about me being me, done... the back pocket of my jeans is my Id to get into my home, by some miracle, I remember to bring it along this time- I Marry not to remove a finger away for my real age, of how I jumped four years in high school for being smart.

Why must I feel like a little girl... yet his making me a woman.

10

I know by the end of this year that he and I, we have c*med in each other's body or through each body by concentration manipulation of thoughts 2,165 times.

(Forward one year)

I must not sleep with it wet, yet that just I live life too fast and too young to care, I must not sleep with it wet. I am trying to brush my hair into submission. I mopping with frustration at myself in the mirror for sucking hard at everything... and yes even that too. Damn my hair to hell for sucking more than that also. I should be studying and going to school for the day, for my final exams, which are less than a year and a week away, my only option is to confine my naughty hair in a pigtail after, yet another long night of him pounding me, and hope that I look semi-presentable, when I can even if as if I can walk out the door.

Katie is huddled on the couch in the living room doing her, I ignore my pang of unwelcome sympathy for doing what I want to do all day too. You should get back to bed and be with me all day piss on the school she said. Would you like some Nyquil or Tylenol, to get knocked out?' 'Nyquil, please, as I spend some time with her until she passed out and then, I leave her clingy hug as she is laying on our bed, and go to school.

'Okay, I'm going. Get back to bed with me she said. I made you some postage to heat up later.' I stare at her fondly as if she was my one and only lover. I cannot believe, that I have to do all this for you like your mom, I have let Katie talk me into this also like a mom, only for you, I, would I do this for, being your bitch and shit! She said, gathering my book bag, she smiled, then head out the door to the car, she's articulate, solid, influential, argumentative, yet lovely words, and on like the girl she would become in the days to come - and she's my dearest, dearest friend. But then Katie can talk anyone into anything. Good luck she said handing me the re-right of my paper for class. She'll make an exceptional journalist that I'm not. Making notes, I am not the best at it at all, yet, I want to be someone someday, so pinning text and more of it.' Rising terror with-in me on a half-hour now late for first class.

'The questions will be racing in my mind, of what to say to cover my ass. Going now. It's a long drive- that I don't have to do- yet, I don't want you to be late for what I don't need to live.' You're my lifesaver for editing I said.' 'Why do I put everyone ahead of myself, be so nice, try so hard and become the person that gets hurt the most? What can I do? I have gone through 8 or 9 years with no real friend no best friend nothing. just people who are assholes that I am stuck seeing every day, why? The most compassionate people in the world the people who are truly kind, who are truly considerate- also have the best boundaries. If you do not have and assert personal boundaries, you won't feel respected or be compassionate towards people after a while.

That doesn't, at first glance, sound like it makes sense. But here's the thing: Compassion means seeing the best in others. It means empathizing with their struggles and looking for what's good in them. In order to do that in a healthy way, you must be secure enough in yourself and your own identity that you do not lose your identity in theirs. If you try to empathize without having good personal boundaries, you become the perfect victim- easy to manipulate, easy to control, easy to discard...'

What I see-

Tell the truth, everyone hates you.

Tell a lie and you don't have a support team.

Tell the truth, you'll be forsaken.

Tell a lie, it's history in the making.

Have others there and its wishful thinking

Have others In- you're- life and their hand are not worth shaking.

Live or lie we all going to die so why try?

‘Yes,’ I croak and clear my throat. I roll my eyes at myself. Get a grip, I said. Judging from the building, which is too clinical and modern my apartment is all white elegant, ‘Yes.’ I take off my jacket?’ ‘Oh please, let it all stop.’ I struggle out of the jacket, knowing what to come more off him run down and though me.

‘Merry! I thought you weren’t going to make it today, to all your classes at school. You did not why?’ Didn’t take as long as I thought, to not have thought. I can do a couple of hours, overtime to make up for it I said to my teacher that really did not care either way.’

‘I’m really pleased to see you, he said though...’

When I arrive home later, Katie is wearing my headphones and working on my laptop, she’s absorbed and typing furiously. I’m thoroughly drained - exhausted by the long drive, I slump on to the couch after, thinking about the essay, I have to finish and all the studying, I need to do just to suck, I haven’t done anything notable today, before it starts, because, I was holed up with... he wants all of me and more, like a story that has not to be written.

I flush, and my heart rate inexplicably increases with him being with me always. ‘You’ve got some good stuff here, Merry. Well done. I can’t believe you didn’t take him up on his offer to show you around, more said the one girl that I got to do half of all my work- so really, I have to do is keep him happy. He obviously wanted to spend more time with you, that why I am here she said.’ She gives me a fleeting questioning look; says you go home with him now. That wasn’t the reason, surely, I started her I thought but okay?

He just wanted to show me around, the new home that he had redesigned just for you and your taste in color and style, I realize I’m biting my lip, and that drives him crazy, and I hope Katie doesn’t notice, this was her thing too. But she seems absorbed in her transcription, to do so. ‘Um... no, I didn’t, just do that for her with him think it was for her not him and maybe be it was just for her- woo.’ I flush up, to the thoughts of having 2 lovers running through my mind like a moon jet, in the sky going from mars to earth in less than a day.

‘Oh come on, Merry - even you can’t be immune to his looks said Katie in my mind, I think she what to play with him using my mind also... ha and he loves it- it’s a 3 way in the brain- of two young girls and one older man that can’t do anything incorrectly.’ I lost in thoughts of thinking of her, and she arches a perfect, for me with her soft warm body showing in soft light, in her and ‘I’s’ room, also arching an eyebrow at me, as he using me and my body as if she is me... you and she - and, not me - but she is overriding me... and my movements. 'I hear what you mean about formal sound, via you - she cute and young and what I want for fun. Did you take any notes, on what I did here to make him ask for more?' she asks.

'That's fine, I said I well you mind to speech weighting, I know it's like shorthand- and glitch- ie yet I can get the notes I need on pleasing him- to the most. And my readers for work... all at the same time, I can still make a fine article with these thoughts on how to be right for a guy like him. Shame we don't have some unique calms, of how a man can be with 2 -16-year-old's these days without think of marriage. Good-looking son of a bitch isn't he, she said to me - blocking off his pathway in thought.'

'I suppose he is I love you though- yet but this way we can all be to gather and no one gets it- and even so, it's a story, and what will they say, why care? We okay with this why not the world.' I try hard to sound disinterested- in only wanting one to love now and always, yet I can't make up my mind to what I really want, and I think I succeed at being a slut. 'You probably would have got a lot more out of him, if you would have to don't it like this - and she shows it in her thoughts to me - all sexy in her ways.'

'I doubt that Merry, Crappie! I said I distract her with flattery actions, always a good ploy, as I make her love me more, damn, she's inquisitive. Think of something - quick, to make them both feel what the need, 'So what did you really think of him, my mother gets on this now and asked?' I have like five voices in my crazy had rolling around. - he practically offered you a job, yes, I said- saying GET OFF- GET ME OFF- SAID KATTIE over and over, and the old lady down stars were calling the cops! Katie just loooovesss my mom... She glances up at me speculatively. I make a hasty retreat into the kitchen to get to the wall screen to call and say there are no issues here not to come, that just us playing around.

The girl officer looking now down on the whole run using the wall 4d tv screen that is cover, a fool to ceiling, was not impressed with us, to say the least- Come on Given that I foisted this on you at the last minute, you did very well.' This is an override of safety and privacy- they have the right to do this even if nude/ or having sex/ or shoring the cum off your body/ in your own home... it's to be safe, they can record video and sound when they feel the need for the law.

Kattie she snorts, at the dumb of how this all went down. Why can't she just let this go, and go back to playing with herself, as they all do in their indented force, of A-holes under their desks? What was that she said yah- sue me- she said, as it the girlie cum runs down her leg as she yells get out of here, get out of my room, this is not right.

‘She’s very driven, controlling, arrogant - scary really having this girl look all up and down me in her hologram inspection to see if we were okay or not, it’s what they have to do, to make sure you’re not dying, they only send someone if you’re already dead. I can understand the charm she is giving her for being in our room unwanted for an old ass that needs to kick,’ I add truthfully, as I peer ‘round the door of the bathroom, that I am now in, know that everything is seen through thought and or glass in this home like them all, hoping this will shut her up once and for all, saying we just having girl on girl sex- god, go be somewhere else. I scowl at the memory, of this the last time it happened. Can the old bitch just freaking die, I said loudly? AWWWAH!

‘You, fascinated by a girl? He said at a first when you were 12.’ I see first love...? I start gathering the makings of a sandwich, I am his yet living with her still, Incidentally, that was the most embarrassing question, I have ever had too indoor. I was embarrassed, of all the slideshow of what we did as kids be shown for all to see at his workplace, saying I was the one... and he was pissed to be asked if I was a virgin.’

Yah you can see the dildo freaking of them at 12, here in this clip said the one man too eager- too eager. I would say so at 16 and into girls- one said, why here? That thought was the same in my mind also. Why Me...? ‘Whenever she’s was in the society pages, she never has a dated it said.’ ‘It was embarrassing nonetheless to see myself shown in that light and in full color on the big screen in the boardrooms of the school and at his workplace- no privacy for a girl like me. The whole thing was embarrassing. I’m glad I’ll never have to lay eyes on him again.’ ‘Oh, Merry, it can’t have been that bad, she said holding me in my bed crying over it all. I think he sounds quite taken with you, she said - and so did mom- like I was a baby all over again.’ Taken with me...? Now Katie’s being ridiculous, about this too. I cried... ‘Would you like another sandwich?’

‘Please...’ For a moment, I hesitate, and I have Mom’s full attention.

‘I’m fine.’ ‘No, Mom, it’s nothing. You’ll be the first to know if I do.’ ‘Merry, you really need to get out more, honey. You worry me.’ I curl up in my white iron bed, wrapping my mother’s quilt around me, and also the one she made for me too, I close my eyes, and I'm instantly falling asleep. That night I dream of dark places, lost in the time of the past with her and his blue eyes looking into mine.

~*~

By Monday and by the time I finish, it's midnight now Tuesday, and Katie has long since gone to bed. I make my way to my room, exhausted, but pleased that I've proficienct so much for - a. We talk no more of RICHARD C. MAST that always there - that evening, much to my relief, all the arguing was over. Once we've eaten, she and I just crashed for some time, I'm able to sit at the dining table with Katie and, while she works on her article, I work on my essay for school for lit. Damn, I hate this with a passion.

By Wednesday, she's much better, yet I am still in my PJs for Monday. For the rest of the week, I do even change them, or my sheets on the bed, why? I throw myself into my studies and my job of being whatever... however- whenever he wants it, however- whenever- why-ever and forever. I called my mom to check on her, for I was to mean, and so she can wish me luck for my final exams.

She worries about me.

Katie is busy too, compiling the last edition of her student magazine, which I am sure no one will read. Drama- drama- drama. It's a brief conversation with my mom before I want to rip my hair out. Later that evening, I call, my stepdad, that is dating a girl younger than I- just to see if he has not been kill by a terrorist, yet he dating her so... yah. Its Friday night, Katie and I are debating what to do with our evening- we want some time out from student newspapers our studies, and from our work.

'That's amazing - congratulations, Katie said reviewing it in her mind!' Delighted for him to be with her right, I hug him again in my mind and get off the line. Katie beams at him too, saying you could have had me. Why is it when I go out, I always feel trembly at the knees, heart-in-my-mouth, butterflies-in-my-belly, and come home with sleepless nights, yet even with her. Sometimes I wonder if there's something wrong with me. Do you think there is?

Why is he so interested in me, and not them it keeps going through my mind? I need more E-books- 'Oh, you know, locked out of having too many. The usual... well, have to do-The classics. Of US literature, primarily.' He rubs my chin with his long index finger, but its mine, and thumb as he contemplates my answer to more stories under his name on my E-reader. Or perhaps he's just very bored and trying to hide it when I am reading too long- or maybe he like that to about me. those fingers on that face are so enticing. 'Anything else you need? Before I sign-off...' 'I don't know- um- like- you to really be in my life.' What else would you recommend?' You to find out what you want.

He smirks, and then he raises an eyebrow, amused, yet again, for crying over a dumb story. He nods, with wicked humor, and amusement with me being me. I flush, and my eyes stray from the text. I reply softly, and I know I'm no longer screening gazing, what's coming out of my mouth, is frustration. 'You wouldn't want to ruin your clothing, by not washing them.' I gesture, ambiguously in the direction of the overstuffed washer- surging my shoulder's. 'I could always take them off- I said.' 'Cute' what his thought...?

'Um...' I feel the color of pink in my cheeks increasing yet another time. I must be the color of the communist manifesto. Stop talking. Stop talking NOW. Heaven forbids I should ruin any clothing, that you got for me,' he says matter-of-factly. He ignores my inquiry of me rolling my eyes to that too. 'How's the article coming along?' He knows yet still questions me about it. I try and dismiss the unwelcome image of him without his underwear on.

I grasp it tightly with two hands like I was holding his, and I go for honesty, about my feelings. 'Do you need anything else?' He's finally asked me a normal question about us and he starts doing cute things, like only he can, the confusing of double talk... with Katie is a question I can answer, of the fact I love him now more than her.

-Raises an eyebrow, I look into my mind to feel all of him.

'I'm not writing it, Katie is, My roommate, she's the writer. She's very happy with it. She's the editor of the magazine, and she was devastated that she couldn't do the interview in person.' I feel like I've come up for air - at last, a normal topic of conversation. 'Her only concern is that she doesn't have any original photographs of you.'

'What sort of photographs does she want?'

Okay I said, I hadn't factored in this response. I shake my head because I just don't know, how to say this to her that I want her to back off, yet she is the one making me look to the world. Tomorrow, perhaps... I will come out and say it' he trails off the line.

‘I want you to do a photoshoot naked for me?’ My voice is squeaky again, and I said yes for the world to see and for me to love you more. He said, Katie, will be in seventh heaven when she sees me like this if I can pull this off. And you might see him again tomorrow, that dark place at the base of my brain whispers seductively at me. I dismiss the thought - of all the sill-ie-ness, ridiculous... whys I going to be spared open on the screens for all to see my goodies.

‘Katie will be delighted if we can find a photographer, that wants a happy ending like I do- ha with us all.’ I’m so pleased, I smile at him broadly, with the outcome of all the shots. He’s taken a sharp intake of breath, not remember to let it out, for some time, and he blinks over and over say she’s all mine. For a fraction of a second, I was wonder what the hell, and then it turned out to be sweet, he looks lost somehow, and the Earth shifts slightly on its axis, the tectonic plates sliding into a new position.

‘Let me know about tomorrow if you want to go around the world with me.’ Reaching into his back pocket, he pulls out his wallet, and see. ‘My card with his to do just that. It has my number on it, of getting out of the country, and back in... You’ll need to call before ten in the morning if you want to do this.’ ‘Okay.’ I grin up at him. Katie is going to be thrilled, for me.

So, we did...

‘It was a pleasure to burn, burn all the words of the ones that, though they knew it all- to make others feel the same, all that was known as wisdom... now the question shows in the people before me, if they are wise or not.’

Like, I cannot tear my eyes away, for him all of him looking down then back up, from his inquiry; and I gaze blindly, down at my tired fingers. I swallow too hard... His mouth is very... distracting with those lips, hair, and eyes. It’s just so right even if it’s wrong.

‘I want to know about you... I think that’s only fair.’ I lean forward to retrieve the recorder it all the good stuff- for I was not- hearing the words- lost in his charm- yet I have to write the paper. He places his elbow on the arms of the chair, with his fingers in front of his mouth rubbing his lower lip, as if it was mine. I knew his thought, at the time were somewhat all about impressing me. I curl up in my white iron bed, wrapping my mother’s quilt around me, close my eyes, and I’m instantly asleep. That night I dream of dark places, bleak white cold floors, and gray eyes.

For the rest of the week, I throw myself into my studies and my job. Katie is busy too, compiling the last edition of her student magazine before she has to relinquish it to the new editor while also cramming for her finals. By Wednesday, she's much better, and I no longer have to endure the sight of her pink-flannel-with-too-many-rabbits PJs.

I call my mom to check on her, but also so she can wish me luck for my final exams. She proceeds to tell me about her latest venture into candle making - my mother is all about new business ventures. Fundamentally she's bored and wants something to occupy her time, but she has the attention span of a goldfish. It'll be something new next week. She worries me, and I worry about her you see. 'How are things with you, Merry?'

One week has passed, and I am sitting in his office. For the moment, I hesitate, and I have his full attention, lost in his eyes. 'I'm fine I said.' 'Have you met someone, a man I mean?' Why do you ask? Wow... I thought... red rushing feeling coming up my neck. how does she do that the excitement in her voice is palpable? I think I have a crush on the boss, 'really my mom said - a boy?' 'Mom, it's nothing really- just some hot-shot.' 'Like- you will be the first to know, like- if I do- more then I should.' Why sex already? NO! I just encountered this man, I not going to be all hot and heavy already... 'Make baby's she said...' I want to shit myself!

Why does he have such an unnerving effect on me I asked my Ma? His overwhelming good-looks maybe, The way his eyes blaze at me. The way he strokes his index finger against his lower lip, I wish he'd stop doing that. My heart is pounding. The elevator arrives on the first floor, and I scramble out as soon as the doors slide open, stumbling once, but fortunately not sprawling on to the immaculate sandstone floor. I race for the wide glass doors, and I'm free in the bracing, cleansing, damp air of New York. Raising my face, I welcome the cool refreshing rain. I close my eyes and take a deep, purifying breath, trying to recover what's left of my equilibrium.

'You sound like a control freak.' The words are out of my mouth before I can stop them. 'Oh, I exercise control in all things, Miss,' he says without a trace of humor in his smile. I look at him, and he holds my gaze steadily, impassive. My heartbeat quickens, and my face flushes again. 'Do you feel that you have immense power?' Control Freak.

'Oh. I'll bear that in mind,' I murmur, completely confounded, that she thinks I'm good enough. 'Though I'm not sure I'd fit in with his type I said.' Oh no, not at all like what I see him with, I'm musing out loud again. 'Would you like me to show you around?' He asks me this... 'I'm sure you're far too busy, RICHARD C. MAST- Mr. Morgan, and I do have a long drive.’ ‘You're driving back in a week? she sounds surprised, anxious even that I may have hooked this man- in the lest. I glance out of the window, running the day and him in my mind.

It's begun to rain hard. ‘Well, you'd better drive carefully.’ His tone is stern, authoritative. Why should he care?’ Did you get everything you need?’ He adds... I remember his saying that ‘The pleasures have been all his well really it was all mine- nothing but pleasure,’ he’s is so polite as ever, to me makes me feel good about me being, a loser, and a freak in every way that sucks like a girl. I drop my phone into my school bag and call it a night. My eyes narrow, on the paper, I had to write.

‘Thank you for the interview, RICHARD C. MAST Morgan was not a good ending to me; yet me saying, I had one that was happy was not good either.’ Crap...! As I rise, and stands and holds out his hand to my teacher that was a dick about the fact I could write. Here is your paper I said... the man was lackluster about my attempts at wooing him.

‘Do you want the FREAK-ing thing or not- because- like Katie, I could be home now- play with it! The whole class knew that this girl had- an oversexed issue of Doing the two-finger salute nonstop in class, so there are busting out... about it being okay for her and not me- they all know what happened its showing on the walls. ‘Yes- if you feel that I need to see it...’ ‘Like- that’s why I did it- dick-suck!’ I did not say it out loud- yet it was heard in his mind to his... and theirs’. ‘Just ensuring you make it through the door, Miss to blush and feel like complete crap.’ He gives me a small smile, saying good work here. Thanks, I say running for freedom! Obviously, he's referring to my love life, more than the paper, as I run for the office. I flush up... with all them chasing behind me, playing freak you hard in the brain it’s a game to them of back and forth.

“Tell the moment I see you once more Miss.’ It seems that you are testing me, here...or a threat, I'm not sure which what it is- yet. I frowned slightly. When will we ever meet again, it was asked, so-o I shake his hand once more like before, I was surprised that the strange current among us is still there? It must be my nerves, I said and felt. ‘RICHARD C. MAST I said thanks for your time.’ I nodded at him. Moving with nimble sporty elegance to the door, he opens it wide for me to walk through. ‘Did you have a coat?’ He asked, and the moment passed too slow yet to fast.

‘That’s so nice of you to do that, him- the- RICHARD C. MAST- this man I am lusting for,’ I snap, in my moment, and his smile widens at me. I’m glad you find me pleasurable, that is my joy in life having and give just that, I look angrily inwardly, walking into the entrance hall. I’m astonished when he follows me out, asking for more time with me another time. I- Marry and then Olivia we both look up, likewise taken back by him asking for what seemed to be a date night.

‘Yes.’ Olivia leaps up and retrieves my jacket, which - takes from her before she can hand it to me. He holds it up and, feeling ridiculously self-conscious, I shrug it on. They’re not all that much here for you to know about, or for me to say you need to know, I find myself flushing up yet again with him looking at me he does.

‘What are your plans after you graduate? You don’t remember? I questioned, no I just wanted to see if you’re as disciplined as I with saying repartition - in your speeches.’ I hope to find work with someone like you have a man that is like you, and life and some city where I can start anew, like New York. That is if I pass all my classes and get out of the school, yet this is my final that is holding me back from getting away.

I haven’t made any plans- I thought about quitting, yet my mother would not hear of it, so I am here and Kite is doing what I want to be right now. ‘Gross!’ So, in saying all of that I conclude that you have not made any? Right, I said shakenly... I just need to get through my final exams if I can yet you have the say in this. ‘Why do you say that...?’ I see that he turns his head to the one side, fascinated, a hint of a faint smile playing on his lips. I hope that he did not notice my reaction, he gives nothing away, with the look that he is giving me. ‘It’s obvious, isn’t it- that I have fallen too his charms?’ I’m clumsy, unkempt, and I’m not blonde, not his type at all.

He places his hands for a moment on my lower backside. I gasp at his soft touch, his long index finger presses the button summoning the elevator, and we stand to wait - awkwardly on my part, coolly self-possessed on his.

The doors open, and I hurry in desperate to escape. I really need to get out of here. When I turn to look at him, he’s leaning against the doorway beside the elevator with one hand on the wall. He really is very, very good-looking. It’s distracting. His burning gray eyes gaze at me. ‘Merry,’ he says as a farewell. ‘Chiaz,’ I reply. And mercifully, the doors close. No man has ever affected me the way Chiaz has, and I cannot fathom why. Is it his looks that he gives me, that I feel this power over me that I cannot control His Wealth also blows my mind, the power I don't understand my unreasonable reaction? I breathe an enormous sigh of relief. What in heaven's name was that all about... Leaning against one of the stone pillars of the building, I intrepidly try to calm down and gather my thoughts. I shake my head. Holy crap, I said - what was that...? My heart steadies to its regular rhythm, and I can breathe normally again. I head for the car.

He may be conceited- I am falling too it, but then he has a right to be - he's skillful so-o much at such an undeveloped time of life. He doesn't agonize boobs gladly, but why should he, o'er, I'm irritated that Katie didn't give me a brief profile on all this- shit stuff. An involuntary shiver runs down my spine. And Katie's questions are rushing through my head, or did you or didn't you have hookup sex, it was not about getting the job- oh now in today's light it's all about the sex and the money to buy anything or anyone. - ugh, I said to her- well you saw it play out didn't you know it happened!

He kept my underwear- I know she said... sweet...! I shudder at the remembering swallowing him sucking him off and that too I showed and then galloped, then it ended with him kissing my body all over softly. I can't believe I said that to her, yet she saw it sliding in me too- they all did, with this new type of video calling we have- you can see through others... like being there without being there. As I leave the city limits behind, the building behind, and move pasted I begin to feel foolish and embarrassed as I replay the interview in my mind. Surely, I'm over-reacting to something that's imaginary.

Okay, so he's very attractive, confident, commanding, at ease with himself - but on the flip side, he's arrogant, and for all his impeccable manners, he's autocratic and cold. Well, on the surface.

While cruising along with the down the highway, my mind continues to ponder the facts of what I have done slow long hard and yet slow, THE FREAKING WAS INSPIRATION. LIP BITING, BOOB GRABBING, NIPPLE AND SUCKING CLIT LICKING SEX, AND FOREPLAY- DEEP FINGERING LOVE'N SEX. POUNDING! SWEETING- OMG MOMENTS OF GOING OFF OVER AND OVER, WITH HIM UNDER ME!

YOU CAN SEE me AND THE SHOT IN YOUR MIND RIDING HIM FROM WITH MY BUT GOING UP AND DOWN- SLIDING- GLADDING- FEELING ME IN- COMPLETELY! AH! HE IS EVERYTHING I NEED TO MAKE IT IN THIS LIFE- I WANT IT EVEN IF I HURT THE FIRST TIME! 'The sun burnt every day. Yet It burnt away like with old ways and time. I look up to- the skies and thought about the ways of life.'

Truly puzzled to all that went down in me, I need this feeling and feelings to succeed in this life as a woman. A woman is nothing without her man- a man that so perfect as he is... under her. Some of his replies were so obscure, yet I loved the mystery of it all - as if he had a hidden agenda. me up now! Consistently I think of that inquiry in the future, I will cringe with blushing. Damn Katie, for not want me- now I have to want him always!

Did I question in my racing thoughts- like have you ever watched the jet cars race on the boulevard? They now drive themselves crazy to think that some used to do just that drive by hand. I sometimes think drivers don't know what grass is, or flowers, for the reason that they never-ever see them gradually... If you showed a driver a blue blur, Oh affirmatively! A blur flashing before my eyes like him naked in my mind- and Katie spared eagle last night in my face wanting me to go down- that butt is unforgettable! What can you do all girls today are Bi? Right? It's all part of not being wed... and even so that just a piece of paper stating someone owns you, and you lose have of what you worked for - so why do it?

I check the speedometer and see 300 mph. I'm driving more cautiously than I would on any other occasion. And I know it's the memory of two penetrating it's his eyes gazing soft and sweet at me his nude body ribbing over mine, and his stern voice telling me to FREAK him, harder and harder, I want to... as the car is driving carefully fast around all the others whizzing by. Pulling at my own hearing and biting my lip I go off c*mming, in just the thoughts, I realize that he is more like a man double his age, like my dad- yet I want the hard work out of a FREAK! Squeezed tight, body and me holding him in me... and the spraying finally takes places over and over like 30 times, switching ways of doing it- up down and sideways and more. He came to me to not pulling out ones... is that love or not caring, I don't have to care to evert there is stopped, so I don't have to worry?

Freak and be freaked in the game of life... and don't think- about it! Freaked under over and above that's it how I do it girl or guy- and they love me for it... and make you be someone... that advice to live by... said, Katie. I was 10 when I found that girl- like you all virgin and shy... how did you get as far as you did, she said that a week ago back, well, she was right... I did need to go a little crazy... yet I may have fallen in love with it... and that not how the thing works today either. Yet that is just me - old fashioned thinking.

Be unable to remember everything blacking out in the heated moments of sex... Merry, I scold myself... snapping out of it, I decided that all in all, it's been a very interesting experience, but I shouldn't abide by it. Put it behind you. I never have to see him again. I'm immediately cheered by the thought. I switch on the small ear head and player and turn the volume up loud blasting pop music, I sit back in the car as it races for my apartment where I have to then take the trail that winds up the side of the skyscraper- leading up to my room or that floor, and listen to thumping music, as I make my lover parts do the same- think about him well doing myself, as I press down on the accelerator to my sleeping room, were Kittie is looking for to cuddling with me- she and I share a bed it all we can adored- making less than a dollar a day- and need 100 just to live.

As I hit the 1-5, I realize I can drive as fast as I want.

We live in a small community of duplex apartments in- Vancouver, Washington, close to the NYU campus. I'm fluky -Katie's parents bought the place for her, and I pay peanuts for rent. It's been home for four years now. As I pull up outside, I know

Katie is going to want a blow-by-blow account, and she is tenacious. Well, at least she has the mini-disc. Hopefully, I won't have to elaborate much beyond what was said during the interview.

'Merry! You're back.' Katie sits in our and you're with me cheaters-you said to I said- yes but all that? Why not? I see... okay, she said, surrounded movie she was crying over not having me there for her to feel loved. She loves me yet she doesn't want to be in love with me - I wonder why?

She's evidently been studying for finals - though she's still in her pink flannel pajamas decorated with cute little bunnies, that were mine, the ones she reserves for the aftermath of breaking up with her, for not want girl on girl sex as much as she wanted it, and for general moody depression of being- bitchy. She bounds up to me and hugs me hard, and slides them off asked me to do what I did with him on her.

To lick and stick... and feel and play with her vulva, squeeze me and play with my nipples... she said- well she was ou-yah-ing- as I was giving her there in oral, looking for to having it back.

I was beginning to worry, that he was looking into my mind and seeing this... and me doing just this with her... am- I don't wrong?

I expected you back sooner, she said grunting it out of her, everything for the last drop was a trusting spray of her feel whipped out yet happy with everything down there.' thank you so much for doing this, I said to her, have it cum, yet not feel like I did in the past. I owe you; I know.

‘How was it.’

‘Good...’ I said- ‘What was he like?’ Oh, you did not feel inside you where you were looking down at me without asking to be there... you’re not my girl... you don’t need to be here... I know you got off with us... why? Do you want me?

Yes!

Now and always- she said.

I want him now, not you... don’t blow it for me... I struggle to answer her question, of what I really wanted, can I have both... I thought she giggled... see this is why I love you. What can I say? I will always be here for you- like this- yes like this I said- you’re such a baby I have to be. Really young, to be doing that with a man... ‘I no...’ Katie gazes at me arched eyebrows looking sad. I frown at her, saying you’re always my first love. Hug me... ‘I’m glad it’s over, and I don’t have to see him again, I have too, to make it in this life... wink. He was rather intimidating, you know.’ I shrug at the thoughts of want more... of both of them in a loving way ‘He’s very focused, intense even - and young... a boy... yet not ‘you,’ I said- but I will go there. I thought you did it all great... interview and such all also, in the end, it was about you have a 10-figure job someday. And you’ll have it, BUT would you give that all up for me and have ‘nothing’ but for me- and be with me? That’s the question I have for you- do you love me?

(Forward)

‘Merry, hi, it’s so good to see you, back she said- that being Katie!’ She grins as he examines me at arm’s length. Then he releases me but keeps a possessive arm draped over my shoulder. I shuffle from foot to foot, embarrassed by what I have done. She gushes with loving hugs. So how was it? I to pooped to say... and she passed out in her arms- falling in the doorways- that sild opens for her. ‘Yep, you’re looking well, Merry, really well- I see the glow in your face of what all that you two did.’

I can hardly breathe. When I glance up at RICHARD C. MAST - he’s watching us like a warmonger, his blue eyes hooded and speculative, his mouth a hard-impassive line. Hurriedly, I place his purchases in a plastic carrier. Someone you should meet,’ I say, trying to defuse the antagonism I see in -’s eyes. He’s changed from the weirdly attentive customer to someone else - someone cold and distant. The atmosphere is suddenly chilly, and the fire hot, glowing and shining on her skin... she is truly feeling loved- and in love with him and her too. I nod, rendered speechless yet again, and hand back his credit card, if he loves me then I will spend- spend- spend!

There, I've admitted it to myself, I love him for the money I get and feel good, about him making me feel good- good. 'Until tomorrow perhaps where I will be long for her yet once more- right?' He turns to leave, then pauses, asking me for more of what he loves of me the most, 'your ass,' said Katie- 'No my Puss!' I said back. his coming here, tonight to see me- so you need too- well 'get lost' yes... if you don't mind.

'Fine...'

'Oh, and Marry Sue I just want to F*CK you, I read of the card to the flowers he got me - cute Katie said... reading it to using my eyes, yet her thoughts. But it's a lost cause, I have fallen to his ways, I know, and I sighed hard, with nostalgic regret, it was just a coincidence, she smiles looking at me say it all it must be young love, Okay- I like him maybe like- like...? Closing door by asking it to do just that, I spend several minutes staring into space, I cannot hide from myself my feelings anymore.

(Home)

Katie is ecstatic after she does it yourself time... 'DIY baby D-I-Y!'

I bite my lip in anticipation and find myself grinning like a schoolgirl, at the looks of her playing, her curiosity oozes through me too, with what she was just 2.0 is what. (BUTT plug) I've never felt like this before, where I just need sleep. She more than I and she stayed home all week, yet have so much to do- papers, and stocking shelves, I find him attractive lost in my thoughts in my awareness, very attractive... M-mm-mm I said, softly, I can admire him from in here and it safe, surely? No harm, by doing just so-o. And if I find a photographer, I can do some serious admiring tomorrow. I need to phone Katie and organize a photo shoot.

(Work)

I'm in the depths of the stock room, I walk out holding what the little girl gave me of hers to get the same type, yes, getting underwear to little girls, is my dream job, trying to keep my voice casual- well look at these sweet little faces standing there, well standing there... (pee covered undies in my hands) with this in my butt hole. I thought this is what she has to look forward too. 'I think that is one huge coincidence, Merry, he said looking for the size as I say OOOO-ah 'poopie.' And the little girl asked, from afar- what I was making out my myself- when too much time had passed. it's a short-lived joy when she was blurting out, I want the underwire that you took off of me. I mutter you want kids...

'Sure...'

Like this one he said... being comical about it.

He doesn't I want to be with you, Katie said- saying kidnap this one!

PLEASE- too cute...!

14

You don't think he was there to see you, I walk down the hall of my school and see him standing at the end looking at me with his lusting blue eyes, want to cover me with kisses.' she speculates, Katie about how he going to take me away... even as just a schoolgirl- 'How do you know this?' 'Merry, I'm a journalist, and I've written a profile on the guy. I know that man has the power of girls to do whatever it is they want too... the kids were talking about us... me being young and his little slut as they call me yet I don't care I have him- isn't that all I really need?

The question is, who's here to see some dumb girls were thinking in the dark, think they could be the next in his bed, going to do them and where and when.'

'We could ask him why- and where and how but would he- say said to the brown-haired girl, over yonder. He says he's staying the day with- 'THAT GIRL.'" 'You can contact him, all the time? ...on nosey on said to me.' 'I have his wrist phone number here all the time if I need, they don't get how he inside me always.'

Katie gasps... by the lies I have to make up to look innocent to all, even though I know, I have taken it at least 1,000 times, holy c-u-m, at the end of my joiner year.

'The richest, most elusive, I have taken was sex -ed, with this man as an after-school program, most here are working for what he calls righting class, most enigmatic bachelor or hairstyles, or seen to be house wife's 'Er... yes.' 'Merry, is not going to be one of those! He likes you, said the short girl in the room, no doubt about it, said the other with really long blonde flowing hair and green eyes.' Her tone is emphatic when he said let's go on the town and get you out of here. 'Katie, he's just trying to be nice.' But she was pouting about it, that I was not going to be there all day to hold her hand. 'Great idea! I said.

(A thought of now)

After all, he did say he was glad Katie didn't do the interview, that we would have never met.

(Thought)

But even as I say the words, I love you I have to really feel it right? That the sex said Katie, and you'll know. I know they're not true- all the nasty things said by all the mean girls- RICHARD C. MAST- doesn't do nice, or nice thing for girls', like me - things like this if it's not love - fist.

(Back)

-And-

A small quiet voice whispers saying they all just want to be for you're the best one out of them all don't forget it, perhaps- he's is right. I hug myself with quiet glee, rocking from side to side, holding him in my mind, like a dream, I see all this... entertaining the possibility that he might like me for one brief moment- for always. Katie brings me back to the now, and happening by saying your zipper is down... (zip) and her hands are on my vagina.

'Merry, you're the one with the relationship. What's it really like to be with a boy said the girl lunch? That sits with her day in and day out not saying much.' 'Relationship?' I squeak at her, my voice rising several octaves. 'I barely know the guy.' Yet it's some you just have to do to really get it. So, is it true? What I said to her... you're with him... and do things... 'Yeah, um, sorry,' I mutter, turning to leave. I can't say- what we do or don't do- it's confidential.

'So, how come you know: The RICHARD C. MAST?' Cass's voice is unconvincingly nonchalant, also want to know it all.

This is when Katie speaks up saying everything and anything along with saying she needs to get laid- I give an odd look- when she said- 'I had to interview him for our student newspaper today and I said- 'you did the editing.' So, you can move forward, Katie wasn't well- she all dripping from somewhere ha.' I shrug my shoulder, trying to sound casual with all the girls looking at me like I am a whore, yet not doing no- better than them- in there twisted little minds. She shakes her head as if to clear it all away.' Anyway, want to grab a drink or something and chat some over there?' Away for this gossip? 'Sure...' is what I said. I am staring out of the window at the sun coming up and showing the first signs of light. Katie grabs the handset from me, tossing her silky-smooth red-sh-blond hair over her shoulder.

You like him, a chant started with all the girls! I've never seen or heard so, so... many girls care- about anyone before. You're actually blushing.' Said Katie... 'Oh Katie, you know I blush all the time, I said quickly... She blinks over and over fast-ly, at me with surprise that I did not move or reacted to this taunting. 'I just find him... intimidating, that's all, and he's acting cool for me right now - or I am sure, I would have run out.'

'I love you' is what he said over and over... overtop all the haters.

(Home from HIGH school)

I am restless that night, I punch my pillow and try to settle, tossing and turning, after a short cat nap, yet I wake twice. Dreaming of him and those eyes and oh...! That body, long legs, long fingers, and dark hair and soft skin..., 'I need to study, then I'll make supper.' I cannot hide my irritation with her for going too far with him, as I open one of the cubbyholes under our bed, I read love note of dream of him, I do this while she is making supper. In the night- holding her, my heart pounding, knowing what is it going on two girls on man- who does he love more? Nine

15

Free of charge for the morning in exchange for a credit in the article, said Katie, I do this for the love by you. When she- explains at the reception that I have for-go writing yet bad- spelling, she said to-RICHARD C. MAST - RICHARD C. MAST, we are instantly upgraded have her on our time - yes? She's terribly young and very nervous for some reason, yet if you want to have this way then if he said, It's fine. We have half an hour to set up, for the day out, Katie is in full flow, working on my work and not going to school... funny how life works...? I thought...

5 P. M

My mouth goes dry looking at him... he's so freaking hot. Holy Crap He's wearing a white shirt, open at the collar, and - dress pants, I disruptive hair is still damp from a shower, for what took place after the school day was at its end. His eyes watch me impassively. He then extends his hand, 'Thank you for taking the time to do this.' ...and I shake it like I am one of his man on the job, blinking rapidly, to see if anyone see us out and bout, Oh my... I thought, he really is, quite... is he liking her more now- wow?

As I touch his hand, I'm aware of that delicious current running right through me, lighting me up, making me blush, and I'm sure my erratic breathing must be audible. Katie who comes forward, looking him squarely in the eye, said I am coming on this date to tonight. How do you do?' He said - to her kissing her hand and her ass all at the same damn time... He gives her a small smile, looking genuinely amused, as to what was under the dress.

I remind myself that Katie has been to the best private schools. 'I trust you're feeling better?' 'Yes, yes I do...' 'I'm fine, also running it into his head fist that he ALL MINE! She shakes his hand firmly, AND HE HUGS HER NOT ME! SHIT! without batting an eyelid, HOLD ON TO HIS ARM.

Backstory- Her family has like no money, and she's grown up confident, about her ass and how to use it at a young age, and I am sure of her place in the world- is sitting at home diddling no more. She doesn't take any crap, so why him? I am in awe of her, for trying to break us up, so-o she has all of me back- I can see through her plans. She gives him a polite, professional smile like a gay girl would.

'It's a pleasure,' he answers, that is all it's about with me and find it, turning his gaze on me, and I flush up again, feeling-lovesick, damn it why when I have this, I feel I going to lose it...? 'Where would you like me?' - Asks him. His tone sounds vaguely threatening. But Katie is not about to let me run the show for five. My wish has come true: she said, I can stand next to you, and admire you and not - from not-so-far. Twice of my eyes lock deeper into her, and I have to tear myself away from his cloudy gaze, of wanting to freak the shit out of her.

(Bar)

'He stands, Katie wades in again. 'Enough sitting.' I remove the chair, for some slow dancing. 'Great,' says Katie, I find a bonnier to bang down- when a fast song comes on... 'Thank you again, Mr. for your time. He said- 'I look forward to reading the article that you re-told, Miss Katie,' he murmurs in a sexy way. As I- Merry- pull him to dance. 'Sure,' I say, completely thrown, yet I don't need him doing the same. I glance anxiously at Katie, who shrugs at me. Yelling has fun, as she finds her way over to the wall to be a flower. My heart slams, my mouth dry and my lower-ness not so-o much.

Yet am I in love?

-Or is it all just dumb freaking lust, or just freaking?

16

A date? RICHARD C. MAST - is asking me on a date tonight I said to- my girlfriend Katie. He's asking if you want a coffee, this was said to me I see it my memory of the day that just passed. Maybe he thinks you haven't woken up yet- to see that it was all really not a dream that he is falling for her, my subconscious whines at me in sneering in my mood again. I clear my throat trying to control my nerves, yet I cannot.

Katie- this man said- 'Are they based at the university?'

Know I live with her- he looked at me oddly, about saying that. The other couple with us asked, their names escape' me, yet I could dig it up if I wanted too, his voice was soft, a young businessman that was part of the team higher up and inquiring. I nod, too stunned to speak, Taylor was his name, I found the clip to look at it and think about all the thing that was said so fast I could not evoke them all.

'Mr. Taylor, as he asks me if I want a drink- sure is what I said, and a dace- and I said- 'yes,' but my mind was on him- yet-this man reached for me, and I have to say yes, I was obligated, giving nothing away, about how I feel. I look at him like there was magic in my eyes yet there was not. But he was sweet so... yah.

He smiles at me and it is a dazzling one, unguarded he said- to me, I said Nah drop out- natural he said, all-teeth-showing, glorious smile, of college?

No high school... Oh, my... he said. I scoot around him to enter the bathroom, where I find Merry deep discussion with him- they were in a stall together getting it on.

'Merry, I think he definitely likes you, I said as the pants were at their feet.' Be sure to be a condom- ha you can go now- she said fast-ly- 'But I don't trust him, you know that' she adds. I raise my hand up in the hope, it hits her in the face, that she'll stop dirty talking. By some miracle, it does. Her mouth pops open and it slides in. Speechless Katie is! I savor the moment, seeing this I was so happy for her. I love her, yet I want her to be happy you see.

(160 long seconds have passed)

She purses her lips as if considering my request. Finally, she fishes herself to him. She grabs me by my arm, holding the door open some say get in here, be with him too now, and drags me into the bedroom where it goes down hard and fast, that's off the living area of the suite, in this really nice bar in New York.

Her tone is full of warning.

At the elevators, he presses the call button, and the bell rings almost immediately. The doors slide open revealing a young couple in a passionate clinch inside.

Merry- there's something about him, that is just driving me crazy- lost in thoughts... and feelings- of what could be.

'He's gorgeous, I agree, but I think he's dangerous. Especially to someone like you. She said...' 'What do you mean, someone like me?' I demand, affronted. 'An innocent like you, Merry. You know what I mean,' she says a little maddened.

I flush up turning pink. I'm starting my exams this week, and I need to study, so I won't be long- it's time to go 'like now' I said hurriedly. Fixing up as a young girl walks in, asking if everything was cool.

'Katie- it's just coffee, I said to Merry- he said- I want to take you out what do you say he said to me. And... he looked at me with wonder...

He grins at me with hope in eyes of a night that he would not forget all given by me I sure, and with his money, I was sure to do whatever he wanted. It's now tomorrow and at night- 'I'll see you later, then... yes most defiantly. Don't belong, I said to her... or I'll send out search and rescue.' 'Thanks.' I hug her, I with your boys so you know him he will be right to me... I was so pissed, why her... yet is that okay?

He stands up straight, holding his hand out for me to go first, were had a date with a horse drawing carriage, all white, and nice and romantic at dusk.

Where he held my hand and whispered sweet nothings in my ear. Holding me over so nicely..., I flushed beet red. 'Okay, let's do coffee, here and it was the best restart in town... and the classiest - the name in French so you see for yourself.' By my eyes it was Queue weed, really, I said yet that was without glasses on. That was something I failed like - in high school.

I emerge from the suite to find RICHARD C. MAST - waiting, leaning up against the wall, looking like a male model in a pose for some glossy high-end magazine.

Merry- after being with him all day, I am pooped, I murmur I make my way down the corridor, my knees shaky, my stomach full of butterflies, and my heart in my mouth thumping a dramatic uneven beat. I am going to have coffee with RICHARD C. MAST and I hate coffee... but- she ran off with my man!

'Sucking tit shit!' I said!

We walk together down the wide hotel corridor to the elevators. What should I say to him? My mind is suddenly paralyzed with apprehension. What are we going to talk about? What on Earth do I have in common with him? His soft, warm voice startles me from my reverie. I REMEMBER BACK - OF The doors opening and, much to my surprise, - takes my hand, clasping it with his long cool fingers. I feel the current run through me, and my already rapid heartbeat hurries. As he leads me out of the elevator kissing my neck and lips softly, we can hear the suppressed giggles of the couple erupting behind us. - grins from all around, yet we did not care it was lusty love.

'How long have you known Marry - Katie Oh, an easy question for starters... I thought... 'Since our 1st year of schooling. She's a good friend of mine don't break her heart.' Why don't say anything but look at this- wow?

I am struggling to maintain a straight face, so I gaze down at the floor, feeling my cheeks turning pink. Surprised and embarrassed, by the fact I thought it was for me I was like shit, I started to feel guilty. Then, I step into the elevator, feeling like I want to be her.

'What is it about elevators?' he mutters, thoughts of true love... about her. When I peek up at them using my mind phone of seeing into their thoughts - through my lashes and their eyes, he has a hint of a smile on his lips of what he plans to give me, but it's very hard to tell if I feel that he being real about it.

As a young couple, I say nothing, and have nothing in that say anyway- and we travel down to the first floor, all in the same body's- me as Katie is embarrassed silence-less for she in me full.

Katie- Outside, it's a mild May on a Sunday. The sun is- shining and the traffic is light. - turns left and stroll to the corner, where we stop waiting for the lights of the pedestrian crossing to change. He's still holding my hand. I'm in the street, and RICHARD C. MAST - is holding my hand. We cross the expansive, bustling lobby of the hotel toward the entrance but - avoids the revolving door, and I wonder if that's because he'd have to let go of my hand.

I attempt to smother the ridiculous grin that threatens to split my face in two. I feel giddy, and I tingle all over... for the good buy sex, yet we wanted each other- badly- no one has ever held my hand. Try to be cool, Merry, my subconscious implores me. The green man appears, and we're off again.

'I'll have... um - Breakfast with tea, bag out, talking about all that to over the fact he was to spend his life with her as me being his sideways bitch out the side and you know what I'm okay with that.' He raises his eyebrows.

'Why don't you choose a table, while I get the drinks. What would you like?' he asks, polite as ever. We walk four blocks before we reach the NY Coffee House, where - releases me to hold the door open so I can step inside. 'The coffee was good? Cram-ie like I was for him... at midnight.' 'I'm not keen on coffee, yet I like this.'

His smiles- OH MY GOD! Like for a moment, I'm stunned, thinking it's a blandishment, but fortunately my unconscious kicks in with pursed lips. As I lay naked on his bed in the hotel room that he owns- I stare down at my knotted fingers, think about how I the other girl.

'Anything to eat?' I surreptitiously gaze at him from beneath, and my lashes point upward at him as he stands there looking down at me with low light on and the skyline in the background flicking lights, of tall buildings, I could watch him all, think about how I was not sleep with her tonight.

'Sure...?'

'...It was quite in my mind why...'

I bite my lip and stare down at my hands again not liking where my wayward thoughts are headed. 'No thank you.' I shake my head see him coming at me, and he heads for me.

Do, I want this I thought? Oh, my hips, once or twice he runs his long, graceful fingers through, he's tall, broad-shouldered- and slim those pants hang from his ankles... and the way his now dry but still disorderly hair, sheens in the light is so right, I just oozing for his love. So, yah wet - hmm... I'd like to do that to you he said- and my mouth doped with it. The thought comes unbidden into my mind and my face flames.

'Penny for your thoughts, dollars for hardcore freaking?' Yes, sign me up...! For his love...! I go crimson when the hood is pulled back by his fingers. Flaking and liking- and then sticking- 'OH MY GOD- Freak-ING- YES!!'

'Get down with your bad self!'

I said! In my thoughts...running my fingers through your hair, his going down in me, I was just thinking about and wondering if it would feel soft to touch like this always, I shake my head from the c*mming hard, and being fast, and faster yet, and over and over. my favorite part- and part of the day, I said to him- letting out a big breath.

(Moring)

I curl up, desperately clutching the flat foil balloon and Taylor's handkerchief, and surrender myself to my grief. I fall onto my bed, shoes and all, and howl. The pain is indescribable... physical, mental... metaphysical... it is everywhere, seeping into the marrow of my bones. Grief. This is grief - and I've brought it on myself. Deep down, a nasty, unbidden thought comes from my inner goddess, her lip curled in a snarl... the physical pain from the bite of a belt is nothing, nothing compared to this devastation.

How do they do that?

The room is so nice all fancy, he's carrying a platter, which he sets down on the small, round, birch-veneer table. He hands me a cup and saucer, a small teapot, and a side plate bearing alone teabag labeled Breakfast' -He has a coffee which bears a wonderful leaf-pattern engraved in the milk.

I wonder idly in my mind for some time. 'Your thoughts on all this?' He prompts me when I look into his eyes. He's also bought himself a blueberry muffin, with lots of sugar on top.

Putting the tray aside, to kiss me all over even if it was all sticky like the hammer on an Underwood typewriter, he sits opposite me and crosses his long legs. Cover between my legs with soft sweet kissing, He looks so comfortable, up to me, so at ease with his body, I envy him, for I am not like that at all. Here's me, all gawky and awkward, barely able to get started to end without falling flat on my face- 'I'm selfish, impatient and a little insecure. I make mistakes, I am out of control and at times hard to handle. But if you can't handle me at my worst, then you sure as hell don't deserve me at my best.'

As I place the used teabag back on the side plate, he turns his head gazing enquiringly at me, with the look of hunger and thriving lust. 'This is my favorite tea; how did you know I loved this so?' My voice is quiet, wheezy. I simply can't believe I'm sitting opposite RICHARD C. MAST - in a coffee shop in NY. He frowns, some not too much you- it shows on his face the lines, he knows I'm hiding something, and that's what I falling for him.

I pop the teabag into the teapot and almost proximately fish it out again with my teaspoon.

'I like my tea black, and weak,' I mutter some- to him running my fingers through his hair like we were longtime lovers, then he said- 'I see, she's your little girlfriend then, that you in-love with -Now and forever?' I said- 'You know you're in love when you can't fall asleep because the reality is in conclusion better than your dreams.'

She's a really- really good friend of mine, that's all, and we have shared a lot. Why did you think he was my girlfriend? Now and forever.' 'She's more like family,' I whisper, holding his body tightly with mine. A friend is someone who knows all about you and still loves you- love them if you want too? Right... it's just showing caring...?

Then the nods from him are slightly neat looking, all him, seemingly satisfied with my response, and glances down at his blueberry muffin. His long fingers deftly peel back the paper - and I watch, fascinated, looking at his dick. As he is me... all over the eye are going. Spellbound, 'The way you smiled at him, is wonderful my girlfriend Jan said... looking into it, with her nose up my butt looking into the walls- TV's, and him at you.'

His gray gaze holds mine. I want to look away but I'm caught- him doing things I like with his butt, he's so alarming, yet everything I need. I frown and stare down at my hands again, laying on the bed, recessing thought to go through my head. I told you yesterday, that I wanted you on this site how do you feel about that?'

Oh, this is getting silly, she loves you all the way why me too. 'Why do you ask?' I want to know- 'why' - 'for I can...' he said. 'You seem nervous around other girls, yet not her or me - that works.' 'Do you want some? Of this all the time?' sure- they say yes to me- he asks, and that amused, secret smile is back, of I have a blond and a dark-haired girl all at the same time... Yet, would he be happy with just two? I ponder the thoughts even if he could hear them...

RICHARD C. MAST- He just grinds. Darkness cannot drive out darkness: only light can do that. Hate cannot drive out hate: only love can do that. Holy crap, that's personal, I thought - to I met yesterday and the right for me. she's not her girlfriend?' yah well see - when I do them both at the same time. I love this game...

(thoughts she could not hear-)

Katie- 'I find you intimidating.' 'There's nothing mysterious about me.' I flush scarcely think about all I could have had him just sick it in me- I mean all the riches in the world, but mentally pat myself on the back for my candor, and gaze at my hands again. I hear his sharp intake of breath.

'It gives me some sort of inkling of what you might be thinking,' he breathes.' You're a secret, 'You should find me intimidating,' he nods as I do you. 'You're very honest, and blunt- about what he wants and how he wants it.

'Please don't look down, at me and to that to me - it hurts,' I said to him, 'why?'

'Why- I don't think you should- Why- it's for my taking; he said... and you can't stop it... what are you going to do about it I run you- and thought you... I glance at him, and he gives me an encouraging but wry smile.'

Unsure- feeling yet contented... in his arms.

19

I get up in the morning barking orders to my Echo Dot, and she is more than happy to do them all for me, like play music, and get the thing going for me when I don't want to be going.

I like to see your face.' I'm just nervous around you, she said right? Nope - you're not unlike any others I had... you're not the youngest either.

Oh... Me? Mysterious?

‘I think you’re very self-contained,’ he murmurs.

Crap is what I said! ‘Me, I hadn’t realized I was so self-contained?’ Except when I was blushing, of course, which is often with someone like him. Have I offended you?’ He sounds surprised. Not at all... I just wish I knew what you were blushing about.

He said you can feel safe with me.’ ‘Do you always make such personal annotations?’ ‘No,’ I answer truthfully, to why yet I did not want to say it was all in my mind anyway. ‘He is so-o good.’ I thought...

He pops a small piece of blueberry muffin into my mouth and starts and I start to chew it slowly, and he goes for a kiss, odd yet sweet, not taking his eyes off me, as he pulled back for the kisses, and as if on indication of the fact I was all his, and I blushed.

‘I’m used to getting my own way, Merry,’ he murmurs.’

In- all things.’ This isn’t going the way I thought it was going to go. I can’t believe I’m feeling so antagonistic towards him. It’s like he’s trying to warn me off. ‘But you’re very high-handed,’ I retaliate quietly. Why, haven’t you asked me to call you by your first name?’

I’m surprised by my audacity. He raises his eyebrows at me and, if I’m not mistaken by this or how I feel, he flushes slightly too, by the sight of me and what I was about to do to him- in hot passion.

‘I don’t doubt it, was the fact that he was thinking about her, or thinking that it was wrong. Why, why has this conversation become so serious, in his mind about her? Has he really fallen in love with just her... or is this his mind overthinking things?

The next day- I’m with Merry- ‘Are you into having a child?’

He asks, sure, why do you want to do that now with me, I said back, it may be a plan if you want to do this. Is that I am for your breeder...?

He walked out of the room all PISSY! Whoa... he keeps- changing my course of life. Yet, I am not going to say not- I am- young, I don’t know, um-a I what, or what I want to do. ‘Tell me about your parents, they’re not much to say other than my mom has done it all.’ Why does he want to know this? It’s so dull, like a boy or a girl? The girl he said.

Me- I thought that she's beautiful, my subconscious reminds me. I don't like the idea of me and Katie, doing this yet I do- I can't help myself, I take a sip of my tea, and - eats another small piece of his muffin.

'My mom lives in Georgia with her new husband Bob. My stepdad lives in Montesano.'

'Your father?' 'Yes, what about him- he not in my life now or ever- and I want to say that way.' 'My father dropped me when I was a baby.' 'I'm remorseful for bringing that up to you,' he mumbles, and a fleeting bothered look a-crossed his face. 'I don't 'member him at all.' 'And your mother remarried?'

I snuffle, one time holding back the tears, of feeling lost out on. He frowns at me. 'You could say that, but maybe it was for the best.' Maybe so... I said to him looking down.

'Neither are you.' About having a dad- 'yah...' 'You're not giving much away, are you?' ...As if in deep thought, he says' that in a wryly, was rubbing his chin. Holy shit, 'you've interviewed me once already, why do you ask that... it's okay for you have your nose up my ass hole, and I can recollect some quite probing questions then, why do I.' He smirks at me, saying I would do that next time then.

That is when I said that- 'My mom is wonderful, yet I have to be a grown-up at some point. She's an irredeemable romantic, and has lost boyfriend's that like to skip out on her... she's currently on her fourth man this week.' I like mom there only 7 in a week. Your more skank-ie then Katie. 'You said that to your mom?'

'Yep!' He raises his eyebrows in surprise. I continue to say how - 'I miss her, she has them now, and like always someone is more than I.

Those lips.

Those hips.

Those...

Ah!

'Do you get along with all them then?' I don't bother too. She sees her own thing. 'Of course, I thought- I just hope he can keep an eye on her and pick up the pieces when her harebrained schemes don't go as planned.'

I grew up with all of them getting the best of her. I smile fondly, at her- like was not important. I haven't seen my mom for so long. RICHARD C. MAST is watching me intently, taking infrequent sips of his coffee, with the more cream than dark roast. I really shouldn't look at his mouth, long for a kiss, yet- I feel I need, the loving feelings. It's unsettling, to think about my past that was really just the night before or so it seems to me.

My life story, you no already by looking into my mind and using your brain- and this technology, you can see it all like a slide show just click to preview in a menu? 'And what's he like, not bother by any of it not even the sick frapping in the night, scaring out Katie's name?' I have bested sometimes 63 times in one day, I was masturbating to try to put off doing laundry. Ended up masturbating for 7 hours. I was incredibly raw and sore after, but- I guess I was 10 or so, yet I deserved it. 'That's it?' - Asks, surprised, you don't think that's wrong for a girl of that age to do that- he shrugged.

What does this man expect, her for you not too? I refrain from rolling my eyes at him, yet I could not help but squeeze him tighter, harder and longer for understanding all that is me. 'Why didn't you want to live with your mom...?' He asks... and before came out of my mouth, he saw it play out in his awareness of thoughts. I cannot help but blush, this really is none of his business, yet he's making it be so he knows everything about me and so it's safe... it's like mind- rapping.

'Siblings...?' 'Yes, all girls 3.'

He could see them all- the youngest no 10 or so... I don't keep up with them. There all own their own too. Yet it is the norm these days... and my little sister is in Paris, French dick suck of a boy that wants to use her up and dump her, yet that is what she wanted.' His eyes go cloud with irritation, on my mother's part- I said to him she fails no? He doesn't want to talk about his family or himself, it all about me... yet I feel that it all the same.

'I hear Paris is lovely for young lovers why not let her- my mom said,' I murmur the quotes run past my mind to fast to not stop them. Why doesn't he want to talk about my family...?

'It's beautiful... that you have turned up as good as you did- he said. Have you been 'good' I can tell?' he asks, his exasperation with what he digging for to be forgotten. It's not nice to ask about a girl past these days... I thought not even lovers... 'Paris?' I squeak never been- there.

‘You well...’ ‘Of course,’ I concede, saying let’s do it now-yet is that too much to ask? He looks at me with eyes glittering in the low light of the moon full shining in the windows. ‘But it’s England that I’d really like to visit.’ ‘Because, I was feeling gloomy, thinking about all that just sucks...’ He tilts his head to one side, running his index finger across his lower lip... saying sure. I blinked, and then I blinked, then I blinked ounces more hastily, so I blinked, like 3 times wildly in a chain-like of events.

I was snooping through your things in your mind I see that you have written such a wonderful book, that you don’t think is good- yet I do.’ All this talk of literary greats reminds me, that I should be studying for him to make him bigger than he is. I glance at my watch... saying commands for it do, in timely fashions. ‘I’d better go... now- and get back- (I was at his home; it is huge and has 16 bedrooms or more and 4 baths.) I have to study, I said, thank you for saying, that but you must not mean that. I love that, you love me like this.’ ‘For your exams?’ ‘Yes...’ ‘Okay, then you may go.’ He said... - My mind is reeling with desire. The next day- the first question. ‘Do you always wear dresses?’ he asks out of the blue. ‘Mostly,’ I spoke... in his ear softly. He nods shaking his head up and down. The look he gives me and the warm fuzzy feeling going in and through me- I’m completely blown away by it, I know- it’s LOVE.

If you were basically unnoticed the sensation, you would never- ever know what might have taken place, and in many ways that were worse than finding out in the first place. For the reason that if you were off the beam, you could go onward in your lifespan without never- ever be holding back over your shoulder and conjecturing what might have been- in the questions of what- if. And I aware that our time together is limited, even if where ‘are always together, ‘Do you have girlfriends other than her?’ he blurts out.

Holy crap, why must he ask this- ‘I don’t.’ - I just said that out loud also. I don’t have the time for other girls only her... his lips quirk up in a semi-smile, showing, and he looks down at me with envy. Oh... what does that mean? He blocking me from reading his mind... to toy with me. I have to try to reassemble my thoughts, yet this is his game. I have to get away from him, for I do something to lose him...I walk forward, and I trip, stumbling headlong into the shitter- flush.

‘Shit, Merry!’ - He cries. ‘Yes, yes it was a mouth full of it.’

Kiss me damn it! I inhale deeply, that's the feeling of love... you know. I implore him, but I can't move. 'Are you okay?' He whispers.

When she moves upwards when I insert into her. Feeling ever hitting thrust she moves with me. I'm in your arms. Kiss me, please. His gazes at my hood, like the movies it about, I'm paralyzed with a strange feeling of fast hart breathing that just takes over me, unfamiliar need to understand I let myself rush free, as he does with me, completely captivated by him, I feel it okay to spray him down.

He closes his eyes, takes a deep breath, and gives me a small shake of his head as if in answer to my silent question, that was running in his mind- and that was do you love me? YES! _ YES! _ FREAKING! _ YES! He's staring into my eyes when he opens his eye s again, it's with some new purpose, He tugs the hand that he's holding so hard that, I fall back against him, it all happens soo fast, yet over and over - one minute I'm falling, of the bed the next I bouncing, on my head, up-down and skidways' too, the next I'm in his arms, and he's holding me tightly against his chest.

I'm staring at RICHARD C. MAST'S exquisitely sculptured mouth, mesmerized, and he's looking down at me, his eyes darkening. He's breathing harder than usual, and I've stopped breathing altogether. His thumb and I feel it in me, as he brushes my lower lip, and I hear his breath a glitch.

I inhale his dipping love, vital scent taking, like the slut he wants me to be - yet, I am happy to be just that. He smells of- freshly laundered sheets and some luxurious body-wash, come over me I did not even see that he has carried me into his shower room, I may have blacked out- from all hardcore love.

I want to be kissed, right here I said- and he did. (I pointed you know were,) my kindness is drawn to his beautiful body- looking over the entirety. He has one arm around me, clasping me tight to him, while the fingers of his other hand softly trace my face, and around the place that every young girl was to have touched by a man like him, gently probing exploratory me. I hold his- nervous, burning gaze for a moment or maybe it's persistently... but eventually, and for the first time in twenty-one years, I want to feel his mouth on me. I'm not the man for you he said to Katie in his mind who was see it all,' he whispers.

What- is she doing looking in on us like this? Where is this coming from, you wanted me the other night? She said... in a fast way to him, Surely, I should be the judge of that, she thought, I frown think why can I not have my moment with him, and my head swims with rejection- and that was felt all around- with us all.

I have 'royally screwed' I see him say to her... about all this... He has his hands on my shoulders, holding me at arm's length, watching my responses sensibly. And the only thing I can think is that I wanted to be kissed, made it pretty damned obvious, and he didn't do it. He doesn't want me. He really doesn't want me.

I'm going to stand you up and let you go, we were my butt cheeks pressed against the glass window where doing like bunny's, as all the people looking in at us, in a hugging freaking stance,' he says quietly letting me down and off him, and he gently pushes me away, as if like he is slapping the shit out of himself.

(My mom thought it was something about a broken typewriter that was his grandpas.) Yah-no! My soul screams as he pulls away, leaving me grieving, for him to feel me up to feel the hole. It like he spiked through my body, as I stand there, feeling him coming out of me.

I said to her- her being Katie... you make me feel safe.

'I've got this,' I breathe, finding my voice. 'Thank you for killing it for us through- why,'

I mutter awash with humiliation, as the kids outside the glass point, at me and uncover body- yet, that's how things are these days. How could I have misread the situation between us so utterly? I need to get away from her. I'm glad to hear you say just that, he whispered. He frowns at me in an anomalous way. He hasn't taken his hands off me, or his eyes.

'For keeping me,' I whisper- thank you- you everything I needed.

He doesn't want me- though Katie- why?

Then a million-thought rushed through my mind as to why not... I bet you could find them all no- can you?

22

'Thanks for doing the photo shoot, and giving me all these nude photos of you to keep- I love them- you could justify it in a magazine with these, I will see that you do.

I shudder to think, my puss hole is going to be wide open on the cover, what could have happened to me, if daddy would see that- or mom. I'm standing in front of him feeling like a fool. Um- wow- really it just looks like a black hole yet boys love to look up it- (ah girl thoughts.) Yet for the money and him what the hell.

Do you want to come and sit down in the room for a moment and see me edit these to enhances what you have going for you, looking them all over to pick with one well go on the cover- of a 'Girlfriend Monthly' - he bought them out back in 2019.'

He releases me, his hands, off my boobs, and the playing and they go down to his sides, his hand was on me pulling shoulder strap down, and well I shake know what comes next- it's more sex, you got it, I clear my mind some. All my vague, unarticulated hopes have been dashed, looking at myself this way- yet for him anything. Outside the room, I turn briefly to face him, but cannot look him in the eye. With all the kids looking at me see me as the girl on the cover... it was that, fast there, I am on the big screens in the NY all nude. Being naked this day is something we feel fee for doing... with cameras everywhere why not show it all- and we don't care- if a 5-year-old sees it- they'll understand soon enough...

What was I thinking too much? I admonish myself. My subconscious mocks me, I look around to see all of me- all over the place- I am the IT girl of the day. I never wanted that... I wrap my arms around myself- for Katie was happy for me and want to show love, and turn to face the road... to move on with my day, I quickly make my way across, conscious that - is behind me, I murmur, it's only for a month... I was inquiry my own dumb thoughts.

She stops, and the anguish in his voice demands my attention, as she is running to me, with open arm, she there my true love has found me... she is always there for me even if I want to die a slow and painful death, overall this shit, so I peer unwillingly up at me - and she said I love it- it- is, so you- she said. Her gray eyes are bleak, fastly like only she can make them do- as she runs his hand through his hair.

Huh? This is why he looks so desolate; this is what he gets out of you? One girl said to me, at school the next day- holding up a hard copy of me- to all to see, yet I know they all have; I did not even blink- at her- as I was chowing on my pin- like a girl in 5th grade.

Once underneath the dark, cold concrete of the room with its bleak fluorescent light humming, I lean against the wall, before class and put my head in my hands, as I have now sat down for the teachings.

This is the big send-off, of the bell ringing out? Just to wish me luck on more tests, that have nothing to do with what I want to do in life.

-And-

Their Brad jerking off under the desk to my photo! Don't giggle its true! It seems like, um - that's okay for a-boys, yet not a girl these days... also, the girl next to me just got busted for it- yet boys can do anything for they' are known for it.

'Thanks: said the man teaching the class for the embraceable photography of a classmate - there Dee.' 'Um- well thank- thank you.' she said. I can't disguise the sarcasm in my voice. Saying: 'She is a good kid stop it!'

I really think he meant it!

Unforbidden and annoying tears pool in my eyes. Thinking of all that has happened these past days, what has not- and what going too... What was not I thinking about it all?

I turn on my heel, on the left foot, for I was nervous, vaguely amazed, that I don't trip- I have a habit of falling on my face, yet that is just me.

I see him in my mind, without giving him a second glance, I disappear down the hall toward the bathroom, run yet I can't get away when he is in my head always. Why am I crying over this?

Drawing up my knees I see in a stall, I fold in on myself.

Grief is something that never was something I could take, like with my dashed hopes, dreams, and soured outlooks. Placing my head on my knees, I let the irrational tears fall unrestrained. How ridiculous am I for doing such? I sink to the side of the shitter and meltdown, angry at myself for this senseless feedback- of feeling all types of love.

Perhaps this ridiculous pain will be smaller the smaller I am if I do this... I have never been on the receiving end of rejection for my own doing, I want this- yet I don't- I don't know what I want- really- I don't. I want to make myself as small as possible. To just fade away from life. I am crying over the loss of something I never had, and that's my pride.

Okay... so I was always one of the last to be picked for basketball or volleyball - but I understood that - running and doing something else at the same time like bouncing or throwing a ball is not my thing. I am a solemn liability in any sporting field.

I'm too pale, feeling and showing, like- passionately thinking in thoughts, though, I've never put myself out there, ever.

Her welcoming smile fades when she sees me. Analytically, I thought to stop! As he said to stop me with crossness in the voice of thought. I'm sure neither of them has been found sobbing alone in dark places. I see Katie there standing to hold me. She drags me home with her arm around her one shoulder. Perhaps, I just need a good cry. A lifetime of insecurity I have had and, too skinny, too shabby, clumsy, my long list of faults goes on.

My subliminal is emblematically screaming at me, arms folded, leaning on one leg, then pitter-pattering her foot in frustration-

(Five hours have passed...)

Katie is sitting at the dining table on her laptop when I arrive.

She asked: 'Marry what's wrong?'

'You've been crying,' she has an excellent gift for me being there all the time like she is now, just stating there. 'What did that bastard do to you?' She howls, and her face, jeez, she's scary.

That's actually the problem, I should just be happy, and I am not sure if I know how to do that... why can't I?

'Nothing Katie is wrong with me other than what is wrong with me.' The thought brings an ironic smile to my face. 'Then I ask- why have you been crying? 'Like- You never cry,' she says, her voice relaxing some as she continued taking. She puts her arms around me and for side hugs.

I have to say something; just to get her to back chest. She stands, her gray eyes brimming with concern, yet I feel that she feels that way about me all the time. 'Nope, RICHARD C. MAST saved me,' I whisper for being just like all of them that don't care. 'Nonetheless, I was quite shaken by it, anyway.' It was fine, nothing to worry about really.

'Okay, he's got more money than you, but then he has more money than most people in America! And you're not happy with that? He has everything-' 'What do you mean...? What are you trying to say?' 'Oh Katie, it's obvious isn't.' I whirled around, to face her as she stands in the kitchen doorway, looking at me that way. 'Merry! For heaven's sake, how many times; must I tell you? You're a total baby,' she intersects me as I blabber. He likes you more than me... 'oh don't be silly.'

That's what this is all about.

'Katie she just shrugs.

I need to study.' I cut her short. She frowns and said that can wait. And she holding me in her arms like a lover that she is.

'Katie, please, don't get mad at me for this-

'Never.'

'If Only in My Dreams'

(Remembering back too... Earth before the end.)

This is what he meant, for me to do with my life be his... anytime he wants it-girl and nothing more and nothing less, and it makes his rejection easier to accept... almost. Yet, the money is why, like - I am here- and the love too... yah that... I have been working on my studies more than them being with him or her... I would say it was to clear my head. I was looking over the paper that was said I wrote, I pretend to read the article, that Katie made for me. Above and beyond its suddenly, blindingly obvious. He's too gloriously good-looking, not to think about non-stop. I know he loves me, yet he has a hard way of really showing just that.

I, understand, yet not so- her words make more sense than mine- I questioned this... He's not the man for me. I can live with this.

It's only when I'm in bed, that I try to sleep, that I allow my thoughts to drift off some - yet all the voices run through me- never hushing up. Never slowing- never stopping, for me to have a moment- in time to think alone.

'Katie, she is very good,' 'I'm going to study, is what I said to her... just wanted to get away from her mouth.' I am not going to think about him again, for now, I vow to myself, and opening my revision notes, I start to read. Thus far, his face keeps looking it to mine, and I see him looking back in the glass.

I put my pen down, which makes all the font that I write out and comforts it into text in word. I am finished, with my re-write of her draft. My final exam is over, I said- this will do just fine the grin spread over my face can be helped. It's probably the first time all week that I've smiled over something other than him. It's Friday, and we shall be celebrating tonight, really celebrating.

Paris- with Katie not him, I need this- the city the lights the sound- of something other than me inquiry all that is me - and him. She slanted her head and smiled at her companion, with grace seated her at the best table in the restaurant; her smile, at least, was honest, though almost nothing else about her was. The pale gray of her eyes was warmed to by sweet colored contact lenses; her blond hair had been darkened by the low light of the tower in the background, then subtly streaked with lighter shadows. in her arms mentally begging her with every fiber of my being to kiss me, is what I really needed, just her true love for me - not asking... never demanding.

He didn't want me as a girlfriend, this week he was off doing what he does. I turn on to my side, now at the hotel, with her in the single bed, Frivolously, I wonder if perhaps he's with a new younger girl?

Think back of: 'Ah!' settled in his chair with a contented sigh, returning her smile. she is so beautiful woman in her teen years; she looks the US, with glossy dark hair and liquid gray eyes, and a luxurious mouth.

(Bed)

I close my eyes and begin to drift, and she nudges me, groggy as I - she had gambled that he wouldn't have his people dig any deeper than that, that he would run out of the patience required to wait for the answers before, she made a move on me.

Her manufactured background was only a few layers deep; I knew she and I wanted too so why not; she hadn't had time to prepare more. Maybe he's saving himself. Well not for you, my sleepy subconscious has a final swipe at me before unleashing itself on my dreams.

I might even get drunk! I said - we can hear it's not agents the law here, I've never been drunk before, I know that the trill was wearing off, I glance across the sports hall at Katie, and she's still scribbling furiously, five minutes to the end of foolish. This is it, the end of my academic career if he tunes in...

She'd done the best she could in the time she had, she knew that she would have to be off doing her study's even on this run over the sea that takes less than a day now.

He made a point of keeping himself in shape, and his hair hadn't yet started to gray - either that or he was as skilled as she at touch-ups. 'You look especially lovely tonight; have I told you that yet?' I shall never have to sit in rows of anxious, isolated students again. Inside I'm doing graceful cartwheels around my head, knowing full well that's the only place I can do graceful cartwheels.

...And that night, I dream of her and I live long ever after, and I'm running through dark places with eerie strip lighting doing things we shouldn't, and I don't know if I'm running toward something, that I should want or not - the dream, leads me with choices, it's just not clear.

Katie stops writing and puts her pen down. She glances across at me, and I catch her Cheshire cat smile too. We head back to our apartment together in her Mercedes, refusing to discuss our final paper. Katie is more concerned about what she's going to wear to the bar this evening. I am busily fishing around in my purse for my keys.

'Merry, there's a package for you, there flowers from him...' she said.

Odd, I haven't ordered anything from Amazon recently.

Katie is standing on the steps up to the front door holding them.

'No.' Katie's eyes are wide with disbelief.' I nod as I did before.

'You have, she said, he loved you more than anything, I starting to believe it.' But then her gaze was warm, wet whit tears for she was in love with me more than him at that moment. I knew... she had trained long and hard to acquire it, I knew she was the one that would always care about me. 'Thank you again... I said to him in a mind message.' I recognize the quote was something slandered, where was the love in it?

I have not let myself dwell on RICHARD C. MAST - for the past week. Okay... so his blue eyes are still haunting my dreams, as she plays with me in them too, and I know it will take an eternity to expunge the feel of his arms around me and his wonderful perfume from my brain. Why has he sent me this?

'Can't think of anyone else, that would do this for me, like him though.' 'What does this card mean...?' 'I have no inkling; I think it's a warning - scrupulously he keeps threatening me off, with gifts. I have no idea why- he thinks I will keep coming back- just for the coming.

-And-

It's not like I'm beating his door down- and the wood hard- with only him.' I frown some... 'I know you don't want to talk about him, Merry, but he's seriously into you. Warnings or no.' 'I don't know, and I don't care. I can't accept these from him, yet not feeling as I did in the past some of the caring went away.

This is what he meant, for me to do with my life be his... anytime he wants it-girl and nothing more and nothing less, and it makes his rejection easier to accept... almost. Yet, the money is why, like - I am here- and the love too... yah that... I have been working on my studies more than them being with him or her... I would say it was to clear my head. I was looking over the paper that was said I wrote, I pretend to read the article, that Katie made for me. Above and beyond its suddenly, blindingly obvious. He's too gloriously good-looking, not to think about non-stop. I know he loves me, yet he has a hard way of really showing just that.

I, understand, yet not so- her words make more sense than mine- I questioned this... He's not the man for me. I can live with this.

It's only when I'm in bed, that I try to sleep, that I allow my thoughts to drift off some- yet all the voices run through me- never hushing up. Never slowing- never stopping, for me to have a moment- in time to think alone.

'Katie, she is very good,' 'I'm going to study, is what I said to her... just wanted to get away from her mouth.' I am not going to think about him again, for now, I vow to myself, and opening my revision notes, I start to read. Thus far, his face keeps looking it to mine, and I see him looking back in the glass.

I put my pen down, which makes all the font that I write out and comforts it into text in word. I am finished, with my re-write of her draft. My final exam is over, I said- this will do just fine the grin spread over my face can be helped. It's probably the first time all week that I've smiled over something other than him. It's Friday, and we shall be celebrating tonight, really celebrating.

Paris- with Katie not him, I need this- the city the lights the sound- of something other than me inquiry all that is me - and him. She slanted her head and smiled at her companion, with grace seated her at the best table in the restaurant; her smile, at least, was honest, though almost nothing else about her was. The pale gray of her eyes was warmed to by sweet colored contact lenses; her blond hair had been darkened by the low light of the tower in the background, then subtly streaked with lighter shadows. in her arms mentally begging her with every fiber of my being to kiss me, is what I really needed, just her true love for me - not asking... never demanding.

He didn't want me as a girlfriend, this week he was off doing what he does. I turn on to my side, now at the hotel, with her in the single bed, Frivolously, I wonder if perhaps he's with a new younger girl?

Think back of: 'Ah!' settled in his chair with a contented sigh, returning her smile. she is so beautiful woman in her teen years; she looks the US, with glossy dark hair and liquid gray eyes, and a luxurious mouth.

I love Katie, she’s so loyal and supportive . I repack the books and leave them on the dining table. Katie hands me a glass of champagne.

‘To the end of exams and our new life in Seattle,’ she grins.

‘To the end of exams, our new life in Seattle, and excellent results.’ We clink glasses and drink.

The bar is loud and hectic, full of soon to be graduates out to get trashed. José joins us. He won’t graduate for another year, but he’s in the mood to party and gets us into the spirit of our newfound freedom by buying a pitcher of margaritas for us all. As I down my fifth, I know this is not a good idea on top of the champagne.

‘So, what now Merry?’ She shouts at me over the noise, Katie has the constitution of a she-ass. ‘That is doubtful,’ she calmly replied. ‘I have never liked any wine.’ She’d made that plain from the start, who disliked the taste of wine, I thought sitting over here looking at her thinking that. Her taste buds were deplorably working-class. She, in fact, enjoyed a glass of wine, (I thought) now she is drinking only coffee or bottled water; order coffee for her, of that... I giggle.

‘I think I’d better have a beer.’

‘I’ll go get us a pitcher.’

‘More drink, Merry!’

Katie bellows...

‘Classy- in France?’

Sue!

Her eyes for Katie, are glittery and wet for her. I move out of her way to hold and get up from our table. She is taking photos, yes, of her in her tight jeans, her usual stunning self, and high heels, hair piled high with tendrils hanging down softly around her face. I giggled over it like I have no idea what the time is, maybe I’ll wake with her over to the tower and well go up and kiss at the top. Good thinking, Merry. I stagger off through the crowd, she yells for me, and I whisper in her mind that I am over here. Of course, there’s a line, but at least it’s moving fast to the top. I’m suppressing a drunken smile, hit me like an involuntary, looking out over with her in my arms and the kiss.

Back at the hotel my head, ponding so-o... I go for swims uncomfortably, with all the others, a lot of kids but even so it was nice, Well, the object of the exercise was to get drunk, on it’s the other way ‘round. I have succeeded, in working it off. I stare blankly over and over in a fast way - at the poster on the back of the toilet door that extols the virtues of safe sex. Yah- NO! like that is going to happen.

Holy mother of moo- moo, did I just call RICHARD C. MAST in my mind again? Shit. My phone rings for him it’s all in my mind though, and it makes me jump when he says ‘what do you want.’ I squeak in surprise; by how the man he is being to me for what see to be noted on my own doing.

This is what it’s like - probably not an experience to be repeated. The line has moved, and it’s now my turn.

‘Howdy,’ I bleat timidly into the handset. I hadn’t calculated on this.

‘I’m coming to get you,’ he says and hangs up... before I said I did want him too. The only RICHARD C. MAST - could sound so calm and so threatening at the same time. I pull my jeans up after the poster said not to do what I just did. My heart is thumping. Coming to get me? Well, I am coming to get her- ha. Hang on, I’m fine. Oh no. I’m going to be sick... no... He’s just messing with my head.

I said- ‘Holy freaking crap.’

He can’t find me here, I would say so with GPS within my body as we all have now, Besides, it will take him 4 hours to get here from NY, and we’ll be long gone by then. I wash my hands and check my face in the mirror.

I for one looked flushed and slightly unfocused. He can't find me here, I would say so with GPS within my body as we all have now, 'You've been gone so long.' Katie reprimands me. Besides, it will take him 4 hours to get here from NY, and we'll be long gone by then. I wash my hands and check my face in the mirror. 'Where were you?' I wait at the bar for what feels like an eternity for the pitcher of beer and eventually return to the table. 'The girl's room on a call, that I shouldn't have made.' Mind dealing- I said... 'ah-hh-ha-a' were sitting out said at a bar café. 'All- out- in the - fresh air- and yeah.' 'Katie, I think I'd better think that you and I have a thing... 'Merry, you are such a softie with him - grow some lady nuts and say- freak you.'

'I'll be five minutes...'

...'Going to MASTURBATE-?'

'Yep!'

Pulling off my panties, I reach between my legs and pulls on the white string, and gently takes my tampon out of me and tosses it into the nearby toilet. As the inside of me felt as if it was unfolding free. Holy cow... just to the thoughts of his erection springs free. The muscles inside the deepest, darkest part of me clench in the most flavorsome fashion. I'm going to fuck myself now hard, she murmurs as she positions the head of the wiggling pulsating dildo at the entrance of her self-sex. I hear the slosh- of me- and then it of the rushing out of the deepest clenching of what happened pulled out and its soft swirl at the tip of my nose.

I make my way through the crowd another time, thinking of how I was going to get off like three more times, in 15. I am beginning to feel nauseous, my head is spinning uncomfortably, see in the little girl in the open stall next to me get there faster than I! and she's like freaking 10! and I'm a little unsteady with my frapping 3 figuring or have girl gotten even more slutty.

More unsteady than usual, she got it down. God, I turn on- you? No- nope ...?... didn't think so prev. 'I think I've just had a bit too much to drink, I feel like more pee then that is coming out of me.' I smile weakly at her and say- GOD FOR YOU HUNNY- good for you. 'and you too,' she murmurs, and her dark eyes are watching me intently, saying why you doing this on your own at your age... is a young girl thing to do.

‘Do you need a hand?’ she asks and steps closer undies at her feet, putting her arm around me some. I’ve got this.’ I try and push her away rather weakly, of age, yet there nothing wrong with it. ‘Merry, please,’ she whispers, its Kate in my head saying don’t do it, yet the young child is holding me in her arms, pulling me close, like a lover. These days’ free love is love! No matter the age...

‘You know I like you, Merry, please.’ He has one hand at the small of my back holding me against him, the other at my chin tipping back my head. Holy freak... he’s going to kiss me. Her hand has slipped into my hair, and she’s holding me.

She whispers against my lips. His breath is soft and smells too sweet - of candy and Kool-Aid. She gently kisses me along my jaw, and lips and movies up to the side of my mouth and then right on my parted lips. I feel frightened, drunk, and out of control, yet I love having fee love like this- it like I was her age all over. The feeling is sickly sweet.

You are my friend, no and for life, I said to her, and I think, I’m going to throw up, so you should runoff. A voice in the dark says quietly. Holy shit! In my mind- RICHARD C. MAST- he’s at this juncture, see what I have done.

I glance anxiously up at RICHARD C. MAST. He’s glowering at Katie, and he’s furious, like me for doing a young one as he said. Crap, and fly trap-My stomach hauls, and I double over, worse than when blood is shooting out of my hole, I’ll hold you.’

She grabs my hair and pulls it out of the firing line- my body no longer able to accept the alcohol, and I vomit outstandingly on to the ground at me and the little French girls’ feet her name was- Willow.

She has her arms around my middle body - holding my hair in a makeshift ponytail down my back so it’s off my face, her hands the other is I try awkwardly to push her hair out of the way, but I vomit again... and again, even on to her half nude body.

Even when my stomach's empty, and nothing is coming up, oh shit... 'If you're going to throw up again, I note, with deep thankfulness, that it's in relative darkness. I vow silently that I'll never ever drink again, yet that like say I cannot have a day without sex. It's going down in me at some point.

My hands are resting on the block wall... How long is this going to last? I questioned... she takes her T stands, and I wipe my mouth, on she said she did not care... love at first sight... I questioned it. This is just too appalling for words, Katie said... I have to go out now. So-o horrifying gasping heaves of wackiness- my body feels. Then it concludes... Katie is still hovering by the entrance to the girl's room watching us.

Her (the young girls) hand are barely holding me up - vomiting profusely is exhausting. takes his hands off I say to him- I'm hectic with embarrassment, repulsed with myself. When I come around. My hands in on head I groan, as I place them there. Like that was the solitary worst moment of my lifespan. Twins taking a crap is what I think of at this moment- why I don't know. Oh- yeah- I do- there they are both doing just that- like- looking in at me over in there apparent 5,00 feet up or so all glass too. What should I say to him, for him to forgive this?

RICHARD C. MAST's rejection will not be something good. I try to remember a worse one, that I have done, and I cannot. I glare at him, in my mind. For he is acting like my dad, not my lover. Oh, the humiliation... my mother was far worse. Marry who are you kidding, he's just seen you hurl all over the ground- nothing more said- Katie, she feels that what I did was nothing. Yet I still look pretty shamefaced to myself, and him- or so I think.

Yet I still look pretty shamefaced to myself, and him- or so I think.

I have a few choice words for my so-called friend, none of which I can repeat in front of RICHARD C. MAST - There's no disguising your lack of ladylike behavior, and I can only come up with- and this is so, so many shadows darker in terms of, I risk a glance at him, I see him looking back at me mirrored back in my stare.

He's staring down at me, his face composed, yet he can help but fall for me fast, giving nothing away about how he was feeling about what I did we fall. Turning, I glance at Katie whom and, like me, scared by the true filling that he heads to me from that day. I personally mutter, staring at the handkerchief which I am furiously worrying with my fingers. It's so soft, and worm, as slid his fingers in her, he probably would expect her to share his bed tonight, but he was destined to be disappointed once again, in her saying: I don't feel the need after, soloing- so many times today. Her hatred was so strong she had barely been able to force herself to let him kiss her and accept his touch with some temperateness.

There was no way in hell like she'd let him do more than that to her tonight - for the movies running in her head of him acting like an ass and or like her dad. 'I'm sorry, he said for what I have done to you. Just in my thoughts of...' Apologize... and say back off. Katie mutters, derogatory but we both ignore that, and he slinks off back into the of my mind for rest and sleep. I'm on my own with doing me - and just Kate.

'We've all been here, perchance not quite as dramatically as you,' he says dryly. 'It's about knowing your limits, Merry. I mean, I'm all for pushing limits, but really this is beyond the pale. My head rings with excess alcohol and frustration. Do you make a habit of this kind of behavior?'

He was scolding me like an errant child, something you would never do to me I said to Kate that had me held by the butt, arching my back as she is holding me in her arms, for passion and cute kissing- then 69, her butt in my face, I move her lips around using sucking at mouth and teeth and tongue.

Katie- Put her legs over your shoulders and grab onto her waist or open up her vagina. (the last one feels better) or have her butt hole in your well- nose. Don't fart!

And at first kiss outside her vagina and then slowly lick her inside and just pretend she's the most beautiful thing you've ever tasted and if she wants to talk dirty to her but talks to her about that beforehand so she won't be offended.

Hope this helps.

I love it. It's such a turn on.

- 1) You want to kiss/nibble on her neck first. It's a good way to start turning her on.
- 2) Suck on her nipples and play with them with your tongue. This too is another great turn on.
- 3) While you're doing these, massage her PUSS-PUSS over her pants just to get her ready for it.
- 4) Work your way down, slowly and sexually.
- 5) Open up her PUS*Y and go straight to the Cl*t.
- 6) Smack the PUS*Y with your tongue really fast, and suck and tug on it (not too hard though.)
- 7) As you're sucking her PUS*Y, slide your fingers in and out of her vagina opening.
- 8) Once you have 2 fingers in there, and they're facing up, curve them like a hook and without going in and out, stroke her G-spot.

If this is your first time, beware of the smell and taste, as it makes most guys gag at first.

Part of me wants to say, if I want to get drunk every night like this, then it's my decision and nothing to do with him - but I'm not brave enough. Not now that I've thrown up in front of him. Why is he still standing there?

'No,' I said contritely. 'I've never been drunk before and right now I have no desire to ever be again.' Yet, I know that's a lie...

'Come on, I'll take you home,' she murmurs - do this to me.

I just don't understand why he's here. I begin to feel faint. She notices my dizziness and grabs me before I fall and hoists me into his arms, holding me close to her chest like a child. For sucking and nabbing on her nipples. 'I need you, Katie.' Holy Moses, I say at C-* -M! I'm in her arms again. Where I do the same to her butt in the air, I go for it for like a half-hour.

‘Dancing,’ with Katie in the club she shouts, and I can tell he’s mad at me acting slutty. He’s is eyeing me- him the RICHARD C. MAST suspiciously.

I struggle with my black jacket and place my small shoulder bag over my head, so it sits at my hip. I’m ready to go, once I’ve seen Katie; to party my ass off... yet he is saying NO... No in my mind. And I just having fun. It’s earsplitting, packed, and the music is underway, thus there is a huge mass on the dance floor. she sets me down, and, taking my hand, leads me back into the bar.

She knew that I went out for some air- of him... embarrassed weak I feel dumb, and still drunk, somewhat exhausted, ashamed, and on some strange equal unquestionably off the scale electrified, by the cocktail of things I took down.

He’s clutching my hand I see them all wavy to my sight. Looking at them all swirly. - such a confusing array of emotions, play tricks in my mind like haunted school girl ghosts. I’ll need at least a week to process them all, I knew even in this state of mind of senseless.

Katie is not at our table, and Katie has disappeared. Levi looks lost and forlorn on his own. ‘Where’s Katie? She was off with some young girl doing what I did the night before.’ I see that she had to feel as I did... she was always like that with me... we have to be the same in all- or not...! ‘My head is beginning to pound in time to the thumping bass line of the music.’

Katie is not at our table, and Katie has disappeared. She looks lost and forlorn on his own. 'Where's Katie? She was off with some young girl doing what I did the night before.' I see that she had to feel as I did... she was always like that with me... we have to be the same in all- or not...! 'My head is beginning to pound in time to the thumping bass line of the music.'

He rolls his eyes at me and takes my hand again and leads me to the bar. He's served immediately.

'She's on the dance floor,' I touch RICHARD C. MAST's arm and lean up and shout in his ear, brushing his hair with my nose, smelling his clean, fresh smell. All those forbidden, unfamiliar feelings that I have tried to deny surface and run amok through my drained body. I myself flush, and somewhere deep, deep down my muscles clench deliciously. He is such a - Control-Freak - I said to her- saying: your just having fun. He's watching me intently, mirrored in my- lost young girl like the look of my eyes.

'Drink- Drink- drink' I heard her say, to this young girl in the bar and she was about 14,' he shouts his order at me. He looks irritated and livid, with me like I am his sex- Dollie, and nothing more...He's so overbearing, I thought. Give me love- I thought- or is sex now just the love? What is his delinquent? The moving lights are meandering and turning in time to the music casting strange colored light and obscurities all over the bar and the business. He's alternately white, green, blue, and bloodshot red.

There a dead girl in an ash box sitting on the ground, on the walkway to my home, she was just burnt a day go, and dumped, here, and this is where she is resting- no one cares about her like death and dumping ash that nothing- or that she was only 5 years of age...I take a hesitant swallow; I think about the life she never had- on like all the others thoughts going through my mind I care.

'All of it,' he shouts.

I sway slightly, and he puts his hand on my shoulder to steady me. Um- Merry... are you ever going to live this down, and say she slipped away? She was my sister girl- and mom and they just dump her off... to be kicked by passing feet- yah but that is what they do these days- girl.

Cemeteries are wasted spaces of land, why do that when you need to construct things in that space. There is nothing left to remember her by- nothing by the memories in my mind of whom she was.

It makes me feel queasy, as I look in the box 3 x 6-inch books and see nothing but blackened asks... blowing some in the wand of the high walkways...in the glowing tingling light of the smoggy covered skyline. I notice this thought of what she was wearing the last time that I saw her, a blur though- wearing; a loose white linen shirt, snug jeans, playing in the park on the roof of the high-rise, pink converse sneakers, and a pink and white jacket, I would know I see a flick in some of the ash hitting my face as dust in the wind.

I sway slightly, and he puts his hand on my shoulder to steady me. Um - Merry... are you ever going to live this down, and say she slipped away? She was my sister girl- and mom and they just dump her off... to be kicked by passing feet- yah but that is what they do these days- girl.

Now in bed sleeping pills at my side, taking the glass from me, she places them for me - so sweet. Her shirt is unbuttoned at the top, and I see a sprinkling skin coming at me - and I somewhat out... then just to see her ass in my face... when I come to it, in my groggy frame of mind, she looks yummy.

He takes my hand once more. Holy cow - he's leading me onto the dance floor. Shit. I do not dance. He can sense my reluctance, and under the colored lights, I can see his amused, slightly sardonic smile. He gives my hand a sharp tug, and I'm in his arms again, and he starts to move, taking me with him. Boy, he can dance, and I can't believe that I'm following him step for step. Maybe it's because I'm drunk that I can keep up. He's holding me tight against him, his body against mine... if he wasn't clutching me so tightly, I'm Sue I would swoon at his feet. In the back of my mind, my mother's often-recited warning comes to me: Never trust a man who can dance.

I looked into him/ his daily thoughts and what he did, just to see that he was with a 15-year-old- not me- saying- 'Such a tight pussy- so tight and young-and small and the sucking oh so tight it's letting are out the sides. - he said as I see that he was with a new girl named- Nataliee.

I just was modified...Really likes she likes someone, I gasp. Katie is making her moves go in her mind for me of her hook up, she had with her new friend. She's dancing her ass off, and she only ever does that if she likes someone. It means there'll be three of us for breakfast tomorrow morning. Katie! Outside and inside my head pounding away, loud. I cannot hear what he says, I tuned it out... it was my wishes. I can't tell the color under the pulsating to all the heat of the flashing lights going off, is the day starting a new.

I Katie- curly blonde hair, and light, wickedly gleaming eyes.

Me- She pulls me into her arms, where she is more than happy to be... Katie!

But I never got to talk to her, the girl she had last night- I had to meet her. A new day is all the same- until the night-RICHARD C. MAST propels us off the dance floor in double-quick time. Is she okay? She said- she's not you- though. I need to do the safe sex lecture, for the school, the teacher I know is a lezbo, but yeah... she loves me.

I can see where things are heading for her and him, In the back of my mind, I hope she reads one of the posters on the back of the toilet doors. My thoughts crash through my brain, fighting the drunk, fuzzy feeling. It's so warm in here, so loud, so colorful - too bright. My head begins to swim with so many thoughts of him and her, and her and then him- and what she did- he did- and what I did with all, oh no... The last thing I hear beforehand, I pass out in RICHARD C. MAST's arms is his harsh description. It's very quiet, I am comfortable and warm, the light is muted, in this bed. 'Freak!' I open my eyes, Hmm... I'm tranquil for a moment.

'This looks bigger, then I remember,' I said to him- by this time I have a lust for him so- that I need him- oh so much. Oh so...! It's oddly familiar to me yet all-new the love only he can give- odd like only she can too as a girl- and he a boy. I have no idea where I am, halfway in the night- I come to it and see I am in his bed nude, and he going down on me, lovingly hard! I am enjoying the strange unfamiliar surroundings, of him just work- work- working it! Where? ...? ... Where am I? My confused brain struggles over its recent painterly memories.

Holy crap- I said- like that is carp the is holy- said Katie in my mind... ha funny. I'm hotel he owns in Atlantic City. ... in a suite- I see him coming to me, ready for loving making, As I did the last time, we were together, he loves it when I spray all over his face, as he loves doing to me as well! I have stood in a room similar to this with Katie. Oh shit. I'm in RICHARD C. MAST's suite. This room is worth more the then-White House- and some of those places that why don't care about- How did I get here?

I questioned... memories of the previous night come slowly back to haunt me, like my sister young life coming to end fast over someone, that did not love her just for hot young sex. She never had a boy toy. Nothing dead at 5! Holy shit. No socks...No jeans... I see this photo of her playing- where she was just being a kid- I see the first time she cum-med, on her little bed, it was the same night- she found out she was going to have to not see me any longer- so Katie showed her to be happy- I glance at the bedside night table- and see her face on the screen that movies the photos. I don't remember coming here. I'm wearing my t-shirt, bra, and panties. I FEEL Broken- The drinking, oh no the drinking, the handset call, oh no the phone call, the vomiting, oh no the vomiting. Katie and then RICHARD C. MAST. Oh no. I cringe inwardly.

The orange juice tastes heavenly, It's I sit up and take the tablets. On it is a glass of orange juice and two tablets. Advil. He is such a Control freak that he is, he thinks of the whole thing. Essentially, I don't feel that bad, probably much healthier than I personally merit too. Dehydration quenching and invigorating. Nothing beats freshly squeezed orange juice for refreshing a parched mouth.

How are you feeling?' 'Improved better than I earned,' I gabble.

'How did I get here?' My voice is small, contrite.

Don't worry about it he said- fastly.

Followed by: 'Good morning Merry. I peek up at him, I for one, like - feel similar to a two-year-old, if I close my eyes when I'm not really here. There's a knock on the door, for it to open. RICHARD C. MAST's sweat; the notion does odd things to me. My heart leaps into my mouth, and I can't seem to find my voice, to say come in. He opens the door anyway and strolls in, being all sweet. Holy hell, he's been working out, in tight shorts that show off his backside.

He comes and sits down on the edge of the bed, way, off, like his hair, blowing in the wind as the doors were open to the cityscape. Sweat, hard I take a deep breath and close my eyes, I can't bear to look at the cheat any longer. He's staring at me, blue bright eyes, and as usual, I have no idea what he's thinking, even if it is run hard in my mind of all the facts. He closes enough for me to touch, for me to smell, of him to be overpowering- and I want him- oh no- YES, do I want him!

The towel, his hand was thrown on the bed at my feet. He hides his thoughts and feelings so well. Grasps is let out of me for he has me around his neck, going in for it. Like his sex toy that is a rag doll, I wriggle hard. He even takes me from behind over the chair without me giving the okay- I was all his! And I look down and see that I am shaved! Oh my... 'Did you put me to bed?' Did you get me this night's top?

His face is blank.

'Yes!'

Um- it was an intoxicating cocktail- 'After you passed out, that he gave me last night my little girl down under is still red- and I can walk- so much better than a margarita, I was out in the la-la- land- and I do remember the hardcore FREAKING! and now I can speak from experience, this man goes in hard and deep.

'Did I throw up again?' My voice is quieter. Don't worry about getting knocked up I have taken care of that too... with this. An implant was placed by a dater last night when you were passed out- don't thank me!

Don't say anything- don't even think about it- it for your own good.

Um- is all I got out before his index finger hashed me - up to my lips.

'Did you undress me?' I whispered...

'Funny you cute- that's the least of your worries!' He said.

Um...?

I thought...! Maybe I think too much...? Maybe he's right...? Or is this wrong...?

The RICHARD C. MAST

Preface:

Days moments like this only happen in my wildest dreams when I was a young girl warm in pink sheets in my school age-girltween bed, or so I thought- now I am not dreaming. I was wearing tight blue short shorts with no underwear and a sports blue and white tank top with no bra. His breathing is an array, matching mine. Pulling off his gray briefs, his erection springs free. Turning to face him, pushing the foreskin back gently- to look like any man should or would- I'm shocked to find has his erection firmly in my grasp and tight and hard and exposed to my kisses.

My mouth drops open for my flavored Popsicle of oh-da-hot-sexy-man- and sexy tattoos covering his arms. "I'm going to fuck you now," he whispers as he positions the head of his erection at the entrance of me, his he pulls me up to his standing body and I am off my feet... Holy cow...!

I am only 100 lbs and a sweet little slut calling him by his title for him, and he loves it and he can pick me up and hold me upside down hair down to his feet he is full on to my clitoris for his 69 sex - both as deep and bobbing as we can go, both in the heat of passion at the same time. How cow - I am upside down, yet I love the way he can passion me around for our sex, it's so hot!

Then whipped right side up still being held like a small child in his big manly arms - my arms holding on for dear life around his neck as I for the first time fell ever-so-small- to him- yet ever-so tall being now so far of the ground; for more of his sex hardcore penis pounding sliding up and down on his belly like a young little teen slut that- I am for only him- like the wet gushing orgasms run now down his body.

Holy cow, it's so-o big! As my young tight hole is now open like my and showing blackness that is my vagina parted- looking like my pocketbook when unclapsed, for as he no slips out and back in hard as I am now thrown on my backside- legs sprawled. Just moments after I had fully let go, he had my butt to my chin as he made his clam pile driver himself into china in me, I am all his! The cream is now further down my body, into my pubic hair, I hear the slosh's and then with tight pushing outs of me - of thick white cream-pies 3 times in 10 minutes, I gasp as all- and everything- like him run a lather all over my pubic bone.

It's warm. The gentleness at that moment surprises me. That was not the end for this strong man that needs the grunting out, I kneel at his front as he is jerking his long hard Vancouver pink head thumping cock at my hanging out as my hands are behind me backside, my mouth eagerly awaiting tongue panting, as rubbed out love for me at that moment stream, surge, flows swiftly in, flopping all of it around my teeth, not letting any go to waste, I show him I love it all, I swallow hard and then show that it's all gone like a good little girl- that I am for him- and that- I don't mind my face covered- 'daddy's cummies!'

Then I was on top for all of 2 more minutes. My little nipples hard like the clit now out of it hardcover as I give him my sex, raw, and longing, only moments have past and its time yet again and we are at the climax of running out. I also love looking up at him with big feminine eyes most of the time - in my lip and one hand grasping knowing- that I have done a good job having all of him jammed as hard and far down my throat as possible now gasping.

(Back in time)

'No... not really...' I whisper.

'It's more the idea of it?' he prompts.

'I suppose. Feeling pleasure... when one isn't supposed to.'

'I remember feeling the same. Takes a while to get your head around it.' Holy hell. This was when he was a kid.

'You can always safe... word... Merry. Don't forget that. And... as long as you follow the rules... which fulfill a deep need in me for control and to keep you safe... then perhaps we can find a way forward.'

'Why do you need to control me?'

'Because it satisfies a need in me that wasn't met in my formative years.'

'So, it's a form of therapy?'

'I've not thought of it like that... but yes... I suppose it is.' I can understand. This will help.

'But... here's the thing... one moment you say don't defy me... the next you say you like to be challenged. That's a very fine line to tread successfully.' He gazes at me for a moment... then frowns.

'I can see that. But you seem to be doing fine so far.'

'But at what personal cost? I'm tied up in knots here.' 'I like you tied up in knots...' he smirks.

'That's not what I meant!' I splash him in exasperation.

He gazes down at me... arching an eyebrow.

'Did you just splash me?' 'Yes.' Holy shit... that look.

'Oh... Miss Merry.' He grabs me and pulls me onto his lap... sloshing water all over the floor.'
I think we've done enough talking for now.'

He clasps his hands on either side of my head and kisses me. Deeply. Possessing my mouth. Angling my head... controlling me. I moan against his lips. This is what he likes. This is what he's so good at. Everything ignites inside me and my fingers are in his hair... holding him to me... and I'm kissing him back and saying I want you the only way I know-how. He groans... shifting me so I'm astride him... kneeling over him... his erection beneath me. He pulls back and looks at me... his eyes hooded... glowing and lustful. I drop my hands to grab on to the edge of the bath, but he grips both my wrists and pulls my hands behind my back... holding them together in one hand.

'I'm going to have you now...' he whispers and lifts me so that I'm hovering over him.

'Ready?' He breathes.

'Yes...' I whisper... and he eases me on to him... slowly... exquisitely slowly... filling me... watching me as he takes me.

I groan... closing my eyes... and I revel in the sensation... the stretching fullness. He flexes his hips... and I gasp... leaning forward... resting my forehead against his.

'Please let my hands go...' I whisper.

'Don't touch me...' he pleads... and releasing my wrists... he grabs my hips.

Clasping the bath ledge... I move up and then down slowly... opening my eyes to gaze at him. He's watching me. His mouth opens slightly... his breathing halted... stilted... his tongue between his teeth. He looks so... hot. We're wet and slippery and moving against each other. I lean down and kiss him.

He closes his eyes. Tentatively... I bring my hands up to his head and run my fingers through his hair... not taking my lips from his mouth. This is allowed. He likes this. I like this. And we move together. I tug his hair... tipping his head back and deepen the kiss... riding him... faster... picking up the rhythm. I moan against his mouth. He starts to lift me faster... faster... holding my hips. Kissing me back.

We are wet mouths and tongues... tangled hair... and moving hips. All sensation... all-consuming again. I am close... I am starting to recognize this delicious tightening... quickening. And the water... it's swirling around us... our own whirlpool... a stirring vortex as our movements become more frantic... sloshing everywhere... mirroring what's happening inside me... and I just don't care.

I love this man. I love his passion... the effect I have on him. I love that he's flown so far to see me. I love that he cares about me... he cares. It's so unexpected... so fulfilling. He is mine... and I am his.

'That's right... baby...' he breathes.

-And-

I come... my orgasm ripping through me... a turbulent... passionate... apogee that devours me whole. And suddenly RICHARD C. MAST crushes me to him... his arms wrapped around my back as he finds his release.

'Merry... baby!' He cries... and it's a wild invocation... stirring and touching the depths of my soul.

We lie staring at each other... gray eyes into blue... face to face... in the super king bed... both hugging our pillows on our fronts. Naked. Not touching.

Just looking and admiring... covered by the sheet.

'Do you want to sleep?' RICHARD C. MAST asks... his voice soft. He is beautiful; the mix of colors in his hair vivid against the white Egyptian cotton pillowcase... gray eyes... smoldering... expressive. He looks concerned.

No. I'm not tired.' I feel strangely energized. It's been so good to talk... I don't want to stop.

'What do you want to do?' he asks.

'Talk.' He smiles.

'About what?'

'Stuff.'

‘What stuff?’

‘You.’

‘What about me?’

‘What’s your favorite film?’ He grins.

‘Today... it’s ‘The Piano’.’ His grin is infectious.

‘Of course. Silly me. Such a sad... exciting score... which no doubt you can play? So many accomplishments... Mr...’

‘And the greatest one is you... Miss Merry.’

‘So, I am number seventeen.’

He frowns at me not comprehending.

‘Seventeen?’

A number of women you’ve um... had sex with.’

His lips quirk up... his eyes shining with incredulity.

‘Not exactly.’

‘You said fifteen...’ My confusion is obvious.

‘I was referring to the number of women in my playroom. I thought that’s what you meant. You didn’t ask me how many women I’d had sex with.’

‘Oh.’ Holy shit... there’s more... How? I gape at him. ‘Vanilla?’

‘No. You are my one vanilla conquest...’ he shakes his head... still grinning at me.

Why does he find this funny? And why am I grinning back at him like an idiot?

‘I can’t give you a number. I didn’t put notches in the bedpost or anything.’

‘What are we talking... tens... hundreds... thousands?’ My eyes grow wilder as the numbers get larger.

'Tens. We're in the tens... for pity's sake.'

'All submissive?'

'Yes.'

Stop grinning at me...' I scold him mildly... trying and failing to keep a straight face.

'I can't. You're funny.'

'Funny peculiar or funny ha-ha?'

'A bit of both I think.' His words mirror mine.

'That's a damned cheek... coming from you.' He leans across and kisses the tip of my nose.

'This will shock you... Merry. Ready?'

I nod... wide... eyed... still with the stupid grin on my face.

'All submissive in training... when I was training. There are places in and around NY that one can go to and practice. Learn to do what I do...' he says.

What?

'Oh.' I blink at him.

'Yep... I've paid for sex... Merry.'

'That's nothing to be proud of...' I mutter haughtily. 'And you're right... I am deeply shocked. And cross that I can't shock you.'

'You wore my underwear.'

'Did that shock you?'

'Yes.' My inner goddess pole... vaults over the fifteen... foot bar.

'You didn't wear your panties to meet my parents.'

'Did that shock you?'

‘Yes.’

Jeez... the bar’s moved to sixteen feet.

‘It seems I can only shock you in the underwear holdings.’

‘You told me you were a virgin. That’s the biggest shock I’ve ever had.’ ‘Yes... your face was a picture... a Kodak moment.’ I giggle.

‘You let me work you over with a riding crop.’

‘Did that shock you?’

‘Yep.’

I grin.

‘Well... I may let you do it again.’

‘Oh... I do hope so-o... Miss Merry. This weekend?’ ‘Okay...’ I agree... shyly.

‘Okay?’

Yes- I’ll go to the Red Room of Pain again.’

‘You say my name.’

‘That shocks you?’

‘The fact that I like it shocks me.’ ‘RICHARD C. MAST.’ He grins.

‘I want to do something tomorrow.’ His eyes glow with excitement.

‘What?’

‘A surprise. For you.’ His voice is low and soft.

I raise an eyebrow and stifle a yawn at the same time.

‘Am I boring to you... Miss Merry?’ His tone is sardonic.

‘Never.’

He leans across and kisses me gently on my lips.

'Sleep...' he commands... then switches off the light.

And in this quiet moment... as I close my eyes... spent and sated... I think I'm in the eye of the storm. And in spite of all, he's said... and what he hasn't said... I don't think I have ever been so happy.

RICHARD C. MAST stands in steel... barred cage. Wearing his soft... ripped jeans... his chest and feet are mouthwateringly naked... and he's staring at me. His private... joke smile etched on his beautiful face and his eyes a molten gray. In his hands, he holds a bowl of strawberries. He ambles with athletic grace to the front of the cage... gazing intently at me. Holding up a plump ripe strawberry... he extends his hand through the bars.

'Eat...' he says... his tongue caressing the front of his palate as he enunciates the 't'.

I try and move toward him... but I'm tethered... held back by some unseen force around my wrist... holding me. Let me go.

'Come... eat...' he says... smiling his delicious crooked smile.

I pull and pull... let me go! I want to scream and shout... but no sound emerges. I am mute. He stretches a little further... and the strawberry is at my lips.

'Eat... Merry.' His mouth forms my name... lingering sensually on each syllable.

I open my mouth and bite... the cage disappears... and my hands are free. I reach up to touch him... graze my fingers through his chest hair.

'Merry.' No. I moan.

'Come on... baby.'

No. I want to touch you.

'Wake up.'

NO- please, my eyes flicker unwillingly open for a split second. I'm in bed and someone is nuzzling my ear.

'Wake up... baby...' he whispers... and the effect of his sweet voice spreads like warm melted caramel through my veins.

It's RICHARD C. MAST. Jeez... it's still dark... and the images of him from my dream persists... disconcerting and tantalizing in my head.

'Oh... no...' I groan. I want back at his chest... back to my dream.

Why is he waking me?

It's the middle of the night... or so it feels. Holy shit. Does he want sex... now?

'Time to get up... baby. I'm going to switch on the sidelight.' His voice is quiet.

'No...' I groan.

'I want to chase the dawn with you...' he says... kissing my face... my eyelids... the tip of my nose... my mouth... and I open my eyes. The sidelight is on. 'Good morning... beautiful...' he murmurs.

I groan... and he smiles.

'You are not a morning person...' he murmurs.

Through the haze of light... I squint and see RICHARD C. MAST leaning over me... smiling.
Amused.

Amused at me. Dressed! In black.

'I thought you wanted sex...' I grumble.

'Merry... I always want sex with you. It's heartwarming to know that you feel the same...' he says dryly.

I gaze at him as my eyes adjust to the light... but he still looks amused... thank heavens.

'Of course, I do... just not when it's so late.'

'It's not late... it's early. Come on... up you go. We're going out. I'll take a rain check on the sex.'

'I was having such a nice dream...' I whine.

‘Dream about what?’ he asks patiently.

‘You.’ I blush.

‘What was I doing this time?’

‘Trying to feed me strawberries.’

His lips twitch with a trace of a smile.

Dr. Flynn could have a field day with that. Up... get dressed. Don’t bother to shower... we can do that later.’ We! I sit up... and the sheet pools at my waist... revealing my body. He stands to give me a room... his eyes dark.

‘What time is it?’

‘5:30 in the morning.’

‘Feels like 3:00 a. m.’

‘We don’t have much time. I let you sleep as long as possible.

Come.’ ‘Can’t I have a shower?’ He sighs.

‘If you have a shower... I’ll want one with you... and you and I know what will happen then... the day will just go. Come.’

He’s excited. As a small boy... he’s iridescent with anticipation and excitement. It makes me smile.

‘What are we doing?’ ‘It’s a surprise. I told you.’ I can’t help but grin up at him.

‘Okay.’ I clamber off the bed and search for my clothes. Of course, they are neatly folded on the chair beside my bed. He’s laid out a pair of his jersey boxer briefs too... Ralph Lauren... no less. I slip them on... and he grins at me. Hmm... another piece of RICHARD C. MAST's underwear... a trophy to add to my collection... along with the car... the BlackBerry... the Mac... his black jacket... and a set of old valuable first editions. I shake my head at his largesse... and I frown as a scene from Tess crosses my mind: the strawberry scene. It evokes my dream. To hell with Dr. Flynn... Freud would have a field day... and then he'd probably expire trying to deal with Dark Shadows.

'I'll give you some room now that you're up.' RICHARD C. MAST exits toward the living area... and I wander into the bathroom. I have needed to attend to... and I want a quick wash. Seven minutes later... I am in the living area... scrubbed... brushed and dressed in jeans... my camisole... and RICHARD C. MAST's underwear. RICHARD C. MAST glances up from the small dining table where he's eating breakfast.

Breakfast!

Jeez... at this time.

'Eat...' he says.

Holy Moses... my dream. I gape at him... thinking about his tongue on his palate. Hmm... his expert tongue.

'Merry...' he says sternly... pulling me out of my reverie.

It really is too early for me. How to handle this? 'I'll have some tea. Can I take a croissant for later?' He eyes me suspiciously... and I smile very sweetly.

'Don't rain on my parade... Merry...' he warns softly.

'I will eat later when my stomach's woken up. About 7:30 a. m. okay?' 'Okay.' He peers down at me.

Honestly. I have to concentrate hard on not making a face at him.

'I want to roll my eyes at you.'

'By all means... do... and you will make my day...' he says sternly.

I gaze up at the ceiling.

'Well, a spanking would wake me up... I suppose.' I purse my lips in quiet contemplation.

RICHARD C. MAST's mouth drops open.

‘On the other hand, I don’t want you to be all hot and bothered... the climate here is warm enough.’ I shrug nonchalantly.

RICHARD C. MAST closes his mouth and tries very hard to look displeased... but fails hopelessly.

I can see the humor lurking in the back of his eyes.

‘You are... as ever... challenging... Miss Merry. Drink your tea.’

I notice the Twining’s label... and inside... my heart sings. See... he does care... my subconscious mouths at me. I sit and face him... drinking in his beauty. Will I ever get enough of this man?

As we leave the room... RICHARD C. MAST throws a sweatshirt at me.

‘You’ll need this.’ I look at him... puzzled.

‘Trust me.’ He grins... leans over and kisses me quickly on the lips... then grabs my hand and we head out.

Outside... in the relative cool of the half... the light of pre... dawn... the valet hands RICHARD C. MAST a set of keys to a flash sports car with a soft top. I raise an eyebrow at RICHARD C. MAST... who smirks back at me.

‘You know... sometimes it’s great being me...’ he says with a conspiratorial but smug grin that I simply can’t help emulating. He’s so lovable when he’s playful and carefree. He opens my car door with an exaggerated bow... and in I climb. He is in such a good mood.

‘Where are we going?’

‘You’ll see.’ He grins as he slips the car into drive... and we head out on Savannah Parkway. He programs the GPS and presses a switch on the steering wheel and a classical orchestral piece fills the car.

‘What’s this?’ I ask as the sweet... sweet sound of a hundred violin strings assail us. ‘It’s from La Traviata. An opera by Verdi.’ Oh... my... it’s lovely.

‘La Traviata? I’ve heard of that. I can’t think where. What does it mean?’ RICHARD C. MAST glances at me and smirks.

Well... literally... the woman led astray. It’s based on Alexander Dumas’s book... La Dame aux Camelias.’

‘Ah. I’ve read it.’

‘I thought you might.’

‘The doomed courtesan.’ I squirm uncomfortably in the plush leather seat. Is he trying to tell me something? ‘Hmm... it’s a depressing story...’ I mutter.

‘Too depressing? Do you want to choose some music? This is on my iPod.’ RICHARD C. MAST has that secret smile again.

I can’t see his iPod anywhere. He taps the screen on the console between us... and behold... there is a playlist.

‘You choose.’ His lips twitch up into a smile... and I know it’s a challenge.

RICHARD C. MAST’s iPod... this should be interesting. I scroll through the touch screen... and find the perfect song. I press play. I wouldn’t have figured him for an Amanda fan. The club... mix... techno beat assaults us both... and RICHARD C. MAST turns the volume down. Maybe it’s too early for this: Britney’s at her most sultry.

‘Toxic... eh?’ RICHARD C. MAST grins.

‘I don’t know what you mean.’ I feign innocence.

He turns the music down a little more... and inside I am hugging myself. My inner goddess is standing on the podium awaiting her gold medal.

He turned the music down.

Victory!

‘I didn’t put that song on my iPod...’ he says casually... and puts his foot down so that I am thrown back into my seat as the car accelerates along the freeway.

What? He knows what he's doing... the bastard. Who did? And I have to listen to Amanda going on and on. Who... who?

The song ends and the iPod shuffles to Damien Rice being mournful.

Who? Who? I stare out of the window... my stomach-churning. Who?

'It was Sarrah...' he answers my unspoken thoughts. How does he do that?

'Sarrah?'

'An ex... who put the song on my iPod.'

Damien warbles away in the background as I sit stunned. An ex...

Ex... submissive?

An ex...

'One of the fifteen?' I ask.

'Yes.'

What happened to her?'

'We finished.'

'Why?'

Oh jeez. It's too early for this kind of conversation. But he looks relaxed... happy even... and what's more... talkative.

'She wanted more.' His voice is low... introspective even... and he leaves the sentence hanging between us... ending it with that powerful little word again.

'And you didn't?' I ask before I can employ my brain to mouth filter.

Shit... do I want to know?

He shakes his head.

'I've never wanted more... until I met you.'

I gasp... reeling. Oh my. Isn't this what I want? He wants more. He wants it... too! My inner goddess has backflipped off the podium and is doing cartwheels around the stadium.

It's not just me.

'What happened to the other fourteen?' I ask.

Jeez, he's talking... take advantage.

'You want a list? Divorced... beheaded... died?'

You're not Bill VIII.'

'Okay. In no particular order... I've only had long-term relationships with four women... apart from Elly.'

'Elly?'

'Mrs. Robinson to you.' He half-smiles his secret private joke smile.

Elly! Holy Freak. The evil one has a name and it is all... foreign-sounding. A vision of a glorious... pale... skinned vamp with raven hair and ruby... red lips come to mind... and I know that she's beautiful. I must not dwell. I must not dwell.

'What happened to the four?' I ask to distract myself.

'So inquisitive... so eager for information... Miss Merry...' he scolds playfully.

'Oh... Mr. When Is Your Period Due?'

'Merry... a man needs to know these things.'

'Does he?'

'I do.'

'Why?'

'Because I don't want you to get pregnant.'

'Neither do I! Well... not for a few years yet.'

RICHARD C. MAST blinks startled... then visibly relaxes. Okay. RICHARD C. MAST doesn't want children. Now or never? I am reeling from his sudden... unprecedented attack of candor. Perhaps it's the early morning? Something in the modern city water?

The modern dystopian city air? What else do I want to know? Remembrance of Things Past.

'So, the other four... what happened?' I ask.

'One met someone else. The other three wanted... more. I wasn't in the market for more then.'

'And the others?' I press.

He glances at me briefly and just shakes his head.

'Just didn't work out.'

Whoa... a bucket... a load of information to process. I glance in the side mirror of the car... and I notice the soft swell of pink and aquamarine in the sky behind. Dawn is following us.

'Where are we headed?' I ask... perplexed... gazing out at the I... 95.

We're heading south... that's all I know.

'An airfield.'

'We're not going back to NY, are we?' I gasp... alarmed. I haven't said goodbye to my mom. Jeez... she's expecting us for dinner.

He laughs.

'No... Merry... we're going to indulge in my second favorite pastime.' 'Second?' I frown at him.

'Yep. I told you my favorite this morning.'

I glance at his glorious profile... frowning... racking my brain.

'Indulging in you... Miss Merry... that's got to be top of my list. Anyway I can get you.' Oh...

'Well, that's quite high up on my list of diverting... kinky priorities too.' I mutter... blushing.

'I'm pleased to hear it...' he mutters dryly.

'So... airfield?' He grins at me.

'Soaring.'

The term rings a vague bell. He's mentioned it before.

'We're going to chase the dawn... Merry.' He turns and grins at me as the GPS urges him to turn right into what looks like an industrial complex. He pulls up outside a large white building with a sign reading Frank Lloyd Wright -Building.

Gliding! Are we going gliding?

He switches off the engine.

'You up for this?' He asks.

'You're flying?'

'Yes.'

'Yes... please!' I don't hesitate. He grins and leans forward and kisses me.

'Another first... Miss Merry...' he says as he climbs out of the car.

First? What sort of first? First time flying a glider... shit! No... he said that he's done it before. I relax. He walks around and opens my door. The sky has turned to a subtle opal... shimmering and glowing softly behind the sporadic childlike clouds. Dawn is upon us.

Taking my hand... RICHARD C. MAST leads me around the building to a large stretch of tarmac where several hot air balloons are parked. Waiting beside them is a man with a shaved head and a wild look in his eye... accompanied by Peter.

Peter! Does RICHARD C. MAST go anywhere without that man? I beam at him... and he smiles kindly back at me.

'Mr... this is your tow... pilot... Mr. Mark Benson...' says Peter. RICHARD C. MAST and Benson shake hands and strike up a conversation... which sounds very technical about wind speed... directions... and the like.

'Hello... Peter...' I murmur shyly.

'Miss Merry.' He nods a greeting at me... and I frown. 'Merry...' he corrects himself.

'He's been hell on wheels the last few days. Glad we're here...' he says conspiratorially.

Oh... this is news... Why? Surely not because of me! Revelation Thursday! Must be something in the Savannah water that makes these men loosen up a bit.

'Merry...' RICHARD C. MAST summons me. 'Come.' He holds out his hand.

'See you later.' I smile at Peter... and giving me a quick salute... he heads back to the parking lot.

'Mr. Benson... this is my girlfriend Marry Sue.' 'Pleased to meet you...' I murmur as we shake hands.

Benson gives me a dazzling smile.

'Likewise,' he says... and I can tell from his accent that he's British.

As I take RICHARD C. MAST's hand... there's a mounting excitement in my belly. Wow... gliding! We follow Mark Benson out across the tarmac towards the runway. He and RICHARD C. MAST keep up a running conversation. I catch the gist. We will be in a Blahnik L... 23... which is apparently better than the L... 13... although this is open to debate. Benson will be flying a Piper Pawnee. He's been flying taildraggers for about five years now. It all means nothing to me... but glancing up at RICHARD C. MAST... he is so animated... so in his element... it's a pleasure to watch him.

The hot air balloon itself is long... sleek... and white with orange stripes. It has a small cockpit with two seats one in front of the other. It's attached by a long white cable to a small... conventional single... burner hot air balloon. Benson opens the large... clear Perspex dome that frames the cockpit... allowing us to climb in.

'First, we need to strap on your parachute.' Parachute!

'I'll do that...' RICHARD C. MAST interrupts him and takes the harness off Benson... who smiles amenably at him?

'I'll fetch some ballast...' Benson says and heads toward the hot air balloon.

'You like strapping me into things.' I observe dryly.

'Miss Merry... you have no idea. Here... step into the straps.'

I do as I'm told... placing my arm on his shoulder. RICHARD C. MAST stiffens slightly but doesn't move. Once my feet are in the loops... he pulls the parachute up... and I place my arms through the shoulder straps. Deftly he fastens the harness and tightens all the straps.

'There... you'll do...' he says mildly... but his eyes are gleaming. 'Do you have your hair tie from yesterday?' I nod.

'You want me to put my hair up?'

'Yes.'

I quickly do as I'm asked.

'If you go...' RICHARD C. MAST commands. He's still so bossy. I go climbing into the back.

'No... front. The pilot sits at the back.' 'But won't you be able to see.' 'I'll see plenty.' He grins.

I don't think I have ever seen him so happy... bossy... but happy. I clamber in... settling down into the leather seat. It is surprisingly comfortable. RICHARD C. MAST leans over... pulls the harness over my shoulders... reaches between my legs for the lower belt... and slots it into the fastener that rests against my belly.

He tightens all the restraining straps.

'Hmm... twice in one morning... I am a lucky man...' he whispers and kisses me quickly. 'This won't take long... twenty... thirty minutes at most. Thermals aren't great this time of the morning... but it's so breathtaking up there at this hour. I hope you're not nervous.' 'Excited.' I beam.

Where did this ridiculous grin come from? Actually... part of me is terrified. My inner goddess... she's under a blanket behind the sofa.

'Good.' He grins back... stroking my face... then disappears from view.

I hear and feel his movements as he climbs in behind me. Of course, he's strapped me in so tightly I can't move round to see him... typical! We are very low on the ground. In front of me are a panel of dials and levers and a big stick thing. I leave well alone.

Mark Benson appears with a cheerful grin as he checks my straps and leans in and checks the cockpit floor. I think it's the ballast.

'Yep... that's secure. First time?' he asks me.

'Yes.'

'You'll love it.'

'Thanks... Mr. Benson.'

'Call me Mark.' He turns to RICHARD C. MAST. 'Okay?'

'Yep. Let's go.'

I am so glad I haven't eaten anything. I am beyond excited... and I don't think my stomach would be game for food... excitement... and leaving the ground. Once again... I am putting myself into this beautiful man's skilled hands. Mark shuts the cockpit lid... strolls over to the hot air balloon in front... and climbs in.

The hot gas burner starts... and my nervous stomach relocates itself to my throat. Jeez... I'm really doing this. Mark taxis slowly down the runway... and as the cable takes the strain... we suddenly jolt forward. We're off. I hear chatter over the radio set behind me. I think it's Mark talking to the tower... but I can't make out what he's saying. As the Piper picks up speed... so do we. It's very bumpy... and in front of us... the single burner hot air balloon is still on the ground. Jeez... will we ever get up?

And suddenly... my stomach disappears from my throat and free... falls through my body to the ground... we're airborne.

'Here we go... baby!' RICHARD C. MAST shouts from behind me. And we are in our own bubble... just us two. All I hear is the sound of the wind ripping past and the distant hum of hot air balloons engine and heat.

I'm gripping the edge of my seat with both hands... so tightly my knuckles are white. We head west... inland away from the rising sun... gaining height... crossing over fields and woods and homes and me... 95. Oh my. This is amazing... above us only sky. The light is extraordinary... diffuse and warm in hue... and I remember José rambling on about 'magic hour'... a time of day that photographers adore... this is it... just after dawn... and I'm in it... with RICHARD C. MAST.

Abruptly... I'm reminded of José's show. Hmm. I need to tell RICHARD C. MAST. I wonder briefly how he'll react. But I won't worry about that... not now... I'm enjoying the ride. My ears pop as we gain height... and the ground slips further and further away. It is so peaceful. I completely get why he likes to be up here.

Away from his BlackBerry and all the pressures of his job.

The radio crackles into life... and Mark mentions 300 feet. Jeez... that sounds high... I check the ground... and I can no longer clearly distinguish anything down there.

'Release...' RICHARD C. MAST says into the radio... and suddenly the Piper disappears... and the pulling sensation provided by the small hot air balloon ceases.

We're floating... floating over Modern city.

Holy freak... it's exciting. The hot air balloon banks and turns as the air changes and we dip... and we spiral toward the sun- Icarus- This is it. I am flying close to the sun... but he's with me... leading me. I gasp at the realization. We spiral and spiral and... the view in this morning light is spectacular.

'Hold on tight!' he shouts... and we dip again... only this time he doesn't stop. suddenly... I am upside down... looking at the ground through the top of the cockpit canopy.

I squeal loudly... my arms automatically lashing out... my hands splayed on the Perspex to stop me falling. I can hear him laughing. Bastard! But his joy is infectious... and I am laughing too as he writes the hot air balloon.

'I'm glad I didn't have breakfast!' I shout at him.

'Yes... in hindsight... it's good you didn't... because I'm going to do that again.'

He dips the hot air balloon once more until we are low to ground. This time... because I'm prepared... I hang on to the harness... but it makes me grin and giggle like a fool. He levels the hot air balloon once more.

'Beautiful... isn't it?' He calls.

'Yes.'

We fly... swooping majestically through the air... listening to the wind and the silence... in the early morning light. Who could ask for more?

'See the joy... stick in front of you?' he shouts again.

I look at the stick that is moving slightly between my legs. Oh no... where's he going with this?

'Grab hold.'

Oh shit. He's going to make me fly the hot air balloon. No!

'Go on... Merry. Grab it...' he urges more vehemently.

Tentatively... I grasp it and feel the pitch and yaw of what I assume are rudders and paddles or whatever keep this thing in the air.

'Hold tight... keep it steady. See the middle dial in front? Keep the needle dead center.'

My heart is in my mouth. Holy shit. I am flying a glider... I'm soaring.

'Good girl.' RICHARD C. MAST sounds delighted.

'I am amazed you let me take control...' I shout.

‘You’d be amazed at what I’d let you do... Miss Merry. Back to me now.’

I feel the joystick move suddenly... and I let go as we spiral down several feet... my ears starting to pop again. The ground is getting closer... and it feels like we could be hitting it short. Jeez... that’s scary.

‘BMA... this is BG N Papa 3 Alpha... entering left downwind runway seven to the grass... BMA.’ RICHARD C. MAST sounds his usual authoritative self. The tower squawks back at him over the radio... but I don’t understand what they say. We sail around again in a wide circle... sinking slowly to the ground. I can see the airport... the landing strips... and we’re flying back over me... 95.

‘Hang on... baby. This can get bumpy.’

After another circle we dip... and suddenly we are on the ground with a brief thump... racing along the grass... holy shit. My teeth chatter as we bump at an alarming speed along the ground... until we finally come to a stop. The hot air balloon sways slightly then dip to the right. I take a deep lungful of air while RICHARD C. MAST leans over and opens the cockpit lid... clambering out and stretching.

‘How was that?’ He asks... and his eyes are a shining... dazzling silver-gray in the sun. He leans down to unbuckle me.

‘That was extraordinary. Thank you...’ I whisper.

‘Was it more?’ he asks... his voice tinged with hope.

10

‘Much more...’ I breathe... and he grins.

‘Come.’ He holds out his hand for me... and I clamber out of the cockpit.

As soon as I’m out... he grabs me and holds me flush against his body. Suddenly his hand is in my hair... tugging it so my head tips back... and his other hand travels down to the base of my spine. He kisses me... long... hard... and passionately... his tongue in my mouth. His breathing is mounting... his ardor... Holy CRAP... his erection... we’re in a field. But I don’t care. My hands twist in his hair... anchoring him to me. I want him... here... now... on the ground. He breaks away and gazes down at me... his eyes now dark and luminous in the early morning light... full of raw... arrogant sensuality. Wow.

He takes my breath away.

'Breakfast...' he whispers... making it sound deliciously erotic.

How can he make bacon and eggs sound like forbidden fruit? It's an extraordinary skill. He turns... clasping my hand... and we head back toward the car.

'What about the glider?'

'Someone will take care of that?' ...He says dismissively. 'We'll eat now.' His tone is unequivocal.

Food! He's talking food... when really all I want is him.

'Come.' He smiles.

I have never seen him like this... and it's a joy to behold. I find myself walking beside him... hand in hand... with a stupid... goofy grin plastered on my face. It reminds me of when I was ten and spending the day in Disneyland with Ray. It was a perfect day... and this is Sue shaping out to be the same?

Back in the car... as we head back along with me... 95 towards Savannah... my phone alarm goes off. Oh yes... my pill.

'What's that?' RICHARD C. MAST asks... curious... glancing at me.

I fumble in my purse for the packet.

'Alarm for my pill...' I mutter as my cheeks flush.

His lips quirk up.

'Good... well done. I hate condoms.'

I flush some more. He's as patronizing as ever.

'I like that you introduced me to Mark as your girlfriend...' I murmur.

'Isn't that what you are?' He raises an eyebrow.

'Am I? I thought you wanted a submissive.'

‘So did I... Merry... and I do. But I’ve told you... I want more... too.’

Oh my. He’s coming around... and hope surges through me... leaving me breathless.

‘I’m very happy that you want more...’ I whisper.

‘We aim to please... Miss Merry.’ He smirks as we pull into the International House of Pancakes.

‘OLIVE GARDEN.’ I grin back at him. I don’t believe it. Who would have thought... RICHARD C. MAST... at OLIVE GARDEN?

It’s 8:30 a. m. but quiet in the restaurant. It smells of sweet batter...

fried food... and disinfectant. Hmm... not such an enticing aroma. RICHARD C. MAST leads me to a booth.

‘I would never have pictured you here...’ I say as we slide into a booth.

‘My dad used to bring us to one of these whenever my mom went away at a medical conference. It was our secret.’ He smiles at me... gray eyes dancing... then picks up a menu... running a hand through his wayward hair as he stares down at it.

Oh... I want to run my hands through that hair. I pick up a menu and examine it. I realize I’m starving.

‘I know what I want...’ he breathes... his voice low and husky.

I glance up at him... and he’s staring at me in that way that tightens all the muscles in my belly and takes my breath away... his eyes dark and smoldering. Holy shit. I gaze at him... my blood singing in my veins answering his call.

‘I want what you want...’ I whisper.

He inhales sharply.

‘Here?’ He asks suggestively... raising an eyebrow at me... smiling wickedly... his teeth trapping the tip of his tongue.

Oh my... sex in OLIVE GARDEN. His expression changes... growing darker.

‘Don’t bite your lip...’ he orders. ‘Not here... not now.’ His eyes harden momentarily... and for a moment... he looks so deliciously dangerous. ‘If I can’t have you here... don’t tempt me.’

‘Hi... My name’s Leandra... What can I get for you... er... folks... er... today... this morning...?’ Her voice trails off... stumbling over her words as she gets an eye full of Mr. Beautiful opposite me. She flushes scarlet... and a small ounce of sympathy for her bubbles unwelcome into my consciousness because he still does that to me. Her presence allows me to escape briefly from his sensual glare.

‘Merry?’

He prompts me... ignoring her... and I don’t think anyone could squeeze as much carnality into my name as he does at that moment.

I swallow... praying that I don’t go the same color as poor Leandra.

‘I told you... I want what you want.’ I keep my voice soft... low... and he looks at me hungrily. Jeez... my inner goddess swoons. Am I up to this game?

Leandra looks from me to him and back again. She’s practically the same color as her shiny red hair.

‘Shall I give you folks another minute to decide?’

‘No. We know what we want.’ RICHARD C. MAST’s mouth twitches with a small... sexy smile.

‘We’ll have two portions of the original buttermilk pancakes with maple syrup and bacon on the side... two glasses of orange juice... one black coffee with skim milk... and one English breakfast tea... if you have it...’ says RICHARD C. MAST... not taking his eyes off me.

Thank you, sir. Will that be all?’ Leandra whispers... looking anywhere but at the two of us. We both turn to stare at her... and she flushes crimson again and scuttles away.

‘You know it’s really not fair.’ I glance down at the Formica tabletop...

Tracing a pattern in it with my index finger... trying to sound nonchalant.

'What's not fair?'

'How you disarm people. Women. Me.'

'Do I disarm you?'

I snort.

'All the time.'

'It just looks... Merry...' he says mildly. 'No... RICHARD C. MAST... it's much more than that.'

His brow creased.

'You disarm me totally... Miss Merry. Your innocence. It cuts through all the crap.'

'Is that why you've changed your mind?'

'Changed my mind?'

'Yes... about ... err... us?'

He strokes his chin thoughtfully with his long... skilled fingers.

I don't think I've changed my mind per se. We just need to redefine our parameters... re-draw our battle lines... if you will. We can make this work... I'm Sue. I want you submissive in my playroom. I will punish you if you digress from the rules. Other than that, well... I think it's all up for discussion. Those are my requirements... Miss Merry. What say you to that?'

'So, I get to sleep with you? In your bed?'

'Is that what you want?'

'Yes.'

'I agree then. Besides... I sleep very well when you're in my bed. I had no idea.' His brow creases as his voice fades.

'I was frightened you'd leave me if I didn't agree to all of it...' I whisper.

'I'm not going anywhere... Merry. Besides...' He trails off... and after some thought... he adds.
'We're following your advice... your definition: compromise. You emailed it to me. And so far, it's working for me.'

'I love that you want more...' I murmur shyly.

'I know.'

'How do you know?'

Trust me. I just do.' He smirks at me. He's hiding something.

What?

At that moment... Leandra arrives with breakfast and our conversation ceases. My stomach rumbles... reminding me how ravenous I am. RICHARD C. MAST watches with annoying approval as I devour everything on my plate.

'Can I treat you?' I ask RICHARD C. MAST.

'Treat me how?'

'Pay for this meal.' RICHARD C. MAST snorts.

'I don't think so.' he scoffs. 'Please. I want to.' He frowns at me.

'Are you trying to completely emasculate me?'

'This is probably the only place that I'll be able to afford to pay.' 'Merry... I appreciate the thought. I do. But no.' I purse my lips.

'Don't scowl...' he threatens... his eyes glinting ominously.

Of course, he doesn't ask me for my mother's address. He knows it already... stalker that he is. When he pulls up outside the house... I don't comment. What's the point?

'Do you want to come in?' I ask shyly.

'I need to work... Merry... but I'll be back this evening. What time?'

I ignore the unwelcome stab of disappointment. Why do I want to spend every single minute with this controlling sex god? Oh yes... I've fallen in love with him... and he can fly.

'Thank you... for the more.'

'My pleasure... Merry.' He kisses me... and I inhale his sexy RICHARD C. MAST smell.

'I'll see you later.'

'Try and stop me...' he whispers.

I wave goodbye as he drives off into the Modern city sunshine. I'm still wearing his sweatshirt and his underwear... and I'm too warm.

In the kitchen... my mom is in a complete flap. It's not every day she has to entertain a multi... zillionaire... and it's stressing her out.

'How are you... darling?' She asks... and I flush because she must know what I was doing last night.

'I'm good. RICHARD C. MAST took me gliding this morning.' I hope the new information will distract her.

'Gliding? As in a small hot air balloon with no engine? That sort of gliding?' I nod.

'Wow.'

She's speechless... a novel concept for my mother. She gapes at me... but eventually recovers herself and resumes her original line of questioning.

'How was last night? Did you talk?' I flush bright scarlet.

'We talked... last night and today. It's getting better.'

'Good.' She turns her attention back to the four cookery books she has open on the kitchen table.

'Mom... if you like... I'll cook this evening.'

‘Oh... honey... that’s kind of you... but I want to do it.’

‘Okay.’ I grimace... knowing full well that my mother’s cooking is pretty hit or miss. Perhaps she’s improved since she moved to Savannah with Bob. There was a time I wouldn’t subject anyone to her cooking... even... who do I hate? Oh yes... Stifler’s mom... Elly. Well... maybe her. Will I ever meet this damned woman? I decide to send a quick thank... you to RICHARD C. MAST.

Reverie

It was Saturday and she knew there was a lot of things a girl her age could be doing, there were so many memories and happy moments filling this room I am in trying to stay awake. I sat up rubbing the last of sleep out her eyes trying to savor the last bit of sweetness she had behind her eyelids. It had been a lovely and sweet dream and right before it had it is wonderful ending her Mom burst through with her bright idea, of her being too young and innocent.

Sometimes... you know how to show a girl a good time. Said Mary. I'll take either of those over your snoring. I had a good time too. But I always do when I'm with you. He said. She also then replayed- I DO NOT SNORE. And if I do... it's very ungallant of you to point it out. You are no gentleman Mr.

-And-

...You are in the Deep South too! Said, Marry.

I have never claimed to be a gentleman... Merry... and I think I have demonstrated that point to you on numerous occasions. I am not intimidated by your SHOUTY capitals. But I will confess to a small white lie: No... you don't snore... but you do talk. And it's fascinating.

What happened to my kiss?

Holy shit I thought. I know I talk in my sleep. Katie has told me enough times. What the hell have I said? Oh no.

So-o... what did I just say?

No kisses for you until you talk! You are not a gentleman, as I thought, you are a cad and a scoundrel... it would be most ungallant of me to say... and I have already been chastised for that. But if you behave yourself... I may tell you this evening. I do have to go into a meeting now. Baby, I'll be seeing you... The RICHARD C. MAST... meaning the big chief executive officer, the highest-ranking person in a company or other institution, ultimately responsible for making managerial decisions. OMG! THE- RICHARD C. MAST... Cad and Scoundrel... ...Undertaking Department Inc. Right! Jeez-la-Wez-z- I shall maintain radio silence until this evening. I fume. Supposing I've said I hate him... or worse still... that I love him... in my sleep.

Like- could be hanging with her friends at the mall, or she could stay at home making drawings or doing homework; That what Marry thought smiling to herself, and that made every minute spent in even more special over him being so confusing.

My mom has decided on gazpacho soup and a barbecue with steaks marinated in olive oil... garlic... and lemon. RICHARD C. MAST likes meat... and it's simple to do. Bob has volunteered to man the BBQ grill. What is it about men and fire...? I ponder as I trail after my mother through the supermarket with the shopping cart?

As we browse the raw meat cabinet... my phone rings. I scramble for it... thinking it may be RICHARD C. MAST. I don't recognize the number.

'Hello?' I answer breathlessly. 'Marry Sue?' 'Yes- I said.' 'It's Elizabeth Morgan from Systematic Investment' 'Oh... hello.'

'I'm calling to offer you the job of assistant to Mr. Jack Hyde. We'd like you to start on Monday.' 'Wow- I said. That's great! Thank you!'

'You know the salary details?' 'Yes- Yes... that's... I mean... I accept your offer. I'd love to come and work for you.' 'That is excellent, we- I will see you on Monday at 9:35 a. m.?' 'See you then, and goodbye. And thank you.' I beam at my mom. 'You have a job?'

I nod gleefully... and she squeals and hugs me in the middle of a Public supermarket.

'Congratulations... darling! We have to buy some champagne!' She's clapping her hands and jumping up and down. Is she forty...? Two or twelve?

I glance down at my phone and frown... there's a missed call from RICHARD C. MAST. He never phones me. I call him straight back.

'Merry...' he answers immediately.

'Hi...' I murmur shyly.

'I have to return to NY. Something comes up. I am on my way to Hilton Head now. Please apologize to your mother... I can't make dinner.' He sounds very businesslike.

'Nothing serious... I hope?'

'I have a situation which I have to deal with. I'll see you on Friday. I'll send Peter to collect you from the airport if I can't come myself.' He sounds cold. Angry even. But for the first time... I don't immediately think it's me. 'Okay. I hope you sort out your situation. Have a safe flight.'

'You too... baby...' he breathes... and with those words... my RICHARD C. MAST is back briefly. Then he hangs up.

Oh no. The last 'situation' he had was my virginity. Jeez... I hope it's nothing like that.

I gaze at my mom. Her earlier jubilation has metamorphosed into concern.

‘Oh! That’s a shame... darling. We can still have our barbecue... and now we have something to celebrate... your new job! You have to tell me all about it.’

It’s a late afternoon... and Mom and I are lying beside the pool. My mother has relaxed to the point where she is horizontal now that Mr. Megabucks is not coming to dinner. As I lie in the sun... endeavoring to lose the pale... I think about yesterday evening and breakfast today. I think about RICHARD C. MAST... and my ridiculous grin refuses to subside. It keeps creeping across my face... unbidden and disconcerting... as I recall our various conversations and what we did... what he did.

Her body remained facing forward in deep thoughts, but she leaned ever so slightly into his direction to his picture on her nightstand table; there seems to be a tidal shift in RICHARD C. MAST’s attitude. He denies it but... he admits he’s trying for more. What could have changed? What has altered since he sent his long email and when I saw him yesterday? What has he done?

I sit up suddenly... almost spilling my Dr. Pepper.

He had dinner with... her. Elly. Holy Freak! My scalp prickles on my plate, at the realization of needing him always. Did she say something to him I don’t want him looking or talking to anyone- I want him all to me. Oh... to have been a fly on the wall during their dinner. I could have landed in her soup or on her wine glass and choked her. ‘What is it... Merry... honey?’ Mom asks... startled from her torpor. ‘I’m just having a moment... Mom. What time is it?’

‘About 6:30 p. m... darling.’

Hm-m... he won’t have landed yet. Can I ask him? Should I ask him? Or perhaps she has nothing to do with it. I fervently hope so. What did I say in my sleep? Crap... some unguarded remark while dreaming about him... I bet? Whatever it is... or was... I hope the sea of change is coming from within him and not because of her.

I am sweltering in this damned heat. I need another dip in the pool. As I get ready for bed... I switch on my computer.

I have heard nothing from the RICHARD C. MAST. Not even a word that he's arrived safely. Thinking of his voice deep and raspy, and me sometimes, almost emotionless, demanding answers I felt bad about me being me - She fought against the goosebumps that threatened to raise on her skin as she turned her head towards him thought of him.

Oh... I hope not. I am not ready to tell him that... and I'm like so - sure he's not ready to hear it... if he ever wants to hear it. I scowl at my computer and decide that whatever I cook... I will make bread.

(Time has passed)

She opened her eyes then, turning her body towards photo -

Why do I get to torture myself like this? Her mother nodded her confidence that had been there earlier was beginning to fade. Fear and determination gripped that her mom was right about everything. I am starting to worry. I sent a text message - 'Please let me know that you have arrived safely, and I am thinking of you.' She closed her eyes, trying to calm her heart, yet reveling in the feelings he caused within her. She brought her bottom lip between her teeth... They were nearly touching yet it was just a photo she was kissing missing him, and she came close to pulling him to her heart, finding out if he felt as good as he did in her mind, that was off in link for the time being. Her eyes were slightly glazed - lovesick, and he could only guess - to what she was doing at that very moment, that it was more from desire than they could take.

Three minutes later... I hear the ping from my email inbox. I was thinking - about getting it... my mind racing - If he only really knew I was 12, in eighth grade, and it was a school night if only he knew he was my dream man - and my dreams in my mind and out. I was taking my nightly shower in the upstairs - now in the only bathroom - I was wet and my mom was in the next room wanting me to get done and be done. like me wanting now to go downstairs watch some TV before 10:00 p.m. The bathroom had one small window - were the boy next door I am sure like to look in at me, and the fan wasn't able to keep up with the humidity - so everything was steamy, so the door was left open a crack - really don't care anymore about my nakedness, after being F*UCKED by him - at only 12 - yet I said I was of age - when we bathed or showered afterward too. It had been that way since forever - after the first time.

When the show on TV ended, it was my bedtime and I went upstairs. The hall was dark but I didn't bother turning on the light. The door to my room was in the middle of the hallway, on the left. The door to the bathroom was at the end of the hallway, on the right. As I approached my room, there was a movement in the bathroom that caught my attention thinking I should pee one last time - and change my tampon. Maybe the door was open a bit wider than usual but I did not seem to care as if I was like a woman.

More likely, it was puberty torturing me with its omnipresent sense for the opposite sex - not having to go through what I do. I stood in the doorway to my room, but I didn't turn on the light. I knew everyone wouldn't be able to see me in the dark as long as I stayed out of the line of brightness cast by the bathroom light onto the hallway wall. That tells me I knew from the start that what I was doing was wrong.

What I was doing was watching me, naked, fresh from the shower, rubbing moisturizing lotion on myself again. I couldn't see much of in the glass, and only the side yet it was more than I could take, but by moving my head a little this way and that I was able to keep one of my breasts in vision.

The sexual and it was far more than my fantasies coming true, reading the text, at the same time; Dear Miss Marry- I have arrived safely... and please accept my apologies for not letting you know. I don't want to cause you any worry... it's heartwarming to know that you care for me. I am thinking of you too and as ever looking forward to seeing you tomorrow.

Sexual pleasure, she was feeling her nipples now, pinching them lightly then harder and then pulling on them and shaking her small tits in wonderful waves of flesh. I was wearing drawstring pants with an elasticized waist. Without conscious thought, I pulled the bow out of the drawstring, slipped my hand inside the waistband and began stroking myself with my open palm. Erect nipple in perfect profile I give Snapchats back. I sigh... RICHARD C. MAST is back to formality - yet SO- HOT! I start to daydream even more.

My hand slide over her ribs and her belly and down, out the sight of me and the thoughts of him with me as he was before.

The thought of what she was going to do was almost more than I could bear. I opened my legs a step, turning slightly and I could see the hair between my legs.

The crack was fully open- to my bothers looking in there bed in the next room, now and I wanted them to know- in the door they stood- I rarely saw anyone- yet this time- I did, there and when I did, it troubled me- if I looked too long- yet it was a new turn on now so in love and not care about felling shame- the shame of love me was gone.

I pressed my fingers into 'her' the mysteriousness. With no effort, the fingers slipped inside until I could not see them at all. I shut my eyes and froze my hand, afraid to move- as my mom walks past and said nothing. I couldn't cum out here- just over a text message.

It must have only taken her a second for me to let out. I have climaxed as soon as I touched my clitoris after just removing the unseen fingers. The door opens as wide as me, flooding the hallway with light from the lit bathroom. I stepped out, bathrobe on but open. I was caught. I stared at them all- feeling like a woman- they stared back- not saying a word. I pulled my robe off. I burst into tears- like a girl. It was the first time I'd cried since last night- I spun around, sobbing, 'I'm sorry, I'm sorry,' and went inside my room. I slammed the door closed and left the light off- now feeling the shame.

Dear Mr...

I think it is very evident that I care for you deeply more than you would even know in deepness. How could you doubt that- ever? I hope your 'situation' is at hand.

Your Marry XO, PS: Are you going to tell me what I said in my sleep? Dear Miss- Marry, I like very much that you care about me. The 'situation' here is not yet resolved. Concerning your PS: The answer is... No.

I hope it was amusing. But you should know I cannot accept any responsibility for what comes out of my mouth when I am unconscious. You probably misheard me. A man of your advanced years is usually a little deaf. I now on my phone whispering Asking- Sorry... could you speak up? I can't hear you. So now it was back to him in my mind and then in my dreams.

Then it was said- I intend to do exactly that on Friday evening. Looking so forward to it!

I'd rather hear you say the words that you uttered in your sleep when you're conscious... that's why I won't tell you. Go to sleep. You'll need to be rested with what I have in mind for you tomorrow.

(Goodnight-)

Dark shadows of exasperating. I clamber into bed and lie glaring at the ceiling as my eyes adjust to the dark. I hear another ping from my computer. I am not going to look. No definitely not. No... I am not going to look. Gah! Like the fool I am... I cannot resist the lure of RICHARD C. MAST's words.

-And-

My mother hugs me tightly.

'Follow your heart... darling... and please... please... try not to over... think things. Relax and enjoy yourself. You are so young... sweetheart. You have so much of life to experience yet... just let it happen. You deserve the best of everything.' Her heartfelt words are comforting whispered in my ear.

She kisses my hair.

'Oh... Mom.' Hot... unwelcome tears prick my eyes as I cling to her.

'Darling... you know what they say. You have to kiss a lot of frogs before you find your prince.'

I give her a lopsided... bittersweet smile.

'I think I've kissed a prince... Mom- like- I hope he doesn't turn into a frog.' She gives me her a- most endearing... motherly... absolute... Unconditional....love smile... and I marvel at the love I feel for this woman as we hug again.

'Merry... they're calling your flight...' dad's voice is anxious.

'Will you visit... Mom?'

'Of course, darling... soon. Love you.'

'Me too.'

Her eyes are red with unshed tears as she releases me. I hate leaving her. I hug dad... and turning... head to the gate... I do not have time for the first-class lounge today. I will myself not to glance back. But I do... and Bob is holding my mom... and tears are streaming down her face. I can no longer hold mine back. I put my head down and proceed to the gate... keeping my eyes on the shiny... white floor... blurred through my watery tears.

Once onboard... in the luxury of first-class... was in my mind of the woman I could become - and never have to work - I curl up in my bed in dreaming and try to compose myself.

It is always painful to wrench myself away from Mom even after moments like moments before... she is scatty... disorganized... but newly insightful... and she loves me.

Unconditional love... what every child deserves from its parents. I frown at my wayward thoughts... and pulling out my iPhone... stare at it despondently.

What does the RICHARD C. MAST know of love? Seems he didn't get the unconditional love he was entitled to during his very early years.

My heart twists... and my mother's words waft like a zephyr through my mind: Yes... Merry. Hell... what do you need? ... a neon sign flashing on his forehead? She thinks RICHARD C. MAST loves me... but then she's my mother... of course she'd think that. She thinks I deserve the best of everything. I frown. It's true... and in a moment of startling clarity... I see it. It's very simple: I want his love. I need RICHARD C. MAST... to love me. This is why I am so reticent about our relationship... because on some basic... fundamental level... I recognize within me a deep... seated compulsion to be loved and cherished.

-And-

Because of his Dark Shadows... I am holding myself back. The bondage, discipline (or domination), sadism, and masochism, is a distraction from the real issue. Yet, I love him! So, I'll take it like a woman, not a girl!

The sex is amazing... he's wealthy... he's beautiful... but this is all meaningless without his love... and that is what I want the most - is love and slow and caring - and the real heart... fail is that I don't know if he's capable of love? I question everything I have done.

He doesn't even love himself. I recall his self... loathing... her love being the only form he found... acceptable. Punished... whipped... beaten... whatever their relationship entailed... he feels undeserving of love. Why does he feel like that? How can he feel like that? His words haunt me: 'It's very hard to grow up in a perfect family when you're not perfect.'

I close my eyes... imagining his pain... and I can't begin to comprehend it. I shudder as I remember that I may have divulged too much. What have I confessed to RICHARD C. MAST in my sleep? What secrets have I revealed?

I stare at the phone in the future hope's that it will give me some answers about what I need to do for him to love me more than he does. Much unsurprisingly rather or not... it is not very forthcoming. As we haven't taken off yet... I decided to email my Dark Shadows that creep in my mind.

(Time passes)

I am once again ensconced in first-class... on lavish dates and balls parties, for which I- thank you. I am counting the minutes until I see you this evening... and perhaps finding the deeper truth out of you about my nocturnal admissions of falling ever-so for you, and need feeling as I want.

'Pull down your pantyhose and underwear.' At first, he didn't seem to be doing anything. His long perfect finger poked my stomach. 'I told you I'm not going to f*ck you. Do what I say.' I pulled down my underwear and pantyhose. The skin on my face and throat was hot and pink like below and above, but my fingertips were cold and icy on my legs as I did what he asked. I thought I might faint or spit up, but I didn't. So many feelings of suspension dizzying me, like the one I have in dreams where I can fly like angles, but only if I get into some weird position as he has me in now. I became aware of a small frenzy of expended energy behind me.

My hips were sprayed with hot sticky muck the dream was over- too soon. 'Go clean yourself off,' he said. Stickiness- I thought as I stood slowly and shyly- and felt my skirt fall of goo. Now pulling underwear pantyhose back up, since I was going to use the bathroom anyway and need too. He did not close the door behind me- looking at me on the pot, and the second unusual thing occurred- I had blended orgasms- I could come back to the bedroom and masturbate on his bed and then go back to my room- like a good girl- then he would love me more- and never- ever- stop.

(I did not hear from him in a week)

The aircraft doors are still open- he not happy. You may stow your twitchy palm for now. We are delayed but only by ten minutes. My welfare and that of the passengers around me is vouchsafed. I miss you and your smart mouth missy. 'I am safely homework is over for now.'

They are shutting the doors as we walk down the tarmac. You won't hear another peep from me about work or formalities... especially given your deafness of me telling some work beneath me off- about time- and the sin of not making it.

I switch off the phone he has given me... unable to shake my anxiety for the moments of being a young girl and falling into his arms like a child. Something is up with him I just know.

I switch off the Phone... unable to shake my anxiety. Something is up with the RICHARD C. MAST. Perhaps 'the situation' is out of hand. Glancing up at the locker where my bags are stowed in my school day. Then- I sit back... in class in a daydream. I- Marry this morning... with my mother's help... to buy the RICHARD C. MAST a small gift to say thank you for first-class and the gliding.

I smile at the memory of the soaring and the love I have never hand or felt... that was something else to me and still is.

I don't know yet if I'll give my silly gift to him. He might think it's childish... and if he's in a strange mood... maybe not. I am both eager to return and apprehensive of what awaits me at my journey's end. As I mentally flick through all the scenarios that could be 'the situation'... I become aware that once again the only empty seat is beside me. I shake my head as the thought crosses my mind that the RICHARD C. MAST might have purchased the adjacent seat so that I couldn't talk to anyone. I dismiss the idea as ridiculous... no one could be that controlling... that jealous... Surely- I close my eyes as the hot air balloon taxis towards the runway.

I emerge into the Sea... Tac arrivals terminal eight hours later to find Peter waiting and holding up a board that reads Miss A Merry. Honestly! But it's good to see him.

'Hello... Peter- just outside the classy 1930's antique limousine.'

'Miss Merry...' he greets me formally... but I see a hint of a smile in his sharp brown eyes.

He looks his usual immaculate self... smart charcoal suit... white shirt... and gray tie.

'I do know what you look like Peter... you don't need a board... and I do wish you'd call me... Merry.'

'Merry- please- Can I take your bags...?' 'No... I can Marry. Thank you.' His lips tighten perceptibly.

'But... if you'd be more comfortable taking them...' I stammer.

'Thank you.' He grabs my backpack and my newly acquired wheelie case for the clothes my mother has bought me.' This way... ma'am.'

I sigh- lightly- He's so polite. I remember... though I would like to erase it from my memory... that this man has bought me underwear. In fact, and the thought unsettles me... he's the only man who's ever bought me underwear. We walk in silence to the blackness outside in the airport parking lot... and he holds the door open for me. I clamber in... wondering if wearing such a short skirt for the return to NY was a good idea when I only have two days before- I need to back home.

It was cool and welcome to the Modern city. Here I feel exposed. Once Peter has stowed my bags in the trunk...

The journey is slow... caught up in rush hour traffic. Peter keeps his eyes on the road ahead. I can bear the silence no longer, taciturn does not begin to describe him.

'How's is the... Peter?'

'Mr... is preoccupied... Miss Merry.'

Oh... this must be 'the situation.' I am mining a seam of gold.

'Preoccupied?'

'Yes... ma'am.'

I frown at Peter... and he glances at me in the rear... view mirror... our eyes meet in the glass of the car. He's saying no more. Jeez... he can be as tightlipped as to the control freak himself.

'Is he okay?'

'I believe so... ma'am.'

‘Are you more comfortable calling me... Miss Merry?’

‘Yes... ma’am.’

‘Oh... okay.’

Well... that curtails our conversation... and we continue in silence. I begin to think that Peter’s recent slip... when he told me that he had been hell on wheels... was an anomaly. Perhaps he’s embarrassed about it... worried that he’s been disloyal. The silence is suffocating.

‘Could you put some music on please?’

‘Certainly... ma’am. What would you like to hear?’

‘Something soothing.’

I see a smile play on Peter’s lips as our eyes meet briefly again in the mirror.

‘Yes... ma’am.’

He pushes a few buttons on the steering wheel... and the gentle strains of Pachelbel’s canon fill the space between us. Oh yes... this is what I need.

‘Thank you.’ I sit back as we drive slowly but steadily along the I... 5 a.m. and in NY.

Twenty... five minutes... later he drops me outside the impressive façade that is the entrance to his mansion.

‘In- you go... ma’am...’ he says... holding the door open for me.’ I’ll bring up your luggage is.’ The expression is soft... warm... avuncular even.

Jeez... Uncle Peter... what a thought.

‘Thank you for meeting me.’

‘It’s a pleasure... Miss Merry.’ He smiles... and I head into the building. The doorman nods and waves.

As I ride up to the thirtieth floor... a thousand butterflies stretch their wings and flutter erratically in my stomach. Why am I so nervous?

-And-

I know it's because I have no idea what kind of mood RICHARD C. MAST's going to be in when I arrive. My inner goddess is hopeful for one type of mood... my subconscious... like me... is fraught with nerves.

The elevator doors open... and I'm in the foyer. It is so strange not to be met by Peter. Of course, he's parking the car. In the great room... RICHARD C. MAST is on his Phone talking quietly as he stares out of the glass doors at the early New York skyline.

He's wearing a white suit with the jacket undone... and he's running his hand through his gray-black hair... he's. He agitated... tense even.

Oh no... what's wrong? Agitated or not... he's still beyond beautiful. How can he look so... arresting? It's such a pleasure to stand and drink in the sheer sight of him.' No Trace... Okay... Yes.' He turns and sees me... and his whole demeanor changes. From tension to relief to something else: a look that calls directly to my inner goddess... a look of sensual carnality... gray eyes blazing.

My mouth goes dry and desires blooms in my body... whoa.

'Keep me informed...' he snaps and shuts off his phone as he strides purposefully toward me. I stand paralyzed as he closes the distance between us... devouring me with his eyes. Holy shit... something's amiss... the strain in his jaw... the anxiety around his eyes. He shrugs out of his jacket... undoes his dark tie... and slings them both on to the coach en route to me. Then his arms are wrapped around me... and he's pulling me to him... hard... fast... gripping my ponytail to tilt my head up... kissing me as his life depends on it.

What the hell? He drags the hair tie painfully out of my hair... but I don't care. There's a desperate... primal quality to his kiss. He needs me... for whatever reason... at this point... and I have never felt so desired and coveted. It's dark and sensual and alarming all at the same time. I kiss him back with equal fervor... my fingers twisting and fisting in his hair. Our tongues entwined... our passion and ardor erupting between us. He tastes divine... hot... sexy... and his scent... all body wash and RICHARD C. MAST is so arousing. He drags his mouth away from mine... and he's staring down at me... gripped by some unnamed emotion.

'What's wrong?' I breathe.

'I'm so glad you're back. Shower with me... now.' I can't decide if it's a request or a command.

'Yes...' I whisper... and he grabs my hand... leading me out of the big room into his bedroom to his bathroom.

Once there... he releases me and sets the water running in the far too spacious shower.

Turning slowly... he gazes at me... eyes hooded.

'I like your skirt. It's very short...' he says... his voice low. 'You have great legs.'

He steps out of his shoes and reaches down to take each of his socks off... never taking his eyes off me. I am rendered speechless by the look of hunger in his eyes. Wow... to be this wanted by this Greek god. I mirror his actions and step out of my black flats. Suddenly... he reaches for me... backing me up against the wall. Kissing me... my face... my throat... my lips... running his hands into my hair. I feel the cool... smooth tiled wall at my back as he pushes himself against me so that I'm flattened between his heat and the chill of the ceramic. Tentatively... I place my arms on his upper arms... and he groans as I squeeze tightly.

'I want you now. Here... fast... hard...' he breathes... and his hands are on my thighs... pushing up my skirt. 'Are you still bleeding?' 'No.' I flush.

'Good.'

His thumbs hook over my white cotton panties... and abruptly he drops to his knees as he tugs them off. My skirt is now rucked up so that I'm naked from the waist down and panting... wanting. He grabs my hips... pushing me against the wall again... and kisses me at the apex of my thighs. Grabbing my upper thighs... he forces my legs apart. I groan loudly... feeling his tongue circling my clitoris. Oh my. Tipping my head back involuntarily... I moan as my fingers find their way into this hair.

His tongue is relentless... strong and insistent... leaving me... swirling round and round... again and again... no... stop. It's exquisite... the intensity of feeling... it's almost painful. My body starts to quicken... and he releases me. What? No! My breathing is ragged as I pant... gazing at him with delicious anticipation. He grabs my face with both hands... holding me firmly... and he kisses me hard... thrusting his tongue into my mouth so I can taste my arousal.

Unzipping his fly... he frees himself... grabs the backs of my thighs... and lifts me.

'Wrap your legs around me... baby...' he commands... his voice urgent... strained.

I do as I'm told and wrap my arms around his neck... and he moves quickly and sharply... filling me. Ah! He gasps... and I groan. Holding my behind... his fingers digging into my soft flesh... he begins to move... slowly at first... a steady even tempo... but as his control unravels... he speeds up... faster... and faster. Ah-h! I tip my head back and concentrate on the invading... punishing... heavenly sensation... pushing me... pushing me... onward... higher... up... and when I can take no more... I explode around him... spiraling into an intense... all... consuming orgasm. He lets go with a deep growl... and he buries his head in my neck as he buries himself inside me... groaning loudly and incoherently as he finds his release.

His breathing is erratic... but he kisses me tenderly... not moving... still inside me... and I blink... unseeing into his eyes. As he comes into focus... he gently pulls out of me... holding me steady while I place my feet on the floor.

The bathroom is now cloudy with steam... and hot. I feel overdressed.

'You seem pleased to see me...' I murmur with a shy smile.

His lips quirk up.

'Yes... Miss Merry... I think my pleasure is pretty self... evident. Come... let me get you in the shower.'

He undoes the next three buttons of his shirt... removes the cufflinks... tugs it over his head... and discards it on the floor. Removing his suit pants and boxer briefs... he kicks them to one side. He begins to undo the buttons on my blouse while I watch him... yearning to reach out and stroke his chest... but I contain myself.

'How was your journey?' he asks mildly. He seems so much calmer now... his apprehension gone... dissolved by sexual congress.

'Fine... thank you...' I murmur... still breathless. 'Thanks once again for the first class. It is a much nicer way to travel.' I smile shyly at him. 'I have some news...' I added nervously.

'Oh?' he looks down at me as he undoes the last button... slips me blouse down my arms... and throws it on top of his discarded clothes.

'I have a job.'

He stills... then smiles at me... his eyes warm and soft.

'Congratulations... Miss Merry. Now, will you tell me where?' He teases.

'You don't know?'

He shakes his head... frowning slightly.

'Why would I know?'

'With your stalking capabilities... I thought you might have...' I trail off as his face falls.

'Merry... I wouldn't dream of interfering in your career... unless you ask me to... of course.'

He looks wounded.

'So, you have no idea which company?'

'No. I know there are four publishing companies in NY... so I am assuming it's one of them.'

'SIP'

'Oh... the small one... good. Well done.' He leans forward and kisses my forehead.

'Clever girl. When do you start?'

'Monday.'

'That soon... eh? I'd better take advantage of you while I still can. Turn around.'

I am thrown by his casual command... but do as I'm bid... and he undoes my bra and unzips my skirt. He pushes my skirt down... cupping my behind as he does... and kissing my shoulder. He leans against... I and his nose nuzzle my hair... inhaling deeply. He squeezes my buttocks.

'You intoxicate me... Miss Merry... and you calm me. Such a heady combination.' He kisses my hair. Grabbing my hand... he tugs me into the shower.

‘Ow...’ I squeal. The water is practically scalding. RICHARD C. MAST grins down at me as the water cascades over him.

And actually, he’s right. It feels heavenly... washing off the sticky Modern city morning and the stickiness from our lovemaking.

‘Turn around...’ he orders... and I comply... turning to face the wall.’ I want to wash you...’ he murmurs and reaches for the body wash. He squirts a little into his hand.

‘I have something else to tell you...’ I murmur as his hands start on my shoulders.

‘Oh... yes?’ he asks mildly.

I steel myself with a deep breath.

‘My friend José’s photography show is opening Thursday in Portland.’

He stills... his hands hovering over my breasts. I have emphasized the word ‘friend.’ ‘Yes... what about it?’ He asks sternly and too harsh.

‘I said I would go. Do you want to come with me?’

After what feels like a monumental amount of time... he slowly starts washing me again.

‘What time?’

‘The opening is at 7:30 p. m.’ He kisses my ear.

‘Okay.’

Inside my subconscious relaxes and then collapses... slumped into an old battered armchair.

‘Were you nervous about asking me?’

‘Yes. How can you tell?’

‘Merry... your whole body’s just relaxed...’ he says dryly.

‘Well... you just seem to be um... on the jealous side.’

'Yes... I am...' he says darkly. 'And you'd do well to remember that.

But thank you for asking. We'll take Charlie Tango.'

Oh... the helicopter of course... silly me. More flying... cool! I grin.

'Can I wash you?' I ask.

'I don't think so...' he murmurs... and he kisses me gently on my neck to take the sting out of his refusal. I pout at the wall as he caresses my back with soap.

'Will you ever let me touch you?' I ask boldly.

He stills again... his hand on my behind.

'Put your hands on the wall Merry. I'm going to take you again...' he murmurs in my ear as he grabs my hips... and I know that the discussion is over.

Later we are seated at the breakfast bar... dressed in bathrobes...

having consumed Mrs. Jones rather than excellent pasta alle vongole.

'More wine?' RICHARD C. MAST asks... gray eyes glowing.

'A small glass... please.' The Sancerre is crisp and delicious. RICHARD C. MAST pours one for me and one for himself.

'How's the um... the situation that brought you to NY?' I ask tentatively. He frowns.

'Out of hand...' he murmurs bitterly. 'But nothing for you to worry about... Merry. I have plans for you this evening.'

'Oh?'

'Yes. I want you ready and waiting in my playroom in fifteen minutes.' He stands and gazes down at me.

'You can get ready in your room. Incidentally... the walk... in the closet is now full of clothes for you. I don't want any arguments about them.' He narrows his eyes... daring me to say something. When I don't... he stalks off to his study.

Me! Argue? With you... Dark Shadows? It's more than my backside's worth. I sit on the barstool... momentarily stupefied... trying to assimilate this morsel of information. He's bought me clothes. I exaggeratedly roll my eyes knowing full well he can't see me. Car... phone... computer... clothes... it'll be a damn condo next... and then I really will be his mistress.

Ho yes! My subconscious has her snarky face on. I ignore her and make my way upstairs to my room so... it is still mine... why? I thought he'd agreed to let me sleep with him. I suppose he's not used to sharing his personal space... but then... neither am I. I console myself with the thought that at least I have somewhere to escape from him.

Examining the door... I find that it has a lock but no key. I wonder briefly if Mrs. Jones has a spare. I'll ask her. I open the closet door and close it again quickly. Holy Crap... he's spent a fortune. It resembles Katie's... so many clothes hanging neatly on the rail. Deep down... I know that they'll all fit. But I have no time to think about that... I have to get kneeling in the Black and White Room of - Pain... or Pleasure... hopefully this evening.

Kneeling by the door... I am naked except for my panties. My heart is in my mouth. Jeez... I thought of the bathroom he would have had enough. The man is insatiable... or maybe all men are like him. I have no idea... no one to compare him too. Closing my eyes... I try to calm myself down... to connect with my inner sub. She's there somewhere... hiding behind my inner goddess.

Anticipation runs bubbling like soda through my veins. What will he do? I take a deep steadying breath... but I cannot deny it... I'm excited... aroused... wet already. This is so... I want to think wrong... but somehow, it's not. It's right for RICHARD C. MAST. It's what he wants... and after the last few days... after all, he's done... I have to man up and take whatever he decides he wants... whatever he thinks he needs.

The memory of his look when I came in this evening... the longing in his face... his determined stride toward me like I was an oasis in the desert. I'd do almost anything to see that look again. I press my thighs together at the delicious memory... and it reminds me that I need to spread my knees. I shuffle them apart. How long will he make me wait? The wait is crippling me...

crippling me with a dark and tantalizing desire. I glance around the subtly lit room; the cross... the table... the couch... the bench... that bed. It looks so large... and it's made up of pink satin sheets. Which piece of apparatus will he use?

The door opens and RICHARD C. MAST breezes in... ignoring me completely. I glance down quickly... staring at my hands... positioned with care on my spread thighs. Placing something on the large chest beside the door... he strolls casually toward the bed. I indulge myself in a quick glimpse at him... and my heart almost lurches to a stop.

He's naked except for those soft ripped jeans... top button casually is undone and then there at his feet. Jeez... he looks so freaking hot. My subconscious is frantically fanning herself... and my inner goddess is swaying and writhing to some primal carnal rhythm. She's so ready. I lick my lips instinctively. My blood pounds through my body... thick and heavy with salacious hunger. What is he going to do to me?

Turning... he nonchalantly walks back to the chest of drawers.

Opening one... he begins to remove items and place them on the top. My curiosity burns... blazes even... but I resist the overwhelming temptation to sneak a quick peek. When he finishes what he's doing... he comes to stand in front of me. I can see his naked feet... and I want to kiss every inch of them... run my tongue over his instep... suck each of his toes. Holy shit.

'You look lovely...' he breathes.

I keep my head down... conscious that he's staring at me while I am practically naked. I feel the flush as it slowly spreads over my face. He bends down and cups my chin... forcing my face up to meet his gaze.

'You are one beautiful woman... Merry. And you're all mine...' he murmurs. 'Stand up.' His command is soft full of sensual promise.

Shakily... I get to my feet.

'Look at me...' he breathes... and I stare up into his smoldering gray gaze. It is his Dom gaze... cold... hard... and sexy as hell... seven shadows of sin in one enticing look. My mouth dries... and I know I will do anything he asks.

An almost cruel smile plays across his lips.

'We don't have a signed contract... Merry. But we've discussed limits.'

-And-

I want to re... iterate we have safe words... 'okay?'

Holy freak... what has he got planned that I need safe words?

'What are they?' he asks authoritatively.

I frown slightly at his question... and his face hardens perceptibly.

'What are the safe words... Merry?' he says slowly and deliberately.

'Yellow...' I mumble.

'And?' he prompts... his mouth set in a hard line.

'Red...' I breathe.

'Remember those.'

And I can't help it... I raise my eyebrow at him and am about to remind him of my GPA... but the sudden frosty glint in his icy gray eyes stops me in my tracks.

'Don't start with your smart mouth in here... Miss Merry. Or I will-freak it with you on your knees. Do you understand?'

I swallow instinctively. Okay. I blink rapidly... chastened. Actually... it's his tone of voice... rather than the threat... that intimidates me. 'Well?'

'Yes... Sir...' I mumble hastily.

'Good girl...' he pauses as he stares at me. 'My intention is not that you should safeword because- you're in pain. What I intend to do to you will be intense. Very intense... and you have to guide me. Do you understand?' Not really. Intense? Wow.

'This is about touch... Merry. You will not be able to see me or hear me. But you'll be able to feel me.'

I frown... not hear him? How is that going to work? He turns... and I hadn't noticed that above the chest is a sleek... flat... matt... black box. As he waves his hand in front... the box splits in half: two doors slide open revealing a CD player and a host of buttons. RICHARD C. MAST presses several of these buttons in sequence. Nothing happens... but he seems satisfied. I am mystified. When he turns to face me again... he wears his small I... have... a... secret smile.

'I am going to tie you to that bed... Merry. But I'm going to blindfold you first and...' he reveals his iPod in his hand...' you will not be able to hear me. All you will hear is the music I am going to play for you.'

Okay. A musical interlude... not what I was expecting. Does he ever do what I expect?

Jeez... I hope it's not rap.

'Come.' Taking my hand... he leads me over to the antique Hugh Hefner Naked Lady covered bed. There are shackles attached at each corner... fine metal chains with leather cuffs... glinting against the pink satin.

Oh boy... I think my heart is going to leave my chest... and I'm melting from the inside out... desire coursing through me. Could I be any more excited?

'Stand here.'

I am facing the bed. He leans down and whispers in my ear.

'Wait here... keep your eyes on the bed. Picture yourself lying here bound and totally at my mercy.' Oh my.

He moves away for a moment... and I can hear him near the door fetching something. All my senses are hyper-alert... my hearing acuter.

He's picked up something from the rack of whips and paddles by the door.

Holy cow. What is he going to do?

I feel him behind me. He takes my hair... pulls it into a ponytail behind me... and starts to braid it.

'While I like your pigtails... Merry... I am too impatient to beat you right now. So, one will have to do.' His voice is low... soft.

His deft fingers skim my back occasionally as they work down my hair... and each casual touch is like a sweet... electric shock against my skin. He fastens the end with a hair tie... then gently tugs the braid so that I'm forced to step back flush against him. He pulls again to the side so that I angle my head... giving him easier access to my neck. Leaning down... he nuzzles my neck. Tracing his teeth and tongue from the base of my ear to my shoulder. He hums softly as he does... and the sound resonates through me. Right down... right down there... inside me. Unbidden... I groan quietly.

'Hush now...' he breathes against my skin. He holds up his hands in front of me... his arms touching mine. In his right hand is a flogger. I remember the name from my first introduction to this room.

'Touch it...' he whispers... and he sounds like the devil himself. My body flames in response. Tentatively... I reach out and brush the long strands.

It has many long fronds... all soft suede with small beads at the end.

'I will use this. It will not hurt... but it will bring your blood to the surface of your skin and make you very sensitive.' Oh... he says it won't hurt.

'What are the safe words... Merry?' 'Um... yellow and red... Sir...' I whisper.

'Good girl. Remember... most of your fear is in your mind.' He drops the flogger on the bed... and his hands move to my waist.

'You won't be needing these...' he murmurs and hooks his fingers into my panties and sweeps them down my legs. I step unsteadily out of them... supporting myself on the ornate post of the bed.

'Stand still...' he orders... and he kisses my behind and then gently nips me twice... making me tense.' Now lie down. Face up...' he adds as he smacks me hard on the behind... making me jump.

I crawl onto the bed's hard... Hastily... unyielding mattress and lie down... looking up at him. The satin of the sheet beneath me is soft and cool against my skin. His gaze is impassive... except for his eyes which glow with a barely leashed excitement.

'Hands above your head...' he orders... and I do as I'm bid.

Jeez... my body hungers for him. I want him already.

He turns... and out of the corner of my eye... I watch him saunter back over to the chest of drawers... returning with the iPod and what looks like an eye mask... similar to the one I used on my flight to Atlanta. The thought makes me want to smile... but I can't quite make my lips cooperate. I am too consumed with anticipation. I just know my face is completely immobile... my eyes huge... as I gaze at him.

Sitting down on the edge of the bed... he shows me the iPod. It has a strange antenna device as well as headphones. How odd. I frown as I try to figure this out.

'This transmits what's playing on the iPod to the system in the room.'... RICHARD C. MAST answers my unspoken query as he taps the small antenna.' I can hear what you're hearing... and I have a remote-control unit for it.' He smirks his private... joke smile and holds up a small... flat device that looks like a very hip calculator. He leans across me... inserting the earbuds gently into my ears... and puts the iPod down somewhere on the bed above my head.

'Lift your head...' he commands... and I do so immediately.

Slowly... he slides the mask on... pulling the elastic over the back of my head... and I'm blind. The elastic on the mask holds the earbuds in place. I can still hear him... though the sound is muffled as he rises from the bed. I'm deafened by my breathing... it's shallow and erratic... reflecting my excitement. RICHARD C. MAST takes my left arm... stretches it gently to the left... hand corner... and attaches the leather cuff around my wrist. His long fingers stroke the length of my arm once he's finished. Oh! His touch elicits a delicious... tickly shiver. I hear him move slowly round to the other side... takes my right arm and cuffs it. Again... his long fingers linger along my arm.

Oh, my yes... I am fit to burst already. Why is this so erotic?

He moves to the bottom of the bed and grabs both of my ankles.

'Lift your head again...' he orders.

I comply... and he drags me down the bed so that my arms are stretched out and almost straining at the cuffs. Holy cow... I cannot move my arms. A frisson of trepidation mixed with tantalizing exhilaration sweeps through my body... making me wetter. I groan. Parting my legs... he cuffs first my right ankle and then my left so I am staked out... spread... eagled... and vulnerable to him. It's so unnerving that I can't see him. I listen hard... what's he doing? And I hear nothing... just my breathing and the pounding thud of my heart as blood pulses furiously against my eardrums.

Abruptly... the soft silent hiss and pop of the iPod springs into life. From inside my head... alone angelic voice sings unaccompanied a long sweet note... and it's joined almost immediately by another voice... and then more voices... Holy cow... a celestial choir... singing acapella in my head... an ancient... ancient hymnal. What in heaven's name is this? I have never heard anything like it. Something almost unbearably soft brushes against my neck... running languidly down my throat... slowly across my chest... over my breasts... caressing me... pulling at my nipples... it's so soft... skimming underneath. It's so unexpected. It's fur! Is it a large feather?

RICHARD C. MAST trails his hand... unhurried and deliberate... down to my belly... circling my bellybutton... then carefully from hip to hip... and I'm trying to anticipate where he's going next... but the music... it's in my head... transporting me... the fur across the line of my pubic hair... between my legs... along with my thighs... down one leg... up the other... it almost tickles... but not quite... more voices join... the heavenly choir- all singing different parts... their voices blending blissfully and sweetly together in a melodic harmony that is beyond anything I've ever heard. I catch one word... 'Deus'... and I realize they are singing in Latin. And still... the fur is moving down my arms and around my waist... back up across my breasts.

My nipples harden beneath the soft touch... and I'm panting... wondering where his hand will go next. Suddenly... the fur is gone... and I can feel the fronds of the flogger flowing over my skin... following the same path as the fur... and it's so hard to concentrate on the music in my head... it sounds like a hundred voices singing... weaving an ethereal tapestry of fine... silken gold and silver through my head... mixed with the feel of the soft suede against my skin... trailing over me... oh my... abruptly... it disappears. Then suddenly... sharply... it bites down on my belly.

'A-aggh-h!' I cry out. It takes me by surprise... and it doesn't exactly hurt... but tingles all over... and he hits me again. Harder.

'A-ah!'

I want to move... to writhe... to escape... or to welcome... each blow... I don't know... it's so overwhelming... I can't pull my arms... my legs are stuck... I am held very firmly in place... and again he strikes across my breasts... I cry out.

-And-

It's a sweet agony... bearable... just... pleasant... no... not immediately... but as my skin sings with each blow in perfect counterpoint to the music in my head... I am dragged into a dark... dark part of my psyche that surrenders to this most erotic sensation. Yes... I get this. He hits me across my hip. Then... he moves in swift blows over my pubic hair... on my thighs... and down my inner thighs... and back up my body... across my hips.

He keeps going as the music reaches a climax... and then suddenly... the music stops. And so - o does he. Then the singing starts again... building and building... and he rains down blows on me... and I groan and writhe. Once again... it ceases and all is quiet... except my wild breathing... and wild yearning. For... oh... what's happening? What's he going to do now? The excitement is almost unbearable. I've entered a very dark... carnal place.

The bed moves and shifts as I feel him clamber over me... and the song starts again. He's got it on repeat... this time it's his nose and lips that take the place of the fur... running down my neck and throat... kissing... sucking... trailing down to my breasts... Ah! Taunting each of my nipples in turn... his tongue swirling around one while his fingers relentlessly tease the other... I groan... loudly I think... though I can't hear. I am lost. Lost in him... lost in the astral... seraphic voices... lost to all the sensations I cannot escape... I am completely at the mercy of his expert touch.

He moves down to my belly... his tongue circling my navel... following the path of the flogger and the fur... I moan. He's kissing and sucking and nibbling... moving south... and then his tongue is there. At... a the junction of my thighs. I throw my head back and cry out as I almost detonate into orgasm... I'm on the brink... and he stops.

No! The bed shifts... and he kneels between my legs. He leans toward the bedpost... and the cuff on my ankle is suddenly gone. I pull my leg to the middle of the bed... resting it against him. He leans over to the opposite post and frees my other leg. His hands travel quickly down both my legs.

Squeezing and kneading... bringing life back into them. Then... grasping my hips... he lifts me so that my back is no longer on the bed. I am arched... resting on my shoulders. What? He's kneeling up between my legs... and in one swift... slamming move he's inside me... oh, freak... and I cry out again like a little girl that I am. I quiver hard of my impending orgasm begins... and he stills. The quiver never dies... oh-he's going to give it to me even further in deepness.

'Please!' I wail.

He grips me harder... in warning? I don't know... his fingers digging into the flesh of my behind as I lay panting... so I purposefully still. Very slowly... he starts to move again... out and then in... agonizingly slowly. Holy freak... Please! I'm screaming inside...

-And-

As the number of voices in the choral piece increases... so does his pace... infinitesimally... he's so controlled... so in time with the music. And I can no longer bear it.

'Please...' I beg... and in one swift motion... he lowers me back onto the bed... and he's lying on top of me... his hands on the bed beside my breasts as he supports his weight... and he thrusts into me... as the music reaches its climax... I fall... free fall... into the most intense... agonizing orgasm I have ever had... and RICHARD C. MAST follows me... thrusting hard into me... three more times... finally stilling... then collapsing on top of me.

As my consciousness returns from wherever it's been... RICHARD C. MAST pulls out of me. The music has stopped... and I can feel him stretch across my body as he undoes the cuff on my right wrist. I groan as my hand is freed. He quickly frees my other hand... gently pulls the mask from my eyes... and removes the earbuds. I blink in the dim soft light and stare up into his intense gray gaze.

'Hi...' he murmurs.

'Hi... yourself...' I breathe shyly back at him. His lips quirk up into a smile... and he leans down and kisses me softly.

'Well done... you...' he whispers. 'Turn over.'

Holy freak... what's he going to do now? His eyes soften.

'I'm just going to rub your shoulders.'

'Oh... okay.'

I roll stiffly onto my front. I am so tired. RICHARD C. MAST sits astride me and starts to massage my shoulders. I groan loudly... he has such strong... knowing fingers. Leaning down... he kisses my head.

‘What was that music?’ I mumble almost inarticulately.

He giggles- and thing 1960's-

‘It was... overwhelming.’

‘I’ve always wanted to freak to it.’

‘Not another first... Mr...?’

‘Indeed... Miss Merry.’

I groan again as his fingers work their magic on my shoulders.

‘Well... it’s the first time I’ve freaked to it... too...’ I murmur sleepily.

‘Hmm... you and I... we’re giving each other many firsts.’ His voice is a matter... of... fact.

‘What did I say to you in my sleep... Ch... err... Sir?’ His hands pause their ministrations for a moment.

‘You said lots of things... Merry- You talked about cages and strawberries... that you wanted more...and that you missed me.’ Oh... thank heavens for that.

‘Is that all?’ The relief in my voice is evident.

RICHARD C. MAST stops his heavenly massage and shifts so that he’s lying beside me. His head up like his one elbow. He’s frowning. ‘What did you think you’d said?’ Oh crap.

‘That I thought you were ugly... conceited... and that you were hopeless in bed.’ He creases on his brow deepens.

‘Well... naturally I am all those things... and now you’ve got me really intrigued. What are you hiding from me... Miss Merry?’ I blink at him innocently.

‘I’m not hiding anything.’

'Merry... you are a hopeless liar.'

'I thought you were going to make me giggle after sex... this isn't doing it for me.' His lips quirk up.' I can't tell jokes.'

'Mr...! Something you can't do?' I grin at him... and he grins back.

'No... hopeless joke teller.' He looks so proud of himself that I start to giggle.

'I'm a hopeless joke teller too...'

'That is such a lovely sound...' he murmurs... and he leans forward and kisses me.

'And you are hiding something... Merry. I may have to torture it out of you.'

I wake with a jolt. I think I've just fallen down some stairs in a dream... and I bolt upright... momentarily disorientated. It is dark... and I'm in the RICHARD C. MAST's bed alone. Something has woken me... some nagging thought. I glance over at the alarm clock on his bedside. It is 5:00 in the morning... but I feel rested.

Why is that? Oh... it's the time difference... it would be 8:00 a. m. in Modern city. Holy crap... I need to take my pill. I clamber out of bed... grateful for whatever it is that has woken me. I can hear faint notes from the piano. RICHARD C. MAST is playing. This I must see. I love watching him play. Naked... I grab my bathrobe from the chair and wander quietly down the corridor... slipping on my robe and listening to the magical sound of the melodic lament that's coming from the great room.

5

Shrouded in darkness... RICHARD C. MAST sits in a bubble of light as he plays... and his hair glints with burnished copper highlights. He looks naked... though I know he's wearing his PJ bottoms. He's concentrating... playing beautifully... lost in the melancholy of the music. I hesitate... watching from the shadows... not wanting to interrupt him. I want to hold him. He looks lost... sad even... and achingly lonely... or maybe it's just the music that's so full of poignant sorrow. He finishes the piece... pauses for a split second... then starts to play it again. I move cautiously toward him... drawn like the moth to the flame... the idea makes me smile.

He glances up at me and frowns before his gaze returns to his hands Oh crap... is he pissed off that I am disturbing him?

'You should be asleep...' he scolds mildly.

I can tell he's pre... occupied with something.

'So, should you...' I retort not quite as mildly.

He glances up again... his lips twitching with a trace of a smile.

'Are you scolding me... Miss Merry?'

'Yes... Mr... I am.'

'Well... I can't sleep.' He frowns once more like a trace of irritation or anger flashes across his face. With me? Surely not.

I ignore his facial expression and very bravely sit down beside him on the piano stool... placing my head on his bare shoulder to watch his deft... agile fingers caress the keys. He pauses fractionally... and then continues to the end of the piece.

What was that?' I ask softly.

Something, I have been working on-

'I'm always interested in what you do.'

He turns and softly presses his lips against my hair.

'I didn't mean to wake you.'

'You didn't. Play the other one.'

-Love story-

He starts to play slowly and deliberately. I feel the movement of his hands in his shoulder as I lean against him and close my eyes. The sad... soulful notes swirl slowly and mournfully around us... echoing off the walls. It is a hauntingly beautiful piece... sadder even than the Chopin... and I lose myself to the beauty of the lament. To a certain extent... it reflects how I feel. The deep poignant longing I have to know this extraordinary man better... to try and understand his sadness. All too soon... the piece is at an end.

‘Why do you only play such romantic music?’

I sit upright and gaze up at him as he shrugs in answer to my question... his expression wary.

‘So, you were just six when you started to play?’ I prompt.

He nods... his wary look intensifying. After a moment he volunteers.

‘I threw myself into learning the piano to please my new mother.’

‘To fit into the perfect family?’

‘Yes... so to speak...’ he says evasively. ‘Why are you awake? Don’t you need to recover from yesterday’s exertions?’

‘It’s 8:00 in the morning for me. And I need to take my pill.’ He raises his eyebrows in surprise.

‘Well remembered...’ he murmurs... and I can tell he’s impressed.

His lips quirk up in a half-smile.

‘Only you would start a course of time... specific birth control pills in a different time zone. Perhaps you should wait for half an hour and then another half-hour tomorrow morning.

So, eventually, you can take them at a reasonable time.’

‘Good plan...’ I breathe. ‘So, what shall we do for half an hour?’ I blink innocently at him.

I can think of a few things...’ he grins... gray eyes bright. I gaze back impassively as my insides clench and melt under his knowing look.

‘On the other hand, we could talk...’ I suggest quietly.

His brow creased.

‘I prefer what I have in mind.’ He scoops me onto his lap.

'You'd always rather have sex than talk...' I laugh... steadying myself by holding on to his upper arms.

'True. Especially with you.' He nuzzles my hair and starts a steady trail of kisses from below my ear to my throat. 'Maybe on my piano...' he whispers.

Oh my- my whole body tightens at the thought- Piano and his many talents- in all thing's art! Likewise- being the literary agent of the writer with 'The Longest Novel in the 21st century.'

Wow!!!

'I want to get something straight...' I whisper as my pulse starts to accelerate... and my inner goddess closes her eyes... reveling in the feel of his lips on me.

He pauses momentarily before continuing his sensual assault.

'Always so eager for information... Miss Merry. What needs straightening out?' he breathes against my skin at the base of my neck... continuing his soft gentle kisses.

'Us...' I whisper as I close my eyes.

'Hmm. What about us?' He pauses his trail of kisses along with my shoulder.

'The contract.'

He lifts his head to gaze down at me... a hint of amusement in his eyes... and sighs. He strokes his fingertips down my cheek.

'Well... I think the contract is moot... don't you?' His voice is low and raspy... his eyes soft.

'Moot?'

'Moot.' He smiles. I gape at him quizzically.

'But you were so keen.'

'Well... that was before. Anyway... the Rules aren't moot... they still stand.' His expression hardens slightly.

'Before? Before what?'

'Before... '... He pauses... and the wary expression is back... 'more.' He shrugs.

'Oh.'

'Besides... we've been in the playroom twice now... and you haven't run screaming for the hills.'

Do you expect me to?'

'Nothing you do is expected... Merry...' he says dryly.

'So... let me be clear. You just want me to follow the Rules element of the contract all the time but not the rest of the contract?'

'Except in the playroom. I want you to follow the spirit of the contract in the playroom... and yes... I want you to follow the rules... all the time. Then I know you'll be safe... and I'll be able to have you anytime I wish.'

'And if I break one of the rules?'

'Then I'll punish you.'

'But won't you need my permission?'

'Yes... I will.'

'And- if I say no?'

He gazes at me for a moment... with a confused expression.

'If you say no... you'll say no. I'll have to find a way to persuade you.'

I pull away from him and stand. I need some distance. He frowns as I stare down at him. He looks puzzled and wary again.

'So, the punishment aspect remains.'

'Yes... but only if you break the rules.'

'I'll need to re... read them...' I say... trying to recall the detail.

‘I’ll fetch them for you.’ His tone is suddenly businesslike.

Whoa. This has gotten serious so quickly. He rises from the piano and walks lithely to his study. My scalp prickles. Jeez... I need some tea. The future of our so... called relationship is being discussed at 4:44 in the morning when he’s pre... occupied with something else... is this wise? I head into the kitchen which is still shrouded in darkness. Where are the light switches? I find them... flick them on... and pour water into the kettle. My pill! I rummage in my purse that I left on the breakfast bar and find them quickly. One swallow... and I’m done. By the time I finish... RICHARD C. MAST is back... sitting on one of the bar stools... watching me intently.

‘Here you go.’ He pushes a typed piece of paper toward me... and I notice that he’s crossed some things out.

RULES

Obedience:

The Submissive will obey any instructions given by The Dominant immediately without hesitation or reservation and in an expeditious manner. The Submissive will agree to any sexual activity deemed fit and pleasurable by the Dominant excepting those activities which are outlined in hard limits (Appendix A). She will do so eagerly and without hesitation.

Sleep:

The Submissive will ensure she achieves a minimum of eight seven hours of sleep a night when she is not with the Dominant.

Food:

The Submissive will eat regularly to maintain her health and wellbeing from a prescribed list of foods (Appendix 4). The Submissive will not snack between meals... except for fruit.

Clothes:

While with The Dominant... The Submissive will wear clothing only approved by the Dominant. The Dominant will provide a clothing budget for The Submissive... which The Submissive shall utilize. The Dominant shall accompany the Submissive to purchase clothing on an ad hoc basis.

Exercise:

The Dominant shall provide the Submissive with a personal trainer four three times a week in an hour... long sessions at times to be mutually agreed between the personal trainer and The Submissive. The personal trainer will report to The Dominant on The Submissive's progress.

Personal Hygiene/Beauty:

The Submissive will keep herself clean and shaved and/or waxed at all times. The Submissive will visit a beauty salon of The Dominant's choosing at times to be decided by The Dominant... and undergo whatever treatments the Dominant sees fit.

Personal Safety:

The Submissive will not drink to excess... smoke... take recreational drugs or put herself in any unnecessary danger.

Personal Qualities:

The Submissive will not enter into any sexual relations with anyone other than the Dominant. The Submissive will conduct herself in a respectful and modest manner at all times. She must recognize that her behavior is a direct reflection of the Dominant. She shall be held accountable for any misdeeds... wrongdoings and misbehavior committed when not in the presence of the Dominant.

Failure to comply with any of the above will result in immediate punishment... the nature of which shall be determined by the Dominant.

'So, the obedience thing still stands?' 'Oh... yes.' He grins.

I shake my head amused... and before I realize it... I roll my eyes at him. 'Did you just roll your eyes at me... Merry?' He breathes.

Oh, freak.

'Possibly... depends on what your reaction is.'

'Same as always...' he says... shaking his head slightly... his eyes alight with excitement.

I swallow instinctively and a frisson of exhilaration runs through me.

'So...' Holy shit. What am I going to do?' Yes?' He licks his lower lip.

'You want to spank me now.'

'Yes. And I will.'

'Oh... really... Mr...?' I challenge... grinning back at him. Two can play this game.

'Are you going to stop me?'

'You're going to have to catch me first.'

His eyes widen a fraction... and he grins... slowly getting to his feet.

'Oh... really... Miss Merry?'

The breakfast bar is between us. I have never been so grateful for its existence than at this moment.

'And you're biting your lip...' he breathes... moving slowly to his left as I move to mine.

'You wouldn't...' I tease.' After all, you roll your eyes.' I try reasoning with him. He continues to move toward his left... as do I.

'Yes... but you've just raised the bar on the excitement stakes with this game.' His eyes blaze... and wild anticipation emanates from him.

'I'm quite fast you know.' I try for nonchalance.

'So am I.'

He's stalking me... in his kitchen.

'Are you going to come quietly?' he asks.

'Do I ever?'

‘Miss Merry... what do you mean?’ he smirks. ‘It’ll be worse for you to have to come and get you.’

‘That’s only if you catch me... RICHARD C. MAST. And right now, I have no intention of letting you catch me.’

‘Merry... you may fall and hurt yourself. Which will put you in direct contravention of rule number seven.’

‘I have been in danger since I met you... Mr... rules or no rules.’ ‘Yes, you have.’ He pauses... and his brow furrows slightly.

Suddenly... he lunges for me... making me squeal and run for the dining room table. I’m Marry to escape... putting the table between us. My heart is pounding and adrenaline has spiked through my body... boy... this is so thrilling. I’m a child again... though that’s not right. I watch him carefully as he paces deliberately toward me. I inch away.

‘You certainly know how to distract a man... Merry.’ ‘We aim to please... Mr... Distract you from what?’ ‘Life. The universe.’ He waves one of his hands vaguely. ‘You did seem very pre... occupied as you were playing.’ He stops and folds his arms... his expression amused.

‘We can do this all day... baby... but I will get you... and it will just be worse for you when I do.’

‘No... you won’t.’ I must not be over... confident. I repeat this as a mantra. My subconscious has found her Nikes... and she’s on the starting blocks.

‘Anyone would think you didn’t want me to catch you.’

‘I don’t. That’s the point. I feel about the punishment the way you feel about me touching you.’

His entire demeanor changes in a nanosecond. Gone is playful RICHARD C. MAST... and he stands to stare at me as if I’d slapped him. He’s ashen.

‘That’s how you feel?’ he whispers.

Those four words... and the way he utters them... speaks volumes.

Oh no. They tell me so much more about him and how he feels. They tell me about his fear and loathing. I frown.

No... I don't feel that bad. No way. Do I?

'No. It doesn't affect me quite as much as that... but it gives you an idea...' I murmur... staring anxiously at him.

'Oh...' he says.

Crap, he looks completely and utterly lost... like I've pulled the rug from under his feet.

Taking a deep breath... I move around the table until I am standing in front of him... gazing into his apprehensive eyes.

'You hate it that much?' he breathes... his eyes filled with horror.

'Well... no...' I reassure him. Jeez... that's how he feels about people touching him?

'No. I feel ambivalent about it. I don't like it... but I don't hate it.' 'But last night... in the playroom... you...' he trails off.

'I do it for you... RICHARD C. MAST... because you need it. I don't. You didn't hurt me last night. That was in a different context... and I can rationalize that internally... and I trust you. But when you want to punish me... I worry that you'll hurt me.'

His gray eyes blaze like a turbulent storm. Time moves... and expands and slips away before he answers softly.

'I want to hurt you. But not beyond anything that you couldn't take.' Freak!

'Why?'

He runs his hand through his hair... and he shrugs.

'I just need it.' He pauses... gazing at me with anguish... and he closes his eyes and shakes his head. 'I can't tell you...' he whispers.

'Can't or won't?'

‘Won’t.’

‘So, you know why.’

‘Yes.’

‘But you won’t tell me.’

‘If I do... you will run screaming from this room... and you’ll never- ever want to return.’ He stares at me warily. ‘I can’t risk that... Merry.’

‘You want me to stay.’

‘More than you know. I couldn’t bear to lose you.’ Oh my.

He gazes down at me... and suddenly... he pulls me into his arms and he’s kissing me... kissing me passionately. It takes me completely by surprise... and I sense his panic and desperate need in his kiss.

‘Don’t leave me. You said you wouldn’t leave me... and you begged me not to leave you... in your sleep...’ he murmurs against my lips.

Oh... my nocturnal confessions.

‘I don’t want to go.’ And my heart clenches... turning itself inside out.

This is a man in need. His fear is naked and obvious... but he’s lost...

somewhere in his darkness. His eyes wide and bleak and tortured. I can soothe him. Join him briefly in the darkness and bring him into the light.

‘Show me...’ I whisper.

‘Show you?’

‘Show me how much it can hurt.’

‘What?’

‘Punish me. I want to know how bad it can get.’ RICHARD C. MAST steps back away from me... completely confused. You would try?’

‘Yes. I said I would.’ But I have an ulterior motive. If I do this for him... maybe he will let me touch him. He blinks at me.

‘Merry... you’re so confusing.’

‘I’m confused too. I’m trying to work this out. And you and I will know... once and for all... if I can do this. If I can handle this... then maybe you...’

My words fail me... and his eyes widen again. He knows I am referring to the touch thing. For a moment... he looks torn... but then a steely resolve settles on his features... and he narrows his eyes... gazing at me speculatively as if weighing up alternatives.

Abruptly... he clasps my arm in a firm grip and turns... leading me out- of the great room... up the stairs... and to the playroom. Pleasure and pain... reward and punishment... his words from so long ago echo through my mind like his thoughts about me always having his way. Are you ready for this?’

‘I’ll show you how bad it can be... and you can make your mind up.’ He pauses by the door.’ I nod... my mind made up... and I’m vaguely lightheaded... faint as all the blood leaves my face. Grabs what looks like a belt from the rack beside the door... He opens the door... and still grasping my arm... then leads me over to the red leather bench in the far corner of the room.

‘Bend over the bench...’ he murmurs.

Okay. I can do this. I bend over the smooth soft leather. He’s left my bathrobe on. In a quiet part of my brain... I’m vaguely surprised that he hasn’t made me take it off. Holy freak this is going to hurt... I know. My subconscious has passed out... and my inner goddess is endeavoring to look brave.

‘We’re here because you said yes... Merry. And you ran from me. I am going to hit you six times... and you will count on me.’

Why the hell doesn’t he just get on with it? He always makes such a meal of punishing me. I roll my eyes... knowing full well he can’t see me.

He lifts the hem of my bathrobe... and for some reason... this feels more intimate than being naked. He gently caresses my behind... running his warm hand all over both cheeks and down to the tops of my thighs.

'I am doing this so that you remember not to run from me... and as exciting as it is... I never want you to run from me...' he whispers.

-And-

Like the irony is not lost on me. I was running to avoid this. If he'd opened his arms... I'd run to him... not away from him.

And you rolled your eyes at me. You know how I feel about that.' Suddenly... it's gone... that nervous edgy fear in his voice. He's back from wherever he's been. I hear it in his tone... in the way, he places his fingers on my back... holding me... and the atmosphere in the room changes.

I close my eyes... bracing myself for the blow. It comes hard... snapping across my backside... and the bite of the belt is everything I feared. I cry out involuntarily... and take a huge gulp of air.

'Count... Merry!' he commands.

'One!' I shout at him... and it sounds like an expletive.

He hits me again... and the pain pulses and echoes along the line of the belt. Holy shit... that smarts.

'Two!' I scream. It feels so good to scream.

His breathing is ragged and harsh. Whereas mine is almost none... existent as I desperately scrabble around my psyche looking for some internal strength. The belt cuts into my flesh again.

'Three!' Tears spring unwelcome into my eyes. Jeez... this is harder than I thought... so much harder than the spanking. He's not holding anything back.

'Four!' I yell as the belt bites me again... and now the tears are streaming down my face.

I don't want to cry. It angers me that I am crying. He hits me again.

‘Five.’ My voice is more a choked... strangled sob... and at this moment... I think I hate him. One more... I can do one more. My backside feels as if it’s on fire.

‘Six...’ I whisper as the blistering pain cuts across me again... and I hear him drop the belt behind me... and he’s pulling me into his arms... all breathless and compassionate... and I want none of him.

‘Let go... no...’ And I find myself struggling out his grasp... pushing- him away. Fighting him.

‘Don’t touch me!’ I hiss. I straighten and stare at him... and he’s- watching me as if I might bolt... gray eyes wide... bemused. I dash the tears angrily out of my eyes with the backs of my hands... glaring at him.

‘This is what you like? Me... like this?’ I use the sleeve of the bathrobe to wipe my nose.

He gazes at me warily.

‘Well... you are one freaked... up the son of a bitch.’ ‘Merry...’ he pleads... shocked.

Don’t you dare... Marry me! You need to sort your shit out...!’

-And-

With that... I turn stiffly... and I walk out of the playroom... closing the door quietly behind me.

I clasp the door handle behind me and briefly lean back against the - door. Where to go? Do I run? Do I stay? I am so mad... angry scalding tears- spill down my cheeks... and I brush them furiously aside. I just want to curl up. Curl up and recuperate in some way. Heal my shattered faith. How could I have been so stupid? Of course, it hurts.

Tentatively... I rub my backside. Aah! It’s sore. Where to go? Not his room. My room... or the room that will be mine... no... is mine... was mine. This is why he wanted me to keep it. He knew I would need distance from him.

I launch myself stiffly in that direction... conscious that RICHARD C. MAST may- follow me. It is still dark in the bedroom... dawn only a whisper in the skyline. I climb awkwardly into bed... careful not to sit on my aching and tender backside. I keep the bathrobe on... wrapping it around me... and curl up and let go... sobbing hard into my pillow.

What was I thinking? Why did I let him do that to me? I wanted the dark... to explore how bad it could be... but it's too dark for me. I cannot do this. Yet... this is what he does... this is how he gets his kicks.

What a monumental wake... up call. And to be fair to him... he warned me and warned me... time and again. He's not normal. He has needs that I cannot fulfill. I realize that now. I don't want him to hit me like that again... ever. I think of the couple of times he has hit me... and how easy he was on me by comparison. Is that enough for him? I sob harder into the pillow. I am going to lose him. He won't want to be with me if I can't give him this. Why... why... why have I fallen in love with - The - Dark Shadows? Why? Why can't I love José... or Paul Clayton... or someone like me?

Oh... his distraught look as I left. I was so cruel... so shocked by the - savagery... will he forgive me... will I forgive him? My thoughts are all - haywire and jumbled... echoing and bouncing off the inside of my skull. My subconscious is shaking her head sadly... and my inner goddess is nowhere to be seen. Oh... this is a dark morning of the soul for me. I'm so alone. I want my Mom. I remember her parting words at the airport...

Follow your heart... darling... and please... please... try not to over... think things. Relax and enjoy. You are so young... sweetheart... you have so much to experience... just let it happen. You deserve the best of everything.

I did follow my heart... and I have a sore ass and an anguished... broken spirit to show for it. I have to go. That's it... I have to leave. He's no good for me... and I am no good for him. How can we possibly make this work? And the thought of not seeing him again practically chokes me... my lust for this man.

I hear the door click open. Oh no... he's here. He puts something - down on the bedside table... and the bed shifts under his weight as he climbs - in behind me.

'Hush...' he breathes... and I want to pull away from him... move to the - another side of the bed... but I'm paralyzed. I cannot move and lie stiffly... not yielding at all. 'Don't fight me... Merry... please...' he whispers. Gently... he pulls me into his arms... burying his nose in my hair... kissing my neck.

'Don't hate me...' he breathes softly against my skin... his voice - achingly sad. My heart clenches anew and releases a fresh wave of silent sobbing. He continues to kiss me softly... tenderly... but I remain aloof and wary.

We lie together like this... neither saying anything for ages. He just - holds me... and very gradually... I relax and stop crying. Dawn comes and goes... and the soft light gets brighter as the morning moves on... and still we lie quietly.

'I bought you some Advil and some arnica cream...' he says after a - long while.

I turn very slowly in his arms so I can face him. I am resting my head on his arm. His eyes are flinty gray and guarded.

I gaze at his beautiful face. He's giving nothing away... but he keeps his eyes on mine... hardly blinking. Oh... he is so breathtakingly good... looking. In such a short time... he's become so... so dear to me. Reaching up... I caress his cheek and run the tips of my fingers through his stubble. He closes his eyes and exhales slightly.

'I'm sorry...' I whisper.

He opens his eyes and looks at me puzzled.

'What for?'

'What I said.'

'You didn't tell me anything I didn't know.' And his eyes soften with relief.'

I am sorry I hurt you.' I shrug.

'I asked for it.' And now I know. I swallow. Here goes. I need to say my piece.' I don't think I can be everything you want me to be...' I whisper. His eyes widen slightly... and he blinks... his fearful expression returning. 'You are everything I want you to be.' What?

'I don't understand. I'm not obedient... and you can be as sure as hell I'm not going to let you do that to me again. And that's what you need... you said so.'

He closes his eyes again... and I can see a myriad of emotions cross his face. When he reopens them... his expression is bleak? Oh no.

'You're right. I should let you go. I am no good for you.'

My scalp prickles as every single hair follicle on my body stand to attention... and the world falls away from me... leaving a wide... yawning abyss for me to fall into. Oh no.

'I don't want to go...' I whisper. Freak... this is it. Pay or play. Tears swim in my eyes once more.

'I don't want you to go either...' he whispers... his voice raw. He reaches up and gently strokes my cheek and wipes away a falling tear with his thumb.' I've come alive since I met you.' His thumb traces the contours of my lower lip.

'Me too...' I whisper...' I've fallen in love with you... RICHARD C. MAST.' His eyes widen again... but this time... with pure... undiluted fear. 'No...' he breathes as if I've knocked the wind out of him.

Oh no.

'You can't love me... Merry. No... that's wrong.' He's horrified.

'Wrong? Why's it wrong?'

'Well... look at you. I can't make you happy.' His voice is anguished.

'But you do make me happy.' I frown.

'Not at the moment... not doing what I want to do.'

Holy freak. This is it. This is what it boils down to...

incompatibility... and all those poor subs come to mind.

'We'll never get past that... will we?' I whisper... my scalp prickling in fear.

He shakes his head bleakly. I close my eyes. I cannot bear to look at him.

'Well... I'd better go... then...' I murmur... wincing as I sit up.

'No... don't go.' He sounds panicked.

'There's no point in me staying.' Suddenly... I feel tired... really dog... tired... and I want to go now. I climb out of bed... and RICHARD C. MAST follows.

'I'm going to get dressed. I'd like some privacy...' I say... my voice flat and empty as I leave him standing in the bedroom.

Heading downstairs... I glance at the living room... thinking how only hours before, I had rested my head on his shoulder as he played the piano.

So much has happened since then. I have had my eyes opened and glimpsed the extent of his depravity... and I now know he's not capable of love... of giving or receiving love. My worst fears have been realized. And strangely... it's very liberating.

The pain is such that I refuse to acknowledge it. I feel numb. I have somehow escaped from my body and am now a casual observer of this unfolding tragedy. I shower quickly and methodically... thinking only of each second in front of me. Now squeeze the body wash bottle. Put the body wash bottle back in the rack. Rub the cloth on the face... on shoulders... on and on... all simple... mechanical actions... requiring simple mechanical thoughts.

I finish my shower... and as I haven't washed my hair... I can dry myself quickly. I dress in the bathroom... taking my jeans and t... shirt out of my small suitcase. My jeans chafe against my backside... but quite frankly... it's a pain I welcome as it distracts my mind from what's happening to my splintering... shattered heart.

I stoop to shut my suitcase... and the bag holding RICHARD C. MAST's gift catches my eye... a modeling kit for a Blahnik L23 glider... something for him to build. Tears threaten. Oh no... happier times... when there was the hope of more. I take it out of the case... knowing that I need to give it to him. Quickly... I rip a small piece of paper from my notebook... hastily scribble a note for him... and leave it on top of the box.

I gaze at myself in the mirror. A pale and haunted ghost stares' back at me. I scoop my hair into a ponytail and ignore how swollen my eyelids are from the crying. My subconscious nods with approval. Even she knows not to be snarky right now. I cannot believe that my world is crumbling around me into a sterile pile of ashes... all my hopes and dreams cruelly dashed. No... no, don't think about it. Not now... not yet. Taking a deep breath... I pick up my case... and after placing the glider kit and my note on his pillow... I head for the great room.

RICHARD C. MAST is on the phone. He's dressed in black jeans and t... shirt. His feet are bare.

‘He said what!’ he shouts... making me jump.’ Well... he could have told us the freaking truth. What’s his number...? I need to call him... Welch... this is a real freak... up.’ He glances up and doesn’t take his dark and brooding eyes off me. ‘Find her...’ he snaps and presses the off switch.

I walk over to the couch and collect my backpack... doing my best to ignore him. I take the Mac out of it and walk back toward the kitchen...

placing it carefully on the breakfast bar... along with the Phone and the car key.

When I turn to face him... he’s staring at me... stupefied with horror.

‘I need the money that Peter got for my Beetle.’ My voice is clear and - calm... devoid of emotion... extraordinary.

‘Merry... I don’t want those things... they’re yours...’ he says in disbelief. ‘Please... take them.’

‘No RICHARD C. MAST... I only accepted them under sufferance... and I don’t want them anymore.’

‘Merry... be reasonable...’ he scolds me... even now.

‘I don’t want anything that will remind me of you. I just need the money that Peter got in my car.’ My voice is quite monotonous.

He gasps.

‘Are you trying to wound me?’

‘No.’ I frown staring at him. Of course, not... I love you.’ I’m not. I’m trying to protect myself...’ I whisper. Because you don’t want me the way I want you.

‘Please... Merry... take that stuff.’

‘RICHARD C. MAST... I don’t want to fight... I just need the money.’

He narrows his eyes... but I’m no longer intimidated by him. Well...

only a little. I gaze impassively back... not blinking or backing down.

‘Will you take a check?’ he says acidly.

‘Yes. I think you’re good for it.’

He doesn’t smile... he just turns on his heel and stalks into his study. I take a last lingering look around his apartment... at the art on the walls... all abstracts... serene... cool... cold... even. Fitting... I think absently. My eyes stray to the piano. Jeez... if I’d kept my mouth shut... we’d have made love on the piano. No... freaked... we would have freaked on the piano. Well... I would have made love. The thought lies heavy and sad in my mind. He has never made love to me... has he? It’s always been freaking to him.

RICHARD C. MAST returns and hands me an envelope.

‘Peter got a good price. It’s a classic car. You can ask him. He’ll take you home.’ He nods in the direction over my shoulder. I turn... and Peter is standing in the doorway... wearing his suit... as impeccable as ever.

‘That’s fine... I can get myself home... thank you.’

I turn to stare at RICHARD C. MAST... and I see the barely... contained fury in his eyes.

‘Are you going to defy me at every turn?’

‘Why to change a habit of a lifetime?’ I give him a small... apologetic shrug.

He closes his eyes in frustration and runs his hand through his hair.

‘Please... Merry... let Peter take you home.’

‘I’ll get the car... Miss Merry...’ Peter announces authoritatively. RICHARD C. MAST nods at him... and when I glance around... Peter has gone.

I turn back to face the RICHARD C. MAST. We are four feet apart. He steps forward...

-And-

Instinctively without conscious thought, I step back. He stops... and the anguish in his expression is palpable... his gray eyes burning.

‘I don’t want you to go...’ he murmurs... his voice full of longing.

'I can't stay. I know what I want and you can't give it to me... and I can't give you what you need.'

He takes another step forward... and I hold up my hands.

'Don't... please.' I recoil from him. There's no way I can tolerate his touch now... it will slay me. 'I can't do this.'

Grabbing my suitcase and my backpack... I head for the foyer. He follows me... keeping a careful distance. He presses the elevator button... and the doors open. I climb in.

'Goodbye... RICHARD C. MAST...' I murmur.

'Merry... goodbye...' he says softly... and he looks utterly... utterly broken... a man in agonizing pain... reflecting how I feel inside. I tear my gaze away from him before- I change my mind and try to comfort him.

The elevator doors close... and it whisks me down to the bowels of the basement and my hell.

Peter holds the door open for me... and I climb into the back of the car. I avoid eye contact.

Embarrassment and shame wash over me. I'm a complete failure.

I had hoped to drag my Dark Shadows into the light... but it's proved a task beyond my meager abilities. Desperately... I try to keep my emotions banked and at bay. As we head out onto 4th Avenue... I stare blankly out of the window... and the enormity of what I've done slowly washes over me. Shit... I've left him.

The only man I've ever loved. The only man I've ever slept with. I gasp... and the levees burst. Tears course unbidden and unwelcome down my cheeks... and I wipe them away hurriedly with my fingers... scrambling in my bag for my sunglasses. As we pause at some traffic lights... Peter holds out a linen handkerchief for me. He says nothing and doesn't look in my direction... and I take it with gratitude.

'Thank you...' I mutter... and this small discreet act of kindness is my undoing. I sit back in the luxurious leather seats and weep.

The apartment is aching empty and unfamiliar. I have not lived here long enough for it to feel like home. I head straight to my room... and there... hanging limply at the end of my bed... is a very sad... deflated helicopter balloon. Charlie Tango... looking and feeling exactly like me. I grab it angrily off my bedrail... snapping the tie... and hug it to me. Oh... what have I done?

'If Only in My Wildest Dreams'

Introduction:

In a world that all books are not allowed to be read, so they are burnt...

'It was a yearning to burn.' The computers and robots have taken over the world, nobody needs to read any of that shit, or think. Everything is at our fingertips with cell phones, iPad's, and PC's, without looking through old dusty pages, plus its agents the law to think for yourself, and read any books. We burn books like most have the burning itch to have unpredicted sex.

We burn books like most have the burning itch to have unpredicted sex now morning, like the alarm, going off to let me no so... its 7 am... on a Monday- and the year is 2070. I have great frustration with at myself as I frown at my look in the mirror, not what you call ass ugly- but days like this one you just wish you were dead... all girls no that feeling.

The feeling of worthlessness was over warming me. 'Look at this hair what a mess- I said- in my mind, rolling my eyes and making faces as I go to pick my nose.' It's just not doing what I want... I said whispering. Hell... look at it- my hair my face- and eyes, like- just freaking sucks today, I finally said it out loud- yet the cat looked like I was crazy too- for talking. Damn Harper for being sick, and lay open to me to this nightmare... of like having to do this... for her.

I don't want to but- it's for her. I feel I have too- n- all.

I should be studying for my final exams, and I am in high school girl- looking forward to graduation- intern work looks good for a job, coming up like I won't be 17 years of age until July of this year- but it looks good to have- the ass-kissing- no? All the test- all the test- God just wants to be done with it all- like which are all this week.

Yet, here I am trying to brush my hair into submission, and look somewhat cute... hard for a girl like me said by the others- not by me. I must not sleep with it wet anymore- God last night just jumped in bad nude... and masturbate 10 times, I use a vibrator, and dildo- but most of the times I use my hands, I started when I was 6- manly to get to sleep by passing out afterward- to get up... and look at all of this that you see here. at the time- 16 as of this today boys ask all the time- Bra size: 34b yah I no. Underwear type: thongs, boy shorts, when you developed pubic hair 11 Do you Shave/Wax? When did you start? 12 Do you masturbate?

Yes, with a dildo going in out coming hard over and over for some boy that you wish was real. When did you start? That why I said it- Have you had sex? Not yet- How old were you the first time? Um? That would be nice- so I would not feel like a complete loser. Have you given oral sex to a guy? How old were you the first time?

Yes, at 9-year-old... Have you been fingered? Ah yeah like when I was 10. How old were you the first time? I said it... it's true. Do you change in front of girlfriends? Family? Yes, friends and mom, and my girls. Skinnydip? Yes, with friends... the top questions boys ask me... about who they think I am.

And all they care about.

Anyways- I must not sleep with it wet. Reciting this mantra several times, I endeavor, once more about it all, to bring it under control with the brush as I finger myself- just to get the edge off- maybe getting one rubbed out before the day starts. I roll my eyes in exasperation and gaze at the pale, brown-haired girl with blue eyes too big for her face staring back at me, and give up.

My only option is to restrain my wayward hair in a ponytail and hope that I look semi-presentable. Shannia is my roommate, us- we- are just two girls trying to make it without Mom and Dad holding our hands- you know how it is- I want to be a big girl- playing house they call it. I would say that she should be the one doing this for me. But I have too... Consequently, she cannot attend the interview she'd arranged to do with me; so-o I would not blow chunks on the poor ass hole like he's some dick-some mega-industrialist tycoon that I've never heard of... you the type old crabby dick sucker. That gets joy out of betting off under the desk to girls like me, hand coffee.

Like, I just want to work for the student newspaper, do I really have to do this- for college... and get nothing out of it...? So, I have been volunteered to do this agent my well and better judgment. I know what is going to be... me getting hurt and having to come home crying, and need to come hard, in my undies- off to the side. I have final exams calls for me to do this, one essay to finish they call- yah sure you suck the man off- for it, and I'm supposed to be working this afternoon and be happy- sure. Smile and walk away- is what I do- in school, not know shit for this job- no education at all- here. Thanks... I think on the inside... but no - today- like I have to drive one hundred and seventy-five miles, me paying for it all- no question's asked- to sit down and get ass freaked- in a scene- all the way down to downtown New York in order to meet the mysterious RICHARD C. MAST of Ellie Magazine head shit of bad writing- Inc.

As a brilliant businessperson and major sponsor of our school, his time is extraordinarily precious (my school would say not me) - much more- precious than, she tells me... my teachers that is I need it with SATs- yah- right... Damn her extra-curricular activities. If I wanted that I would have suck and blowing a trumpet in the band for 6 years. It's fingering he - he.

Shannia is huddled on the couch, rubbing and humping a pillow- in the living room spread open she turns- as I should be with her... she's diddling herself as a 17-year-old will do... that just for fun- yelling making the old ass next door pissed. They creep- look at us- shaking their head to what they don't understand, just calling us the slut generation- as they sand on their verandas. Like you can do it on the veranda- of your apartment? He- he- I get it- she's open... to it... it was said. 'Mary, I'm sorry about cutting out on you. It took me nine months to get this interview... from my dick suckers at school- It will take another six to reschedule, and a repeat of my last year but I not going. I'll just drop out... it's what they want... anyways- you're dumb- I said. Come with me so-o we'll both have graduated. As an editor with honors, I can't blow this off- you shouldn't either- come on like what you have done. I would rather just masturbate all the time... okay...? I said... (You can make more doing that... she said under her breath.)

Please,' Shannia begs me in her harsh, sore throat voice for sucking one off the night before. How does she do it? Even sick she looks freaking- beautiful, strawberry blonde hair all in place and blue bright eyes, although mine looks wet and water like the way she should look doing what she has just done. 'Nice butt pug... ha- thanks she said.' I ignore my twinge of annoying sympathy for my low self-esteem. 'Of course, I'll go Shannia if you'n- me ____ here- and she points downward. You should get back to bed with me.

Would you like some Nyquil or Tylenol mixed with alcohol?' That such do it...? 'All of the above, please... Here are the questions for you, did I need to do this just to be a writer- of shit. So, her my recorder doesn't pay it back you may get pron sounds of last night. Just press record here- see the button that says recorded. Make notes, I'll transcribe it all- for you, I know you can't do that- without bitching about it.' 'I know nothing about him,' I murmur over and over, trying to find something I may like about him, and failing to quash my rising dread and fear. 'See these here the list in her hand- a crumpled piece of paper- all the questions just ask these and you'll do fine- got them from google- like what I did all the way through high school google well teach you- not your teachers, see- see you through that in a line- and you look smart to this dick- that's what it's all about kissing ass. Go, love- It's a long drive where you don't want to look bad in front of the big-time faggot.

I don't want you to be late- your right- so he's gay.' That what they say-freak him and see and let me no- nice... slut I said to her- you know it- she said back. 'Okay, I'm going- don't hurt yourself there. Get back to bed- and put that thing away or shave it. Going to eat out latter- WHAT? Food- food latter.' I stare at her fondly. Only for you, Shannia, would I do this? 'I will do it all- like all ways- good luck- G- thanks- you care? I said. And thanks to Mary - as usual, you're my lifesaver.' Getting- together with my schoolbag, I smile ironically at her, then head out the door down all the steps to the car. I cannot believe, I have let Shannia talk me into this.

Nevertheless, then Shannia can talk anyone into anything, she was the hot one in school, not me. She'll make an exceptional journalist- I am sure of it so would have I if I would have been given the chance. She's communicative, robust, convincing, quarrelsome, lovely - and she's my sweetheart, sweetie of a friend. The roads are clear wet rain covered yet, I set off from home, it's early, and I don't have to be in New York until three this afternoon to be on time. I'm not sure if my old car, well make the journey in time- she a very old gill.

Oh, a fun drive and the miles slip away as I floor the pedal- backfiring all the way. My journey's end is the headquarters of Mr. Durval's global enterprise that he so-called made all on his own doing. It's a huge 100 story office building, all curved glass, and steel, an architect's modern imaginary, with Durval wrote inconspicuously in brace over the crystal-like glass of front revolving doors, and all on the building high up.

It's a quarter to three when I come to my destination, greatly relieved that I'm not late as I walk into the mammoth - and frankly unapproachable - glass, steel, and white stonework antechamber. In arrears the solid sandstone is the desk of dark wood, a very attractive, dressed up, young girls' smile's all too creepy for my liking- enjoyably at me- like they want to know all about me- be there eye. She's wearing the sharpest charcoal suit jacket and white shirt I have ever seen. She looks immaculate. 'I'm here to see Mr. Durval.

I am - so and so- I said- yeah okay- it doesn't matter take a number; I call you when I fill it your time to see this man. So, I have to kiss your ass too do this lady she said all pissy- yes or you can walk out the door. FREAK YOU! I said to here no said me up- bossy for me- but 3 hours is too long to be puss- freaked around with. She arches her eyebrow slightly as I stand self-consciously before her. I am beginning to wish I'd borrowed one of Shannia's formal blazers rather than wear my shorts and a tank top. I have made an effort and worn my one and only skirt, my no-nonsense brown knee-length boots, and a blue sweater. For me, this is smart. I tuck one of the escaped tendrils of my hair behind my ear as I pretend, she doesn't intimidate me. 'Miss we've expected you but not looking like you roll out of bed. Please sign in here, Miss Merry, you'll want the last train over there to go up- on the left, press for the twentieth hounded floor.' She smiles kindly at me, amused no doubt about it, as I sign in - and sigh- and stop and get a dress- for this man that too old to get it up to care about me showing it all off.

'Stuff your eyes with wonder, I always say, live as if you'd drop dead in ten seconds- like most that do these days and your body is bunt on the spot in plain sight for the world to see- just like a book- no one cares about what inside of you- is all cold what on the cover- not the text just the picture. See the world... good now look at it- I don't see anything to live for- It's more fantastic than any dream made or paid for in place of work my way.'

She indicators too me and as I go past security as a GUEST- very confidently and yet shy- stamping on the forward-facing. I can't help my smirk. Surely, it's obvious that I'm just visiting. I don't fit in here at all. The train beaters with a gust of air moving past me fast- mag-lev- me with incurable swiftness to the floor in under zip time. The doors slide open to let more androids work in and out, I call them a waste of what we- you and I could be doing, and I'm in another outsized antechamber - again all glass, steel, and white sandstone. I look up at the top- seeing the sky go from blue to black... Yet to me and most this is nothing these days.

Nothing changes in my life really just a new day of shit, I inwardly sigh. Thanking the train for the ride, I walk over to the bank of silos past the two security men who are both far more vigorously dressed than me, in their blue armed suits. I'm threatened by another desk of sandstone and another young blonde- no name just a number- looks at me dressed faultlessly in black and white who doesn't even rise to greet me, or care I am there. Other to pop gum- and look at the ID- slightly- that the robot's job she said- I don't get paid to do that or think- so why do it? 'All and sundry I feel that I left something behind when he passed think in my thoughts, my grandfather said- too always' work hard.

A child or a book or a painting or a house or a wall built or a pair of shoes made- you're smart- go for your dreams even if the world is not a nice place. Or a garden planted- now looks at the world- plant things ha. Something your hand touches in some way- has meaning always, like part of your soul has somewhere to go when you die, remember that- yeah right- I roll my eyes- at that too.

'Why...? Why is it?' we go...? That was all I remember before the put him down- and let him up. I was kicking and scrambling- and the ripped me away at 10 years old- it how it has to be- MOM said. 'Too much of a cost on us taxpayers. Death and end of funds... is life. 'Miss, could you wait here the bot said, please?' She points to a seated area of white skin covered chairs. Behind the leather chairs is a spacious glass-walled meeting room with an equally spacious dark wood table and at least twenty matching chairs around it. Beyond that, there is a floor-to-ceiling window with a view of the New York skyline, that appearance out through the city on the way to the Sound. It's a spectacular panorama, and I'm temporarily paralyzed by the view and the look down all glass flooring too. Wow- I said amazed...

I sit down, fish the questions from my satchel, and go through them, inwardly cursing, Shannia for not providing me with a brief biography. I know nothing about this man I'm about to interview. He could be ninety or he could be thirty. The uncertainty is galling, and my nerves resurface, making me fidget. I've never been comfortable with one-on-one interviews, preferring the anonymity of a group discussion where I can sit inconspicuously at the back of the room. To be honest, I prefer my own company, reading a classic British novel, curled up in a chair in the campus library. Not sitting shuddering apprehensively in an immense glass and stone structure. I just rolled my eyes at myself in the many shiny objects around me just like this showing too much ass.

Like- get a hold of it- it's just a man winkie look at me in the face- why is this okay? I said to myself. Judging building for adding nudes in artwork, which is too scientific and cold-modern, I guess Old is in his thing: fit, tanned, and fair-haired to match the rest of the personnel. I only warmth is the glow of fire lights- just for show-An additional elegant thing-ie-me-bob-er, a more nude girl is compromised sexual poses' flawless girls showing it all, shit look at this compared to that- not good- not good... I see younger no-names blonde comes out of a large- acting mindless door that lights open with their barcode on their rest.

A deep breath, I stand up. 'Miss' it's time. It's like a death march I thought... with the creepy music in the background- playing in my implanted headset... adjusting automatically. Every person the whole dying world must leave something behind when he/she/it dies- it- being the no names- that are just- works that have not met the grade of IQ of 50 or less, my grandfather they are not dumb some are at 10- smoking and drugging- nothing more- just no work in them. So, this is what they do- make them drummer... hand out money for nothing- they can even come op to a child of 3 making a book or a painting or tie a pair of shoes or make them.

Otherwise, a garden planted... something your hand touched some way so your soul has somewhere to go when you die, and when people look at that tree or that flower you planted, you're there. 'Indeed,' I clear my throat- of what was hard to swallow. 'Certainly.' There, that sounded more confident- when I have voices in my hand say you'll never do SHIT. 'The RICHARD C. MAST will see you in a moment. May I take your jacket- miss the deadbeat said?' 'Oh, sure thing...' I struggle out of the jacket and was nice to the dumb- bum. Can I get you anything to eat or drink, would you like: 'Would you like tea, coffee, water- saltines?' something at all? 'Um - no- thank you- I said back to this- it- female.' This blonde- glares her eyes- at the task, she now has to do- for hardly any money- she is very young and uneducated- for a woman of her age sitting at the desk she's at doing this work; and as she asks, turning her attention back to me as she stumbles to do the simple job. Here it is- 'A glass of water. Thank you,' I murmur not looking up at her- for she a no-buddy. Olivia scurries up proximately and scurries to an entrance/exit on the other side of the room.

'Olivia, please fetch Miss Marry a glass of water.' Her voice is unyielding- and do your job- NOW. 'My request for forgiveness for her lack of- skills, Miss- she's only a 25 IQ-er, Olivia is our new intern- part of will help you suck at life program... Please be seated as I do this to for her. Our RICHARD C. MAST will be an additional five or so moments.' It doesn't matter what you do, so long as you change something from the way it was before you touched, right- the girl asked- thinking- I said- don't... she went on saying something that's like you after you take your hands away - is what matters - right. Shut up! She said too it... Olivia returns with a glass of iced water on a hot plate. Perhaps RICHARD C. MAST insists on all his employees being blonde... dumb shits...?

'Here you go, Miss.' And she dumps it down my lap... 'Thank you.' Dumb Shit! I muttered under my breath... 'We need not be let alone... the dumb one said to me... were a danger to ourselves' and others... We need to be really bothered once in a while to see if we're alive. How long is it since you were really bothered - how about now by you, About something important, about something real?' Stop asking dumb question's... I said to her... that doesn't matter in today's life. Echoing on the sandstone floor this blonde tramp over to the large desk, her heels clicking. She sits down, and they both continue their dumb ass work they don't know how to do well. I have definitely worn the wrong clothes, yet ones more - to sexy, I'm wondering idly if that's legal... do look as I do for this...?

Humm? I questioned it... buying a short low-cut dress. She seems to excel at jumping from her seat. She's more nervous than me... looking at me! Sex is all that it's about - right - it's all they want, these days. Olivia turns and says my job is done as she goes through the door. Good, now I don't have to hear that running in my ears.

Olivia has jumped up and called the trains. I don't hear the reply... to over niceness. The others turn and look at me as I get up showing way too much skin, they are all seeing all of me - upskirt shot here, some girls smile at the look of my pussyina - their dark eyes crinkling at the corners getting all they want to remember about me. 'You don't need to knock - just go in.' She smiles kindly. 'Good afternoon ladies this man said to them,' he says as he departs through the sliding door looking at all of my - eyes dropping at then up.

I trying so hard not to overwhelm my nerves, as I stand rather unsteadily. Get-together my schoolbag, I leave my glass of water and make my way to the moderately open door - to be shown the way. The door just thrust open as I stumble through - always trapping and clumsy, tripping over my own feet, and tumbling headfirst into the office - where he sits - looking at me with sex eye. Double dog freaking shit dick suck - bite me - I said - as I walked in - good - entrance miss he said... as I am still falling over my two left feet! I am on my hands and knees in the doorway to RICHARD C. MAST's office, and gentle hands are around me helping me to stand - they were his - a young hot thing that I was falling for just by the look of well that. I am so embarrassed, damn my clumsiness. I have to steel myself to glance up. Holy cow - he's so young.

He extends a long-fingered hand to me once I'm upright. 'I'm RICHARD C. MAST- are you all right would you like to sit?'

So young - and attractive, very attractive. He's tall, dressed in a fine gray suit, white shirt, and black tie with unruly dark copper-colored hair and intense, bright gray eyes that regard me shrewdly. It takes a moment for me to find my voice.

'Um- actually - 'I mutter. If this guy is over thirty, then I'm a monkey's- uncle. In a daze, I place my hand in his and we shake. As our fingers touch, I feel an odd exhilarating shiver run through me. I withdraw my hand hastily, embarrassed. It must be static. I blink rapidly, my eyelids matching my heart rate. I hope you don't mind; I am the RICHARD C. MAST.' 'Are you- so?' His voice warm sexual, perchance entertained, but it's difficult to tell from his impassive expression. He looks mildly interested, but above all, polite. 'Merry. I'm studying English Literature with my girlfriend you no, um... High school intern...' 'I see he said nicely,' I reasoned with himself some - I see the flicker of loss in the smile of his expression- given, but I'm not sure. 'Would you like to sit?' He waves me toward a white leather buttoned L-shaped couch.

His office is way too big for just one man. In front of the floor-to-ceiling windows, there's a huge modern dark-wood desk that six people could comfortably eat around. It matches the coffee table by the couch. Everything else is white - ceiling, floors, and walls except, on the wall by the door, where a mosaic of small paintings hangs, thirty-six of them arranged in a square.

They are exquisite - a series of mundane, forgotten objects painted in such precise detail they look like photographs. Displayed together, they are breathtaking.

'A local artist. Trouton,' says - when he catches my gaze.

'They're lovely. Raising the ordinary to extraordinary,' I murmur, distracted both by him and the paintings. He cocks his head to one side and regards me intently.

'I couldn't agree more, Miss King,' he replies, his voice soft and for some inexplicable reason, I find myself blushing.

'I feel I've known you so many years?' 'For the reason that I like you,' she said, 'and I don't want anything from you.'

Apart from the paintings, the rest of the office is cold, clean, and clinical. I wonder if it reflects the personality of the Adonis who sinks gracefully into one of the white leather chairs opposite me.

I shake my head, disturbed at the direction of my thoughts, and retrieve Katie's questions from my satchel. Dropping it twice on the coffee table in front of me.

Next, RICHARD C. MAST says nothing, waiting patiently - I hope - as I become increasingly embarrassed and flustered. I set up the mini-disc recorder and am all fingers and thumbs when I pluck up the courage to look at him, he's watching me, one hand relaxed in his lap and the other cupping his chin and trailing his long index finger across his lips. I think he's trying to suppress a smile.

'Sorry,' I hesitated, about me - being me. 'I'm not used to all of this - or always like this - at least I try not to be.' 'Take as much time as you want, Miss,' he says.

'Once you have taken so-o much worry to set up the recorder on your phone - you ask me now?' 'Do you mind if I record your answers - that was my first question?' I flush up some - beat red. I flutter my eye at him softly and sweetly, unsure what to say or do in front of this young attractive man, and I think he takes misfortune on me for the reason that he sympathizes at my age - and sheepishness. He's playful, mocking, full of fun and life, giving me, I hope not to just cut my wrists with safety scissors - for being dumb.

'No, I don't mind at all.' This is what I said. 'Did my girlfriend - explain what the interview was for?' Same 10 question all you kids ask - I get it. 'Oh...!'

'Surely, to give the impression in the matriculation issue of the student newspaper - I have to do this part of the graduating - thing... as I shall be discussing the grades at this year's graduation ceremony - with the higher up.' Oh - um-hum!

This is news to me, ha - not really - your part of my program at the school - yep I said. I frowned some, uninteresting my naughty thoughtfulness back to what I was asked to do - the job. Besides I'm momentarily pre-engaged by the thought that someone, not much older than I - okay, maybe like I'm 17 he's 30 years or so, and okay, mega-successful, likes me a little- like is going to present me with my degree- if I do all that he asks- ALL.

'Good,' I swallow nervously. 'I have some questions, RICHARD C. MAST.' I smooth a stray lock of hair behind my ear.

My cheeks heat at the realization- he's looking at me- like a boy that wants a hot heated horny to hook up, and I sit up, and fair my shoulders show my dress is not showing too much- in an attempt to look taller- and doing so- his eyes move down- showing that now- just more threatening- kill him with sex and I have him eating me out- my hand that is. Yeah- that's the saying... 'I supposed you might,' he says, disapproving. He's amused at me- as he is looking me over with a- lot of intentions. Pressing the start button on the recorder, I try to look professional. I think- about all the books my granddad had all lost in the great fires, of things not to be known... it's all on here now- I look at my I phone/pad 20 on my wrist licked into my brain waves.

All that is need to be smart is done for you... at the swap of a finger. 'There must be something in books, something we can't imagine, to make a woman stay in a burning house; there must be something there, there is not the law said as they put my grandmother down- with them in flam. You don't stay for anything- the man in red and black said.' Remember the stories.

I snap out of my daydream- of all that is him- and the past. 'You're very young to have amassed such an empire. To what are you in debt too with your success?' Like a god? No... I peep up at him- biting my lip. His smile is rueful, but he looks vaguely disappointed.

Yet- 'If you hide your lack of knowledge, no one will hate on you and you'll never- ever learn- from it.' 'Maybe you're just fortunate.' This isn't on Katie's list of things to do. However, he's so superior. His eyes flare momentarily in surprise. 'Business is all about individuals- dumber than smart, Merry, and I'm very good at judging people- I can see what you are and what you'll do for me already. 'If you hide your ignorance, no one will hit you and you'll never acquire anything.'

I know how they tick you and me- how they think- and what you're thinking now about me Miss, what makes the show, what makes them cleverer, what motivates them and was doesn't, and how to incentivize them. I play the game to a point- you get what I am saying- I don't have to act- they all just want me- and want to me be... for me being me. I am everything more than a God... to my pupates. So, I am a girl on a string for you- know you do as I say or walk. I see- I said shy biting my lip harder... as the strain of his tone.

I personally hire an extraordinary team... I would not stand for less than that. 'If not, they can take their ass out my door and not waste my time, I have no time for shit on a silver plat- Miss- passed off as good food- aka good work-in this case.' and I give compensation well- to those that earn it.

Um- I said along- 'With school turning out more racers, steeplechasers, competitors, tinkerers, grabbers, snatchers, fliers, and swimmers instead of examiners, critics, knowers, and creative creators, the word 'scholarly,' unquestionably, technologically advanced the swear word it is worthy to be.' I get what your saying- I have always done more than other girls. Um You do know this is going to a paper- right? Word or word...? Um... he said that's cute and a sweet thought.

He pauses and fixes me with his somber stare- yet lustful- and unfulfilled in his own accomplishments- there was something missing- with him I thought. 'My certainty is to attain victory and many trumpets in any structure one has to make oneself dominant of that structure... I know it inside and out- just like felling you out inside and out, (That's what he was doing felling me out.) -know every detail- about a young woman.

'I work firm and freak hard- whit the ones that want to freak, very hard. I make decisions based on reason and truths. Figuring all the ass holes and pussies in the process.' Um- like- do you want me to write that down word or word? Sure...! He said- I am so sick of this... same things by girls like you... what do you want to know... I have an ordinary gut character, that can spot and encourage a good dense inkling and good individuals. The end result is, it's always down to good society.'

'I don't contribute to luck or chance or what some call blessings, Miss. I and I only have done this... The firmer I work the better breaks I seem to have- by curing out those that believe in something that is not real to me. It really is all about having the right individuals on your side and point in the right direction their energies for that reason.

'You sound like someone that has to have full a control not letting it all go till you say or time is do.' The words are out of my mouth before I can stop them, for sounding too sexual.

'Oh, I exercise control to in other ways, I said to him,' I bet you do he said, with a trace of wit in his sweet smile. I look at him, and he holds my gaze steadily, impassive. My heartbeat quickens and my pussy. tightens, and my face flushes again and he feels me in. I wish he'd stop doing that... looking at me like he wants to freak hard... and not stop until I come 10 or more times on him. Why? Why does he have such a demoralizing result on me, yet so flawless... in everything he says. Um- He continues, his voice soft.

His overwhelming good-looks maybe. The way his eyes intensity blue at me. The way he strokes his index finger in and against his lower lips then touching my face with the other its right... sweet hot steamy lust. 'Do you feel that you have an enormous power of your girls to do as you say?' Taking them for your bitches? You're not like most school girls I had in here... I like that you don't mind speaking your mind, yet I would have to teach you to be humble... wouldn't I? -And obedient... he said. I immense power... of all my workers in here and out... developed by promising control over all things.

You were not born into this I would say- you need to stick to the page. It's secret... in that, its reveries that you made your money by having your mom and dad hand it to you?' Nah... cute... go on, he said.

My mouth drops open- when he said you need to shut the freak up. I am staggered by his lack of unpretentiousness; you see... punk kids like you piss me off... so... you want me to freak you has nothing to do with me getting this job? 'Sure, it doses... yet you have to be right- in all ways. What are the ways- yell see in time?' This is recorded you no... I said shaking my legs together by his hand touching me softly.

'It's all about the influence and feeling it, if you will, with me. If I were to decide, that I was no longer involved in the communications occupational and sell up, twenty-five thousand individuals would skirmish to make their hypothecation expenditures after a month or so has passed.' 'I employ over fifty thousand public, Miss. That gives me a certain sense of obligation to do whatever I do, the way I want to do it, the and how- when, and why... it's all my say... or no say at all.' You get that- Marry Shah? He said sternly.

'Do I brother you- sir-asking a dumb question, that I have to ask for your freaking program that I give jack shit about... because really, I could be home playing with myself right now... and coming in some boy's photo- I don't need this?'

~*~

'Don't you have a board to answer to?' I ask, disgusted. Why you- I don't have them- your answer to me... and me alone... I over rolled them, and pushed them out- it's all my say. 'I own my establishments, they don't- why the hell would I have ass wipes tell me how to do my shit. I am the Trump of my day and age... what do you say about that? I can go if this is too hard on you? He just smiled. As I lean forward showing my boobs some...just some. I don't have to answer to a board.' If that was the dumb question.

He raises an eyebrow at me just muttering on about nothing. I flush, even more, unquestionably you're the God, here right? Cute Miss... move on, he said. I would know this if I had done some research. Not knowing all about me shows that your shy and weak... and have a lack of respect for who I am, he's so arrogant- I thought. I change tack, and see that I am not even halfway done... 'Do you have anything you love to do outside of your work?' 'Like - That's the question- go for it...'

'I have diverse hobbies, Miss.' A hint of a smile touches his lips- yet-those eyes are still locked into mine- not letting go. 'Very wide-ranging.' And for some reason, I'm mystified and frenzied by his firm stare into my heart looking into my eyes... wet at this point from being reamed to hard. His eyes are ablaze, kind of like mine with some fantastic and nasty sexual thoughts of him just pounding the shit out of me with his lusty sex making.

'Do you believe in love at first sight?' Why did I ask? 'Just curiosity...!' He said... looking in my love-stricken, and totally lovesick eyes. Yes, I was taken back by him... yet could not show it... 'Nonetheless, if you work so hard, what do you do unwind- or just relax?' He smiles, revealing textbook and twilight novel white teeth so right yet so wrong, I stop breathing and forget how too - like. He really is beautiful- for an older man- I felt all hot down under. No one should be this good-looking, and make a young lady feel this way about herself. It's just not fair for us girls.

'Well, to 'chill out' as you put it - I sail, I fly, I indulge in various physical pursuits.' He shifts in his chair. 'I'm a very wealthy man, Miss King, and I have expensive and absorbing hobbies.' I peek swiftly at Katie's questions, wanting to get off this subject of sex and work. 'You invest in engineering. Why, precisely?' Did I enquire the thought- why? Why- does he make me so uneasy, anxious, nervous and troubled. 'I like to form things into submission bending and shipping them.'

I myself like to know how all things work to crack all that it is- to see- what makes it tick: what makes things tick, how to construct and deconstruct. As well as I have a love of ships. 'What can I say?' one thing I have not cracked it a woman's mind... 'That thuds of a sound to me like your heart speaking rather than reason and specifics.' 'Though there are individuals who would say I don't have any emotions of warmth- that I am just cold and heartless.' He stares appraisingly at me and his mouth coincidences up, well said- perchance. 'For the reason that they know me well- or so they think they do.' His lip ringlets in an ironic beam. 'Why would they say that?'

'I'm seventeen and I'm crazy or so they say- yet smart enough to be here. My grandfather said the two always try. When people ask your age, he- said, always say seventeen and insane- it we lighten them.'

I went on asking- would you say that you're someone, that makes- friend easily; or that you have any? Otherwise are you easy to get to know?' Plus, I regret the question as soon as I say it. It's not on Katie's list, it was on mine to see if he was at all like me one or less true friends.

'I'm a precise secluded person, Miss. I for one go a long way to defend- my disclosure. I personally, don't often give dialogs out too public,' he's voiced softens as the sentence went off into a long one on like lost in a rambling thought. 'Why did you come to an understanding to do this one then?'

'The decent writer touches' on life often like a lusting young girl.

The unexceptional ones run a quick hand over her. Feeling in all the voids, the bad ones' rape her and leave her for the bugs to eat away the leftovers.' So- for all aims and determinations, I couldn't get Katie off my back.

I know how stubborn Katie can be. That's why I'm sitting here wriggling- unpleasantly under his all-pervading gaze- that is yet so perfect when I should be studying for my exams- or just doing what she was doing herself- right? 'Like- she asked again and again, and harried my PR folks, and yours truly respects that kind of stubbornness.'

'You also invest in unindustrialized knowhow. Why are you absorbed- in this area of writing when there are no good books anymore- is it all sexed up media and shit you want to give out to horny kids to read less than 3 lines on their buzzing boxes- to kill their brains even more?' 'I have to put up with it- Miss- for its sales... SEX, DUGS, and be-bop-pop music are what it's all about- yet I want more out of your text- if you work for me.'

'NOT- All visuals... without gluten...?' 'We can't consume money if- there is no bread, Miss, and there are too many people on this planet who don't have enough to eat- that is good for you.' You get what I am saying to you?' Is it something you feel zealously about? Like - Nursing the worlds poor do you help out the one in this county that are in need?'

'That sounds very humanitarian... sure- whatever they want to suck out of me... right?'

Whatever looks good... He moves his shoulders up and down in a way that was not okay to me. 'Feeding the world's poor, I can't see the financial benefits of this, it's discerning business,' he murmurs, though I think he's being insincere. It doesn't make sense - only the virtue of the idyllic. I peek at the next question that is on my list made by Katie, disorderly by his arrogance I shudder to look up. 'Is there a method to your madness?'

I asked the question. If so, what is it?' I really don't have a method to the way I do things- I just make it work- for I make it work- how is that? Maybe a supervisory belief - Carnegie's: 'A man who gets the ability to take full ownership of his own mind, may take proprietorship of whatsoever else to which he is justly permitted.' I'm very extraordinary, single-minded. I like order- of myself- and all other things in this thing we call life, and those all around me.'

'You come off like the decisive purchaser.' 'I want to earn to possess- them, but yes, bottom line, I do.' 'So-o you want to possess things?' You are a control freak. 'I am... if you want to say I am Miss. Say what you like really- they all do your age.' He smiles, but the smile doesn't touch his eyes.

Again, this is at odds with someone who wants to feed the world, so I- can't help thinking that we're talking about something else, but I'm absolutely mystified as to what it is. I swallow hard. The temperature in the room is rising or maybe it's just me. I just want this interview to be over.

Surely, Katie has enough material now. I glance at the next question.

'You were adopted- like me, there was a story that came over for- another county other than the US. Is that true- or not? Do you think your past made who you are today? Too personal? Yes- but I go there- it has not... I made me. Oh, this is, asking too much... I gaze at him in the love needing eyes, hoping he's not offended- by my stupid. His brows channel together downward and arch. My curiosity is annoyed by him I could tell... 'I have no way of knowing.' 'How old were you when you were approved into a stable home?' I was 5 and used, my mother. 'That's a matter of public record, Miss- you can get that anywhere.' His tone is harsh. I flush up yet again. Crap... I say in my head- yet he heard that also. They all can the ones that monitor all and everything I do, I thought and actions.

I move on quickly... doing whatever it is I am doing. Yes of course - if I had known this, I was doing this interview, and didn't want to be- and the- school voices hearing was saying, I was losing grading... I would have done some research more now if I did not shape up. 'You've had to lose of family life for your work life... would you say that is so-o?'

He said: 'I'll embrace on to all God's creatures tight one day. I've got one finger on it now; that's a beginning- by the banning all that you call- literature. I am the reasons as to why all books were a band, I want complete control.'

Why do you not want us to read? Why- is the question that you have to crack. If you don't get it- then neither do I. He said... 'That's not a question- or anything to ask.' He's terse me some, with his long lines of wording rambling.' Apologetic I was to this...' I wriggle some in my set feeling wet down there, and he's made me feel like an errant child. I try again. 'Have you had to sacrifice family life for your work?'

'I have a family. I have a brother and a sister and two loving parents. I'm not interested in extending my family beyond that.' 'So-o are- your quire/ gay...?' I rolled my eyes knowing that was not on the list nevertheless, I wanted an A on my report. I may have had a past that I don't like but it was never with another man.

'What are you gay?' He said... I know that you have kissed, and made oral love to a girl your roommate Katie, by your racing thoughts, I heard it all- and don't hold it agent you... why do you with me? RICHARD C. MAST...? Has nothing to do with the sex or whom you have that with... now does it.'

He inhales suddenly thinking and sees my going down on a girl in his- mind, and I cringe, mortified... my thoughts... Crap! I said, yet once more in my mind to cover up. Why, didn't I employ some kind of filter before, I read this straight out? How can I tell him I'm just reading the questions? Damn Katie and her curiosity, said this in my mind, that it would be okay to say to him!

~*~

'No, Miss, I'm not the way you are- and your young teen why's.' Yet I can see having fun when you're young. And work hard when you're not. He raises his one eyebrow, with an unruffled glow in his eyes. He does not look pleased, about me and my girlie past- like he wanted me or something. I fastly said- I- a man too...The voices in my head... giggle at this point knowing. You're a hopeless romantic,' he said that all not knowing or knowing what you want. The same things could be in the 'business premises families' nowadays. The same immeasurable feature and awareness could be projected through the radios and televisions, but are not. 'It would be funny if it were not serious. It does not book you need, it's some of the things that once were in books.

No, no it's not booked at all you're looking for! Take it where you can - find it, in old phonograph records, old motion pictures, and in old friends; look for it in nature and look for it in yourself. Books were only one type of receptacle where we stored a lot of things, we were afraid we might forget. There is nothing magical in them at all. The magic is only in what books say, how they stitched the patches of the universe together into one garment for us. Of course, you couldn't know this, of course, you still can't understand what I mean when I say all this. You are intuitively right, that's what counts.

'I apologize. It's um... written here.' It's the first time he's said my name. My heartbeat has accelerated, and my cheeks are heating up again.

Nervously, I tuck my loosened hair behind my ear. He cocks his head to one side slightly. 'These- 'ant' your own questions, are they?' They are not... I said back. The blood drains from my head, and I feel as if I passed out some- going all black. Oh no, it flashed past in my head. 'Katie - Miss. - she assembled the queries to go on with.' She rushed in with her wording- 'Nobody listens any more. I can't talk to the walls for the reason that, they're screaming at me, walls -those things you look at all the time like cells and notebooks- 'I can't talk to my loved ones overall this'- he said; she listens to the walls. I just want someone to hear what I have to say. And maybe if I talk long enough it will make complete sense. Then I asked it as a lost little schoolgirl want more- saying- 'Then I want you to teach me to comprehend what I read.' 'Are you, colleagues, on the student paper?'

'No, she's my roommate not my love of marge- were just leaving together.' Oh, rat crap, I said in my mind- yet I think he knows. I have nothing to do with the student paper, the girl said, he could see snapshots of Katie playing with herself not want to be a part of all this... It's her extra-curricular activity I said, not mine as of this moment.

My face is aflame in embarrassment- of diddling. He rubs his stubbed hair chin, in the quiet debate, his blue eyes assessing me. 'Did you volunteer to do this interview?' he asks, his voice deadly quiet. Hang on, who's hypothetical to be interrogating whom, His eyes tingle into me- like, and I'm obliged to answer with the certainty.

'I was conscripted to this... She's not well.' My voice is weak and - apologetic, for her... yet they know the truth. 'We're not finished here, Andrea. Please cancel my next meeting.'

Where are you from? A small town- she said along with this- Small towns are funny places, everybody thinks they know everybody. They bought, they sold, live in fear of getting old getting cold. Life to death, it's all a myth just a wish, only to walk in the dark, to make their mark, in the life they embark.

Yet they know what is so, nowhere to run nowhere to go, they come - and go, with nothing to show. With some that are high and some low. However, they always know narrow minds never change, only to rearrange, in the exchange. Memories never fade, and the ones that make their lies get paid. It's all slipping away from day to day. There is always someone with something to say. Whatever come whatever may, it's just another day... in a small town, with dreams going in the ground, with only names on rocks to be found.

Were one person runs it all and is crowned, we dance like fools we are - her clowns. That's just life bowing down to a small town, it's just the words going around. With so much doom and gloom, lonely nights in a room.

'That explains a great deal.' He said...

'RICHARD C. MAST, forgive me for interjecting, but your next meeting is in two or - four minutes.' 'You don't have to burn books to destroy a culture. Just get people to stop reading them.' He said. The girl from before is back speaking out of context. She's appears lost popping in and out. He turns his head slowly to face her and raises his eyebrows. She flushes bright pink in the face at the why I and he is treating her lack of life. Oh good... you did what was asked of you... good for you... no go be somewhere. It's not just me... or kids getting dumb-er...? I asked...

'Where were we, Miss?

'Some individuals turn sad unpleasantly early in their life. Non-singular motive, it gives the impression, but then again, they seem almost to be innate that way. The staining unceremonious, tire quicker, exclamation more rapidly, evoking lengthier and, as I say, get melancholy younger than anyone else in the ecosphere. I know, for I'm one of them, back in the days of before.' 'Please don't let me keep you from anything.' Say all that is on your mind. 'Very well, RICHARD C. MAST,' then, he frowns some in his long chat to me and turns his consideration back to the rambling on.

She said: 'There has to be something in books, something we can't visualize, to make a lady stay in a scorching house; there must be- something there that we all need something more unexplained.'

Oh, we're back to 'Miss' now.

He murmurs... on getting softer in his voice, and then he gazes- intensely into my love-stricken eyes; all humor was gone when he did that and we locked, and bizarre muscles deep in my lower than my belly clench suddenly in hard lust. His blue eyes are alight with the wicked curiosity of all, that is me and inside my- heart, soul, and more.

Which I should be studying for now rather than sitting in your palatial, swanky, sterile office, feeling uncomfortable under your penetrating gaze.

But you can't make people listen. They have to come 'round in their own time, wondering what happened and why the world blew up around them.

It can't last...

'Don't you look so guiltless- over all that took place, why didn't you give me a biography, he made me feel like such an idiot for economical on the basic- investigation.' Katie locks a hand to her mouth. Saying: 'Jeez, babe, I'm sorry - I didn't think about it all the way through.' I feel some grumpiness coming over me with my changing mood.

'Typically, he was well-mannered, prescribed, to some extent stuffy- like he's old before his time. He doesn't dialog like a man of twenty-something. How old is he anyway?' 'Twenty-seven. Jeez, I'm sorry, Merry, I should have briefed you, but I was in such dread. Let me have the mini chip for your headset, and I'll start transliterating the interview, it's the least I can do.' Hell, you just want to replay the video admit it! 'U_NO_IT!' She flashed in my mind, as text to read like a hologram, yet I could see it in front of my eyes passing by like a ticker.

'You look better. Did you eat your dehydrated soup- and mac and- cheese?' I ask her to move to food not sex to change the subject. That's all you do anymore is eat, sleep, bitch about that and C*M!

Yepper- and I'm-a proud of it- she said- humping her pillow!

‘Certainly, and it was delightful, enjoyable, and lovely, as usual. I’m having the sensation of feeling much better than I did.’ She smiles at me in gratitude. I check my watch. ‘I have to run, I can still make my shift at Macy’s, as a clerk, I don’t even think; I well- shower off, I’m going to just come home and do this more- like, um- so why bother... right...?’

Um- yeah- that turns me on- I said... NOT! You’re getting to be lazy and gross! Yah but you love me so... ‘Merry, you’ll be exhausted- to see me tonight I just know it.’ ‘I’ll be fine, until you get back, all by myself- a lot in my wandering thoughts. I’ll see you later... she runs out the door slip on a dress with nothing under it.’

Katie- I’m the shit at any DIY. I’ve worked at Macy’s since I started working when I was 14. It’s the major self-determining man/woman’s wear store in the New York area, and over the four years I have worked here for too long, I have come to know a little bit about most everything we sell - underwire to even I don’t wear them ever- although unluckily, I leave all that to my dad to say it’s wrong.

Merry- I’m much more of a curl-up-with-a-book-in-a-comfy-chair-by-the- fire-with-coffee-kind-a- of-a girl, and have everything in its place on me and of me, yet she works for me.

Katie- I’m glad I can make my shift, to have some money to play with at- the end of the week. I bet I could buy you for a mill. He said to me... Katie and you let him? Yes... I said. To be there whenever he wants, she asked.

No comment... I did I give- her.

I am home looking over my report it gives me something to have my- emphasis on other them all of him- all. We’re eventful - it’s the start of the summertime of year, and folks are redecorating their homes. My friends that I work with were happy to see me, as always... it’s become custom with us.

‘Marry Sue! I thought you weren’t going to make it today- I was going in- to work a JC Penny’s at 5 ‘till-10.’ And then it back home to be with my cuddle bug, she looks forward to me... ‘My tasks of suck didn’t take as long as I thought. I can do a couple of hours of this I said lost in the thoughts of him- and then her and then him and then- him- her- him- her- aww.’

‘I’m really pleased to see you, it was him- look down at me I am looking- up so much small, he’s just so-o right.’ She’n he starts re-stocking shelves for me say that a short girl should not be doing this job, and I'm soon absorbed in the task, yet lost in love- of being in love. And- aw- yes with him... I stumble backward and he saves me for falling... like to my death... or something... it was sweet. When I arrive home later, Katie is wearing headphones, see all that happen, she is pissed, and working on her laptop, frantically editing by down report that I was okay with leaving as is.

Her nose and puss-puss still pink for having a head could for giving- wellhead to random high school boys, the day before- she a good kid what can I say- it pays, but she has her unfiltered wording into a story now, so she's focused and typing furiously run-ons. I flush, by her and the thoughts of him also... I was feeling both.

I'm methodically exhausted - dog-tired- by the long drive back home- even if I was looking over the past days of my life on the windshield screen of the car, the exhausting think about the interview, she had my pc on the luster rock tabletops by my bed, and my c*m covered dildo at her feet, she thinks that more loving or something to us mine.

I slump on to the couch with for more- sexy time, foreplay and boob- playing, thinking about the essay I have to finish and all the studying I haven't done today because I was holed up with... him and getting her and me off more than 50 times today- yet that is the norm. I flush, and my heart rate inexplicably increases with ever stock in and out of my puss, and her rubbing my clit- that wasn't the reason, surely, He just wanted to show me around so I could see that he was lord of all he surveyed, and I was thanking him and that man too. I realize I'm biting my lip, and I hope Katie doesn't notice. But she seems absorbed in her text. I see he over there giving me the eye - He obviously wanted to spend more time with you, they said- why not take it one noise teacher said.'

I should have- but I feel the task was done to its fullest-no?

'Yes'- 'we all do.'

'You've got some good things said here, Merry, so well done, is- what the team say going sitting in the broad room at school as there were reading the copy on their handheld notebooks. I can't believe you didn't take him up on his offer to show you around. I hear what you mean about formal, here in your writing a little to stuff-ie said the same one.

That's fine I would rather have that then what I have been getting - with - the other girls it was nothing but sexed up sex - and sex talk, so I'll take this over having to read that. Yet he has asked for you - not them to be with him more... do you want it? Did you take any notes, on being his girl?' She asks.

She gives me a short-lived puzzled look, as to why I have made it in.

'Um... no, I didn't,' I said.

Why?

'I didn't think it needed to be that also, to be a writer.'

'That's fine I see the point your making. I made a fine article with this... then right? Good-looking son of a bitch, isn't he? Said the one... yah why her. I overhear when walking out the door getting a pat on the back by the older woman that had some brains.' 'I suppose so, I said looking at her and shyly smiling.' I try hard to sound neutral, and I think I succeed, yah no. 'Oh come on, Marry - even you can't be immune to his looks.'

She arches an eyebrow perfectly at me, in the cute way that only she - can. Crap is what I said! I distract her with flattery, and sweetness, always a good ploy on this girl who loves me for doing such. 'You probably would have got a - lot more out of him, if you would have done what you did to me with him and on him - she said.' Think of something - quick, I knew what she was going to ask - and I thought quickly. 'So, what did you really think of him?' Damn it, she's nosey. Why can't she just let this go, about me and him, and what I have to do. 'I doubt that, Merry.

Come on - he's nearly taking over your job. Given that I personally - imposed this on you at the last minute, you did very well then.' She glances up at me speculatively. I make a hasty retreat into the kitchen.

'You, fascinated by a man, more than me and what I have to give and - gave you. That's a first,' she snorts, you give me more than what I boy can. She rolled her eyes at me. 'He's very driven about what he really wants in life unlike you, you have no drive to do extortionately, yet unlike you here is controlling, and arrogant with me - scary really, how to overpower he is... but very alluring. I can understand the fascination,' I add truthfully, as I peer 'round the door at her hoping this will shut her up once and for all. I started gathering the makings of a sandwich so she can't see my face, as I walk to the counter, there all no walls everything is see-through glass, even the bathroom is open to the world outside.

Dumb- 'Why, did you want to know if your gay or not, incidentally, that was the most embarrassing question, I am not I just love you're for you get me, I was mortified.' I scowl with my nose wrinkling at the memory, of seeing this in my eyes passing by like a movie clip- like It was so-o embarrassing. The whole thing was uncomfortable. I'm glad I'll never-ever-ever- have to lay eyes on him again.'

'Oh, Marry Sue, it can't have been that bad- yah no. I think he sounds- quite taken with you, like love-ie and shit.' Taken with me, what's that mean, now don't be ludicrous, in jumping the gun. 'Would you like a sandwich,' 'ha- that all I do for you have sex with you and make you a sandwich- and do your chores''.'

'Please- and think.'

'Yah- yah- yah- suck it she said. 'You don't have one or I would.'" I- said back. I curl up in my bed with her, wrapping my throw around me, that she made me in 8th grade, then I close my eyes, with her around me, and I'm instantly asleep, could he do this for me I thought before the lights went out.

That night I dream of dark places, of loss, and death, and sadness.

For the rest of the week, I throw myself into my studies and my shitty- ass job that sucks hairy balls.

Katie is busy too do her and, compiling about her last publication of- her student in the schools weekly, E-paper; before she has to surrender it to the new editor while also shoving for her finals. Damn, but that girl was in the wrong place at the wrong time in the wrong century with her work life, you stay home back in the 2,000's and play-with-yours back then, not these days, were a girl wants to be independent.

By the time I finish, it's midnight, and Katie has long since gone to- bed. I make my way to my room, exhausted, but pleased that I've accomplished so much on a Monday. Basically, she's bored and wants something to occupy her time, but she has the attention span of a guppy. It'll be something new next week.

So, I call my mom using my mind as a phone, to check on her, but- also so she can wish me luck for my final exams. She proceeds to tell me about her latest venture into pot making and art- that so bad she can't put it into words. My mother is all about new business ventures, that are flopping.

Katie- By Friday, she's much better the day before I felt, and I no- longer have to endure the sight of her PJs, that should have just stayed off. We don't talk all that much more that evening, to my relief. Once we've eaten, I'm able to sit at the banqueting table with Marry and, while she works on her article, I work on my essay about the Holocaust.

Merry- hard to chat, think about how- leaving her behind was wrong in- her mind- I hesitate, and I have Mom's full attention. She, my mother that is worried about me- being young and small and what man can do to me. She wants me to be with the girl, not someone that only there to take... I hope she hasn't mortgaged the household to finance this latest organization.

'I'm fine,' I said. Do you need money, honey? You worry me.'

'No- I want to do this on my own.' 'You sure' - 'Mom, I'm fine just leave it alone.'

It's a brief conversation, is even hard to get done with. In fact, it's not so much so a conversation as kicks my guts and make me grunt in response to my gentle sweet-talking of not be mean, Its Friday night, Katie and I are debating what to do with our evening, other than bedtime, - we want some time away from the studying also, and also from our working too hard for less than a $1. 50 an hour, and from student newspapers, that only pays 50 cents a word, and that's if it passes the editor.

Sometimes, like I marvel and have the curiosity to the thoughts of if there's- something really wrong with me. Possibly I've spent too long in the company of my literary romantic book or cracking my brainwriting, or gutting on out rubbing it, and consequently my ethics, and opportunities are far too high. Nonetheless, in realism, nobody's ever made me feel like that, by her- yet he could too- maybe? Saturday at the store is a nightmare. And the days keep rushing by without any other's thoughts of him or her... what to do?

I'm engrossed in the task of redoing what was done right in the first- place, read-through the items I need to have said in the right ways, and the items I sure I know have missed out on that were there, my eyes are flicking from the order E-book that I have from the past on good writing, to the computer screen and back as I check the entries match.

Then, for some motive, I glance up... and find myself locked in the - bold gray gaze of Chiaz who's standing at the counter of my home as a hologram to look into me doing what it is I am doing he can do this at any time look into me, staring at me intently, with lust in his eyes even if it's just a simulation. My heart failure fasts- knowing what is next, sex- with him not there but in my body, I feel that he is.

'Merry... What a surprise, I said walking to my dad her, I lay down for him to the move through me.' His gaze is firm and intense, and the moment happens fast. Holy crap...!

'He said my name,' In a mutter. 'What can I help you with, RICHARD C. MAST?'

'RICHARD C. MAST,' I whisper at the start, because, that's all I can call him as-not my lover yet. What the hell is he doing here looking at me this way with my messy- hair and nude boy standing here, my mouth has dropped open- like my legs and pussy for him, and I can't locate my brain or my voice, for sighing too much? There's a ghost of a smile on his lips and his eyes are alight with humor as if he's enjoying some private joke.

'I was in the area,' he says by way of exclamation. 'I need to stock- up on a few things. It's a pleasure to see you again and feel the insides of you in though out, Miss Marry Sue.' His voice is warm and dry like milk melted chocolate fudge on ice-cream all melt-ie... or something like that- mmm.

My heart is pounding a frantic, and for some reason, I'm blushing- furiously under his steady inspection of being perfect in every way posable.

He smiles, and again it's like he's privy to some big secret.

My reminiscences of him did not do him justice, in this dim light, He's not simply good-looking - he's the epitome of male exquisiteness, magnificent, I shake my head and take my wits of the dead and prowls, I was humming yet I was with his body and mind with my eyes tight.

Finally, my intellectual functions are restored and re-joined with the rest of my body. I am utterly thrown by the sight of him standing before me, and he's here in my always now. Even at the Store, I feel him.

Go figure...? It is so disconcerting the way I feel after also this being his little slut, yet, I want it so bad. Taking a deep breath, I go down on him hard, one more I said it is fine, I put on my professional life out my mind to be with him.

I've- worked hard today so maybe this is okay. he murmurs, his blue eyes cool but smiling like in mine. I mutter, my voice soft and wavy moving in my mind. Get a grip, I said, after a half-hour or so my legs are abruptly the uniformity of Jell-O. I'm so eager, I decided to wear my best jeans this morning to work just to show him that I love to look this way for him to see through me, like looking into the glass shingling back in his stare, of mine, I try for indifference as I come out from behind the counter, but really I'm concentrating hard on not falling over my own feet.

My voice is a little too bright, walking 'around the store today. I glance up at him in regret yet it's only me that knows he's there like, it almost immediately. Damn, he's handsome. I blush, looking downward... and the others in my day have no idea what the hell has happened to me. Acting nuts... 'After you,' he murmurs in my head site, gesticulating with his long-fingered, gorgeously manicured hand. With my heart almost throttling me to the point of crazy - for the reason that it's in my throat trying to escape from my mouth like he's trying to get out of me from down under.

His fingers trail across the various packages displayed that I have done on the shaving, like the same can be said the way he is touching his fingers over my lips, face and- hair, and for some incomprehensible reason, I have to look away for all in the store and close my eyes tightly for my little girlfriend to release. He bends and selects a packet.

'These will do just fine this way he said to me looking over my job that is not where I want to be,' he says with his oh-so-secret smile within me, and I blush, and he finds me to be sweet and cute. 'Nope, it was so revamping,' he says quickly then smirks and it shows all over my face, and I have the uncanny feeling that he's laughing at me, for shacking it out so hard, in public. And the boss knows it, yet that is fist week dating play-no?

Why, why? -would this beautiful, powerful, urbane man want to see me? No way can I see it! I dismiss it immediately for feeling like this on the job. I asked, and my voice is too high in my thoughts, he gets me like I have got my finger trapped the head site mic too hard. Damn! Try to be cool Marry Sue!

He gazes at the selection of tops and undies, that I have placed nicely in their lines, what on this Earth is he going to do with those, I cannot picture him as a do-it-yourselfer at all, doing woman's work like this... I flush at my foolish wayward thoughts. 'All part of your feed-the-world plan?' I tease... in a dirty thought of what happening when I get home.

'Something like that,' he acknowledges, and his lips quirk up in a smile showing on my face. 'Is there anything else, I need to do I said to my boss at the store?' 'I'd like to see you do your job faster without daydreaming. Go home... I don't even want to look at you. You're a waste of my time.' 'Are you redecorating?' The words are out before I can stop them. Surely, he hires laborers or has the staff to help him decorate? I glance behind me as he follows, always in my mind now - even going in the girl's room, Am I that funny, I said shyly or Funny looking down there? Ha- he said- just keep being you! And I give that look of confusion...?

...?...?

Blink- Blink!

-Hair shacking out-

'This way,' I murmur uncomfortably about the way I look.

'Have you worked here long; he is teasing me with- dumb...' His voice is low and soft make me feel well wet, and he's gazing at me, with blue soulful eyes concentrating hard like his dick sliding inside me, for the first time the days before. I blush even more brightly.

Why the hell does he have this significance on me? Changing into a dress and of uniform- that now gross- cover in girly-ness. I feel like I'm- threaten years old down there and in here and there too - awkward, as always, and out of place is everything about me. My eyes drop, yet he has to look me up and down!

'One week,' I mutter as we reach our goal, of me, feel good with him in- all places. To distract myself to being his lover, I reach down and select the two widths apart and let him go to town on my clit, he at this point I could have the world give to me for him doing so. It's zapping through me like I've touched an exposed wire, I feel it come out, which I pass to him too in the feelings also. Our fingers brush very briefly in hand-holding and mind kissing, and the current is there again, I gasp my boobs and he can feel it in his hands-like unwillingly as I feel it, all the way down to somewhere dark, and unexplored even with my eyes still tight, deep in my belly I feel this rush.

Very much, I scrabble around for my symmetry- as I know the camera's- in the bathroom has gotten it all on a video puck (aka thumb drive.) Yet all they see is me have fun with myself- yet the one that looks over this all get it- yet not my boss of now. 'Anything else I said as he dresses me through my body?' My voice is dry and breathy, own like my body. His eyes widen slightly in mine.

'This way to the door I said.' I duck my head down, as I pass all the- snacking girls I work with like I try to hide my recurring blush, and head for the aisle out of the store, to a floating lot of cars folded up. (The poor girl- said the old lady-looking over it all.)

I halt at his expression going to my car that is just lower my way like a cab, his eyes deepening shad in mine. Color fading like... trembling, yet again- his fingers now deep inside me on the drive home, I feel like such a slut- yet I must have it- even if I was good. This boy will not stop... Quickly, with, I measure aware that his hot I gaze back into my mine of him wanting all of me. I dare not look at him like a little girl, yet I can't help it he is my first.

Holy- jizz'n jeez, could I feel, like any more self-conscious, about me- being me, done... the back pocket of my jeans is my Id to get into my home, by some miracle, I remember to bring it along this time- I merge not to remove a finger away for my real age, of how I jumped four years in high school for being smart. Why must I feel like a little girl... yet his making me a woman.

10

I know by the end of this year that he and I, we have c*mmmed in each other's body or through each body by concentration manipulation of thoughts 2,165 times.

(Forward one year)

I must not sleep with it wet, yet that just I live life too fast and too young to care, I must not sleep with it wet. I am trying to brush my hair into submission. I mopping with frustration at myself in the mirror for sucking hard at everything... and yes even that too. Damn my hair to hell for sucking more than that also. I should be studying and going to school for the day, for my final exams, which are less than a year and a week away, my only option is to confine my naughty hair in a pigtail after, yet another long night of him pounding me, and hope that I look semi-presentable, when I can even if as if I can walk out the door.

Katie is huddled on the couch in the living room doing her, I ignore my pang of unwelcome sympathy for doing what I want to do all day too. You should get back to bed and be with me all day piss on the school she said. Would you like some Nyquil or Tylenol, to get knocked out?' 'Nyquil, please, as I spend some time with her 'till she passed out and then, I leave her clingy hug as she is laying on our bed, and go to school.

'Okay, I'm going. Get back to bed with me she said. I made you some postage to heat up later.' I stare at her fondly as if she was my one and only lover. I cannot believe, that I have to do all this for you like your mom, I have let Katie talk me into this also like a mom, only for you, I, would I do this for, being your bitch and shit! She said, gathering my book bag, she smiled, then head out the door to the car, she's articulate, solid, influential, argumentative, yet lovely words, and on like the girl she would become in the days to come - and she's my dearest, dearest friend. But then Katie can talk anyone into anything. Good luck she said handing me the re-right of my paper for class. She'll make an exceptional journalist that I'm not. Making notes, I am not the best at it at all, yet, I want to be someone someday, so pinning text and more of it.' Rising terror with-in me on a half-hour now late for first class.

'The questions will be racing in my mind, of what to say to cover my ass. Going now. It's a long drive- that I don't have to do- yet, I don't want you to be late for what I don't need to live.' You're my lifesaver for editing I said.' 'Why do I put everyone ahead of myself, be so nice, try so hard and become the person that gets hurt the most? What can I do? I have gone through 8 or 9 years with no real friend no best friend nothing. just people who are assholes that I am stuck seeing every day, why? The most compassionate people in the world-the people who are truly kind, who are truly considerate- also have the best boundaries. If you do not have and assert personal boundaries, you won't feel respected or be compassionate towards people after a while.

That doesn't, at first glance, sound like it makes sense. But here's the thing: Compassion means seeing the best in others. It means empathizing- with their struggles and looking for what's good in them. In order to do that in a healthy way, you must be secure enough in yourself and your own identity that you do not lose your identity in theirs. If you try to empathize without having good personal boundaries, you become the perfect victim- easy to manipulate, easy to control, easy to discard...'

What I see-

Tell the truth, everyone hates you.

Tell a lie and you don't have a support team.

Tell the truth, you'll be forsaken.

Tell a lie, it's history in the making.

Have others there and its wishful thinking-

Having others in your life, and their hand is not worth shaking.

Live or lie we all going to die so why try?

'Yes,' I croak and clear my throat. I roll my eyes at myself. Get a grip, I said. Judging from the building, which is too clinical and modern my apartment is all white elegant, 'Yes.' I take off my jacket?' 'Oh please, let it all stop.' I struggle out of the jacket, knowing what to come more off him run down and though me.

'Merry! I thought you weren't going to make it today, to all your classes- at school. You did not why?' Didn't take as long as I thought, to not have a- thought. I can do a couple of hours, overtime to make up for it I said to my teacher that really did not care either way.'

'I'm really pleased to see you, he said thought...'

When I arrive home later, Katie is wearing my headphones and working on my laptop, she's absorbed and typing furiously. I'm thoroughly drained - exhausted by the long drive, I slump on to the couch after, thinking about the essay, I have to finish and all the studying, I need to do just to suck, I haven't done anything notable today, before it starts, because, I was holed up with... he wants all of me and more, like a story that has not to be written.

I flush, and my heart rate inexplicably increases with him being with me always. 'You've got some good stuff here, Merry. Well done. I can't believe you didn't take him up on his offer to show you around, more said the one girl that I got to do half of all my work- so really, I have to do is keep him happy. He obviously wanted to spend more time with you, that why I am here she said.' She gives me a fleeting questioning look; says you go home with him now. That wasn't the reason, surely, I started her I thought but okay?

He just wanted to show me around, the new home that he had redesigned just for you and your taste in color and style, I realize I'm biting my lip, and that drives him crazy, and I hope Katie doesn't notice, this was her thing too. But she seems absorbed in her transcription, to do so. 'Um... no, I didn't, just do that for her with him think it was for her not him and maybe be it was just for her- wo-o-o.' I flush up, to the thoughts of having 2 lovers running through my mind like a moon jet, in the sky going from mars to earth in less than a day.

'Oh, come on, Marry - even you can't be immune to his looks said Katie in my mind, I think she what to play with him using my mind also... ha and he loves it- it's a 3 way in the brain- of two young girls and one older man that can't do anything incorrectly.' I lost in thoughts of thinking of her, and she arches a perfect, for me with her soft warm body showing in soft light, in her and 'I's' room, also arching an eyebrow at me, as he using me and my body as if she is me... you- and she's not me- but she is overriding me... and my movements. 'I hear what you mean about formal sound, via you- she cute and young and what I want for fun. Did you take any notes, on what I did here to make him ask for more?' She asks.

'That's fine, I said I well you mind to speech weighting, I know it's like - shorthand- and glitch- ie yet I can get the notes I need on pleasing him- to the most. And my readers for work... all at the same time, I can still make a fine article with these thoughts on how to be right for a guy like him. Shame we don't have some unique calms, of how a man can be with 2 -16- year-olds these days without think of marriage. Good-looking son of a bitch isn't he, she said to me- blocking off his pathway in thought.'

'I suppose he is I love you though- yet but this way we can all be to- gather and no one gets it- and even so, it's a story, and what well they say, why care? We okay with this why not the world.' I try hard to sound disinterested- in only wanting one to love now and always, yet I can't make up my mind to what I really want, and I think I succeed at being a slut. 'You probably would have got a lot more out of him, if you would have to don't it like this- and she shows it in her thoughts to me- all sexy in her ways.'

'I doubt that, Merry, Crappie! I said I distract her with flattery actions, always a good ploy, as I make her love me more, damn, she's inquisitive. Think of something - quick, to make them both feel what the need, 'So what did you really think of him, my mother gets on this now and asked?' I have like five voices in my crazy had rolling around. - he practically offered you a job, yes, I said- saying GET OFF- GET ME OFF- SAID KATTIE over and over, and the old lady down stars were calling the cops! Katie just loooovesss my mom... She glances up at me speculatively. I make a hasty retreat into the kitchen to get to the wall screen to call and say there are no issues here not to come, that just us playing around. The girl officer looking now down on the whole run using the wall 4d tv screen that is cover, a fool to ceiling, was not impressed with us, to say the least- Come on Given that I foisted this on you at the last minute, you did very well.' This is an override of safety and privacy- they have the right to do this even if nude/ or having sex/ or shoring the cum off your body/ in your own home... it's to be safe, they can record video and sound when they feel the need for the law.

Kattie she snorts, at the dumb of how this all went down. Why can't she just let this go, and go back to playing with herself, as they all do in their- indented force, of A-holes under their desks? What was that she said yah- sue me- she said, as it the girl-ie cum runs down her leg as she yells get out of here, get out of my room, this is not right.

'She's very driven, controlling, arrogant - scary really having this girl- look all up and down me in her hologram inspection to see if we were okay or not, it's what they have to do, to make sure you're not dying, they only send someone if you're already dead. I can understand the charm she is giving her for being in our room unwanted for an old ass that needs to kick,' I add truthfully, as I peer 'round the door of the bathroom, that I am now in, know that everything is seen thought and or glass in this home like them all, hoping this will shut her up once and for all, saying we just having girl on girl sex - god, go be somewhere else. I scowl at the memory, of this the last time it happened. Can the old bitch just freaking die as I feel I have said before many times, loudly? AWWWAH!

'You, fascinated by a girl? He said at a first when you were 12.' I see first love...? I start gathering the makings of a sandwich, I am his yet living- with her still, Incidentally, that was the most embarrassing question, I have ever had too indoor. I was embarrassed, of all the slideshow of what we did as kids be shown for all to see at his workplace, saying I was the one... and he was pissed to be asked if I was a virgin.'

Yah you can see the dildo freaking of them at 12, here in this clip said - the one man too eager- too eager. I would say so at 16 and into girls- one said, why here? That thought was the same in my mind also. Why Me...?

‘Whenever she’s was in the society pages, she never has a dated it said.’ ‘It was embarrassing nonetheless to see myself shown in that light and in full color on the big screen in the boardrooms of the school and at his workplace- no privacy for a girl like me. The whole thing was embarrassing. I’m glad I’ll never have to lay eyes on him again.’

‘Oh, Merry, it can’t have been that bad, she said holding me in my bed crying over it all. I think he sounds quite taken with you, she said- and so did mom- like I was a baby all over again.’ Taken with me...? Now Katie’s being ridiculous, about this too. I cried... ‘Would you like another sandwich?’

‘Please...’ For a moment, I hesitate, and I have Mom’s full attention.

‘I’m fine.’ ‘No, Mom, it’s nothing. You’ll be the first to know if I do.’ ‘Merry, you really need to get out more, honey. You worry me.’ I curl up in my white iron bed, wrapping my mother’s quilt around me, and also the one she made for me too, I close my eyes, and I’m instantly falling asleep. That night I dream of dark places, lost in the time of the pass with her and his blue eyes looking into mine.

~*~

By Monday and by the time I finish, it’s midnight now Tuesday, and- Katie has long since gone to bed. I make my way to my room, exhausted, but pleased that I’ve proficient so much for a. We talk no more of RICHARD C. MAST that always there - that evening, much to my relief, all the arguing was over. Once we’ve eaten, she and I just crashed for some time, I’m able to sit at the dining table with Katie and, while she works on her article, I work on my essay for school for lit. Damn, I hate this with a passion.

By Wednesday, she’s much better, yet I am still in my PJs for Monday. For the rest of the week, I do even change them, or my sheets on the bed, why? I throw myself into my studies and my job of being whatever... however- whenever he wants it, however- whenever- why-ever and forever. I called my mom to check on her, for I was to mean, and so she can wish me luck for my final exams. She worries about me.

Katie is busy too, compiling the last edition of her student magazine, which I am sure no one will read. Drama- drama- drama. It’s a brief- conversation with my mom before I want to rip my hair out. Later that evening, I call, my stepdad, that is dating a girl younger than I- just to see if he has not been kill by a terrorist, yet he dating her so... yah. Its Friday night, Katie and I are debating what to do with our evening- we want some time out from student newspapers our studies, and from our work.

‘That’s amazing - congratulations, Katie said reviewing it in her- mind!’

Delighted for him to be with her right, I hug him again in my mind and get off the line. Katie beams at him too, saying you could have had me. Why is it when I go out, I always feel trembly at the knees, heart-in-my mouth, butterflies in-my-belly, and come home with sleepless nights, yet even with her. Sometimes I wonder if there’s something wrong with me. Do you think there is?

Why is he so interested in me, and not them it keeps going through my mind? I need more E-books- ‘Oh, you know, locked out of having too many. The usual... well, have to do-The classics. Of US literature, primarily.’ He rubs my chin with his long index finger, but its mine, and thumb as he contemplates my answer to more stories under his name on my E-reader. Or perhaps he’s just very bored and trying to hide it when I am reading too long- or maybe he like that to about me. those fingers on that face are so enticing. ‘Anything else you need? Before I sign off...’ ‘I don’t know - um- like- you to really be in my life.’ What else would you recommend?’ You to find out what you want.

He smirks, and then he raises an eyebrow, amused, yet again, for crying over a dumb story. He nods, with wicked humor, and amusement with me being me. I flush, and my eyes stray from the text. I reply softly, and I know I’m no longer screening gazing, what’s coming out of my mouth, is frustration. ‘You wouldn’t want to ruin your clothing, by not washing them.’ I gesture, ambiguously in the direction of the overstuffed washer- surging my shoulder’s.

‘I could always take them off- I said.’ ‘Cute’ what his thought...?

12

‘Um...’ I feel the color of pink in my cheeks increasing yet another time. I must be the color of the communist manifesto. Stop talking. Stop talking NOW. Heaven forbid I should ruin any clothing, that you got for me,’ he says matter-of-factly. He ignores my inquiry of me rolling my eyes to that too. ‘How’s the article coming along?’ He knows yet still questions me with it.

I try and dismiss the unwelcome image of him without his underwear on.

I grasp it tightly with two hands like I was holding his, and I go for honesty, about my feelings. ‘Do you need anything else?’ He’s finally asked me a normal question about us and he starts doing cute things, like only he can, the confusing of double talk... with Katie is a question I can answer, of the fact I love him now more than her.

-Raises an eyebrow, I look into my mind to feel all of him.

'I'm not writing it, Katie is, My roommate, she's the writer. She's very happy with it. She's the editor of the magazine, and she was devastated that- she couldn't do the interview in person.' I feel like I've come up for air - at last, a normal topic of conversation. 'Her only concern is that she doesn't have any original photographs of you.'

'What sort of photographs does she want?'

Okay I said, I hadn't factored in this response. I shake my head because I just don't know, how to say this to her that I want her to back off, yet she is the one making me look to the world. Tomorrow, perhaps... I will come out and say it' he trails off the line.

Oversized photos and magazines- 'I will do more photoshoots naked for you.' My voice is squeaky- again, and I said yes for the world to see and for me to love you more. He said, Katie, will be in seventh heaven when she sees me like this if I can pull this off. And you might see him again tomorrow, that dark place at the base of my brain whispers seductively at me. I dismiss the thought - of all the silliness, ridiculous... why I'm going to be spared open on the screens for all to see my goodies.

'Katie will be delighted if we can find a photographer, that wants a- happy ending like I do- ha with us all.' I'm so pleased, I smile at him broadly, with the outcome of all the shots. He's taken a sharp intake of breath, not remembering to let it out, for some time, and he blinks over and over saying she's all mine. For a fraction of a second, I wonder what the hell, and then it turned out to be sweet, he looks lost somehow, and the Earth shifts slightly on its axis, the tectonic plates sliding into a new position.

'Let me know about tomorrow if you want to go around the world with- me.' Reaching into his back pocket, he pulls out his wallet, and sees. 'My card with his to do just that. It has my number on it, of getting out of the country, and back in... You'll need to call before ten in the morning if you want to do this.' 'Okay.' I grin up at him. Katie is going to be thrilled, for me.

So, we did...

'It was a pleasure to burn, burn all the words of the ones that, though- they knew it all- to make others feel the same, all that was known as wisdom... now the question shows in the people before me, if they are wise or not.'

Like, I cannot tear my eyes away, for him all of him looking down then- back up, from his inquiry; and I gaze blindly, down at my tired fingers. I swallow too hard... His mouth is very... distracting with those lips, hair, and eyes. It's just so right even if it's wrong.

'I want to know about you... I think that's only fair.' I lean forward to- retrieve the recorder it all the good stuff- for I was not hearing the words- lost in his charm- yet I have to write the paper. He places his elbow on the arms of the chair, with his fingers in front of his mouth rubbing his lower lip, as if it was mine. I knew his thought, at the time were somewhat all about impressing me. I curl up in my white iron bed, wrapping my mother's quilt around me, close my eyes, and I'm instantly asleep. That night I dream of dark places, bleak white cold floors, and gray eyes.

For the rest of the week, I throw myself into my studies and my job. Katie is busy too, compiling the last edition of her student magazine before she has to relinquish it to the new editor while also cramming for her finals. By Wednesday, she's much better, and I no longer have to endure the sight of her pink-flannel-with-too-many-rabbits PJs.

I call my mom to check on her, but also so she can wish me luck for- my final exams. She proceeds to tell me about her latest venture into the candle- making - my mother is all about new business ventures. Fundamentally she's bored and wants something to occupy her time, but she has the attention span of a goldfish. It'll be something new next week. She worries me, and I worry about her you see. 'How are things with you, Merry?'

One week has passed, and I am sitting in his office. For a moment, I- hesitate, and I have his full attention, lost in his eyes. 'I'm fine I said.' 'Have you met someone, a man I mean?' Why do you ask? Wow... I thought... red rushing feeling coming up my neck. how does she do that the excitement in her voice is palpable? I think I have a crush on the boss, 'really my mom said - a boy?' 'Mom, it's nothing really- just some hot-shot.' 'Like- you will be the first to know, like- if I do- more then I should.' Why sex already? NO! I just encountered this man, I not going to be all hot and heavy already... 'Make baby's she said...' I want to shit myself!

Why does he have such an unnerving effect on me I asked my Ma?

His- overwhelming good-looks maybe, The way his eyes blaze at me. The way he strokes his index finger against his lower lip, I wish he'd stop doing that. My heart is pounding. The elevator arrives on the first floor, and I scramble out as soon as the doors slide open, stumbling once, but fortunately not sprawling on to the immaculate sandstone floor. I race for the wide glass doors, and I'm free in the bracing, cleansing, damp air of New York. Raising my face, I welcome the cool refreshing rain. I close my eyes and take a deep, purifying breath, trying to recover what's left of my equilibrium.

'You sound like a control freak.' The words are out of my mouth - before I can stop them. 'Oh, I exercise control in all things, Miss,' he says without a trace of humor in his smile. I look at him, and he holds my gaze steadily, impassive. My heartbeat quickens, and my face flushes again. 'Do you feel that you have immense power?' Control Freak.

'Oh. I'll bear that in mind,' I murmur, completely confounded, that she thinks I'm good enough. 'Though I'm not sure I'd fit in with his type I said.' Oh no, not at all like what I see him with, I'm musing out loud again. 'Would you like me to show you around?' He asks me this... 'I'm sure you're far too busy, RICHARD C. MAST- Mr. Morgan, and I do have a long drive.' 'You're driving back in a week? she sounds surprised, anxious even that I may have hooked this man - in the least. I glance out of the window, running the day and him in my mind.

It's begun to rain hard. 'Well, you'd better drive carefully.' His tone is - stern, authoritative. Why should he care?' Did you get everything you need?' He adds... I remember his saying that 'The pleasures have been all his well really it was all mine - nothing but pleasure,' he's so polite as ever, to me makes me feel good about me being, a loser, and a freak in every way that sucks like a girl. I drop my phone into my school bag and call it a night. My eyes narrow, on the paper, I had to write.

'Thank you for the interview, RICHARD C. MAST Morgan was not a good ending to - me; yet me saying, I had one that was happy was not good either.' Crap...! As I rise, and stands and holds out his hand to my teacher that was a dick about the fact I could write. Here is your paper I said... the man was lackluster about my attempts at wooing him.

'Do you want the FREAK-ing thing or not - because - like Katie, I could - be home now - play with it! The whole class knew that this girl had - an oversexed issue of Doing the two-finger salute non-stop in class, so there are busting out... about it being okay for her and not me - they all know what happened its showing on the walls. 'Yes - if you feel that I need to see it...' 'Like - that's why I did it - dick-suck!' I did not say it out loud - yet it was heard in his mind to his... and theirs'. 'Just ensuring you make it through the door, Miss to blush and feel like complete crap.' He gives me a small smile, saying good work here. Thanks, I say running for freedom! Obviously, he's referring to my love life, more than the paper, as I run for the office. I flush up... with all them chasing behind me, playing freak you hard in the brain it's a game to them of back and forth.

“Tell the moment I see you once more Miss.” It seems that you are- testing me, here...or a threat, I'm not sure which what it is- yet. I frowned slightly. When will we ever meet again, it was asked, so-o I shake his hand once more like before, I was surprised that the strange current among us is still there? It must be my nerves, I said and felt. ‘RICHARD C. MAST I said thanks for your time.’ I nodded at him. Moving with nimble sporty elegance to the door, he opens it wide for me to walk through. ‘Did you have a coat?’ He asked, and the moment passed too slow yet to fast.

‘That’s so nice of you do that, him- the- RICHARD C. MAST- this man I am lusting- for,’ I snap, in my moment, and his smile widens at me. I'm glad you find me pleasurable, that is my joy in life having and give just that, I look angrily inwardly, walking into the entrance hall. I'm astonished when he follows me out, asking for more time with me another time. I- Marry and then Olivia we both look up, likewise taken back by him asking for what seemed to be a date night.

‘Yes.’ Olivia leaps up and retrieves my jacket, which - takes from her- before she can hand it to me. He holds it up and, feeling ridiculous- self-conscious, I shrug it on. They're not all that much here for you to know about, or for me to say you need to know, I find myself flushing up yet again with him looking at me the way he does.

‘What are your plans after you graduate? You don’t remember? I questioned, no I just wanted to see if you’re a disciplined as I with saying- repartition- in your speeches.’ I hope to find work with someone like you have a man that is like you, and life and some city where I can start anew, like New York. That is if I pass all my classes and get out of the school, yet this is my final that is holding me back to get away.

I haven't made any plans- I thought about quitting, yet my mother- would not hear of it, so I am here and Kite is doing what I want to be right now. ‘Gross!’ So, in saying all of that I conclude that you have not made any? Right, I said shakenly... I just need to get through my final exams if I can yet you have the say in this. ‘Why do you say that...?’ I see that he turns his head to the one side, fascinated, a hint of a faint smile playing on his lips. I hope that he did not notices my reaction, he gives nothing away, with the look that he is giving me. 'It's obvious, isn't it- that I have fallen too his charms?' I'm clumsy, unkempt, and I'm not blonde, not his type at all.

He places his hands for a moment on my lower backside. I gasp at his- soft touch, his long index finger presses the button summoning the elevator, and we stand to wait - awkwardly on my part, coolly self-possessed on his.

The doors open, and I hurry in desperate to escape. I really need to get out of here. When I turn to look at him, he's leaning against the doorway beside the elevator with one hand on the wall. He really is very, very good looking. It's distracting. His burning gray eyes gaze at me. 'Merry,' he says as a farewell. 'Chiaz,' I reply. And mercifully, the doors close. No man has ever affected me the way Chiaz has, and I cannot fathom why. Is it his looks that he gives me, that I feel this power over me that I cannot control His Wealth also blows my mind, the power I don't understand my unreasonable reaction? I breathe an enormous sigh of relief. What in heaven's name was that all about... Leaning against one of the stone pillars of the building, I intrepidly try to calm down and gather my thoughts. I shake my head. Holy crap, I said - what was that...? My heart steadies to its regular rhythm, and I can breathe normally again. I head for the car.

He may be conceited- I am falling too it, but then he has a right to be - he's skillful so-o much at such an undeveloped time of life. He doesn't agonize boobs gladly, but why should he, o'er, I'm irritated that Katie didn't give me a brief profile on all this- shity – stuff like always.

An involuntary shiver runs down my spine. And Katie's questions are rushing through my head, or did you or didn't you have hookup sex, it was not about getting the job- oh now in today's light it's all about the sex and the money to buy anything or anyone. - ugh, I said to her- well you saw it play out didn't you know it happened!

He kept my underwear- I know she said... sweet...! I shudder in the remembering swallowing him sucking him off and that too I showed and then galloped, then it ended with him kissing my body all over softly. I can't believe I said that to her, yet she saw it sliding in me too- they all did, with this new type of video calling we have- you can see through others... like being there without being there. As I leave the city limits behind, the building behind, and move pasted I begin to feel foolish and embarrassed as I replay the interview in my mind. Surely, I'm over-reacting to something that's imaginary.

Okay, so he's very attractive, confident, commanding, at ease with himself - but on the flip side, he's arrogant, and for all his impeccable manners, he's autocratic and cold. Well, on the surface.

While cruising along with the down the highway, my mind continues to ponder the facts of what I have done slow long hard and yet slow, THE FREAKING WAS INSPIRATION. LIP BITING, BOOB GRABBING, NIPPLE AND SUCKING CLIT LICKING SEX, AND FOREPLAY- DEEP FINGERING LOVE'N SEX. POUNDING! SWEETING- OMG MOMENTS OF GOING OFF OVER AND OVER, WITH HIM UNDER ME! YOU CAN SEE me AND THE SHOT IN YOUR MIND RIDING HIM FROM WITH MY BUT GOING UP AND DOWN- SLIDING- GLADDING- FEELING ME IN- COMPLETELY! AH! HE IS EVERYTHING I NEED TO MAKE IT IN THIS LIFE- I WANT IT EVEN IF I HURT THE FIRST TIME! 'The sun burnt every day.

Yet It burnt away like with old ways and time. I look up to the skies and thought about the ways of life.'

Truly puzzled to all that went down in me, I need this feeling and feelings to succeed in this life as a woman. A woman is nothing without her man- a man that so perfect as he is... under her. Some of his replies were so obscure, yet I loved the mystery of it all - as if he had a hidden agenda. me up now! Consistently I think of that inquiry in the future, I will cringe with blushing.

Damn Katie, for not want me- now I have to want him always!

Did I question in my racing thoughts- like have you ever watched the jet cars race on the boulevard? They now drive themselves crazy to think that some used to do just that drive by hand. I sometimes think drivers don't know what grass is, or flowers, for the reason that they never-ever see them gradually... If you showed a driver a blue blur, Oh affirmatively! A blur flashing before my eyes like him naked in my mind- and Katie spared eagle last night in my face wanting me to go down- that butt is unforgettable! What can you do all girls today are Bi? Right? It's all part of not being wed...and even so that just a piece of paper stating someone owns you, and you lose have of what you worked for- so why do it?

I check the speedometer and see 300 mph. I'm driving more cautiously than I would on any other occasion.

-And-

I know it's the memory of two penetrating it's his eyes gazing soft and sweet at me his nude body ribbing over mine, and his stern voice telling me to FREAK him, harder and harder, I want to... as the car is driving carefully fast around all the others whizzing by. Pulling at my own hearing, and biting my lip I go off c*mming, in just the thoughts, I realize that he is more like a man double his age, as my daddy- yet I want the hard work out of a FREAK! Squeezed tight, body and me holding him in me... and the spraying finally takes places over and over like 30 times, switching ways of doing it- up down and sideways and more. He came in me to not pulling out ones... is that love or not caring, I don't have to care to evert there is stopped, so I don't have to worry?

Freak and be freaked is the game of life... and don't think about it! Freaked under over and above that's it how I do it girl or guy- and they love me for it... and make you be someone... that advice to live by... said, Katie. I was 10 when I found that girl- like you all virgin and shy... how did you get as far as you did, she said that a week ago back, well, she was right... I did need to go a little crazy... yet I may have fallen in love with it... and that not how a thing works today either. Yet that is just me - old fashioned thinking.

Be unable to remember everything blacking out in the heated moments of sex... Merry, I scold myself... snapping out of it, I decided that all in all, it's been a very interesting experience, but I shouldn't abide by it. Put it behind you. I never have to see him again. I'm immediately cheered by the thought. I switch on the small ear head and player and turn the volume up loud blasting pop music, I sit back in the car as it races for my apartment where I have to then take the trail that winds up the side of the skyscraper- leading up to my room or that floor, and listen to thumping music, as I make my lover parts do the same- think about him well doing myself, as I press down on the accelerator to my sleeping room, were Kittie is looking for to cuddling with me- she and I share a bed it all we can adored- making less than a dollar a day- and need 100 just to live.

As I hit the 1-5, I realize I can drive as fast as I want.

We live in a small community of duplex apartments in Vancouver, Washington, close to the NYU campus. I'm fluky - Katie's parents bought the place for her, and I pay peanuts for rent. It's been home for four years now. As I pull up outside, I know Katie is going to want a blow-by-blow account, and she is tenacious. Well, at least she has the mini-disc. Hopefully, I won't have to elaborate much beyond what was said during the interview.

‘Merry! You're back.’ Katie sits in our and you’re with me cheaters- you said- to I said- yes but all that? Why not? I see... okay, she said, surrounded movie she was crying over not having me there for her to feel loved. She loves me yet she doesn’t want to be in love with me - I wonder why? She's evidently been studying for finals - though she's still in her pink flannel pajamas decorated with cute little bunnies, that were mine, the ones she reserves for the aftermath of breaking up with her, for not want girl on girl sex as much as she wanted it, and for general moody depression of being - bitchy. She bounds up to me and hugs me hard, and slides them off asked me to do what I did with him on her.

To lick and stick... and feel and play with her vulva, squeeze me and - play with my nipples... she said- well she was ou-yah-ing- as I was giving her there in oral, looking for to having it back.’ I was beginning to worry, that he was looking into my mind and seeing this... and me doing just this with her... am- I don’t wrong? I expected you back sooner, she said grunting it out of her, every last drop was a trusting spray of her feel whipped out yet happy with everything down there.’ thank you so much for doing this, I said to her, have it cum, yet not feel like I did in the past. I owe you; I know.

‘How was it.’

‘Good...’ I said- ‘What was he like?’ Oh, you did not feel inside you where you were looking down over me without asking to be there... you’re not my girl... you don’t need to be here... I know you got off with us... why?

Do you want me?

Yes!

Now and always- she said.

I want him now, not you... don’t blow it for me... I struggle to answer-her question, of what I really wanted, can I have both... I thought she giggled... see this is why I love you. What can I say? I will always be here for you- like this- yes like this I said- you’re such a baby I have to be. Really young, to be doing that with a man... ‘I no...’ Katie gazes at me arched eyebrows looking sad. I frown at her, saying you’re always my first love. Hug me... ‘I'm glad it's over, and I don't have to see him again, I have too, to make it in this life... wink. He was rather intimidating, you know.’ I shrug at the thoughts of want more... of both of them in a loving way ‘He's very focused, intense even - and young... a boy... yet not you at all as I feel I have said in my dreams and now alike - but I will go there.

I thought you did it all great... interview and such all also, in the end, it was about you have a 10-figure job someday. And you'll have it, BUT would you give that all up for me and have 'nothing' but for me - and be with me? That's the question I have for you - do you love me?

(Forward)

Note- look for the name- Marry and make for there are 2r's- 'Merry, hi, it's so good to see you, back she said- that being Katie!'

She grins as he examines me at arm's length. Then he releases me but keeps a possessive arm draped over my shoulder. I shuffle from foot to foot, embarrassed by what I have done. She gushes with loving hugs. So how was it? I to pooped to say... and she passed out in her arms- falling in the doorways- that sild opens for her. 'Yep, you're looking well, Merry, really well- I see the glow in your face of what all that you two did.'

I can hardly breathe. When I glance up at RICHARD C. MAST -, he's watching us like a warmonger, his blue eyes hooded and speculative, his mouth a hard-impassive line. Hurriedly, I place his purchases in a plastic carrier. Someone you should meet,' I say, trying to defuse the antagonism I see in -'s eyes. He's changed from the weirdly attentive customer to someone else - someone cold and distant. The atmosphere is suddenly chilly, and the fire hot, glowing and shining on her skin... she is truly feeling loved- and in love with him and her too. I nod, rendered speechless yet again, and hand back his credit card, if he loves me then I well spend- spend- spend!

There, I've admitted it to myself, I love him for the money I get to and feel good, about him making me feel good.' Good. Until tomorrow perhaps where I will be long for her yet once more - right?' He turns to leave, then pauses, asking me for more of what he loves of me the most, 'your ass' said Katie- 'No my Puss!' I said back. his coming here, tonight to see me - so you need too- well 'get lost' yes... if you don't mind.

'Fine...'

'Oh, and Marry Sue I just want to freak you, I read of the card to the flowers he got me - cute Katie said... reading it to using my eyes, yet her thoughts. But it's a lost cause, I have fallen to his ways, I know, and I sighed hard, with nostalgic regret, it was just a coincidence, she smiles looking at me say it all it must be young love, Okay- I like him maybe like- like...? Closing door by asking it to do just that, I spend several minutes staring into space, I cannot hide from myself my feelings anymore.

(Home)

Katie is ecstatic after she does it yourself time... 'DIY baby D-I-Y!'

I bite my lip in anticipation and find myself grinning like a schoolgirl, at the looks of her playing, her curiosity oozes through me too, with what she - was just 2. 0 is what. (BUTT plug) I've never felt like this before, where I just need sleep. She more then I and she stayed home all week, yet have so much to do- papers, and stocking shelves, I find him attractive lost in my thoughts in my awareness, very attractive... M-mm-mm I said, softly, I can admire him from in here and it safe, surely? No harm, by doing just so-o. And if I find a photographer, I can do some serious admiring tomorrow. I need to phone Katie and organize a photo-shoot.

(Work)

I'm in the depths of the stock room, I walk out holding what the little girl gave me of hers to get the same type, yes, getting underwear to little- girls, is my dream job, trying to keep my voice casual- well look at these sweet little faces standing there, well standing there... (pee covered undies in my hands) with this in my butt hole. I thought this is what she has to look forward too. 'I think that is one huge coincidence, Merry, he said looking for the size as I say OOOO-ah 'poop-ie.' And the little girl asked, from afar- what I was making out my myself- when too much time had passed. it's a short-lived joy when she was blurting out, I want the underwire that you took off of me. I mutter you want kids...

'Sure...'

Like this one he said... being comical about it.

He doesn't I want to wish you, Katie said- saying kidnap this one!

PLEASE- too cute...!

You don't think he was there to see you, I walk down the hall of my school and see him standing at the end looking at me with his lusting blue eyes, want to cover me with kisses.' she speculates, Katie about how he going to take me away... even as just a schoolgirl- 'How do you know this?' 'Merry, I'm a journalist, and I've written a profile on the guy. I know that man has the power of girls to do whatever it is they want too... the kids were talking about us... me being young and his little slut as they call me yet I don't care I have him- isn't that all I really need?

The question is, who's here to see some dumb girls were thinking in the dark, think they could be the next in his bed, going to do them and where and when.'

'We could ask him why- and where and how but would he say said on- brown-haired girl, over yonder. He says he's staying the day with- 'THAT GIRL.' 'You can contact him, all the time? ...On nose on said to me.' 'I have his wrist phone number here all the time if I need, they don't get how he inside me always.'

Katie gasps... by the lies I have to make up to look innocent to all, even- though I know, I have taken it at least 1,000 times, holy c-u-m, at the end of my joiner year.

'The richest, most elusive, I have taken was sex -ed, with this man as an after-school program, most here are working for what he calls righting class, most enigmatic bachelor or hairstyles, or seen to be house wife's 'Er... yes.' 'Merry, is not going to be one of those! He likes you, said the short girl in the room, no doubt about it, said the other with really long blonde flowing hair and green eyes.' Her tone is emphatic when he said let's go on the town and get you out of here. 'Katie, he's just trying to be nice.' But she was pouting about it, that I was not going to be there all day to hold her hand. 'Great idea! I said.

(A thought of now) After all, he did say he was glad Katie didn't do the interview, that we would have never met.

(Thought)

But even as I say the words, I love you I have to really feel it right?

That the sex said Katie, and you'll know. I know they're not true- all the nasty things said by all the mean girls- RICHARD C. MAST- doesn't do nice, or nice thing for girls', like me- things like this if it's not love- fist.

(Back)

And a small quiet voice whispers saying they all just want to be for you're the best one out of them all don't forget it, perhaps he's is right. I hug myself with quiet glee, rocking from side to side, holding him in my mind, like a dream, I see all this... entertaining the possibility that he might like me for one brief moment- for always. Katie brings me back to the now, and happening by saying your zipper is down... (zip) and her hands are on my pussy.

‘Merry, you’re the one with the relationship. What’s it really like to be with a boy said the girl lunch? That sits with her day in and day out not saying much.’ ‘Relationship?’ I squeak at her, my voice rising several octaves.’ I barely know the guy.’ Yet it’s some you just have to do to really get it. So, is it true? What I said to her... you’re with him... and do things... ‘Yeah, um, sorry,’ I mutter, turning to leave. I can’t say- what we do or don’t do- its confidential.

‘So, how come you know: The RICHARD C. MAST?’ Cass’s voice is unconvincingly nonchalant, also want to know it all.

This is when Katie speaks up saying everything and anything- along with saying she needs to get laid- I give an odd look- when she said- ‘I had to interview him for our student newspaper today and I said- ‘you did the editing.’ So, you can move forward, Katie wasn’t well- she all dripping from somewhere ha.’ I shrug my shoulder, trying to sound casual with all the girls looking at me like I am a whore, yet not doing no- better than them- in there twisted little minds. She shakes her head as if to clear it all away.’ Anyway, want to grab a drink or something and chat some over there?’ away for this gossip? ‘Sure...’ is what I said. I am staring out of the window at the sun coming up and showing the first signs of light. Katie grabs the handset from me, tossing her silky-smooth red-blonde hair over her shoulder.

You like him, a chant started with all the girls! I’ve never seen or heard so, so... many girls care- about anyone before. You’re actually blushing.’ Said Katie... ‘Oh Katie, you know I blush all the time, I said quickly... She blinks over and over fast-ly, at me with surprise that I did not move or reacted to this taunting. ‘I just find him... intimidating, that’s all, and he’s acting cool for me right now - or I am sure, I would have run out.’

I love you is what he said over and over... overtop all the haters.

(Home from school)

I am restless that night, I punch my pillow and try to settle, tossing and turning, after a short cat nap, yet I wake twice. Dreaming of him and those-eyes and oh...! That body, long legs, long fingers, and dark hair and soft skin..., ‘I need to study, then I’ll make supper.’ I cannot hide my irritation with her for going too far with him, as I open one of the cubbyholes under our bed, I read love note of dream of him, I do this while she is making supper. In the night- holding her, my heart pounding, knowing what is going on two girls on man- who does he love more?

15

Nine- free of charge for the morning in exchange for a credit in the article, said Katie, I do this for the love by you. When she explains at the reception that I have forgone writing yet bad spelling, she said to-RICHARD C. MAST- RICHARD C. MAST, we are instantly upgraded have her on our time- yes? She's terribly young and very nervous for some reason, yet if you want to have this way then if he said, It's fine.

We have half an hour to set up, for the day out, Katie is in full flow, working on my work and not going to school... funny how life works...? I thought... 5 P. M.

My mouth goes dry looking at him... he's so freaking hot. Holy Crap He's wearing a white shirt, open at the collar, and - dress pants, I disruptive hair is still damp from a shower, for what took place after the school day was at its end. His eyes watch me impassively. He then extends his hand, 'Thank you for taking the time to do this.' ...and I shake it like I am one of his man on the job, blinking rapidly, to see if anyone see us out and bout, Oh my... I thought, he really is, quite... is he liking her more now- wow?

As I touch his hand, I'm aware of that delicious current running right through me, lighting me up, making me blush, and I'm sure my erratic breathing must be audible. Katie who comes forward, looking him squarely in the eye, said I am coming on this date to tonight. How do you do?' He said - to her kissing her hand and her ass all at the same damn time... He gives her a small smile, looking genuinely amused, as to what was under the dress.

I remind myself that Katie has been to the best private schools. 'I trust you're feeling better?' 'Yes, yes I do...' 'I'm fine, also running it into his head fist that he ALL MINE! She shakes his hand firmly, AND HE HUGS HER NOT ME! SHIT! without batting an eyelid, HOLD ON TO HIS ARM.

Backstory- Her family has like no money, and she's grown up- confident, about her ass and how to use it at a young age, and I am sure of her place in the world- is sitting at home diddling no more. She doesn't take any crap, so why him? I am in awe of her, for trying to break us up, so-o she has all of me back- I can see through her plans. She gives him a polite, professional smile like a gay girl would.

'It's a pleasure,' he answers, that is all it's about with me and find it, turning his gaze on me, and I flush up again, feeling lovesick, damn it why when I have this, I feel I going to lose it...? 'Where would you like me?' - Asks him. His tone sounds vaguely threatening. But Katie is not about to let me run the show for five. My wish has come true: she said, I can stand next to you, and admire you and not - from not-so-far. Twice of my eyes lock deeper into her, and I have to tear myself away from his cloudy gaze, of wanting to freak the shit out of her.

(Bar)

'He stands, Katie wades in again. 'Enough sitting.' I remove the chair, for some slow dancing. 'Great,' says Katie, I find a bonnier to bang down- when a fast song comes on... 'Thank you again, Mr. for your time. He said- 'I look forward to reading the article that you re-told, Miss Katie,' he murmurs in a sexy way. As I- Merry- pull him to dance. 'Sure,' I say, completely thrown, yet I don't need him doing the same. I glance anxiously at Katie, who shrugs at me. Yelling has fun, as she finds her way over to the wall to be a flower. My heart slams, my mouth dry and my lower-ness not so-o much.

Yet am I in love?

-Or is it all just dumb freaking lust, or just freaking?

16

A date? RICHARD C. MAST - is asking me on a date tonight I said to my girlfriend Katie. He's asking if you want a coffee, this was said to me I see it my memory for the day that just passed. Maybe he thinks you haven't woken up yet- to see that it was all really not a dream that he is falling for her, my subconscious whines at me in sneering in my mood again. I clear my throat trying to control my nerves, yet I cannot.

Katie- this man said- 'Are they based at the university?' Know I live with her- he looked at me oddly, about saying that. The other couple with us- asked, their names escape' me, yet I could dig it up if I wanted too, his voice was soft, a young businessman that was part of the team higher up and inquiring. I nod, too stunned to speak, Peter was his name, I found the clip to look over it and think about all the thing that was said so fast I could not evoke them all.

'Mr. Peter, as he asks me if I want a drink- sure is what I said, and a daces and I said- 'yes,' but my mind was on him- yet this man reached for me, and I have to say yes I was obligated, giving nothing away, about how I feel. I look at him like there was magic in my eyes yet there was not. But he was sweet so... yah.

He smiles at me and it is a dazzling one, unguarded he said to me, I- said Nah drop out- natural he said, all-teeth-showing, glorious smile, of college? No high school... Oh my... he said. I scoot around him to enter the bathroom, where I find Marry deep discussion with him - they were in a stall together getting it on.

‘Merry, I think he definitely likes you, I said as the pants were at their feet.’ Be sure to wear a condom- ha you can go now- she said fast-ly- ‘But I don’t trust him, you know that’ she adds. I raise my hand up in the hope, it hits her in the face, that she’ll stop dirty talking. By some miracle, it does. Her mouth pops open and it slides in. Speechless Katie is! I savor the moment, seeing this I was so happy for her. I love her, yet I want her to be happy you see.

(160 long seconds have passed)

She purses her lips as if considering my request. Finally, she fishes herself to him. She grabs me by my arm, holding the door open some say get in here, be with him too now, and drags me into the bedroom where it goes down hard and fast, that’s off the living area of the suite, in this really nice bar in New York.

Her tone is full of warning.

At the elevators, he presses the call button, and the bell rings almost immediately. The doors slide open revealing a young couple in a passionate clinch inside.

Merry- there’s something about him, that is just driving me crazy- lost in thoughts... and feelings- of what could be. ‘He’s gorgeous, I agree, but I think he’s dangerous. Especially to someone like you. She said...’ ‘What do you mean, someone like me?’ I demand, affronted. ‘An innocent like you, Merry.

You know what I mean,’ she says a little maddened.

I flush up turning pink. I’m starting my exams this week, and I need to study, so I won’t be long- it’s time to go ‘like now’ I said hurriedly.’ Fixing up as a young girl walks in, asking if everything was cool.

'Katie- it's just coffee, I said to Merry- he said- I want to take you out what do you say he said to me. And... he looked at me with wonder...

He grins at me with hope in eyes of a night that he would not forget all given by me I sure, and with his money, I was sure to do whatever he wanted. It's now tomorrow and at night- 'I'll see you later, then... yes most defiantly. Don't belong, I said to her... or I'll send out search and rescue.' 'Thanks.' I hug her, I with your boys so you know him he will be right to me... I was so pissed, why her... yet is that okay?

He stands up straight, holding his hand out for me to go first, were had a date with a horse drawing carriage, all white, and nice and romantic at dusk. Where he held my hand and wisped sweet nothings in my ear. Holding me over so nicely... I flushed beet red. 'Okay, let's do coffee, here and it was the best restart in town... and the classiest- the name in French so yah see for yourself.' By my eyes it was Queue-weed, really, I said yet that was without glasses on. That was something a failed like - in high-school.

I emerge from the suite to find RICHARD C. MAST - waiting, leaning up against the- wall, looking like a male model in a pose for some glossy high-end magazine.

Merry- after being with him all do, I am pooped, I murmur I make my- way down the corridor, my knees shaky, my stomach full of butterflies, and my heart in my mouth thumping a dramatic uneven beat. I am going to have coffee with RICHARD C. MAST and I hate coffee... but- she ran off with my man!

'Sucking tit shit!' I said!

We walk together down the wide hotel corridor to the elevators.

What should I say to him? My mind is suddenly paralyzed with apprehension. What are we going to talk about? What on Earth do I have in common with him?

His soft, warm voice startles me from my reverie. I REMEMBER BACK- OF The doors opening and, much to my surprise, - takes my hand, clasping it with his long cool fingers. I feel the current run through me, and my already rapid heartbeat hurries. As he leads me out of the elevator kissing my neck and lips softly, we can hear the suppressed giggles of the couple erupting behind us. - grins from all around, yet we did not care it was lusting love.

‘How long have you known Marry - Katie Oh, an easy question for- starters... I thought... ‘Since our 1st year of schooling. She’s a good friend of mine don’t break her heart.’ Why don’t say anything but look at this- wow?

I am struggling to maintain a straight face, so I gaze down at the floor, feeling my cheeks turning pink. Surprised and embarrassed, by the fact I thought it was for me I was like shit, I started to feel guilty. Then, I step into the elevator, feeling like I want to be her.

‘What is it about elevators?’ he mutters, thoughts of true love... about her.

When I peek up at them using my mind phone of seeing into their thoughts - through my lashes and their eyes, he has a hint of a smile on his lips of what he plans to give me, but it’s very hard to tell if I feel that he being real about it.

As a young couple, I say nothing, and have nothing in that say anyway- and we travel down to the first floor, all in the same body’s- me as Katie is embarrassed silence-less for she in me full.

Katie- Outside, it’s a mild May on a Sunday. The sun is shining and the traffic is light. - turns left and stroll to the corner, where we stop waiting for the lights of the pedestrian crossing to change. He’s still holding my hand. I’m in the street, and RICHARD C. MAST - is holding my hand. We cross the expansive, bustling lobby of the hotel toward the entrance but - avoids the revolving door, and I wonder if that’s because he’d have to let go of my hand.

I attempt to smother the ridiculous grin that threatens to split my face in two. I feel giddy, and I tingle all over... for the good buy sex, yet we wanted each other- badly- no one has ever held my hand. Try to be cool, Merry, my subconscious implores me. The green man appears, and we’re off again.

‘I’ll have... um - Breakfast W/ tea, bag out, talking about all that to over the fact he was to spend his life with her as me being his sideways bitch out the side and you know what I’m okay with that.’ He raises his eyebrows.

‘Why don’t you choose a table, while I get the drinks. What would you like?’ he asks, polite as ever. We walk four blocks before we reach the NY Coffee House, where - releases me to hold the door open so I can step inside. ‘The coffee was good? Cram-ie like I was for him... at midnight.’ ‘I’m not keen on coffee, yet I like this.’

His smiles- OH MY GOD! Like for a moment, I'm stunned, thinking it's a blandishment, but fortunately my unconscious kicks in with pursed lips. As I lay naked on his bed in the hotel room that he owns- I stare down at my knotted fingers, think about how I the other girl.

'Anything to eat?' I surreptitiously gaze at him from beneath, and my lashes point upward at him as he stands there looking down at me with low light on and the skyline in the background flicking lights, of tall buildings, I could watch him all, think about how I was not sleep with her tonight.

'Sure...?'

'... It was quite in my mind why...'

I bite my lip and stare down at my hands again not liking where my wayward thoughts are headed. 'No thank you.' I shake my head see him coming at me, and he heads for me.

Do, I want this I thought? Oh, my hips, once or twice he runs his long, graceful fingers through, he's tall, broad-shouldered and slim those pants hang from his ankles...

and the way his now dry but still disorderly hair, sheens in the light is so right, I am just oozing for his love. So, yah wet-Hmm... I'd like to do that to you he said- and my mouth doped for it. The thought comes unbidden into my mind and my face flames.

'Penny for your thoughts, dollars for hardcore freaking?' Yes, sign me up...!

For his love...! I go crimson when the hood is pulled back by his fingers. Flaking and liking- and then sticking- 'OH MY GOD -Freak-ING- YES!!'

'Get down with your bad self!'

I said! In my thoughts...running my fingers through your hair, his going down in me, I was just thinking about and wondering if it would feel soft to touch like this always, I shake my head from the c*mming hard, and being fast, and faster yet, and over and over. my favorite part- and part of the day, I said to him- letting out a big breath.

(Moring)

I curl up, desperately clutching the flat foil balloon and Peter's handkerchief, and surrender myself to my grief. I fall onto my bed, shoes and- all, and howl. The pain is indescribable... physical, mental... metaphysical... it is everywhere, seeping into the marrow of my bones. Grief. This is grief - and I've brought it on myself. Deep down, a nasty, unbidden thought comes from my inner goddess, her lip curled in a snarl... the physical pain from the bite of a belt is nothing, nothing compared to this devastation. How do they do that?

The room is so nice all fancy, he's carrying a platter, which he sets down on the small, round, birch-veneer table. He hands me a cup and saucer, a small teapot, and a side plate bearing alone teabag labeled Breakfast.'

-He has a coffee that bears a wonderful leaf-pattern engraved in the milk.

I wonder idly in my mind for some time. 'Your thoughts on all this?' He prompts me when I look into his eyes. He's also bought himself a blueberry muffin, with lots of sugar on top.

Putting the tray aside, to kiss me all over even if it was all sticky like the hammer on an Underwood typewriter, he sits opposite me and crosses his long legs. Cover between my legs with soft sweet kissing, He looks so comfortable, up at me, so at ease with his body, I envy him, for I am not like that at all.

Here's me, all gawky and awkward, barely able to get started to end without falling flat on my face- 'I'm selfish, impatient and a little insecure. I make mistakes, I am out of control and at times hard to handle. But if you can't handle me at my worst, then you sure as hell don't deserve me at my best.'

As I place the used teabag back on the side plate, he turns his head gazing enquiringly at me, with the look of hunger and thriving lust. 'This is my favorite tea; how did you know I loved this so?' My voice is quiet, wheezy.

I simply can't believe I'm sitting opposite RICHARD C. MAST - in a coffee shop in NY. He frowns, some not too much you... it shows on his face the lines, he knows I'm hiding something, and that's what I falling for him.

I pop the teabag into the teapot and almost proximately fish it out again with my teaspoon.

'I like my tea black, and weak,' I mutter some- to him running my fingers through his hair like we were longtime lovers, then he said- 'I see, she is your little girlfriend then, that you in-love with -Now and forever?'

I said- 'You know you're in love when you can't fall asleep because the reality is in conclusion better than your dreams.'

She's a really- really good friend of mine, that's all, and we have shared a lot.

Why did you think he was my girlfriend? Now and forever.' 'She's more like family,' I whisper, holding his body tightly with mine. A friend is someone who knows all about you and still loves you - love them if you want too?

Right... it's just showing caring...?

Then the nods from him are slightly neat looking, all him, seemingly satisfied with my response, and glances down at his blueberry muffin.

His long fingers deftly peel back the paper- and I watch, fascinated, looking at his dick.

As he is me... all over the eye are going. Spellbound, 'The way you smiled at him, is wonderful my girlfriend Jan said... looking into it, with her nose up my butt looking into the walls - TV's, and I heat you.'

His leaden gaze holds mine. I want to look away but I'm caught- him doing things I like with his butt, he's so alarming, yet everything I need.

I frown and stare down at my hands again, laying on the bed, recessing thought to go through my head.

I told you yesterday, that I wanted you on this site how do you feel about that?'

Oh, this is getting silly, she loves you all the way why me too. 'Why do you ask?' I want to know- 'why'- 'for I can...' he said. 'You seem nervous around other girls, yet not her or me - that works.' 'Do you want some?

Of this all the time?' Sure- they say yes to me- he asks, and that amused, secret smile is back, of I have a blond and a dark-haired girl all at the same time... Yet, would he be happy with just two? I ponder the thoughts even if he could hear them...

RICHARD C. MAST- He just grinds. Darkness cannot drive out darkness: only light can do that.

Hate cannot drive out hate: only love can do that. Holy crap, that's personal, I thought- to I met yesterday and the right for me. She's not her girlfriend?' yah well see - when I do them both at the same time. I love this game... (thoughts she could not hear)

Katie- 'I find you intimidating.' 'There's nothing mysterious about me.'

I flush scarcely think about all I could have had him just sick it in me- I mean all the riches in the world, but mentally pat myself on the back for my candor, and gaze at my hands again. I hear his sharp intake of breath.

'It gives me some sort of inkling of what you might be thinking,' he breathes. 'You're a secret, 'You should find me intimidating,' he nods as I do you. 'You're very honest, and blunt- about what he wants and how he wants it.

'Please don't look down, at me and to that to me- it hurts,' I said to him, "why' why- I don't think you should- Why- it's for my taking; he said... and you can't stop it... what are you going to do about it I run you- and thought you... I glance at him, and he gives me an encouraging but wry smile."

Unsure feeling yet contented... in his arms.

19

I get up in the morning barking orders to my Echo Dot, and she is more than happy to do them all for me, like play music, and get the thing going for me when I don't want to be going.

I like to see your face.' I'm just nervous around you, she said right?

Nope, you're not unlike any others I had... you're not the youngest either.

Oh... Me? Mysterious?

'I think you're very self-contained,' he murmurs.

Crap is what I said! 'Me, I hadn't realized I was so self-contained?' Except when I was blushing, of course, which is often with someone like him. Have I offended you? He sounds surprised. Not at all... I just wish I knew what you were blushing about.

He said you can feel safe with me.' 'Do you always make such personal annotations?' 'No,' I answer truthfully, to why yet I did not want to say it was all in my mind anyway. 'He is so-o good.' I thought...

He pops a small piece of blueberry muffin into my mouth and starts and I start to chew it slowly, and he goes for a kiss, odd yet sweet, not taking his eyes off me, as he pulled back for the kisses, and as if on indication of the fact I was all his, and I blushed.

'I'm used to getting my own way, Merry,' he murmurs. 'In all things.' This isn't going the way I thought it was going to go. I can't believe I'm feeling so antagonistic towards him. It's like he's trying to warn me off. 'But you're very high-handed,' I retaliate quietly.

Why, haven't you asked me to call you by your first name?' I'm surprised by my audacity. He raises his eyebrows at me and, if I'm not mistaken by this or how I feel, he flushes slightly too, by the sight of me and what I was about to do to him- in hot passion.

'I don't doubt it, was the fact that he was thinking about her, or thinking that it was wrong. Why, why has this conversation become so serious, in his mind about her? Has he really fallen in love with just her... or is this his mind overthinking things?

The next day- I'm with Merry- 'Are you into having a child?' He asks, sure, why do you want to do that now with me, I said back, it may be a plan if you want to do this. Is that I am for your breeder...?

He walked out of the room all mad! Whoa... he keeps changing my course of life. Yet, I am not going to say not- I am young, I don't know, um-a I what, or what I want to do. 'Tell me about your parents, they're not much to say other than my mom has done it all.' Why does he want to know this? It's so dull, like a boy or a girl? The girl he said.

Me- I thought that she's beautiful, my subconscious reminds me. I don't like the idea of me and Katie, doing this yet I do- I can't help myself, I take a sip of my tea, and - eats another small piece of his muffin.

‘My mom lives in Georgia with her new husband Bob. My stepdad lives in Montesano.’

‘Your father?’ ‘Yes, what about him- he not in my life now or ever- and I want to say that way.’ ‘My father dropped me when I was a baby.’ ‘I’m remorseful for bringing that up to you,’ he mumbles, and a fleeting bothered look a-crossed his face. ‘I don’t ‘member him at all.’ ‘And your mother remarried?’

I snuffle, one time holding back the tears, of feeling lost out on. He frowns at me. ‘You could say that, but maybe it was for the best.’ Maybe so... I said to him looking down.

‘Neither are you.’ About having a dad- ‘yah...’ ‘You’re not giving much away, are you?’ ...as if in deep thought, he says’ that in a wryly, was rubbing his chin. Holy shit, ‘you’ve interviewed me once already, why do you ask that... it’s okay for you have your nose up my ass hole, and I can recollect some quite probing questions then, why do I.’ He smirks at me, saying I would do that next time then.

That is when I said that- ‘My mom is wonderful, yet I have to be a grown-up at some point. She’s an irredeemable romantic, and have lost of boyfriend’s that like to skip out on her... she’s currently on her fourth man this week.’ I like mom there only 7 in a week. Your more skank-ie then Katie. ‘You said that to your mom?’

‘Yep!’ He raises his eyebrows in surprise. I continue to say about how - ‘I miss her, she has them now, and like always someone is more than I.

Those lips.

Those hips.

Those...

Ah!

‘Do you get along with all them then?’ I don’t bother too. She sees her own thing. ‘Of course, I thought- I just hope he can keep an eye on her and pick up the pieces when her harebrained schemes don’t go as planned.’

I grew up with all of them getting the best of her. I smile fondly, at her- like was not important. I haven't seen my mom for so long. RICHARD C. MAST is watching me intently, taking infrequent sips of his coffee, with the more cream than dark roast. I really shouldn't look at his mouth, long for a kiss, yet- I feel I need, the loving feelings. It's unsettling, to think about my past that was really just the night before or so it seems to me.

My life story, you no already by looking into my mind and using your brain- and this technology, you can see it all like a slide show just click to preview in a menu? 'And what's he like, not bother by any of it not even the sick frapping in the night, scaring out Katie's name?' I have bested sometimes 63 times- in one day, I was masturbating to try to put off doing laundry. Ended up masturbating for 7 hours. I was incredibly raw and sore after, but- I guess I was 10 or so, yet I deserved it. 'That's it?' - asks, surprised, you don't think that's wrong for a girl of that age to do that- he shrugged.

What does this man expect, her for you not too? I refrain from rolling my eyes at him, yet I could not help but squeeze him tighter, harder and longer for understanding all that is me. 'Why didn't you want to live with your mom...?' he asks... and before came out of my mouth, he saw it play out in his awareness of thoughts. I cannot help but blush, this really is none of his business, yet he's making it be so he knows everything about me and so it's safe... it's like mind- rapping.

'Siblings...?' 'Yes, all girls 3.'

He could see them all- the youngest no 10 or so... I don't keep up with them. There all own their own too. Yet it is the norm these days... and my little sister is in Paris, French dick suck of a boy that wants to use her up and dump her, yet that is what she wanted.' His eyes go cloud with irritation, on my mother's part- I said to him she fails no? He doesn't want to talk about his family or himself, it all about me... yet I feel that it all the same.

'I hear Paris is lovely for young lovers why not let her- my mom said,' I murmur the quotes run past my mind to fast to not stop them. Why doesn't he want to talk about my family...?

'It's beautiful... that you have turned up as good as you did- he said. Have you been 'good' I can tell?' he asks, his exasperation with what he digging for to be forgotten. It's not nice to ask about a girl past these days... I thought not even lovers... 'Paris?' I squeak never been- there.

‘You well...’ ‘Of course,’ I concede, saying let’s do it now - yet is that too much to ask? He looks at me with eyes glittering in the low light with the moon full shining in the windows. ‘But it’s England that I’d really like to visit.’ ‘Because, I was feeling gloomy, thinking about all that just sucks...’ He tilts his head to one side, running his index finger across his lower lip... saying sure. I blinked, and then I blinked, then I blinked ounces more hastily, so I blinked, like 3 times wildly in a chain-like of events.

I was snooping through your things in your mind I see that you have written such a wonderful book, that you don’t think is good - yet I do.’ All this talk of literary greats reminds me, that I should be studying for him to make him bigger than he is. I glance at my watch... saying commands for it do, in timely fashions. ‘I’d better go... now - and get back - (I was at his home; it is huge and has 16 bedrooms or more and 4 baths.) I have to study, I said, thank you for saying, that but you must not mean that. I love that, you love me like this.’ ‘For your exams?’ ‘Yes...’ ‘Okay, then you may go.’ He said... - My mind is reeling with desire. The next day - the first question. ‘Do you always wear dresses?’ he asks out of the blue. ‘Mostly.’ I spoke... in his ear softly. He nods shaking his head up and down. The look he gives me and the warm fuzzy feeling going in and through me - I’m completely blown away by it, I know - it’s LOVE.

If you were basically unnoticed the sensation, you would never - ever know what might have taken place, and in many ways that were worse than finding out in the first place. For the reason that if you were off the beam, you could go onward in your lifespan without never - ever be holding back over your shoulder and conjecturing what might have been - in the questions of what - if. And I aware that our time together is limited, even if where ‘are always together, ‘Do you have girlfriends other than her?’ He blurts out.

Holy crap, why must he ask this - ‘I don’t.’ - I just said that out loud also. I don’t have the time for other girls only her... his lips quirk up in a semi-smile, showing, and he looks down at me with envy. Oh... what does that mean? He blocking me from reading his mind... to toy with me. I have to try to reassemble my thoughts, yet this is his game. I have to get away from him, for I do something to lose him... I walk forward, and I trip, stumbling headlong into the shitter - flush.

‘Shit, Merry!’ - He cries. ‘Yes, yes it was a mouth full of it.’

Kiss me damn it! I inhale deeply, that’s the feeling of love... you know.

I implore him, but I can't move. 'Are you okay?' he whispers.

When she moves upwards when I insert into her. Feeling ever hitting thrust she moves with me. I'm in your arms. Kiss me, please. His gazes at my hood, as he moves it about, I'm paralyzed with a strange feeling of fast hart breathing that just takes over me, unfamiliar need to understand I let myself rush free, as he does with me, completely captivated by him, I feel it okay to spray him down.

He closes his eyes, takes a deep breath, and gives me a small shake of his head as if in answer to my silent question, that was running in his mind- and that was do you love me? YES! _ YES! _ FREAKING! _ YES! He's staring into my eyes when he opens his eyes again, it's with some new purpose, He tugs the hand that he's holding so hard that, I fall back against him, it all happens so-o fast, yet over and over - one minute I'm falling, of the bed the next I bouncing, on my head, up-down and skidways' too, the next I'm in his arms, and he's holding me tightly against his chest.

I'm staring at RICHARD C. MAST-'s exquisitely sculptured mouth, mesmerized, and he's looking down at me, his eyes darkening. He's breathing harder than usual, and I've stopped breathing altogether. His thumb and I feel it in me, as he brushes my lower lip, and I hear his breath a glitch.

I inhale his dipping love, vital scent taking, like the slut he wants me to be - yet, I am happy to be just that. He smells of freshly laundered sheets and some luxurious body-wash, come over me I did not even see that he has carried me into his shower room, I may have blacked out- from all hardcore love'n.

I want to be kissed, right here I said- and he did. (I pointed you know were,) my kindness is drawn to his beautiful body- looking over the entirety. He has one arm around me, clasping me tight to him, while the fingers of his other hand softly trace my face, and around the place that every young girl was to have touched by a man like him, gently probing exploratory me. I hold his- nervous, burning gaze for a moment or maybe it's persistently... but eventually, and for the first time in twenty-one years, I want to feel his mouth on me. I'm not the man for you he said to Katie in his mind who was see it all,' he whispers.

What- is she doing looking in on us like this? Where is this coming from, you wanted me the other night? She said... in a fast way to him, Surely, I should be the judge of that, she thought, I frown think why can I not have my moment with him, and my head swims with rejection - and that was felt all around- with us all.

I have 'royally screwed' I see him say to her... about all this... He has his hands on my shoulders, holding me at arm's length, watching my responses sensibly. And the only thing I can think is that I wanted to be kissed, made it pretty damned obvious, and he didn't do it. He doesn't want me. He really doesn't want me.

I'm going to stand you up and let you go, we were my butt cheeks pressed against the glass window where doing like bunny's, as all the people looking in at us, in a hugging freaking stance,' he says quietly letting me down and off him, and he gently pushes me away, as if like he is slapping the shit out of himself.

(My mom thought it was something about a broken typewriter that was his grandpas.) Yah - no! My soul screams as he pulls away, leaving me grieving, for him to feel me up to feel the hole. It like he spiked through my body, as I stand there, feeling him coming out of me.

I said to her- her being Katie... you make me feel safe. 'I've got this,' I breathe, finding my voice. 'Thank you for killing it for us through- why,' I mutter away with humiliation, as the kids outside the glass point, at me and uncover body- yet, that's how things are these days. How could I have misread the situation between us so utterly? I need to get away from her. I'm glad to hear you say just that, he whispered. He frowns at me in an anomalous way. He hasn't taken his hands off me, or his eyes. 'For keeping me,' I whisper- thank you- your everything I needed.

He doesn't want me- though Katie- why?

Then a million-thought rushed through my mind as to why not... I bet you could find them all no- can you?

22

'Thanks for doing the photo shoot, and giving me all these nude photos of you to keep- I love them- you could justify it in a magazine with these, I will see that you do.

I shudder to think, my puss hole is going to be wide open on the cover, what could have happened to me, if daddy would see that- or mom. I'm standing in front of him feeling like a fool. Um- wow- really it just looks like a black hole yet boys love to look up it- (ah girl thoughts.) Yet for the money and him what the hell.

Do you want to come and sit down in the room for a moment and see me edit these to enhances what you have going for you, looking them all over to pick with one we'll go on the cover- of Playboy- he bought them out back in 2019.'

He releases me, his hands, off my boobs, and the playing and they go down to his sides, his hand was on me pulling shoulder strap down, and well I shake know what comes next- it's more sex, you got it, I clear my mind some. All my vague, unarticulated hopes have been dashed, looking at myself this way- yet for him anything. Outside the room, I turn briefly to face him, but cannot look him in the eye. With all the kids looking at me see me as the girl on the cover... it was that, fast there, I am on the big screens in the NY all nude. Being naked this day is something we feel fee about doing... with cameras everywhere why not show it all- and we don't care- if a 5-year-old sees it- they'll understand soon enough...

What was I thinking too much? I admonish myself. My subconscious mocks me, I look around to see all of me- all over the place- I am the IT girl of the day. I never wanted that... I wrap my arms around myself- for Katie was happy for me and want to show love, and turn to face the road... to move on with my day, I quickly make my way across, conscious that - is behind me, I murmur, it's only for a month... I was inquiry my own dumb thoughts.

She stops, and the anguish in his voice demands my attention, as she is running to me, with open arm, she there my true love has found me... she is always there for me even if I want to die a slow and painful death, overall this shit, so I peer unwillingly up at me- and she said I love it- it- is, so you- she said. Her gray eyes are bleak, fast-ly like only she can make them do- as she runs his hand through his hair.

Huh? This is why he looks so desolate; this is what he gets out of you? One girl said to me, at school the next day- holding up a hard copy of me- to all to see, yet I know they all have; I did not even blink- at her- as I was chowing on my pin- like a girl in 5th grade.

Once underneath the dark, cold concrete of the room with its bleak fluorescent light humming, I lean against the wall, before class and put my head in my hands, as I have now sat down for the teachings.

This is the big send-off, of the bell ringing out? Just to wish me luck on more tests, that have nothing to do with what I want to do in life.

-And-

Their Brad jerking off under the desk to my photo! Don't giggle its true! It seems like, um- that's okay for a-boys, yet not a girl these days... also, the girl next to me just got busted for it- yet boys can do anything for they' are known for it.

'Thanks: said the man teaching the class for the embraceable photography of a classmate- there Dee.' 'Um- well thank- thank you.' she said. I can't disguise the sarcasm in my voice.

Saying: 'She is a good kid stop it!'

I really think he meant it!

Unforbidden and annoying tears pool in my eyes. Thinking of all that has happened these past days, what has not- and what going too... What was not I thinking about it all?

I turn on my heel, on the left foot, for I was nervous, vaguely amazed, that I don't trip - I have a habit of falling on my face, yet that is just me.

I see him in my mind, without giving him a second glance, I disappear down the hall toward the bathroom, run yet I can't get away when he is in my head always. Why am I crying over this? Drawing up my knees I see in a stall, I fold in on myself.

Grief is something that never was something- I could take, like with my dashed hopes, dreams, and soured outlooks. Placing my head on my knees, I let the irrational tears fall unrestrained. How ridiculous am I for doing such? I sink to the side of the shitter and meltdown, angry at myself for this senseless feedback- of feeling all types of love.

Perhaps this ridiculous pain will be smaller the smaller I am if I do this... I have never been on the receiving end of rejection for my own doing, I want this- yet I don't- I don't know what I want- really- I don't. I want to make myself as small as possible. To just fade away from life. I am crying over the loss of something I never had, and that's my pride.

Okay... so I was always one of the last to be picked for basketball or volleyball - but I understood that - running and doing something else at the same time like bouncing or throwing a ball is not my thing. I am a solemn liability in any sporting field.

I'm too pale, feeling and showing, like- passionately thinking in thoughts, though, I've never put myself out there, ever.

Her welcoming smile fades when she sees me. Analytically, I thought to stop! As he said to stop me with crossness in the voice of thought. I'm sure neither of them has been found sobbing alone in dark places. I see Katie there standing to hold me. She drags me home with her arm around her one shoulder. Perhaps, I just need a good cry. A lifetime of insecurity I have had and, too skinny, too shabby, clumsy, my long list of faults goes on.

My subliminal is emblematically screaming at me, arms folded, leaning on one leg, then pitter-pattering her foot in frustration, (Five hours have pasted...) Katie is sitting at the dining table on her laptop when I arrive. She asked: 'Marry what's wrong?'

'You've been crying,' She has an excellent gift for me being there all the time like she is now, just stating there. 'What did that bastard do to you?' She howls, and her face, jeez, she's scary. That's actually the problem, I should just be happy, and I am not sure if I know how to do that... why can't I?

'Nothing Katie is wrong with me other than what is wrong with me.' The thought brings an ironic smile to my face. 'Then I ask- why have you been crying?' 'Like- You never cry,' she says, her voice relaxing some as she continued taking. She puts her arms around me and for side hugs.

I have to say something; just to get her to back chest. She stands, her gray eyes brimming with concern, yet I feel that she feels that way about me all the time. 'Nope, RICHARD C. MAST saved me,' I whisper for being just like all of them that don't care. 'Nonetheless, I was quite shaken by it, anyway.' It was fine, nothing to worry about really.

'Okay, he's got more money than you, but then he has more money than most people in America! And you're not happy with that? He has everything-' 'What do you mean...? What are you trying to say?' 'Oh Katie, it's obvious isn't.' I whirled around, to face her as she stands in the kitchen doorway, looking at me that way. 'Merry! For heaven's sake, how many times; must I tell you? You're a total baby,' she intersects me as I blabber. He likes you more than me... 'oh don't be silly.'

That's what this is all about.

'Katie she just shrugs.

I need to study.' I cut her short. She frowns and said that can wait.

And she holding me in her arms like a lover that she is.

'Katie, please, don't get mad at me for this- 'never.'

Chimera

(My days repeating)

This is what he meant, for me to do with my life be his... anytime he wants it-girl and nothing more and nothing less, and it makes his rejection easier to accept... almost. Yet, the money is why, like - I am here- and the love too... yah that...

I have been working on my studies more than them being with him or her... I would say it was to clear my head. I was looking over the paper that was said I wrote, I pretend to read the article, that Katie made for me. Above and beyond its suddenly, blindingly obvious. He's too gloriously good-looking, not to think about non- stop. I know he loves me, yet he has a hard way of really showing just that.

I, understand, yet not so- her words make more sense than mine- I questioned this... He's not the man for me. I can live with this. It's only when I'm in bed, that I try to sleep, that I allow my thoughts to drift off some- yet all the voices run through me- never hushing up.

Never slowing- never stopping, for me to have a moment- in time to think alone.

'Katie, she is very good,' 'I'm going to study, is what I said to her... just wanted to get away from her mouth.' I am not going to think about him again, for now, I vow to myself, and opening my revision notes, I start to read. Thus far, his face keeps looking it to mine, and I see him looking back in the glass.

I put my pen down, which makes all the font that I write out and comforts it into text in word. I am finished, with my re-write of her draft.

My final exam is over, I said- this will do just fine the grin spread over my face can be helped.

It's probably the first time all week that I've smiled over something other than him. It's Friday, and we shall be celebrating tonight, really celebrating.

Paris- with Katie not him, I need this- the city the lights the sound- of something other than me inquiry all that is me - and him.

She slanted her head and smiled at her companion, with grace seated her at the best table in the restaurant; her smile, at least, was honest, though almost nothing else about her was. The pale gray of her eyes was warmed to by sweet colored contact lenses; her blond hair had been darkened by the low light of the tower in the background, then subtly streaked with lighter shades. in her arms mentally begging her with every fiber of my being to kiss me, is what I really needed, just her true love for me - not asking... never demanding.

He didn't want me as a girlfriend, this week he was off doing what he does. I turn on to my side, now at the hotel, with her in the single bed, Frivolously, I wonder if perhaps he's with a new younger girl?

Think back of: 'Ah!' settled in his chair with a contented sigh, returning her smile. she is so beautiful woman in her teen years; she looks the US, with glossy dark hair and liquid gray eyes, and a luxurious mouth.

(Bed)

I close my eyes and begin to drift, and she nudges me, groggy as I- she had gambled that he wouldn't have his people dig any deeper than that, that he would run out of the patience required to wait for the answers before, she made a move on me. Her manufactured background was only a few layers deep; I knew she and I wanted too so why not; she hadn't had time to prepare more. Maybe he's saving himself. Well not for you, my sleepy subconscious has a final swipe at me before unleashing itself on my dreams.

I might even get drunk! I said- we can hear it's not agents the law here, I've never been drunk before, I know that the trill was wearing off, I glance across the sports hall at Katie, and she's still scribbling furiously, five minutes to the end of foolish. This is it, the end of my academic career if he tunes in...

She'd done the best she could in the time she had, she knew that she would have to be off doing her study's even on this run over the sea that takes less than a day now.

He made a point of keeping himself in shape, and his hair hadn't yet started to gray-either that or he was as skilled as she at touch-ups. 'You look especially lovely tonight; have I told you that yet?' I shall never have to sit in rows of anxious, isolated students again. Inside I'm doing graceful cartwheels around my head, knowing full well that's the only place I can do graceful cartwheels.

...And that night, I dream of her and I live long everafter, and I'm running through dark places with eerie strip lighting doing things we shouldn't, and I don't know if I'm running toward something, that I should want or not- the dream, leads me with choices, it's just not clear.

Katie stops writing and puts her pen down. She glances across at me, and I catch her Cheshire cat smile too. We head back to our apartment together in her Mercedes, refusing to discuss our final paper. Katie is more concerned about what she's going to wear to the bar this evening. I am busily fishing around in my purse for my keys.

'Merry, there's a package for you, there flowers from him...' she said.

Odd, I haven't ordered anything from Amazon recently.

Katie is standing on the steps up to the front door holding them.

'No.' Katie's eyes are wide with disbelief. '-?' I nod.

'You have, she said, he loved you more than anything, I start to believe it.' But then her gaze was warm, wet whit tears for she was in love with me more than he at that moment. I knew... she had trained long and hard to acquire it, I knew she was the one that would always care about me. 'Thank you again... I said to him in a mind message.' I recognize the quote was something slandered, where was the love in it?

I have not let myself dwell on RICHARD C. MAST - for the past week. Okay... so-o his blue eyes are still haunting my dreams, as she plays with me in them too, and I know it will take an eternity to expunge the feel of his arms around me and his wonderful perfume from my brain. Why has he sent me this?

'Can't think of anyone else, that would do this for me, like him though.' 'What does this card mean...?' 'I have no inkling; I think it's a warning - scrupulously he keeps threatening me off, with gifts. I have no idea why- he thinks I will keep coming back- just for the coming.

It's not like I'm beating his door down- and the wood hard- with only him.' I frown some... 'I know you don't want to talk about him, Merry, but he's seriously into you. Warnings or no.' 'I don't know, and I don't care. I can't accept these from him, yet not feeling as I did in the past some of the caring went away.

I love Katie, she's so loyal and supportive. I repack the books and leave them on the dining table. Katie hands me a glass of champagne.

'To the end of exams and our new life in Seattle,' she grins.

'To the end of exams, our new life in Seattle, and excellent results.' We clink glasses and drink.

The bar is loud and hectic, full of soon to be graduates out to get trashed. José joins us. He won't graduate for another year, but he's in the mood to party and gets us into the spirit of our newfound freedom by buying a pitcher of margaritas for us all. As I down my fifth, I know this is not a good idea on top of the champagne.

'So, what now Merry?' She shouts at me over the noise, Katie has the constitution of a she-ass. 'That is doubtful,' she calmly replied. 'I have never liked any wine.' She'd made that plain from the start, who disliked the taste of wine, I thought sitting over here looking at her thinking that. Her taste buds were deplorably working-class. She, in fact, enjoyed a glass of wine, (I thought) now she is drinking only coffee or bottled water; order coffee for her, of that... I giggle.

'I think I'd better have a beer.'

'I'll go get us a pitcher.'

'More drink, Merry!'

Katie bellows...

'Classy- in France?'

Sure!

Her eyes for Katie, are glittery and wet for her. I move out of her way to hold and get up from our table. She is taking photos, yes, of her in her tight jeans, her usual stunning self, and high heels, hair piled high with tendrils hanging down softly around her face. I giggled over it like I have no idea what the time is, maybe I'll wake with her over to the tower and well go up and kiss at the top. Good thinking, Merry. I stagger off through the crowd, she yells for me, and I whisper in her mind that I am over here. Of course, there's a line, but at least it's moving fast to the top. I'm suppressing a drunken smile, hit me like an involuntary, looking out over with her in my arms and the kiss.

Back at the hotel my head, ponding so-o... I go for a swim uncomfortably in a G-string bikini, with all the others, a lot of kids but even so, it was nice, Well, the object of the exercise was to get drunk, on it's the other way 'round. I have succeeded, in working it off. I stare blankly over and over in a fast way- at the poster on the back of the toilet door that extols the virtues of safe sex.

Yah- NO! like that is going to happen.

Holy crap'n piss bucket, did I just call RICHARD C. MAST in my mind? Shit. My phone rings for him it's all in my mind though, and it makes me jump when he says 'what do you want.' I squeak in surprise; by how the man he is being to me for what see to be noted on my own doing.

This is what it's like - probably not an experience to be repeated.

The line has moved, and it's now my turn.

'Howdy,' I bleat timidly into the handset. I hadn't calculated on this.

'I'm coming to get you,' he says and hangs up... before I said I did want him too. The only RICHARD C. MAST - could sound so calm and so threatening at the same time. I pull my jeans up after the poster said not to do what I just did.

My heart is thumping. Coming to get me? Well, I am coming to get her- ha. Hang on, I'm fine. Oh no. I'm going to be sick... no... He's just messing with my head.

I said- 'Holy freaking crap nugget.'

He can't find me here, I would say so with GPS within my body as we all have now, Besides, it will take him 4 hours to get here from NY, and we'll be long gone by then. I wash my hands and check my face in the mirror.

I said- 'Holy freaking crap nugget.'

I for one looked flushed and slightly unfocused. He can't find me here, I would say so with GPS within my body as we all have now, 'You've been gone so long.' Katie reprimands me. Besides, it will take him 4 hours to get here from NY, and we'll be long gone by then. I wash my hands and check my face in the mirror. 'Where were you?' I wait at the bar for what feels like an eternity for the pitcher of beer and eventually return to the table. 'The girl's room on a call, that I shouldn't have made.' Mind dealing- I said... 'ah- were sitting out said at a bar café. 'All- out- in the - fresh air- and yeah.' 'Katie, I think I'd better think that you and I have a thing... 'Merry, you are such a softie with him - grow some lady nuts and say- freak you.'

'I'll be five- to ten minutes...'

...'Going to flick-the-bean-?'

'Yep!' said Katie in understanding, with a sarcastic thumbs up!

At first, my trusty ally as always is my hairbrush like a girl wanting to look good at all times. By day I used it to brush my hair, and at the night, on the rug, face on the floor, ass in the air, skirt pushed up, I run my fingers just down the long place where the insides of your thighs touch, all the way to your knees, and then I'd let go of your legs, and they'd fall slightly apart, and as my hands started to move up inside them, with my fingers splayed wide, they'd move farther and farther apart, and then I'd lift your knees and hook them over the arms of the armchair, and pass my fingertips all the way down over your breasts and your stomach and just lightly, back and forth, moving closer and closer to where your thighs meet; f*ck yourself, you'll have so-o much fun!

Nails ripping methodically at sheer taupe pantyhose it took her easily twenty minutes to put on, I have to get nude- and I don't care. The little inconvenience that she must have been wet without knowing it as a woman. Slow, rhythmic, gentle, moving down my body, down and I was nothing but my body. Just the sweetness the incredible... I could feel her muscles moving softly, coming was more in my mind still; when I got ever-so closer- I would become a single band of muscle, shaking without a thought of mind behind it, flickering and curving to every moment, current tugging at herself harder, moving just right- toward the flood in which was to come.

And, by night I rode the handle of that grooming item like a limitless pounding hot sex man of my dreams, doubling its functionalities at a stroke. Two very separate lives this brush has just like myself. Multi-tasking is a big thing with me.

Always with the disguise. Two very separate lives- indeed more than okay, beautiful and natural. Longer a concern was thoughts, into my field of vision now coming back, draining it- with an exhaustive gaze- of relief, which sought to extract from it a female creature. I run my hands down my belly it's all done. Forefinger touches the clitoris while the left forefinger goes deep inside, get what was left in out, fingers surrounded by those soft, collapsing caves of flesh and girlie-goo THICK AND CLEAR BUT SOMETIMES STRINGY, my finger is too small. I put in two and spreads them... She moves her fingers to that rhythm again for time two, feeling the two inside get creamy and the clitoris dipping in and out gets hard and pink.

Then squirting into the many sprays all over the floor or running's into the butt hole covered with a heart-shaped (S) 7*2.8 CM beginner butt plug in red gemstone and shiny Stainless steel- of the thickness of my girlie goo. The chair was at an odd angle as she got up to clean... and move on with her day.

I make my way through the crowd another time, thinking of how I was going to get off like three more times, in 15. I am beginning to feel nauseous, my head is spinning uncomfortably, see in the little girl in the open stall next to me get there faster than I! and she's like freaking 10! and I'm a little unsteady with my frapping 3 figuring or have girl gotten even more slutty. More unsteady than usual, she got it down. God, I turn on- you? No- nope...? ...Didn't think so prev. 'I think I've just had a bit too much to drink, I feel like more pee than that is coming out of me.' I smile weakly at her and say- GOD FOR YOU HUNNY- good for you.

'And you too,' she murmurs, and her dark eyes are watching me intently, saying why you doing this on your own at your age... is a young girl thing to do.' Do you need a hand?' she asks and steps closer undies at her feet, putting her arm around me some. I've got this.' I try and push her away rather weakly, of age, yet there nothing wrong with it. 'Merry, please,' she whispers, its Kate in my head saying don't do it, yet the young child is holding me in her arms, pulling me close, like a lover. These days' free love is love! No matter the age...

'You know I like you, Merry, please.' He has one hand at the small of my back holding me against him, the other at my chin tipping back my head. Holy freak... he's going to kiss me. Her hand has slipped into my hair, and she's holding me.

She whispers against my lips. His breath is soft and smells too sweet- of candy and Kool-Aid. She gently kisses me along my jaw, and lips and movies up to the side of my mouth and then right on my parted lips. I feel frightened, drunk, and out of control, yet I love having fee love like this- it like I was her age all over. The feeling is sickly sweet.

You are my friend, no and for life, I said to her, and I think, I'm going to throw up, so you should runoff. A voice in the dark says quietly. Holy shit!

In my mind- RICHARD C. MAST- he's at this juncture, see what I have done.

I glance anxiously up at the RICHARD C. MAST. He's glowering at Katie, and he's furious, like me for doing a young one as he said. Crap'n, and fly trap-My stomach hauls, and I double over, worse than when blood is shooting out of my hole, I'll hold you.'

She grabs my hair and pulls it out of the firing line- my body no longer able to accept the alcohol, and I vomit outstandingly on to the ground at me and the little French girls' feet her name was - Willow.

She has her arms around my middle body - holding my hair in a makeshift ponytail down my back so it's off my face, her hands the other is I try awkwardly to push her hair out of the way, but I vomit again... and again, even on to her half nude body.

Even when my stomach's empty, and nothing is coming up, oh shit... 'If you're going to throw up again, I note, with deep thankfulness, that it's in relative darkness. I vow silently that I'll never ever drink again, yet that like say I cannot have a day without sex. It's going down in me at some point.

My hands are resting on the block wall... How long is this going to last? I questioned... she takes her T stands, and I wipe my mouth, on she said she did not care... love at first sight... I questioned it. This is just too appalling for words, Katie said... I have to go out now. So-o horrifying gasping heaves of wackiness- my body feels. Then it concludes... Katie is still hovering by the entrance to the girl's room watching us.

Her (the young girls) hand are barely holding me up – vomiting profusely is exhausting. takes his hands off I say to him- I'm hectic with embarrassment repulsed with me. When I come around. My hands in on head I groan, as I place them there. Like that was the solitary worst moment of my lifespan. Twins taking a crap is what I think of at this moment- why I don't know. Oh- yeah- I do- there they are both doing just that- like- looking in at me over in there apparent 5,00 feet up or so all glass too. What should I say to him, for him to forgive this?

RICHARD C. MAST's rejection will not be something good. I try to remember a worse one, that I have done, and I cannot. I glare at him, in my mind. For he is acting like my dad, not my lover. Oh, the humiliation... my mother was far worse. Marry who are you kidding, he's just seen you hurl all over the ground- nothing more said- Katie, she feels that what I did was nothing. Yet I still look pretty shamefaced to myself, and him- or so I think.

'You know I like you, Merry, please.' He has one hand at the small of my back holding me against him, the other at my chin tipping back my head.

Oh- yeah- I do- there they are both doing just that- like- looking in at me over in there apparent 5,00 feet up or so all glass too. What should I say to him, for him to forgive this?

RICHARD C. MAST's rejection will not be something good. I try to remember a worse one, that I have done, and I cannot. I glare at him, in my mind. For he is acting like my dad, not my lover. Oh, the humiliation... my mother was far worse. Marry who are you kidding, he's just seen you hurl all over the ground- nothing more said- Katie, she feels that what I did was nothing. Yet I still look pretty shamefaced to myself, and him- or so I think.

I have a few choice words for my so-called friend, none of which I can repeat in front of RICHARD C. MAST - There's no disguising your lack of ladylike behavior, and I can only come up with- and this is so, so many shades darker in terms of, I risk a glance at him, I see hem looking back at me mirrored back in my stare.

He's staring down at me, his face composed, yet he can help but fall for me fast, giving nothing away about how he was feeling about what I did we fall.

Turning, I glance at Katie whom and, like me, scared by the true filling that he heads to me from that day. I personally mutter, staring at the handkerchief which I am furiously worrying with my fingers. It's so soft, and worm, as slid his fingers in her, he probably would expect her to share his bed tonight, but he was destined to be disappointed once again, in her saying: I don't feel the need after, soloing- so many times today. Her hatred was so strong she had barely been able to force herself to let him kiss her and accept his touch with some temperateness.

There was no way in hell like she'd let him do more than that to her tonight- for the movies running in her had of him acting like an ass and or like her dad. 'I'm sorry, he said for what I have done to you. Just in my thoughts of...' Apologize... and say back off. Katie mutters, derogatory but we both ignore that, and he slinks off back into the of my mind for rest and sleep.

I'm on my own with doing me- and just Kate.

'We've all been here, perchance not quite as dramatically as you,' he says dryly. 'It's about knowing your limits, Merry. I mean, I'm all for pushing limits, but really this is beyond the pale. My head rings with excess alcohol and frustration. Do you make a habit of this kind of behavior?'

He was scolding me like an errant child, something you would never do to me I said to Kate that had me held by the butt, arching my back as she is holding me in her arms, for passion and cute kissing- then 69, her butt in my face, I move her lips around using sucking at mouth and teeth and tongue.

Katie- Put her legs over your shoulders and grab onto her waist or open up her vagina. (the last one feels better) or have her butt hole in your well- nose.

Don't fart!

And at first kiss outside her vagina and then slowly lick her inside and just pretend she's the most beautiful thing you've ever tasted and if she wants to talk dirty to her but talks to her about that beforehand so she won't be offended.

Hope this helps.

I love it. It's such a turn on.

- You want to kiss/nibble on her neck first. It's a good way to start- turning her on.

Suck on her nipples and play with them with your tongue. This too is another great turn on.

- While you're doing these, massage her PUSS-PUSS over her pants-just to get her ready for it.

- Work your way down, slowly and sexually.
- Open up her PUS*Y and go straight to the Cl*t.
- Smack the PUS*Y with your tongue really fast, and suck and tug on it (not too hard though.)

- As you're sucking her PUS*Y, slide your fingers in and out of her- vagina opening.
- Once you have 2 fingers in there, and they're facing up, curve them-like a hook and without going in and out, stroke her G-spot.

If this is your first time, beware of the smell and taste, as it makes most guys gag at first.

Part of me wants to say, if I want to get drunk every night like this, then it's my decision and nothing to do with him - but I'm not brave enough. Not now that I've thrown up in front of him. Why is he still standing there?

'No,' I said contritely. 'I've never been drunk before and right now I have no desire to ever be again.' Yet, I know that's a lie... 'Come on, I'll take you home,' she murmurs - do this to me.

I just don't understand why he's here. I begin to feel faint. She notices my dizziness and grabs me before I fall and hoists me into his arms, holding me close to her chest like a child. For sucking and nabbing on her nipples. 'I need you, Katie.' Holy Moses, I say at C-* -M! I'm in her arms again. Where I do the same to her butt in the air, I go for it for like a half-hour.

'Dancing,' with Katie in the club she shouts, and I can tell he's mad at me acting slutty. He's is eyeing me - him the RICHARD C. MAST suspiciously.

I struggle with my black jacket and place my small shoulder bag over my head, so it sits at my hip. I'm ready to go, once I've seen Katie; to party my ass off... yet he is saying NO... No in my mind. And I just having fun. It's earsplitting, packed, and the music is underway, thus there is a huge mass on the dance floor. She sets me down, and, taking my hand, leads me back into the bar.

She knew that I went out for some air - of him... embarrassed weak I feel dumb, and still drunk, somewhat exhausted, ashamed, and on some strange equal unquestionably off the scale electrified, by the cocktail of things I took down.

He's clutching my hand I see them all wavy to my sight. Looking at them all swirly. - Such a confusing array of emotions play tricks in my mind like haunted school girl ghosts. I'll need at least a week to process them all, I knew even in this state of mind of senseless.

Katie is not at our table, and Katie has disappeared. Levi looks lost and forlorn on his own. 'Where's Katie? She was off with some young girl doing what I did the night before.' I see that she had to feel as I did... she was always like that with me... we have to be the same in all- or not...! 'My head is beginning to pound in time to the thumping bass line of the music.'

He rolls his eyes at me and takes my hand again and leads me to the bar. He's served immediately.

'She's on the dance floor,' I touch RICHARD C. MAST's arm and lean up and shout in his ear, brushing his hair with my nose, smelling his clean, fresh smell. All those forbidden, unfamiliar feelings that I have tried to deny surface and run amok through my drained body. I myself flush, and somewhere deep, deep down my muscles clench deliciously. He is such a - Control-Freak - I said to her- saying: your just having fun. He's watching me intently, mirrored in my- lost young girl like the look of my eyes.

'Drink- Drink- drink' I heard her say, to this young girl in the bar and she was about 14,' he shouts his order at me. He looks irritated and livid, with me like I am his sex- dollie, and nothing more...He's so overbearing, I thought. Give me love- I thought- or is sex now just the love?

What is his delinquent? The moving lights are meandering and turning in time to the music casting strange colored light and obscurities all over the bar and the business.

He's alternately white, green, blue, and bloodshot red.

There a dead girl in an ash box sitting on the ground, on the walkway to my home, she was just burnt a day go, and dumped, here, and this is where she is resting- no one cares about her like death and dumping ash that nothing- or that she was only 5 years of age...I take a hesitant swallow; I think about the life she never had- on like all the others thoughts going through my mind I care.

'All of it,' he shouts.

I sway slightly, and he puts his hand on my shoulder to steady me. Um - Merry... are you ever going to live this down, and say she slipped away? She was my sister girl- and mom and they just dump her off... to be kicked by passing feet- yah but that is what they do these days- girl.

Cemeteries are wasted spaces of land, why do that when you need to construct things in that space. There is nothing left to remember her by- nothing by the memories in my mind of whom she was.

It makes me feel queasy, as I look in the box 3 x 6-inch books and see nothing but blackened asks... blowing some in the wand of the high walkways...in the glowing tingling light of the smoggy covered skyline. I notice this thought of what she was wearing the last time that I saw her, a blur though- wearing; a loose white linen shirt, snug jeans, playing in the park on the roof of the high-rise, pink converse sneakers, and a pink and white jacket, I would know I see a flick in some of the ash hitting my face as dust in the wind.

I sway slightly, and he puts his hand on my shoulder to steady me.

pink converse sneakers, and a pink and white jacket, I would know I see a flick in some of the ash hitting my face as dust in the wind.

Now in bed sleeping pills at my side, taking the glass from me, she places them for me - so sweet. Her shirt is unbuttoned at the top, and I see a sprinkling skin coming at me - and I somewhat out... then just to see her ass in my face... when I come to it, in my groggy frame of mind, she looks yummy.

He takes my hand once more. Holy cow - he's leading me onto the dance floor. Shit. I do not dance. He can sense my reluctance, and under the colored lights, I can see his amused, slightly sardonic smile. He gives my hand a sharp tug, and I'm in his arms again, and he starts to move, taking me with him.

Boy, he can dance, and I can't believe that I'm following him step for step. Maybe it's because I'm drunk that I can keep up. He's holding me tight against him, his body against mine... if he wasn't clutching me so tightly, I'm sure I would swoon at his feet. In the back of my mind, my mother's often recited warning comes to me: Never trust a man who can dance.

I looked into him/ his daily thoughts and what he did, just to see that he was with a 15-year-old-, not me- saying- 'Such a tight pussy- so tight and young-and small and the sucking oh so tight it's letting are out the sides. - he said as I see that he was with a new girl named- Nataliee.

I just was modified...Really likes she likes someone, I gasp. Katie is making her moves go in her mind for me of her hook up, she had with her new friend. She's dancing her ass off, and she only ever does that if she likes someone. It means there'll be three of us for breakfast tomorrow morning. Katie! Outside and inside my head pounding away, loud. I cannot hear what he says, I tuned it out... it was my wishes. I can't tell the color under the pulsating to all the heat of the flashing lights going off, is the day starting a new.

I Katie- curly blonde hair, and light, wickedly gleaming eyes.

Me- She pulls me into her arms, where she is more than happy to be... Katie!

But I never- ever got to talk to her, the girl she had last night- I had to meet her. A new day is all the same- until the night-RICHARD C. MAST propels us off the dance floor in double-quick time. Is she okay? She said- she's not you- though. I need to do the safe sex lecture, for the school, the teacher I know is a lezbo, but yeah...she loves me.

I can see where things are heading for her and him, In the back of my mind, I hope she reads one of the posters on the back of the toilet doors. My thoughts crash through my brain, fighting the drunk, fuzzy feeling. It's so warm in here, so loud, so colorful - too bright. My head begins to swim with so many thoughts of him and her, and her and then him- and what she did- he did- and what I did with all, oh no... The last thing I hear beforehand, I pass out in RICHARD C. MAST'S arms is his harsh description. It's very quiet, I am comfortable and warm, the light is muted, in this bed. 'Freak!' I open my eyes, Hmm...I'm tranquil for a moment.

'This looks bigger, then I remember,' I said to him- by this time I have a lust for him so- that I need him- oh so much. Oh so...! It's oddly familiar to me yet all-new the love only he can give- odd like only she can too as a girl- and he a boy. I have no idea where I am, halfway in the night- I come to it and see I am in his bed nude, and he going down on me, lovingly hard! I am enjoying the strange unfamiliar surroundings, of him just work- work- working it! Where? ...? ... Where am I? My confused brain struggles over its recent painterly memories.

Holy crap- I said- like that is carp the is holy- said Katie in my mind... ha funny. I'm a hotel he owns in Atlantic City. ...In a suite- I see him coming to me, ready for loving making, As I did the last time, we were together, he loves it when I spray all over his face, as he loves doing to me as well! I have stood in a room similar to this with Katie. Oh shit. I'm in RICHARD C. MAST'S suite. This room is worth more the then-White House- and some of those places that why don't care about- How did I get here?

I questioned... memories of the previous night come slowly back to haunt me, like my sister young life coming to end fast over someone, that did not love her just for hot young sex. She never had a boy toy. Nothing dead at 5! Holy shit. No socks...No jeans... I see this photo of her playing- where she was just being a kid- I see the first time she cum-med, on her little bed, it was the same night- she found out she was going to have to not see me any longer- so Katie showed her to be happy- I glance at the bedside night table- and see her face on the screen that movies the photos. I don't remember coming here. I'm wearing my t-shirt, bra, and panties. I FEEL Broken- The drinking, oh no the drinking, the handset call, oh no the phone call, the vomiting, oh no the vomiting. Katie and then RICHARD C. MAST. Oh no. I cringe inwardly.

The orange juice tastes heavenly, It's I sit up and take the tablets. On it is a glass of orange juice and two tablets. Advil. He is such a Control freak that he is, he thinks of the whole thing. Essentially, I don't feel that bad, probably much healthier than I personally merit too. Dehydration quenching and invigorating. Nothing beats freshly squeezed orange juice for refreshing a parched mouth.

How are you feeling?' 'Improved better than I earned,' I gabble.

'How did I get here?' My voice is small, contrite.

Don't worry about it he said- fast-ly.

Followed by: 'Good morning Merry. I peek up at him, I for one, like - feel similar to a two-year-old, if I close my eyes when I'm not really here. There's a knock on the door, for it to open. RICHARD C. MAST'S sweat; the notion does odd things to me. My heart leaps into my mouth, and I can't seem to find my voice, to say come in. He opens the door anyway and strolls in, being all sweet. Holy hell, he's been working out, in tight shorts that show off his backside.

He comes and sits down on the edge of the bed, way, off, like his hair, blowing in the wind as the doors were open to the cityscape. Sweat, hard I take a deep breath and close my eyes, I can't bear to look at the cheat any longer. He's staring at me, blue bright eyes, and as usual, I have no idea what he's thinking, even if it is run hard in my mind of all the facts. He's close - enough for me to touch, for me to smell, of him to be overpowering- and I want him- oh no- YES, do I want him!

The bath towel, in his hand, was thrown over my eyes and tied around my head. He hides his thoughts and feelings so well. Grasps is let out of me for he has me around his lower waist, going in for it like a dog in heat. Like I am his sex toy that is a rag doll pounding, I wriggle hard and slam down hard. He even takes me from behind over the chair without me giving the okay- I was all his- and then in bed, then in the shower! And I look down and see that I am shaved pinned against the glass! Oh my... 'Did you put me to bed clean I don't remember all this?' you got me this night top?

His face is blank.

'Yes!'

Um- it was an intoxicating cocktail- 'After you passed out, that he gave me last night my little girl down under is still red- and I can walk- so much better than a margarita, I was out in la-la- land- and I do remember the hardcore FREAKING! and now I can speak from experience, this man goes in hard and deep.

‘Did I throw up again?’ My voice is quieter. Don’t worry about getting knocked up I have taken care of that too... with this. An implant was placed by a dater last night when you were passed out- don’t thank me!

Don’t say anything- don’t even think about it- it for your own good.

Um- is all I got out before his index finger hashed me - up to my lips.

‘Did you undress me?’ I whispered...

‘Funny you cute- that’s the least of your worries!’ He said.

Um...?

I thought...!

Maybe I think too much...?

Maybe he’s right...?

Or is this wrong...?

‘If I Say I Wanna Stay’

(The Black Family- and its Tree)

Carrie rolled her eyes at Karrah and turned to me, the one that is next to me some nights. 'Pretty please,' she said as she rocked a- by baby- rock a-by, to sleep in her lap.

'I never get to hear you play anymore.' 'come on,' Karrah said. 'You're among family.' 'Why not, Earn?' Ana said. 'Are you such a classical-music snob?' 'It's not that,' I said, suddenly feeling panicked. 'It's just that the two styles don't fit together.' 'Says who?' Mom asked, her eyebrows raised up at what she said. 'Yeah, who knew you were such musical emanations?' Karrah joked. Beth took my hand and caressed the inside of my wrist with her fingers. 'Do it for me. I really want to play with you. Just once.' 'Absolutely,' Ana said sweetly.

I was about to shake my head and ass, to endorse that my French horn had no place among the jamming guitars, no place in the metal-rock world, yet I was going to do this, I had the look yet not the style on the inside, coming out.

Though- like I think it was because she was hopped up on marshmallows, not because she had any desire to hear me play- and Ana and Carrie and Karrah all peering at me like this really mattered, and Beth, looking as awed and proud as he always did when he listened to me play. Nevertheless, then I looked out at Mom, who was smirking at me as if issuing a challenge, and Dad, who was tapping on his pipe, pretending to be nonchalant so as not to apply any pressure, and Naddalin, who was jumping up and down. And I was a little scared of falling on my face, of not blending, of making bad music. Nevertheless, the whole world was looking at me so intently, wanting me to join in so much, and I realized that sounding bad wasn't the worst thing in the world that could happen.

So, I played my guitar 'till my fingers bleed, I was going to make it. And even though you wouldn't think it, the French horn didn't sound half bad with all those guitars, something new I thought. In fact, it sounded pretty- amazingly good- if I do say so myself- and I do that a lot.

7:14 A.M.

It's sunrise, and inside the clinic, there's a different kind of beginning, going down, a rustling of covers, a clearing of the eye's girls rubbing them and those too- if you get that- if.

In some ways, the clinic that I am in never goes to sleep, with a mind like ours that are never really at rest.

Nevertheless, even though it's still dark outside, the lights stay on and the nurses stay awake, you can tell that things are waking up. Frowning as they scribble notes in my chart as though I've let them down, the doctors are back, yanking on my eyelids, shining their lights at me.

She reads my chart and listens to updates from the nurses on my uncomfortable night, which seems to make her even more tired, having to deal with me and, the fact I am wasting her time. I do not care anymore, I am tired of this all, and it will be over soon, and I can go back there to my school and old life that got me here in the first place.

The social worker is back on duty again, too, looking at me in my room legs spread, cum-m-ing hard, yet here that is all you have to do, from 8 to 7 P.M, yet that the up nightgown shot- it not my felt if they want to look- right. Then she noticed the bloodstain on my blanket, from the period that I had 2 night back that I never changed the sheets, they will say that is low self-esteem- um sure it is- sure, more like I don't give two craps, and tasked with hustling me off to get me a new one, is not worth it they say, if I don't care either, so they think. Like girls my age anymore don't wear underwire, the y say I have to but I don't have to do anything anyone says I have too... like I open up your mouth and spit in it, how about that?! (YOU LOVE's me CUZ I'S CUTE!)

It looks like the night's sleep had little impact on her. After Ana left, there haven't been any more visitors. I guess Carrie has run out of people to lobby me with. Her eyes are still heavy, her hair a kinky mess. The nurse with blue-black skin is also back. She greeted me by telling me how glad she was to see me this morning, how she'd been thinking about me last night, hoping I'd be here.

I wonder if this deciding business is something that all the nurses are aware of. Nurse Raymirez sure knew about it. And I think the nurse with me now knows it, too, judging by how congratulatory she's acting that I made it through the night. I'm waiting for Beth to come back. Though it seems like he has been gone for an eternity, it's probably only been an hour. And he asked me to wait, so I will. That's the least I can do for her. And Carrie seems like she knows it, too, with the way she's been marching everyone through here. I like these nurses so much. I hope they will not take my decision personally.

My eyes are closed so I hear him before I see him. I hear the raspy, quick rushes of his lungs. He is panting like he just ran a marathon. I am so tired now that I can barely blink my eyes, rub them and then that too just like the girl in the bed next to me - her name - yeah, I know it, yeah, I forgot. It's all just a matter of time, and part of me wonders why I'm delaying the inevitable. But I know why.

Then I smell the sweat on her, a clean musky scent that I'd bottle and wear as perfume if I could. I open my eyes. Beth has closed his. But the lids are puffy and pink, so I know what he's been doing. Is that why he went away? To cry without my seeing?

She doesn't so much sit in the chair as fall into it, like clothes heaped onto the floor at the end of a long day. He covers his face with his hands and takes deep breaths to steady herself. After a minute, he drops his hands into his lap. 'Just listen to the little lady, saying twelve-year-old,' she says with a voice that sounds like shrapnel.

(Going back)

I open my eyes wide now. I sit up as much as I can. And I listen. 'Stay - a good girl like I am a puppy.' With that one word, Beth's voice catches, but he swallows the emotion and pushes forward. 'There's no word for what happened to you. There like um - the no good side of it, but there is something to live for. And I'm not talking about me. But I can't wrap my mind around the notion of you not getting old, having kids, going to Juilliard, getting to play that French horn in front of a huge audience, so that they can get the chills the way I do every time I see you pick up your bow, every time I see you smile at me.

I mean, I know that your life is f*cked up no matter what now, forever. And I'm not dumb enough to think that I can undo that, that anyone can.

I hear him take gulp-fuels of air to steady herself. And then she continues: 'All I can think about is how f*cked up it would be for your life to end here, now.

And I think: I love you.

It's just, I don't know - I don't NO.

Maybe I'm talking shit. I know I'm in shock. I know I haven't digested what happened to your parents, to Naddalin...' When he says Naddalin, his voice cracks and an avalanche of tears tumble down her face.

'If you stay, I'll do whatever you want, even that- even that- all and hole-ly. I'll quit the band, go with you to New York, that what I said I would do. That is-is... and her voice goes soft and ends.

But if you need me to go away, I'll do that, too.

I was talking to Maylie and she said maybe coming back to your old life would just be too painful, that maybe it'd be easier for you to erase us. And that would suck, but I'd do it. I can lose you like that if I don't lose you today. I'll let you go. If you stay.'

Then it is Beth who let's go. Her sobs burst like fists thrashing against tender flesh.

I close my eyes. I cover my ears. I cannot watch this. I cannot hear this.

But then, it is no longer Beth that I hear. It's that sound, the low moan that in an instant takes flight and turns into something sweet.

It's the French horn.

Beth has placed headphones over my lifeless ears and is laying an iPod down on my chest.

She's apologizing, saying that he knows this isn't my favorite but it was the best he could do. She turns up the volume so-o I can hear the music floating across the morning air. Then she takes my hand.

The low piano plays as if in a warning. In comes, the French horn, like a heart bleeding.

And it is like something inside of me implodes.

I am sitting around the breakfast table with my family, drinking hot coffee, laughing at Naddalin's chocolate-chip mustache.

The snow is blowing outside.

I am visiting a cemetery; Three graves under a tree on a hill overlooking the crystal-clear river.

I am lying with Beth, my head on her chest, on a sandy bank next to the river.

I am hearing people say the word orphan and be still that they are talking about me.

I am walking through New York City with Ana, the skyscrapers so big, casting shadows on our faces, as he swings holding hands, making the heart thing too.

I am holding Naddalin on my lap, tickling him as she giggles so hard, she keels over, over the fact she is shy and I was kissing her all cute-ie woo-z-ie, holding hand sweetly.

My mom is going through my little girl is dead stage... over me coming out.

I am sitting with my French horn; the one Mom and Dad gave me after my first presentation. My fingers caress the wood and the pegs, which time and touch have worn smooth.

My bow is poised over the strings now. I am looking at my hand, waiting to start playing.

I am looking at my hand, being held by Beth's hand...

Like- it's like the piano and French horn are being poured into my body, the same way that the IV and Ritalin transfusions are, and what they really do to me, they say it mellows me out, yet inside I am going nuts. Until I cannot be like this one second longer.

And the memories of my life as it was, and the flashes of it as it might be, are coming so-o fast and furious. I feel- like- I can no longer keep up with them, nevertheless, they keep coming and everything, everyone and all things are colliding until I cannot take it anymore.

There is a blinding flash, a pain that rips through, that feel like is rushing through my nervous system, and I start sweating hard, dreaming weird, or cannot sleep, the boom- boom in my chest is wrong like me everything is and I do is wrong, me for one shooting instant, a silent scream from my broken body. For the first time, I can sense how fully agonizing staying will be. I have a hard time breathing too...

But then again, I feel Beth's hand. Not since it, but feel it. I'm not sitting huddled in the chair anymore. I'm lying on my back in the hospital bed, once again with my body, shaking hard, I just tremble all the time, and it's all too much.

Nevertheless, I'm also feeling all that I have in my life, which includes what I have lost, as well as the great indefinite of what life might still bring me. Grasping mine, the feelings pile up, intimidating to crack my chest wide open. The only way to continue them is to concentrate on Beth's hand.

Beth is crying and somewhere inside of me, I am crying, too, because I'm feeling things at last. I'm feeling not just the physical pain, but all that I have lost, and it is profound and catastrophic and will leave a crater in me that nothing will ever fill.

I picture my hand stroking Naddalin's hair, grasping a bow poised above my French horn, interlaced with Beth's.

I aim every remaining ounce of energy into my right hand. In addition, unexpectedly, I just need to hold his hand more than I have never- ever needed anything in this world. Not just be held by it, but hold it back. I'm weak, and this is so hard. It is the hardest thing I will ever have to do.

And then I squeeze, feeling the drug come out of me- like girl-cum out of me.

I summon all the love I have ever felt, I summon all the strength that Nana and Gramps Black and Ana and the nurses and Carrie have given me.

I summon all the breath that Mom, Dad, and Naddalin would fill me with if they could. I summon all my own strength, focus it like a laser beam into the fingers and palm of my right hand.

If it registered, I slump back, spent, unsure of whether I just did what I did, of what it means; If it matters.

It's the first time today I can truly hear her. Nevertheless, then I feel Beth's grip tighten so that the grasp of his hand feels like it is holding my entire body. And then I hear the sharp intake of his breath followed by the sound of her voice.

'Earn?' she asks. But now I wonder, like- like- like, and now, I hope. 'Like it could lift me up right out of this bed.' CUZ- Because, um- when I go, I want to 'member Ana. And I want to remember her like this: telling a funny story, fighting with her crazy mom, being cheered on by punkers, rising to the occasion, finding little pockets of strength in herself that she had no idea she owned.

Beth is a different story.

Remembering Beth would be like behind her all over again, and I'm not sure if I can bear that on top of everything else.

Ana's up to the part of Action Distraction when Brooke Bogel and a dozen assorted punks descended upon the clinic.

She tells me that before they got to the ICU, she was so scared of getting into trouble, but how when she burst inside the ward, she had felt ecstatic.

When the guard had grabbed her, she had not been scared at all. 'I kept thinking, what's the worst that could happen? I go to jail; I do not let have their way with me.

She stops for a minute, Mom has a conniption, I get grounded for a year.' 'But after what's happened today, that would be nothing. Even going to jail would be easily compared to losing you.'

I am after all high risk... whatever that means....!

I have a feeling that once you live through something like this, you developed a little bit invincible.

I know that Ana's telling me this to try to keep me alive. She does not remember that in a weird way, her remark frees me, just like Gramps's authorization did.

I know it will be awful for Ana when I die, but I also think about what she said, about not being scared, about the jail being easy compared to losing me. And that's how I know that Ana will be okay. Losing me will hurt; it will be the kind of pain that won't feel real at first, and when it does, it will take her breath away. And the rest of her senior year will probably suck, what with her getting all that cloying your-best-friend's-dead sympathy that will drive her so crazy, and also because really, we are each other's only close friend at school.

But she'll deal. She'll move on. She'll leave Oregon. She'll go to Middle School. She'll make new friends. She'll fall in love. She'll become a photographer, the kind who never has to go on a helicopter. And I bet she'll be a stronger person because of what she's lost today.

I know that makes me a bit of a hypocrite. If that's the case, shouldn't I stay? Soldier through it? Maybe if I'd had some practice, maybe if I'd had more devastation in my life, I would be more prepared to go on. It's not that my life has been perfect. I've had disappointments and I've been lonely and frustrated and angry and all the crappy stuff everyone feels. But in terms of heartbreak, I've been spared. I've never toughened up enough to handle what I'd have to handle if I were to stay.

~*~

Ana is now telling me about being rescued from certain incarceration by Carrie. As she describes how Carrie took charge of the whole hospital, there is such admiration in her voice. I picture Ana and Carrie becoming friends, even though there are twenty years between them. It makes me happy to imagine them drinking tea or going to the movies together, still connected to each other by the invisible chain of a family that no longer exists.

Now Ana is listing all the people who are at the hospital or who have been, during the course of the day, ticking them off with her fingers: 'Your grandparents and aunts, uncles, and cousins. Beth and Brooke Bogel and the various rabble-rousers who came with her. Beth's bandmates Dianna and Jodi and Maylie and her girlfriend, Sarah, all of whom have been downstairs in the waiting room since they got heaved out of the ICU. Professor Kristiee, who drove down and stayed half the night before driving back so she could sleep a few hours and shower and make some morning appointments she had.

Karrah and the baby, who are on their way over right now because the baby woke up at five in the morning and Karrah called us and said that he could not stay at home any longer. And me and Mom,' Ana concludes. 'Shoot. I lost count of how many people that was. But it was a lot. And more have called and asked to come, but your aunt Diane told them to wait.

She says that we're making enough nuisance of ourselves. And I think by 'us,' she means me and Beth.' Ana stops and smiles for a split second. Then she makes this funny noise, a cross between a cough and a throat clearing. I've heard her make this sound before; it's what she does when she's summoning her courage, getting ready to jump off the rocks and into the bracing river water.

'I do have a point to all this,' she continues. 'There are like twenty people in that waiting room right now. Some of them are related to you. Some of them are not. But we're all your family.'

She stops now; leans over me so that the wisps of her hair tickle my face. She kisses me on the forehead. 'You still have a family,' she whispers.

Last summer, we hosted an accidental Labor Day party at our house. It had been a busy season. Camp for me. Then we'd gone to Gram's family's Massachusetts retreat. I felt like I had barely seen Beth and Ana all summer.

My parents were lamenting that they hadn't seen Carrie and Karrah and the baby in months. 'Karrah says she's starting to walk,' Dad noted that morning. We were all sitting in the living room in front of the fan, trying not to melt. Oregon was having a record heatwave. It was ten in the morning and pushing ninety-five degrees.

Mom looked up at the calendar. 'She's ten months old already. Where has the time gone?' Then she looked at Naddalin and me. 'How is it humanly possible that I have a daughter who's starting her senior year in high school? How in the hell can my baby boy be starting second grade?'

'I'm not a baby,' Naddalin shot back, clearly insulted.

'Sorry, kid, unless we have another one, you'll always be my baby.'

'Another one?' Dad asked with a simulated alarm.

'Relax. I'm kidding for the most part,' Mom said. 'Let's see how I feel when Earn leaves for Middle School.'

'I'm going to be eight in December.'

'Then I'm a Lady and you'll have to call me

'that not a baby'.'

'Is that so?' I laughed, spraying orange juice through my nose.

'That's what Casey Corson told me,' Naddalin said, his mouth set into a strongminded line.

My parents and I groaned, at me. Casey Corson was Naddalin's best friend, and we all liked him a lot and thought his parents seemed like such nice people, so we didn't get how they could give their child such a ridiculous name.

'Well, if Casey Corson says so,' I said, giggling, and soon Mom and Dad were laughing, too.

'What's so-o amusing?' Naddalin demanded.

'Nothing, Little girl,' Dad said. 'It's just the heat.'

'Can we still do sprinklers today?' Naddalin asked. Dad had promised her he could run through the sprinklers that evening even though the administrator had asked everyone in the state to conserve water this summer. That request had peeved Dad, who claimed that we Oregonians suffer eight months of rain a year and should be exempt from ever worrying about water preservation.

Naddalin seemed placated. 'If the baby can walk, (meaning me) then she can walk through the hoses. Can she come into the sprinklers with me?' 'Damn straight you can,' Dad said. 'Flood the place if you want.'

'We could have a barbecue,' Dad said. 'It is Labor Day and grilling in this heat would certainly qualify as labor.' Mom looked at Dad. 'That's not a bad idea,' she said. 'I think Carrie's off today.'

'Plus, we've got a freezer full of steaks from when your father decided to order that side of beef,' Mom said. 'Why not?'

'Can Beth come?' I asked.

'We haven't seen much of your young man lately.' 'Of course,' Mom said.

Gram's had only recently planted the seed of Juilliard in my head, but it hadn't taken root. I hadn't decided to apply yet. Things with Beth had not gotten bizarre up till now. 'I know,' I said. 'Things are starting to happen for the band,' I said. At the time, I was excited about it; genuinely and completely.

'If the rock star can handle a humble eat outside with quadrangles like us,' Dad joked.

'If he can handle a square like me, he can handle tetragons like you,' I joked back. 'I think I'll invite Ana, too.'

'The more the cheerier,' Mom said. 'We'll make it a puncture like in the olden days.'

'When dinosaurs roamed the earth?' Naddalin asked.

'Accurately,' Dad said. 'When dinosaurs traveled the earth and your mom and, I was younger.'

Karrah, Carrie, the baby, Beth, who brought Jodi, Ana, who brought a cousin visiting from New Jersey, plus a whole bunch of friends of my parents whom they had not seen in ages. About twenty people showed up.

Maybe it was because it was so hot, or that the party was so last minute, or maybe because everything tastes better on the grill, but it was one of those meals that you know you'll remember.

Dad hauled our ancient barbecue out of the basement and spent the afternoon scrubbing it. We grilled up steaks and, tofu pups and veggie burgers, this being Oregon; there was watermelon. . .

which we kept cool in a bucket of ice, and a salad made with vegetables from the organic farm that some of Mom and Dad's friends had underway.

Mom and I made three pies with wild blackberries that Naddalin and I had picked. We drank Pepsi out of these old-fashioned bottles that Dad had found at some ancient country store, and I swear they tasted better than the regular kind.

When Dad turned on the sprinkler for Naddalin and the baby, everyone else decided to run through it.

We left it on so long that the brown grass turned into a big slippery wet patch and I wondered if the governor herself might come and tell us off.

Naddalin had taken his shirt off, besides had streaked herself with muck 'n mud. Dad said he looked like one of the boys from Lord of the Flies. Beth tackled me and we laughed and squirmed around on the lawn.

It was so hot, I didn't bother changing into dry clothes, just kept dousing myself whenever I got too sweaty. By the end of the day, my sundress was stiff.

When it cooled off, Dad lit a campfire on the lawn, and we roasted marshmallows. Then the musical instruments give the impression and ideas.

When it started to get dark, most people left to catch the fireworks display at the university or to see a band called Ariana Grande play in town. A handful of people, including Beth, Ana, Carrie, and Karrah, stayed, to see her half-naked on stage, riding a dick bicycle, like when Niki said the part of having a tricycle does that mean she has a 3rd leg? Asked Ana? A dick bicycle is when you remove the set and have your girl-ie hold and girl-ie lips- down on the part sticking up... dah! What? They all looked at her dumbly!

That sounds a little kinda a-bit painful- and well bloody.

'God, you're dumb!'

'OH-!'

Dad's snare drum from the house, Karrah's guitar from his car, Beth's spare guitar from my room. Everyone was jamming together, singing songs: Dad's songs, Beth's songs, old Clash songs, old Wipers songs. Naddalin was dancing around, the blond of his hair reflecting the golden flames.

I remember watching it all and getting that tickling in my chest and thinking to myself: This is what happiness feels like.

At one point, Dad and Beth stopped playing and I caught them whispering about something. Then they went inside, to get more beer, they claimed. But when they returned, they were carrying my French horn.

'Oh, no, I'm not giving a concert,' I said.

'We don't want you to,' Dad said. 'We want you to play with us.'

'No way,' I said. Beth had occasionally tried to get me to 'jam' with her and I always refused. Lately, he'd started joking about us playing air-guitar-air-French horn duets, which was about as far as I was willing to go.

'Sure, Naddalin,' I said feigning interest. The idea of me going to New York was seeing more and more real, and though this commonly filled me with a nervous, excited, if conflicted, the image of me and Naddalin hanging out together on New Year's Eve left me feeling unbearably lonely.

Mom looked at me, eyebrows arched. 'It's New Year's Day, so I won't give you shit for coming in at this hour. But if you're hungover, you're grounded.'

'I'm not. I had one beer. I'm just tired.'

Mom nodded, 'Just tired, is it? You sure?'

Mom grabbed ahold of my wrist and turned me toward her. When she saw my stricken expression, she tilted her head to the side as if to say, You okay? I shrugged and bit my lip to keep from losing it.

She handed me a cup of coffee and led me to the table. She put down a plate of hash and a thick slice of sourdough bread, and even though I couldn't imagine being hungry, my mouth watered and my stomach rumbled and I was suddenly ravenous.

I ate silently, Mom watching me all the while. After everyone was done, Mom sent the rest of them into the living room to watch the Rose Parade on TV.

She stood there silently, letting me blubber all over her sweater. When I stopped, she held out the sponge. 'Everyone out,' she ordered. 'Earn and I will do the washing up.'

As soon as everyone was gone, Mom turned to me and I just fell against her, crying, and releasing all of the tension and uncertainty of the last few weeks. 'You wash, I'll dry; we will talk. I always find it calming.

The warm water, the soap.'

'So-o, perfect that I never even thought about the future. About it taking us in different directions.'

Mom picked up the dish towel and we went to work. And I told her about Beth and me. 'It was like we had this perfect year and a half,' I said.

Mom's smile was both sad and knowing. 'I thought about it.'

I turned to her. She was staring straight out the window, watching a couple of sparrows bathe in a puddle. 'I remember last year when Beth came over for Christmas Eve. I told your father that you'd fallen in love too soon.'

'I know, I know. What does a dumb kid know about love?'

You guys seemed, still seem, in love, truly, deeply.' She sighed. 'But seventeen is an inconvenient time to be in love.'

Mom stopped drying a skillet. 'That's not what I meant. The opposite, really. You and Beth never struck me as a 'high-school' relationship.'

Mom said making quote marks with her hands. 'It was nothing like the drunken roll in the back of some girl's Cadillac XTS in dark gray, that passed for a relationship when I for one was in high school. I love that car I feel like I high-class b*tch in it, even if that is not so-o, I am kind of a slut and I know and they do too... yet whatever, I like to get it from both, and whenever- however, and whomever it's all the same- it feels good, is this is the way... they say a girl that is 12 like me is oversexed, and I say not- when I look at well you!

(Hoo-ha hacking- and hocking it up- slut! Yeah you- the reader- slut!)

That made me smile and made the pit in my stomach soften a little. 'Tell me about it,' I said. 'Though if we weren't both musicians, we could go to Middle School together and be fine.' 'I guess you're right.'

That what she said too...

'That's a cop-out, Earn,' Mom countered. 'All relationships are tough. Just like with music, sometimes you have harmony and other times you have cacophony. I don't have to tell you that.'

'And come on, music brought you two together. That's what your father and I always thought. You were both in love with music and then you fell in love with each other. It was a little like that for your dad and me. I didn't play but I listened. Luckily, I was a little older when we met.'

Mom shook her head. 'That's bullshit. Music can't do that. Life might take you down different roads. But each of you gets to decide which one to take.' She turned to face me. 'Beth's not trying to stop you going to Juilliard, is he?' I want to be something thing someday, even if they say I - is not that smart enuff too or don't have the money. I'm going to go there someday when I grow up! (lisp cutely with her voice.)

(Blink- Blink- Blink...)

I'd never told Mom about what Beth had said that night after the half-naked Ariana concert- with her showing off her goodies, (I have pic, so her puss- we all do- and she likes me will always be remembered for her blue dildo, yet I love her for it she a real girl after all... nice.) image what that would sell for on eBay- Ariana dildo- going once, going twice, sold to the prv. in the back for a mill. What-a he planning on doing with it um-like suction cupping it to his forehead, like a unicorn? Even if it was not one of those suck-ie ones come on really... God I have problems, don't I?

(I think too much, don't I?)

So, when I'd asked her why me? How the music was totally a part of it. 'Yes, but now I feel like it's music that's going to pull us apart.'

'No more than I'm trying to get him to move to New York. And it's all ridiculous anyway. I might not even go.'

'No, you might not. But you're going somewhere. I think we all get that. And the same is true for Beth.'

'At least he can go somewhere while still living here.'

Mom shrugged. 'Maybe. For now, anyhow.'

I put my face in my hands and shook my head. 'What am I going to do?' I lamented. 'I feel like I'm caught in a tug-of-war.'

Mom shot me a sympathetic scowl. 'I don't know. But I do know that if you want to stay and be with him, I'd support that, though maybe I'm only saying that because I don't think you'd be able to turn down Juilliard.'

Nonetheless, I would understand if you chose to love, Beth love, over music love.

Either way, you win. And either way, you lose. What can I tell you? Love's a bitch.'

Beth and I talked about it once more after that. We were at House of Rock, sitting on his futon. He was riffing about on his acoustic guitar.

'I might not get in,' I told her. 'I might wind up at school here, with you. In a way, I hope I don't get accepted so I don't have to choose.'

'If you get in, the choice is- already made, isn't it?' Beth asked.

It was. I would go. It did not mean I'd stop loving Beth or that we'd break up, but Mom and Beth were both right. I would not turn down Juilliard.

Beth was silent for a minute, plinking away at his guitar so-o loud, that I almost missed it when he said, 'I don't want to be the guy who doesn't want you to go. If the tables were turned, you'd let me go.'

'I kind of already have. In a way, you are already gone. To your own Juilliard,' I said.

'I know,' Beth said quietly. 'But I'm still here. And I'm still crazy in love with you.'

'Me, too,' I said. And then we stopped talking for a while as Beth strummed an unfamiliar melody. I asked him what he was playing.

'I'm calling it 'The Girlfriend's-Goingto-Juilliard-Leaving-My-Metal-Heart-in-Slivers Blues,' he said, singing the title in an overstated twangy voice. Then he smiled that silly shy smile that I felt like came from the truest part of her.

'I'm kidding.'

'Good,' I said.

'Sort of,' she added.

5:44 A.M.

I am on round 5 and hot and sweaty, and nude as all butt crack! Beth is gone, so-o it's on 6 I go for 2 ½ hours of sleep and then there day they want me to do.

She suddenly rushed out, calling to Nurse Ramirez that she'd forgotten something important and would be back as soon as he could. She was already out the door when she told her that she was about to get off work.

In fact, she just left, but not before making sure to inform the nurse who'd relieved Old Grumpy that 'the young man with the skinny pants and messy hair' is allowed to see me when he returns.

Carrie's running back and forth, a gleam in her eye. She is up to something, I can't say, but whether it's trotting out loved ones to lobby on behalf of my continuing my earthly existence or whether she's simply bringing them in to say good-bye.

After Grams and Gramps and Beth,

Aunt Kate stopped by. Then it was Aunt Diane and Uncle Dan. Then my cousins shuffled in. Not that it matters, nothing at all really matters. Carrie rules the school now. She has been marching the troops through here all morning.

Poor Ana...

She looks like she slept in a Dumpster, now it's Ana's turn. Her hair has staged a full-scale rebellion and more of it has escaped her mangled braid than still is all tucked inside.

At first, Ana squints at me, as if I'm a bright, glaring light. But then it's like she adjusts to the light and decides that even though I may look like a zombie. She is wearing one of what she calls her 'turd sweaters,' the greenish, grayish, brownish lumpy masses her mom is always buying her. Even though there are tubes sticking out of every which orifice, even though there's Ritalin injection thing-ie, on my thin blanket from where it's seeped through the bandages, I'm still Earn and she's still Ana. And what do Earn and Ana like to do more than anything? Talk...

Ana settles into the chair next to my bed. 'How are you doing?' she asks.

I'm not sure. I'm exhausted, but at the same time, Beth's visit has left me... I don't know what. Agitated. Anxious. Awake, unquestionably awake. Though I could not feel it when he touched me, his presence stirred me up anyhow.

I was just starting to feel grateful that he was here when she booked out of here like the devil was chasing him. Beth has spent the last ten hours trying to get in to see me, and now that he finally succeeded, he left ten minutes after arriving.

I would've run away, Maybe I scared her. Maybe he doesn't want to deal. Maybe I'm not the only chickens hit around here. After all, I spent the last daydreaming of her coming to me, and when he finally staggered into the ICU, if I had the strength.

She tells me about Beth, his determination to get in to see me, how after he got kicked out of the ICU, he enlisted the help of her music friends, who were not at all the snobby semesters she'd imagined them to be. Then she told me that a bona fide rock star had come to the hospital on my behalf.

'Well, you would not believe the crazy night it's been,' Ana says. Then she starts telling me about it. About her mom's hysterics, about how she lost it in front of my relatives, who were very gracious about the whole thing.

The fight they had outside the Benadom Theater in front of a bunch of punks and hipsters. When Ana shouted at her crying mother to 'pull it together and start acting like the adult around here' and then stalked off into the club leaving a shocked Ms. Schein at the curb, a group of girls' in spiked leather and shining hair cheered and high-fived her.

Of course, I know everything that Ana is telling me, but there is no way that she'd know that. Besides, I like having her verification the day to me. I like how Ana is talking to me normally, like Gram's did earlier, just jabbering on, revolving a good yarn, as if we were together on my porch, drinking coffee (or an iced caramel Frappuccino in Ana's case) and catching up.

At the X-Ray, even though I've never heard Dead Moon play live, even though the X-Ray Café shut down before I was born.

But sometimes the memories feel so real, so visceral, so personal, that I blur out this... them with my own. Not just a sense that I've heard the story before, but that I've lived it. I can picture myself sitting on the riverbank as Dad pulls a hot-pink Coho out of the water, even though Dad was all of twelve at the time. Or I can hear the feedback when Dead Moon played 'D.O.A.'

I don't know if once you die you remember things that happened to you when you were alive. It makes a certain logical sense that you wouldn't. That being dead will feel like before you were born, which is to say, a whole lot of nothingness. Except that for me, at least, my pre-birth years aren't entirely blank. Every now and again, Mom or Dad will be telling a story about something, about Dad catching his first salmon with Gramps, or Mom remembering the amazing Dead Moon concert she saw with Dad on their first date, and I'll have an overpowering déjà vu.

I never ever told anyone about these 'recollections.' Mom probably would've said that I was there as one of the eggs in her ovaries. Dad would've joked that he and Mom had tortured me with their stories one too many times and had inadvertently brainwashed me.

And Gram's would've told me that maybe I was there as an angel before I chose to become Mom and Dad's kid.

Beth is incoherently babbling something now. In a low voice. Over and over he is saying: please. Please. Please. Please, Please. Finally, he stops and looks at my face. 'Please, Earn,' she implores. 'Don't make me write a song.'

I wasn't totally immune to the charms of the opposite sex, the girl is all I wanted over being hurt, yet I would never ever say that to anyone but you - I trust you, but I wasn't one of those romantic, swoony girls who had pink fluffy daydreams about falling in love.

I'd never expected to fall in love. I was never the kind of girl who had crushes on rock stars or fantasies about marrying - Brad Pitt. I sort of vaguely knew that one day I'd probably have boyfriends (in Middle School, if Ana's prediction was anything to go by) and get married, yet girls are always nice and E_Z.

Even as I was falling in love, full-throttle, intense, can't-erase-that-goofy-smile love, I didn't really register what was happening. When I was with Beth, at least after those first few awkward weeks, I felt so good that I didn't bother thinking about what was going on with me, with us.

I got upset because he never wrote any songs about me. She claimed he wasn't good with sappy love songs: 'If you want a song, you'll have to cheat on me or roughly,' he said, knowing full well that wasn't going to happen.

It just felt normal and right, like slipping into a hot bubble bath, think about girls. Which isn't to say we didn't fight. We argued over lots of stuff: him not being nice enough to Ana, me being antisocial at shows, how fast he drove, how I stole the covers.

'So, did you knock them dead?' Beth asked me when I got back. 'They going to let you in with a full scholarship?'

This past fall, though, Beth and I started to have a different kind of fight. It wasn't even a fight, really. We didn't shout. We barely even argued, but a snake of tension quietly glided into our lives. And it seemed like it all started with my Juilliard tryout, for young girls like me, to see if I could one day be all I want with a scholarship.

I had a feeling that they were going to let me in, at least - even before I told Professor Kristiee, about the one judge's 'long time since we've had an Oregon country girl' comment, even before she hyperventilated because she was so convinced this was a tacit promise of admission.

Something had ensued to my playing in that audition; I had broken through some invisible barrier and could finally play the pieces like I heard them being played in my head, and the consequence had been something transcendent: the mental and bodily, the technical and emotional sides of my abilities all finally blending.

Then, on the drive home, as Gramps and I were approaching the California-Oregon border, I just had this sudden flash-a vision of me lugging a French horn through New York City.

And it was like I knew, and that certainty planted itself in my belly like a warm secret. I'm not the kind of person who's prone to premonitions or overconfidence, so I so-called, that there was more to my flash than magical thinking.

'I did okay,' I told Beth, and as I said it, I realized that I'd just straight-out lied to him for the first time and that this was different from all the lying by omission I'd been doing before.

So, it wasn't a real lie. And besides, I thought, there was no point in making a big fuss about it. I hadn't told Ana, either, so it wasn't like Beth was getting special deception treatment. I had to be at the studio at seven in the morning on a Sunday and the night before I'd pretended to be feeling out of sorts and told Beth he probably shouldn't stay over. I'd justified that fib, too. I was feeling out of sorts because I was so nervous.

I justified this to myself since it was technically true. And then Professor Kristiee arranged for me to have a recording session at the university so-o I could submit a high-quality CD to Juilliard.

I had neglected to tell Beth that I was applying to Juilliard in the first place, which was actually harder than it sounded. Before I sent in my application, I had to practice every spare moment with Professor Kristiee to finetune the Shostakovich concerto and the two Bach suites. When Beth asked me why I was so busy, I gave purposely vague excuses about learning tough new pieces.

7

Nonetheless, after I told him I'd only done okay at the audition, I had the feeling that I was wading into quicksand, and that if I took one more step, there'd be no extricating myself and I'd sink until I suffocated.

Beth's first reaction was to smile with pride. 'I wish I could've seen that.' But then his eyes clouded over and her lips fell into a frown. 'Why'd you downplay it?' he asked. 'Why didn't you call me after the audition to brag?'

So, I took a deep breath and heaved myself back onto solid ground. 'That's not true really,' I told Beth. 'I did really well. I played better than I ever have in my life. It was like I was possessed.'

'I don't know,' I said.

'Well, this is great news,' Beth said, trying to mask his hurt. 'We should be celebrating.'

'Okay, let's celebrate,' I said, with forced gaiety. 'We can go to Dauphin Saturday. Go to the Japanese Gardens and go out for dinner with the girls.'

Beth grimaced. 'I can't. We are playing in Olympia and Seattle this weekend. Minitour; 'member? I'd love for you to come, but I don't know if that's really a celebration for you. Nonetheless, I'll be back Sunday late afternoon. I can meet you in Dauphin Sunday night if you want.'

'I can't... I'm playing in a string quartet at some professor's house. What about next weekend?'

Beth looked pained. 'We're in the studio the next couple weekends, but we can go out during the week somewhere. Around here. To the Mexican place?'

'Sure, The Mexican place,' I said.

Two minutes before, I hadn't even wanted to celebrate, but now I was feeling dejected and insulted at being relegated to a midweek dinner at the same place we always went to.

When Beth graduated from high school last spring and moved out of his parents' place and into the House of Rock, I hadn't expected much to change.

I'd miss our little powwows in the music wing, but I would also be relieved to have our relationship out from under the microscope of high school. She'd still live nearby; we'd still see each other all the time.

The band was offered a record deal with a medium-sized label based in Seattle and now were busy in the studio recording. They were also playing more shows, to larger and larger crowds, every weekend. Things were so hectic that Beth had dropped half his course load and was going to middle school part-time, and if things kept up at this rate, he was thinking of dropping out altogether. 'There are no second chances,' she told me all this and that.

But things had changed when Beth moved into the House of Rock and started Middle School, though not for the reasons I'd thought they would. At the beginning of the fall, just as Beth was getting used to middle School life, things suddenly started heating up with Shooting Star.

I was genuinely excited for her. I knew that Shooting Star was something special, more than just a middle School-town band. I had not minded Beth's increasing absences, especially since he made it so clear how much he minded them. But somehow, the prospect of Juilliard made things different somehow it made my mind.

Which didn't make any sense at all because if anything, it should have leveled the field? Now I had something exciting happening, too. 'We can go to Dauphin in a few weeks,' Beth promised. 'When all the holiday lights are up.'

'Okay,' I said morosely.

Beth sighed. 'Things are getting complicated, aren't they?'

'Yeah. Our schedules are too busy,' I said.

'That's not what I meant,' Beth said, turning my face toward her so-o I was observing at her in the eye.

'I know that's not what you preordained,' I answered, but then a lump lodged itself in my throat, and I myself couldn't talk anymore.

We tried to defuse the tension, to talk about it without really talking about it, to jokily it. 'You know I read in US News and World Report of my middle school they'd have that's- a good music program,' Beth told me. 'It's in Salem, which is apparently getting hipper by the moment.'

'According to who? The governor?' I replied.

'Maylie found some good stuff at a vintage-clothing store there, and was nude in the middle of the place changing, we girls today don't care, about change in front of you. And you know, once the vintage places come in, the hipsters aren't far behind.' Look if you want or don't and shut up... there just boobs and a slit... I don't close my legs other... when I sit for, I could give a shit about being a lady now... I am a girl... so what... look at it!

'You forget, I'm not a hipster,' I reminded her. 'But speaking of, maybe Shooting Star should move to New York. I mean, it's the heart of the punk scene. The Ramones. Blondie.' My tone was frothy and flirtatious, an Oscar-worthy performance.

'That was thirty years ago,' Beth said. 'And even if I wanted to move to New York, there's no way the rest of the band would.'

She stared mournfully at his shoes and me familiar the joking part of the conversation had ended. My stomach lurched, an appetizer before the full part of heartache I had a feeling was going to be served at some point soon.

Beth and I had never been the kind of couple to talk about the future, about where our relationship was going, we avoided talking about anything that was happening more than a few weeks away, and this made our conversations as stilted and awkward as they'd been in those early weeks together before we'd found our groove, but with things suddenly so unclear.

One afternoon in the fall, I spotted a beautiful 1933's silk gown in the vintage store where Dad bought his suits and I almost pointed it out to Beth and asked if she thought, I should wear that to the dance at the mid. year, but prom was in June and maybe Beth would be on tour in June or maybe I'd be too busy getting ready for Juilliard, so I didn't say anything.

But then he said that those guitars cost thousands of dollars, and besides his birthday wasn't until September, and the way he said September, it was like a judge issuing a prison sentence. Not long after that, Beth was complaining about her decrepit guitar, saying he wanted to get a vintage Gibson ES 335 in blue, and I offered to get it for her for his birthday.

Beth got drunk, and when midnight came, he kissed me hard. 'Promise me, do you... um, hum- I'm Promise me you'll spend New Year's with me next year,' he whispered into my ear. A few weeks ago, we went to a New Year's Eve party together.

I was about to explain that even if I did go to Juilliard, I'd be home for Christmas and New Year's, but then I realized that wasn't the point. So-o's I promised her since I'm wanted it to be true as much as he did. And I kissed him back so-o hard like myself was trying to merge our bodies through our lips.

On New Year's Day, I came home to find the rest of my family gathered in the kitchen with Karrah, Carrie, and the baby. Dad was making breakfast: smoked-salmon hash, his specialty.

Karrah shook her head when he saw me. 'Look at the kids today. It seems like just days have gone by, that stumbling home at eight o'clock felt early. Now I'd kill just to be able to sleep until eight.'

'We didn't even make it till midnight,'

Carrie admitted, bouncing the baby on her lap.

'Good thing, for the reason that this little lady, decided to start her new year, feeling like a new girl.'

'I stayed up till midnight!' Naddalin yelled. 'I saw the ball drop on TV at twelve. It's in New York, you know? If you move there, will you take me to see it drop in real life?'

The words he writes to her music, they're poetry. You ever listen carefully to the things she says?' 'That's the one. I always thought your dad would grow up to be a writer. And in a way, I always felt like he did.

I shook my head, suddenly ashamed. I hadn't even realized that Dad wrote lyrics.

I just assumed that the people in front of the microphones wrote the words, she didn't sing so-o. I's had seen her sit at the kitchen table with a guitar and a notepad a hundred times, for I got here at this place, where I do the same yet with others that are the same as me so's they say.

I'd just never put it together. There was one song in particular called 'Waiting for Vengeance' that I listened to and read over and over until I had it memorized. It was on the second album, and it was the only slow song they ever did; it sounded almost country, probably from Karrah's brief infatuation with hillbilly punk. I listened to it so much that I started singing it to myself without even realizing it.

That night when we got home, I went up to my room with Dad's CDs and a Discman. I checked the liner notes to see which songs Dad had written and then I painstakingly copied down all the lyrics. It was only after I saw them scrawled in my science lab book that I saw what Gramps meant. Dad's lyrics were not just rhymes. They were something else.

What am I coming to?

Well, what is this?

And beyond that, what am I going to do?

Now there's blankness... Where once your eyes held the light, but that was so long ago. That was last night... Well, what was that?

What's that sound that I hear?

It's just my lifetime...

It's whistling past my ear...

And when I look back...

Everything seems smaller than life...

The way it's been for so long...

Since last night...

Now I'm leaving...

Any moment I'll be gone...

I think you'll notice... me...

I think you'll wonder what went wrong...

I'm not choosing... U...

But I'm running out of fight...

And this was decided so-o long ago...

...It was last night...

'Your song,' I said sheepishly, suddenly feeling like I'd maybe illegally trespassed into Dad's private territory. Was it wrong to go around singing other people's music without their permission?

'What are you singing, Earn?' Dad asked me, catching me serenading Naddalin as I pushed him around the kitchen in his stroller in a vain attempt to get him to nap. But Dad looked delighted. 'My Earn's singing 'Waiting for Vengeance' to my Naddalin.'

What do you think about that?' He leaned over to muss my hair and to tickle Naddalin on his chubby cheek. 'Well, don't let me stop you. Keep going. I'll take over this part,' he said, taking the stroller.

I felt embarrassed to sing in front of her now, so I just mumbled along, but then Dad joined in and we sang softly together until Naddalin fell asleep. Then he put a finger to his lips and gestured for me to follow him into the living room.

'Want to play some chess?' He asked. He was always trying to teach me to play, but I thought it was too much work for a supposed game.

'How about checkers?' I asked.

'Sure.'

We played in silence. When it was Dad's move, I'd steal looks at her in his button-down shirt, trying to remember the fast-fading picture of the girl with peroxided hair and a short dress.

'Dad?'

'Hmm.'

'Can I ask you a question?'

'Always.'

'Are you sad that you aren't in a band anymore?'

'Nope,' she said.

'You do?'

Dad's gray eyes met mine, and that night we had sex, I and daddy have a special relationship. 'What brought this all on, is that I dropped my bath towel, to see it... and he was into me, and it happened, hole up... bend me in half style, him on top ramming, say I am red-nick it's okay I am some, I love my daddy- that's all.'

'I was talking to Gramps about us.'

'Not even a little bit more of it do when say, sh-h-h- and he put his finger to my lips?'

'Oh, I see.'

Dad nodded. 'Gramps thinks that he somehow exerted pressure on me to change my life.'

'Well, did he?'

'I suppose in an indirect way he did. By being who he is, by showing me what a father is.'

'But you were a good dad when you played in a band. The best dad ever. I wouldn't want you to give that up for me,' I said, feeling suddenly choked up. 'And I don't think

Naddalin would, either.'

Dad smiled and patted my hand. 'Earn Oh-My-Uh. I'm not giving anything up. It's not an either-or proposition. Teaching or music. Jeans or suits. Music will always be a part of my life.'

'But you quit the band! Gave up dressing punk!'

Dad sighed... 'It wasn't hard to do.

I'd played that part of my life out. It was time. I didn't even think twice about it, in spite of what Gramps or Karrah might think. Sometimes you make choices in life and sometimes choices make you. Does that make any sense?'

I thought about the French horn. How sometimes I did not understand why I'd been drawn to it, how some days it seemed as if the instrument had chosen me. I nodded, smiled, and returned my attention to the game.

'King me,' I said, and then we looked and we did it on the sofa like the night be for yet hard even.

Board games suck when you can suck and get off for more fun... even if... it's the daddy.

Dad sighed...

I sighed...

We have been masturbating together since I was 9, that is when I gave my first blowie, too him.

Standing- This time I am in cling on his body up in the air, he holds me like he did when I was a small girl one leg side to side, and I have my arms around his neck, and my hip tight to his, and we slam...

4:59 A.M.

I can't stop thinking about 'Waiting for Retribution.' It's been years since I've listened to or thought of that song, but after Gramps left my bedside, I've been singing it to myself over and over. Dad wrote the song ages ago, but now it feels like she wrote it yesterday.

Like he wrote it from wherever she is. Like there's a secret message in it for me. How else to explain those lyrics? I'm not choosing.

But I'm running out of the fight.

I try to think about it from their perspectives. I know they'd want to be with me, for us all to be together again eventually. What does it mean? Is it supposed to be instructional? Some clue about what my parents would choose for me if they could?

But Dad, he understood what it meant to run out of the fight. Ah- Like Gramps, she'd understand why I don't think I can stay.

But I have no idea if that even happens after you die, and if it does, it will happen whether I go this morning or in seventy years.

What would they want for me now?

As soon as I pose the question, I can see Mom's pissed-off expression. She would be livid with me for even contemplating anything but staying.

~*~

I'm singing and concentrating and singing and thinking so hard that I barely register Carrie's return to the ICU, barely notice that she's talking to the grumpy nurse, I was being me you know doing what I do all the time all oversexed and all with myself, and wonder if there is a color other than black in this world, barely recognize the sturdy determination in her tone.

I'm singing the song as if buried within its lyrics are instructions, a musical road map to where I'm supposed to go and how to get there.

Had I been paying attention, I had been paying attention, I might have comprehended that Carrie was lobbying for Beth to be able to visit me., I might have somehow got away before Carrie was- as always-positive.

I don't want to see him now. I mean, of course, I do. I ache too. But I know that if I see him, I'm going to lose the last wisp of peacefulness that Gramps gave me when he told me that it was okay to go. I'm trying to summon the courage to do what I have to do.

And Beth will complicate things. I try to stand up to get away, but something has happened to me since I went back into surgery. I no longer have the strength to move.

It takes all my effort to sit upright in my chair. I can't run away; all I can do is hide. I curl my knees into my chest and close my eyes.

I hear Nurse Ramirez talking to Carrie. 'I'll take him over,' she says. And for once, the grumpy nurse doesn't order her back to her own patients.

'That was a pretty boneheaded move you pulled earlier,' I hear her tell Beth.

'I know,' Beth answers. His voice is a throaty whisper, the way it gets after a particularly screamy concert. 'I was desperate.'

'No, you were romantic,' she tells her.

They said she was doing better before. I was idiotic; that she'd come off the ventilator. That she was getting stronger. But after I came here that she got worse. They said her heart stopped on the operating table.

Beth trails off.

I am thinking about daddy in knotty was...!

MMMMMMMM! Long-drawn out a sigh! Of thinking GOD...

11

This kind of thing happens all the time, and it had nothing to do with you. We caught it and fixed it and that's what matters.' 'And they got it started. She had a perforated bowel that was slowly leaking bile into her abdomen and it threw her organs out of whack.

She's so-o wrong.... SO-o!

'But she was doing better,' Beth whispers. He sounds so young and vulnerable like Naddalin used to sound when he got the stomach flu. 'And then I came in and she almost died.' Her voice chokes into a sob. The sound of it wakes me up like a bucket of ice water dropped down my shirt. Does Beth think that he did this to me? No...! That's beyond ridiculous.

You got to deal with the situation at hand. And she's still here.' She whips the privacy curtain around my bed. 'If you go,' she tells Beth. 'And I almost stayed in Mexico to marry a fat a b*tch,' the nurse snaps. 'But I didn't- yeah -ua-h ah... And I have a different life now. It almost doesn't matter.

She's emergent stubble, enough of it that if we were to make out, it would make my chin raw. He is wearing his typical band uniform of a T-shirt, skinny pants no underwire under, and Converse, with Gramps's plaid scarf, draped over his shoulders. I force my head up and my eyes open. Beth. God, even in this tale, she is beautiful.

Her eyes are dripping with fatigue.

When he first sees me, he blanches, like I'm some hideous Creature from the Black Lagoon. I do look pretty bad, hooked back up to the ventilator and a dozen other tubes, the dressing from my latest surgery seeping Ritalin. But after a moment, Beth exhales loudly and then she's just Beth again. She searches around like he's dropped something and then finds what he's looking for: my hand.

'Jesus, Earn, your hands are freezing.'

She squats down, takes my right hand into his, and careful to not bump into my tubes and wires, draws his mouth to them, blowing warm air into the shelter she's created.

'You and your crazy hands.' Beth is always amazed at how even in the middle of summer, even after the sweatiest of encounters, my hands stay cold.

I tell her it's bad circulation but he doesn't buy it because my feet are usually warm. He says I have bionic hands, that therefore, like- I'm such a good French horn player after all.

I watch her warm my hands as she has done a thousand times before. I think of the first time he did it, at school, sitting on the lawn, as if it were the most natural thing in the world.

I also remember the first time she did it in front of my parents. Naddalin giggled...

Mom and Dad did not say anything, just exchanged a quick look, something private that passed between them and then Mom smiled apologetically at us.

We were all sitting on the porch on Christmas Eve, drinking cider. It was freezing outside... Beth grabbed my hands and blew on them.

If I reached out my ghostly hand to his, would he feel me? Would he warm the hands he cannot see?

I wonder if I tried if I could feel him touching me. If I were to lie down on top of myself in the bed, would I become one with my body again? Would I feel him then?

Even though I know, if we touch, a new tug-of-war-one that will be even more painful than the quiet one Beth and I have been waging these past few months-will begin.

Beth drops my hand and steps forward to look at me. She is standing so close that I can almost smell her and I'm overpowered by the need to touch her. It's basic, primal, and all-overwhelming the way a baby needs its mother's breast and her nipple to suck, these days you don't cover those doing it.

Gram's twitters on for another five minutes, filling me in on the mundane news:

Heather has decided she wants to become a librarian.

My cousin Matthew Black bought a motorcycle and my aunt Patricia is not pleased about that. I've heard her keep up a running stream of explanation like this for hours while she's cooking dinner or potting orchids. And listening to her now, she calls them and mixes them in with mulch to make her own formally.

Grams thinks she should patent the recipe and sell it because she uses it on her orchids, which are always winning awards.

I can almost picture us in her glasshouse, where even in winter, the air is always warm and humid and smells musty and earthy like soil with the slightest tinge of manure. Gram's hand-collects cow-sh*t, 'cow patties,' Sleep would be so welcome. A warm blanket of black to erase everything else. Sleep without dreams. I've heard people talk about the sleep of the dead. Is that what death would feel like? The nicest, warmest, heaviest never-ending nap? If that's what it's like, I wouldn't mind. If that's what dying is like, I wouldn't mind that at all.

I try to meditate on the sound of Grams' voice, to be carried away by her happy babble. Sometimes I can almost fall asleep while sitting on the barstool at her kitchen counter and listening to her, and I wonder if I could do that here today.

I jerk myself up, a panic destroying whatever calm listening to Gram's had offered. I am still not entirely clear on the particulars here, but I do know that once I fully commit to going, I'll go. Nevertheless, I'm not ready.

Not yet.

I don't know why, but I'm not. And I'm a little scared that if I accidentally think, I wouldn't mind an endless nap, it will happen and be irretrievable, like the way my grandparents used to warn me that if I made a funny face as the clock struck noon, it would remain like that forever.

I wonder if every dying person gets to decide whether they stay or go. It seems unlikely. After all, this hospital is full of people having poisonous chemicals pumped into their veins or submitting to horrible operations all so they can stay, but some of them will die anyway.

She was probably scared... why I don't know... I suddenly picture her alone and frightened, and for the first time in my life, I hope that Gibson is right about the angels. I pray they were all too busy comforting Naddalin to worry about me.

I remember feeding her to my breast... She is little...

Did Mom and Dad decide? It hardly seems like there would have been time for them to make such a momentous decision, and I can't imagine them choosing to leave me behind. And what about Naddalin? Did he want to go with Mom and Dad? Did he know that I was still here? Even if he did, I wouldn't blame him for choosing to go without me.

Why can't someone else decide this for me? Why can't I get a death substitution? Or do what baseball teams do when it's late in the game and they need a solid batter to bring the girls on the base home? Can't I have a pinch hitter to take me home?

Gram's is gone... Carrie is gone... The ICU is tranquil. I close my eyes. When I open them again, Gramps is there? She's crying. She is not making any noise, but tears are cascading down his cheeks, wetting his entire face.

I've never seen anyone cry like this. Quiet but gushing, a faucet behind his eyes mysteriously turned on. The tears fall onto my blanket, onto my freshly combed hair.

(Plink- Plink- Plink)

Gramps doesn't wipe his face or blow her nose. She just lets the tears fall where they may. And when the well of grief is momentarily dry, he steps forward and kisses me on the forehead.

She looks like she's about to leave, but then she doubles back to my bedside, bends so his face is level with my ear and whispers into it.

'But that's what I want and I could see why it might not be what you want. So, I just wanted to tell you that I understand if you go. It's okay if you have to leave us. It's okay if you want to stop fighting.'

'It's okay,' she tells me. 'If you want to go. Everyone wants you to stay. I want you to stay more than I've ever wanted anything in my life.' Her voice cracks with emotion. She stops, clears her throat, takes a breath, and endures.

For the first time, since, I reanalyzed that Naddalin was gone, too, I feel something unclench. I feel myself breathe. I know that Gramps can't be that late-inning pinch hitter I'd hoped for. She won't unplug my breathing tube or overdose me with Murphy or anything like that.

But this is the first time today that anyone has acknowledged what I have lost. I know that the social worker warned Gram's and Gramps not to upset me, but Gramps's recognition and the permission he just offered me-it feels like a gift.

So, quiet that you can almost hear other people's dreams. So, quiet that you can almost hear me tell Gramps, 'Thank you.' Gramps doesn't leave me, even if I am laying here like this. She slumps back into the chair.

It's quiet now.

When Mom had Naddalin, Dad was still playing drums in the same band she'd been in since Middle School. They'd released a couple of CDs; they'd gone on a tour every summer.

The band was by no means big, but they had a following in the Northwest and in various middle School towns between here and Chicago. And, weirdly, they had a bunch of fans in China.

The band was always getting letters from Japanese teenagers begging them to come to play and offering up their homes as crash pads. Dad was always saying that if they went, he'd take me and Mom. Mom and I even learned a few words of Japanese just in case. Konnichiwa. Rigato. It never panned out, though.

After Mom announced she was pregnant with Naddalin, the first sign that changes were afoot was when Dad Titus Black went and got himself a learner's permit. At age thirty-three.

13

She tried letting Mom teach me to drive, even if could not see over the wheel, but she was too impatient, she said. Dad was too sensitive to criticism, Mom said. So, Gramps Titus Sr. took Dad Jr.

out along the empty country lanes in his pickup truck, just like she'd done with the rest of Dad's siblings - except they'd all learned to drive when they were 10 or so.

Black jeans and band tees in exchange for suits. It was subtler. Then the jeans went in the bin, except for one pair of impeccable, dark blue Levi's, which Dad ironed and wore on weekends.

Next up was the wardrobe change, but it wasn't something any of us noticed right away. It wasn't like one day he stripped off the tight which she drug-up at the Good-Will until they started getting trendy and he had to buy them from the fancy vintage-clothing shop, First, the band tees went out in the window in favor of button-up 1950's rayon numbers.

Most days he wore neat, flat-front cuffed trousers. But when a few weeks after Naddalin was born, Mom gave away her lacey covering-her prized beat-up motorcycle jacket with the fuzzy leopard belt-we finally realized that a major transformation was underway.

'Dude, you cannot be serious,' Karrah said when Dad handed her the jacket, saying keep it. 'You've been wearing this thing since you were a kid. It even smells like you.' Dad shrugged, ending the conversation. Then he went to pick up Naddalin, who was squalling from his bassinet.

Mom told him not to do it for her sake. She said it was okay to keep playing if she didn't take off on monthlong tours, leaving her alone with two kids.

Dad said not to worry, he wasn't quitting for her. A few months later, Dad publicized she was leaving the band. Do Sinatra covers. Come on, man,' Karrah rational.

Dad's other bandmates took his decision in stride, but Karrah was devastated.

He tried to talk him out of it.

'We can even start playing shows in suits. We'll look like the Rat Pack.

Promised they'd only play in town. Wouldn't have to tour. NEVER- Ever be gone overnight.

Karrah was furious with Dad for unilaterally quitting the band, especially since Mom had said he could still play shows. When Dad refused to reconsider, she and Karrah had a huge blowout.

She was going to be a teacher now. No more dicking around. 'One day you'll understand,' Dad told Karrah.

Dad told Karrah that he was sorry, but he'd made his decision. By this time, he'd already filled out his applications for grad school.

'The f*ck I will,' Karrah said back fastly.

'Give her time,' she said, and Daddy would pretend to not be hurt. Then she and Mom would drink coffee in the kitchen and exchange knowing smiles, that seemed to say: girls are such girls.

Karrah did not speak to Dad for a few months after that. Carrie would drop by from time to time, to play peace-maker. She would explain to Dad that Karrah was just sorting some stuff out.

Karrah ultimately and totally resurfaced, but she didn't apologize to Dad, not right away, anyhow. Years later, shortly after his daughter was born, Karrah called our house one night in tears. 'I get it now,' she told Daddy.

You would have thought he would love the new Dad. Strangely enough, in some ways, Gramps seemed as upset with Dad's metamorphosis as Karrah had been.

On the surface, he and Gram's seem so old-school, it's like a time warp. They don't use computers or watch cable TV, and they never curse and have this thing about them that makes you want to be polite.

Mom, who swore like a prison guard, never- ever cursed around Grams and Gramps.

It was like no one wanted to disappoint them.

Gram's got a kick out of Dad's stylistic transformation. 'Had I known that all that stuff was going to come back in style, I would've saved Gramps's old suits,' Gram's said one Sunday afternoon when we'd stopped by for lunch and Dad pulled off a trench coat to reveal a pair of wool gabardine trousers and a 1950's cardigan.

'Whose daddy's a rebel? Is your daddy a rebel?' Mom baby-talked as Naddalin gurgled in delight.

'It hasn't come back into style. Punk has come into style, so-o I think this is your son's way of campaigning all over again,' Mom said with a smirk.

'Well, she sure does look dapper,' Gram's said. 'Don't you think?' she said, whirling to Gramps.

Gramps shrugged... 'he always looks good to me, all way how could he not? All my children and Gram's children do, too there no wrong yah can do.' But he looked pained as he said it.

He needed to split some more logs, so I watched him take a hatchet to a bunch of dried alders. Later that afternoon, I went outside with Gramps to help him collect firewood.

'Gramps, don't you like Dad's new clothes?' I asked.

Then he set it down gently next to the bench I was sitting on. 'I like his clothes just fine, Earn,' he said.

Gramps halted the ax in midair. 'But you looked so sad in there when Gram's was talking about it.' 'It's not easy to miss. When you feel sad, you look sad.' Gramps shook his head. 'Don't miss a thing, do you? Even at ten years old.'

'Music? You never go to Dad's shows.' 'I'm not sad. Your father seems happy and I think he'll make a good teacher. Those are some lucky kids who get to read 'Haven' with your dad. I'll just miss the music; he loves and the story of a girl kind of like me.'

'I've got bad ears. From the war. The noise hurts.'

He'd sit down at his little table and write them down, then give them to Gram's to type up, then he'd draw pictures. I remember all the cute and funny stories about animals and us when little, but real and smart.

Always reminded me of that book about the wolf and the pig what's it called?' Mom makes me do that. Ear-plugs just fall out.' 'You should wear headphones. 'Maybe I'll try that. Nonetheless, I have continually listened to your dad's music; at low volume.

I'll admit, I don't much care for all that electric guitar. Not my cup of coffee. But I still admired the music. The words, especially. When he was about your age, your father used to come up with these great stories.

'In the Eyes of an Angel?' Beth asked, forgetfully taking my hand in his and blowing on it, which is what he did to warm my continually cold fingers. 'What's wrong with

'At the Cross? It's still traditional...'

'But doesn't make you want to puke,'

Karrah interjected. The Doors, adding in... That would have been a more Kerry-worthy song. Something to toast the man he was, the ww2 servicer, of harbor whatever that is, he said yes I don't care is all in the past now- right?'

It was like they killed him all over again, saying anything about wanting a Toyota.'

'That funeral wasn't about celebrating Kerry's life,' Mom howled, yanking at her scarf. 'It was about repudiating it.'

Dad put a comforting hand over Mom's clenched fist. 'Now come on. It was just a song.' 'It was what it represented. That whole charade back there. You of all people should understand.'

'It wasn't just a song,' Mom said, snatching her hand away. Then, I cannot be angry with his family. I imagine this funeral was their way of reclaiming their girl.'

Dad shrugged and smiled Galleomily. 'Maybe I myself should... 'Please,' Mom said, shaking her head. 'If they wanted to claim their son, why didn't they deference the life he chose to live?'

How come they never-ever came to visit? Or supported his music, with me?'

15

'We don't know what they thought about all that,' Dad replied. 'Let's not judge too harshly. It has to be heart-breaking to bury your child.'

'I can't believe you're making excuses for them,' Mom shouted.

'I'm not. I just think you might be reading too much into a musical assortment.'

'And I think you're confusing being assumed with being a pushover!'

Dad's wince was barely visible, but it was enough to make Beth squeeze my hand and Karrah and Carrie exchange a look. Karrah jumped in, to Dad's rescue, I think.

'It's different for you, with your parents,' he told Dad. 'I mean they're old-fashioned but they always were into what you did, and even in your wildest days, you were always a good son, a good father. Always home for Sunday dinner.'

Mom guffawed as if Karrah's statement had proven her point. We all turned to her, and our shocked expressions seemed to snap her out of her rant.

'Clearly, I'm just emotional right now,' she said. Dad seemed to comprehend that was as much an apology as he was going to get right now.

she covered her hand with her and this time she didn't snatch it away.

You can have your wishes, your plans, but at the end of the day, it's out of your control.' Dad paused, hesitating before speaking. 'I just think that funerals are a lot like death itself.

'No way,' Karrah said. 'Not if you make your wishes known to the right people.' He turned to Carrie and spoke to the bump in her belly.

~*~

'So, listen up, family. At my funeral, no one is allowed to wear black.

And for music, I want something poppy and old-school, like Mr. T Experience.' she looked up at Carrie. 'Got that'

'Thanks, and what about you, honey?' He asked her.

Without missing a beat, Carrie said: 'Play 'P.S. 'If This Was a Movie.' And I want one of those green funerals where they bury you in the ground under a tree.

So, the funeral itself would be in nature. And no flowers. I mean, give me all the peonies you want when I'm alive, but once I'm dead, better to give donations on my behalf to a good charity like Doctors Without Borders.'

'You've got all the details figured out,' Beth said. 'Is that a nurse thing?'

Carrie shrugged.

'According to Ana, that means you're deep,' I said. 'She says that the world is divided into the people who imagine their own funerals and the people who don't and that smart and artistic people naturally fall into the former category.'

'So, which are you?' Beth asked me.

'I'd want Mozart's Requiem,' I said. I turned to Mom and Dad. 'Don't worry, I'm not hopeless or anything.'

My deadbeat father and all the friends who'd wronged me would weep over my casket, which would be red, logically, 'Please,' Mom said, her mood lightening as she stirred her coffee. 'When I was growing up I'd have elaborate fantasies about my funeral.'

'Let me guess,' Carrie said. "'Fire and Rain'?"

Mom nodded and she and Carrie started laughing and soon everyone at the table was cracking up so hard that tears ran down our faces. And then we were crying, even me, who didn't know Kerry all that well.

Crying and laughing, laughing and crying.

'So, what now?' Beth asked Mom when we'd calmed down. 'Still harbor a soft spot for Mr. Taylor?'

Mom stopped and blinked hard, which is what she does when she's thinking about something. Then she reached over to stroke Dad's cheek, a rare demonstration of PDA.

'In my ideal scenario, my bighearted pushover husband and I die quickly and simultaneously when we're ninety-two years old. I'm not sure how.'

16

Maybe we're on a tropical beach- because, in the future, we're rich; hey, it's my fantasy-and we come down with some exotic illness, of what it hard from her, and go to sleep one night feeling fine and then never wake up, unless it with her in my arms. And no James Taylor. Earn plays at our funeral. If that is, we can tear her away from the New York Philharmonic.'

That said, I can't help thinking Mom would not be happy about this. In fact, Mama Bear would be furious with the way events are unfolding today.

Dad was wrong about it all; It's true you might not get to control your funeral, but sometimes you do get to choose your death.

She went with Dad. I can't help thinking that part of Mom's wish did come true. Nevertheless, I won't be playing at her funeral.

To go down as a family. No one left behind. It's possible that her funeral will also be mine. There's something comforting in that.

2:19 A.M.

I'm back where I started, going backward they say in my state of mind, and my lusting wants and needs.

I wish there was some kind of anesthesia for me or at least something to make the world shut up. Back in the ICU. My body, that is. I've been sitting here all along, too tired to move. I wish I could go to sleep.

I don't want this. I look around the ICU, feeling kind of ridiculous. I doubt all the other messed-up people in the ward are exactly thrilled to be here, either. I don't have the energy for this decision. I don't want this anymore. I say it out loud. I want to be like my body, quiet and lifeless, putty in someone else's hands.

I reanalyze now that dying is easy, I would rather do that then have lost both my legs and yet it's my own felt, self-filtered harm, at 12, over not having the girlfriend I wanted. The living is hard. My body wasn't gone from the ICU for too long. I ended my life in my hospital room over I could not handle it, in my mind... yet I going to talk about it...

A few hours for surgery, and now I am just hip and vagina. Sometime in the recovery room.

I don't know exactly what's happened to me, and for the first time today, I don't really care. I shouldn't have to care. I shouldn't have to work this hard.

I'm back on the ventilator, and once again there's tape over my eyes. I still don't understand the tape. Are the doctors afraid that I'll wake up mid-surgery and be horrified by the scalpels or Ritalin?

As if those things could faze me now.

Two nurses, the one assigned to me and Nurse Ramirez, come over to my bed and check all my monitors.

They call out a chorus of numbers that are as familiar to me now as my own name: BP, pulse ox, breathing rate. I was shocked up to all kinds of things and wanted out, my hold body shut down, yet it was all my fault... yet I was mental, and sick, so-o- is it all on me? YES-

NO- AH!

Nurse Ramirez looks like an entirely different person from the one who arrived here yesterday afternoon.

I'll miss her but I'm glad she'll be able to get away from me, from this place. I'd like to get away, too.

I think I will. I think it's just a matter of time figuring out how to let go.

The makeup has all rubbed off and her hair is flat. She looks like she could sleep standing up. Her shift must be over soon, and the sweet cute girl I like would be rubbing me down in a sponge bath - the only good in my life at this time, going back more.

I haven't been back in my bed for fifteen minutes when Carrie shows up.

She marches through the double doors and goes to speak to the one nurse behind the desk.

I don't hear what she says, but I hear her tone: it's polite, soft-spoken, but leaving no room for questions.

When she leaves the room a few minutes later, there's a change in the air.

Carrie's in charge now.

17

Ah, I recall-

The grumpy nurse at first looks pissed off, like Who is this woman to tell me what to do?

I got sick of this life... how could you not when you no more... then they think and they take you for mentally retarded. Yet that is what materializes to girls like me, that end in a place like this over... well, not handling it. But then she seems to resign, to throw her hands up in surrender. It's been a crazy night. The shift is almost over. Why bother? Soon, I and all of my noisy, pushy visitors will be an important person else's problem. I used to hear Mom give her tips for getting the baby to sleep through the night.

Five minutes later, Carrie is back, bringing Grams and Gramps with her. Carrie has worked all day and now she is here all night. I know she doesn't get enough sleep on a good day.

It's like exhaustion wouldn't dare mess with her. She stirs right over to my bed, looking at me all vegetated, now in my last days, she remembers back to the younger me.

I'm not sure who looks worse, me or Gramps. His cheeks are sallow, his skin looks gray and papery, and his eyes are Ritalin-shot.

Gram's, on the other hand, looks just like Grams. No sign of wear and tear on her.

Never the kind of girl to make my heart race in fear. You made up for a lifetime of that today.'

But you proved me wrong. Even-never then you were such a breeze. Never-ever gave us any trouble.

'You've sure got us on a roller-coaster ride today,' Gram's says lightly. 'Your mom always said she couldn't believe what an easy girl you were and I remember telling her, 'Just wait until she hits puberty.'

'Now, now,' Gramps says, putting a hand on her shoulder.

'Oh, I'm only kidding. Earn would appreciate it. She's got a sense of humor, no matter how serious she sometimes seems. A wicked sense of humor, this one.'

'There, much better,' she says. 'You know, I went outside for a walk today and you'll never guess what I saw. A crossbill. In Dauphin Main in March. Now, that's unusual.

I think it's Galle...

Someone has rinsed it out, so, while it's not exactly clean, it's not caked with Ritalin, either. Gram's starts untangling my bangs, which are about chin length. Gram's pulls the chair up next to my bed and starts combing through my hair with her fingers.

She works her way down, pulling the hair out from under the pillow so it streams down my chest, hiding some of the lines and tubes connected to me. I'm forever cutting bangs, then growing them. It's about as radical a makeover as I can give myself.

You would think she would be there my last days at my bed, yet she was not, she did not care... or so that how I remember it... yet, I lost my health for her.

18

She always had a soft spot for you. Said you reminded her of your father, and she adored her.

But she loved that she'd rebelled against us, or so she thought, and she thought it was something that you rebelled all over again by becoming a classical musician.

Though much as I tried to tell her that it wasn't the way it was, she didn't care. She had her own ideas about things; I suppose we all do.'

Little did she know your father couldn't stand her. When he cut his first crazy hairdo, she practically threw him a party.

She loved that he was rebellious, so dissimilar then us all in the world today.

She came to visit us once when your daddy was around five or six, and she had this ratty mink coat with her.

This was before she got all into the animal rights and crystals and the like. The coat smelled terrible, like mothballs, like the old linens we kept in a trunk in the attic, and your father took to calling her 'Auntie Shaft Smell.' She never knew that.

I know that all the magic kisses in the world probably couldn't have helped him today. But I would do anything to have been able to give her one.

10:41 P.M.

I run away, once from this place and was busted back when I still had legs, this place is why... and she... too. I was slowly dying anyway with MS, so-o... that was what they said it was too...

I leave Beth, Ana, and Carrie in the lobby and I just start careening through the hospital. I don't reanalyze I'm looking for the pediatric ward until I get there.

Past the pediatric oncology unit where bald cancer patients sleep under cheerful murals of rainbows and balloons, I tear through the halls...

Like past rooms with nervous four-year-old's sleeping restlessly before tomorrow's tonsillectomies, past the newborn ICU with babies the size of fists, hooked up to more tubes than I am.

I'm looking for him, even though I know I won't find him. Still, I have to keep looking.

I picture his head, his tight blond curls. I love to nuzzle my face in those curls, have done since he was a baby. I kept waiting for the day when he'd swat me away, say 'You're embarrassing me,' the way he does to Dad when Dad cheers too loudly at T-ball games. But so far, that hadn't happened. So far, I've been allowed constant access to that head of his. So far. Now there is no more so far. It's over.

I picture myself nuzzling his head one last time, and I can't even imagine it without seeing myself crying, my tears turning his blond curls straight.

I cannot scream until my throat hurts or break a window with my fist until my hand bleeds, or pull my hair out in clumps until the pain in my scalp overcomes the one in my heart.

Naddalin is never going to graduate from T-ball to baseball. she is never going to grow a mustache. Never-ever going to get into a fistfight or shoot a deer or kiss a girl or have real sex or fall in love or get married or mother her own curly-haired girl that she wanted all the way back before she could talk, or walk even, even if she had one dropped in the crapper that was her daddy's when she aborted it with pills.

I'm only 1 year older than her, but it's like I've already had so much more life. It is unfair. If one of us should have been left behind, if one of us should be given the opportunity for more life, it should be her. I race through the hospital like a trapped wild animal. Naddalin? I call. Where are you? Come back to me!

I don't want to be here. I don't want to be in this hospital. I don't want to be in this suspended state where I can see what's happening, where I'm aware of what I'm feeling without being able to actually feel it.

Nevertheless, she won't. I know it's fruitless. I give up and drag myself back to my ICU. I want to break the double doors. I want to smash the nurses' station. I want to go away. I want it all to go away.

I'm staring at myself, at the 'live' Eern now, lying in her hospital bed. I feel a burst of fury. If I could slap my own lifeless face, I would.

Instead, I sit down in the chair and close my eyes, wishing it all away. Except I can't. I can't concentrate because there's suddenly so much noise. My monitors are blipping and chirping and two nurses are racing toward me.

'Her BP and pulse ox are dropping,' one screams.

'She's tachycardia,' the other yells. 'What transpired?'

'Code blue, code blue in Trauma,' blares the PA. (that was the night I passed, at 12, the day before I became a teen girl, holding a stuffed toady bear, he was being a suit.) I'm naked from the waist down, but no one notices these things here.

Soon the nurses are joined by a bleary-eyed doctor, the one that was so in love with me, the real me or so she said, rubbing the sleep out of his eyes, which are ringed by deep circles. He yanks down the covers and lifts my hospital gown.

He puts his hands on my belly, which is swollen and hard. His eyes widen and then narrow into slits. 'Abdomen's rigid,' he says angrily. 'We need to do an ultrasound.'

Nurse Ramirez runs to a back room and then wheels out what looks like a portable laptop with a long white attachment. She squirts some jelly on my stomach, and the doctor runs the attachment over my stomach.

'Damn. Full of fluid,' he says.

'Patient, had surgery this afternoon?'

'A splenectomy,' Nurse Ramirez replies.

'Could be a missed Ritalin vessel that wasn't sealed,' the doctor says, she tried this one before. I don't think this was natural... 'Or a slow leak from a perforated bowel.

Car accident, right?'

That was more of a thing then me taking last breath... yet it was 18 months... and my funding was running out so-o let her go-o is what they do; this place is like a nearing home... I've seen it all before. Smells the same. Like piss, looks the same, like death, and then that all the is left is regretting all and both.

Those things that thing and them too.

'Yes, the patient was med-evaded this morning.'

The doctor flips through my chart. 'Doctor Sorensen was her surgeon; he's still on call. Page him, get her to the OR.

Nurse Ramirez shoots the doctor a dirty look as if he had just insulted me.

We need to get inside and find out what's leaking, and why, before she drops any further. Jesus, brain contusions, collapsed a lung. This kid's a train wreck.'

20

'Miss Ramirez,' the grumpy nurse at the desk scolds. 'You have patients of your own to deal with. Let's get this young woman intubated and transferred to the OR. That will do her better than all this dilly-dallying around!'

The nurses work rapidly to detach the monitors and catheters and run another tube down my throat. A pair of orderlies' rushes in with a gurney and heave me onto it. She taps me three times on the forehead with her fingers, like it's some kind of Morse code message. And then I'm gone into the maze of hallways leading toward the OR for another round of cutting, but this time I don't follow myself. This time I stay behind in the ICU.

~*~

I'm still naked, from the waist down as they hustle me out, showing my vag-ie-slit. And the line of hair I have down there left, but right before I reach the back door, Nurse Ramirez calls, 'Wait!' and then gently closes the hospital gown around my legs. This morning I went for a drive with my family. And now I am here, as alone as I've ever been. I am seventeen years old. This is not how it's supposed to be. This is not how my life is supposed to turn out.

I am starting to get it now. I mean, I don't totally fully understand. It's not like I somehow commanded a Ritalin vessel to pop open and start leaking into my stomach. It's not like I wished for another surgery. But Naddalin is gone. Mom and Dad are gone. To never-ever smell Dad smoke a pipe? To never stand next to Mom quietly talking as we do the dishes? To never read Naddalin another chapter of Neveah, even if she cannot put it down- and there are no other books out there to read; to stay without them? I'm not sure this is a world I belong in anymore. I'm not sure that I want to wake up. In the quiet corner of the ICU, I start to really think about the bitter things I've managed to ignore so far today. What would it be like if I stay? What would it feel like to wake up an orphan?

I've only ever been to one funeral in my life and it was for someone I hardly knew. Gram's was pretty annoyed by that, by Aunt Galle in general, who Gram's said was always trying to call attention to how different she was, even after she was dead. Gram's ended up boycotting the ash scattering, and if she wasn't going, there was no reason for the rest of us too. No traditional service, no burial in the family plot. Instead, she wanted to be cremated and have her ashes scattered in a sacred Native American ceremony somewhere in the Sierra Mountains in Nevada. I might have gone to Great-Aunt Galle's funeral after she died of acute pancreatitis. Except her will was very specific about her final wishes.

That was the funny thing about conservatory camp; you got so close with the people over the summer, but it was some unwritten rule that you didn't keep in touch during the rest of the year. We were summer friends. Anyhow, we had a memorial concert at camp in Dick's honor, but it wasn't really a funeral. Dick Mize, my trombonist friend from conservatory camp, died two years ago, but I didn't find out until I returned to camp and he wasn't there. Few of us had known that he'd had lymphoma.

Unlike Dad and Karrah, who as they got older and had families became fewer music performers than music connoisseurs. Kerry Whiteford was a musician in town, one of Mom and Dad's people, Kerry stayed single and stayed faithful to his first love: playing music.

She was in three bands and she earned her living to do the sound at a local club, an ideal setup because at least one of his bands seemed to play there every week, though sometimes you'd see her jumping down in the middle of a set to adjust the monitors herself, so she just had to hop up on the stage and let someone take the controls for his set. I had known Kerry when I was little and would go to shows with Mom and Dad and then I sort of remit- her when Beth, and I got together and I started going to shows again. Kerry's death caused an uproar in our town. She was kind of a fixture around here, an outspoken girl with a big personality and this mass of wild white-girl curly-locks.

She was at work one night, doing the sound for a Dauphin band called Clod when he just keeled over on the soundboard. He was dead by the time the ambulance got there. A freak brain aneurysm. Mom and Dad were going, of course, and so was Beth. So-o even though I felt a little bit like an impostor crashing someone's death day, I decided to go along. Naddalin stayed with Grams and Gramps Black. And she was young, only thirty-two. Everyone we knew was planning to go to her funeral, which was being held in the town where he grew up, in the mountains a couple of hours' drive away.

Kerry the avowed left-winger who decided to protest the Iraq war by getting a bunch of men to dress up in drag and go down to the local army recruiting office to enlist.

Kerry the atheist curmudgeon, who hated how commercial May Christmas had become and so-o threw an annual Merry Anti-Christmas Celebration at the club, where he held a contest for which band could play the most distorted versions of Christmas carols.

Then he invited everyone to throw all their crappy presents into a big pile in the middle of the club. And contrary to local lore, Kerry did not burn the stuff in a bonfire; Dad told me that he donated it to St. Vincent de Paul. As everyone talked about Kerry, the mood in the car was fizzy and fun, like we were going to the circus, not a funeral. But it seemed right, it seemed true to Kerry, who was always overflowing with frenetic energy.

We caravanned to Kerry's hometown with a bunch of people, squeezing into a car with Karrah and Carrie, who was so pregnant the seat belt wouldn't fit over her bump. Everyone took turns telling funny stories about Kerry. The problem was the service itself. It was obvious that the pastor had never even met Kerry because when he talked about him, it was generic, about what a kind heart Kerry had and how even though it was sad that he was gone, he was getting his 'heavenly reward.'

I cannot say I feel that way, a man was on a cross for me that good right... I don't have to feel I did anything wrong, for that way he did what he did... or was chosen... right? The funeral, though, was the opposite. It was horribly depressing and not just because it was for someone who'd died tragically young and for no particular reason aside from some bad arterial luck. It was held in a huge church, which seemed strange considering Kerry was an out-spoken nonbeliever, but that part I could understand. I mean where else do you have a funeral?

We went to church sometimes, so it's not like Mom had anything against religion, but Kerry totally did and Mom was ferociously protective of the people she loved, so much that she took insults upon them personally. Her friends sometimes called her Mama Bear for this reason. Steam was practically blowing out of Mom's ears by the time the service ended with a rousing rendition of Sarah McLachlan 'In the Arms of an Angel.'

And instead of having eulogies from his bandmates or the people in town who she'd spent the last fifteen years with, some uncle from Boise got up and talked about teaching Kerry how to ride a bike when he was six, like learning to ride a bike was the defining moment in Kerry's life. He concluded by reassuring us that Kerry was walking with Jesus now. I could see my mom getting red when he said that, and I started to get a little worried that she might say something.

'It's a good thing Kerry's dead because that funeral would've sent him over the edge,' Karrah said. After the church service, we'd decided to skip the formal luncheon and had gone to a diner. Ana, who has met Carrie all of twice, flings herself into her arms. 'Thank you!' she murmurs into her neck.

~*~

'I want to see Earn,' Beth says... Carrie hugs her back, pats her on the shoulders before letting go. She rubs her eyes and winces out a brittle laugh. 'What in the hell were you two thinking?' she asks. 'Are you okay?' Ana asks. Carrie turns to look at Beth and it's like someone has unscrewed her valve, letting all her air escape. She deflates. She reaches out and touches Beth's cheek. 'Of course, you do.' She wipes her eyes with the heel of her hand. Beth perks up when he hears this. 'You think you can? That old nurse has it in for me.' Carrie ignores the question altogether. 'Let's see about getting you in to Earn.'

She needs you now - more than ever... right?' 'If that old nurse is who I think she is, it doesn't matter if she has it in for you. It's not up to her. Let's check in with Earn's Gram's parents and then I'll find out who's in charge of breaking the rules around here and get you in to see your girl.

Carrie to the rescue. Just the way she rescued Karrah, Dad's best friend, and bandmate, who, once upon a time, was a total drunk playboy. When he and Carrie had been dating a few weeks, she told her to straighten out and dry out or say good-bye. Beth swivels around and hugs Carrie with such force that her feet lift up off the ground.

While Dad lived for the Ramones and thought baseball was a religious institution, and probably why she was one of Dad's favorite people, even though she hated the Ramones and thought baseball was boring, Dad said, that lots of girls had given Karrah stipulations, tried to force her to settle down, and lots of girls had been left crying on the sidewalk.

But when Carrie packed her toothbrush and told Karrah to grow up, Karrah was the one who cried. Then he dried his tears, grew up, got sober and monogamous. Eight years later, here they are, with a baby, no less. Carrie is formidable that way. Probably - why after she and Karrah got together she became Mom's best friend; she was another tough-as-nails, tender-as-kittens, feminist bitch.

I'm so busy celebrating Carrie's arrival that the implication of her being here takes a few moments to sink in, but when it does, it hits me like a jolt of electricity. Now Carrie is here, Carrie the nurse, Carrie who doesn't take no for an answer is here. She'll get Beth in to see me. She'll take care of everything.

Hooray! I want to shout.

Carrie is here! Her eyes got bright...

Carrie is here, and if she's here if she's in my hospital, it means that there isn't any reason for her to be in her hospital. I know her well enough to know that she never-ever would have left her there. Even with me here, she would have stayed with her. she was broken and brought to her for adhesive. She was her patient, her priority, and now even a friend, and someone more than just a patient.

More than ever... I think about the fact that Gram's and Gramps are in Dauphin with me. And that all anyone in that waiting room is talking about is me, how they are avoiding mentioning Mom or Dad or Naddalin. I think about Carrie's face, which looks like it has been scrubbed clean of all joy. And I think about what she told Beth, that I need him now.

Mom went into labor three days before Christmas, and she insisted we go holiday shopping together, and that's how I know. Naddalin; She's gone, too. 'Shouldn't you like lying down or go to the birthing center or something?' I asked. Mom grimaced through a cramp. 'Nah. The contractions aren't that bad and are still like twenty minutes apart. I cleaned our entire house, from top to bottom, while I was in early labor with you.'

'You're a smart-ass, you know that?' Mom said. She took a few breaths. 'I've got some ways to go. Now come on. Let's take the bus to the mall. I'm not up to driving.' 'Putting the labor in labor,' I joked. Mom laughed at that. 'Please, it's enough for me to have to birth this baby. I don't need to deal with her, too. We'll call her when I'm ready to pop. I'd much rather have you around.' 'Shouldn't we call Dad?' I asked.

'Let's go get the pie...' So, Mom and I wandered around the mall, stopping every couple minutes or so she could sit down and take deep breaths and squeeze my wrist so hard it left angry red marks. Still, it was a weirdly fun and productive morning. We bought presents for Grams and Gramps.

Usually, we waited for the holiday sales to buy stuff like that, but Mom said that this year we'd be too busy changing diapers. (A sweater with an angel on it and a new book about Abraham Lincoln,) and toys for the baby and a new pair of rain boots for me. Now's not the time to be cheap. Ow, freak. Sorry, Earn.

Come on.

The hippie midwife-led Mom inside and Dad asked me if I wanted to come, too. By now, I could hear Mom screaming profanities. We went to Marie Callender's. Mom had a slice of pumpkin and of banana cream. I had blueberry... When she was done, she pushed her plate away and announced she was ready to go to the midwife. We had never really talked about my being there or not being there. I went everywhere with Mom and Dad at that point, so it was just assumed.

-And-

We met a nerve-wracked Dad at the birthing center, which was nothing like a doctor's office. It was the ground floor of a house, the inside decked out with beds and Jacuzzi tubs, the medical equipment discreetly tucked away.

I shook my head. Mom needed me. She'd said so. I sat down on one of the floral couches and picked up a magazine with a goofy-looking bald baby on the cover. Dad disappeared into the room with the bed.

'I can call Gram's and she'll pick you up,' Dad said, wincing at Mom's barrage. 'This might take a while.'

~*~

'We have some lovely Enya. Very soothing,' the midwife said. Women can handle the worst kind of pain. You will find out one day. Then she would scream freaking again. 'Music! dammit! Music!' Mom screamed. 'Freaking Enya!' Mom screamed. 'Melvin's... Earth... now...!' 'I've got it covered,' Dad said. Then he popped a CD of the loudest, churnings', guitar-heaviest music, like- like, I had ever heard. It made all the fast-paced punk songs Dad normally listened to sound like harp music.

This music was primal and that seemed to make Mom feel better. She started making these low guttural noises. I just sat there quietly. Every so often she'd scream my name and I'd scamper inside. Mom would look up at me, her face plastered with sweat. Don't be scared, she'd whisper.

Likewise, I'd seen a couple of births on that cable-TV show, and people usually yelled for a while; sometimes they swore and it had to be bleeped, but it never took longer than half an hour. After three hours, Mom and the Melvin's were still screaming along. The whole birthing center felt tropically humid, even though it was forty degrees outside.

~*~

Karrah dropped by. When he came inside and heard the noise, she froze in his tracks. I knew that the whole kid-thing freaked him out. I'd overheard Mom and Dad talking about that, and Karrah's refusal to grow up. He'd apparently been shocked when Mom and Dad had me, and now was completely bewildered that they chose to have a second. They'd both been relieved when he and Carrie had gotten back together. 'Finally, a grown-up in Karrah's life,' Mom had said.

Karrah looked at me; his face was pale and sweaty. "Holy Shit PISS!!!" Should you be hearing this? Should I be hearing this?'

'I've got the flu or something, but your Dad just called asking me to bring some food. I shrugged, Karrah sat down next to me. So here I am,' he said, proffering a Taco Bell bag reeking of onions. I's let out another moan. 'I should go. Don't want me spreading germs or anything.'

She stood up to leave, I screamed even louder and Karrah nearly jumped in her seat. 'You sure you want to hang around for this? You can come back to my place. Carrie's there, taking care of me.' He grinned when he mentioned her name. 'She can take care of you, too.' 'Did she vomit yet?' Karrah asked, sitting back down on the couch. I snickered, but then saw from his face that he was serious. 'No, I'm fine, Mom needs me; Dad's kind of freaked out, though.'

'So, the story goes. But I'll tell you this: She cried like a mother freaking baby when you were born.' Almost fainted on the floor. Not that I can blame him. But the dude was a mess, the doctors wanted to kick her out, 'she threw up when you were coming, said they were going to if you didn't come out within a half-hour. That got your mom so pissed off she pushed you out five minutes later.' Karrah smiled, leaning back into the futon.

~*~

'I've heard that part.' 'Heard what part?' Dad asked breathlessly. He grabbed the bag from Karrah. 'Taco Bell, Karrah?' I shook my head; Dad had started unwrapping her meal when Mom let out a growl and then started screaming at the midwife that she was ready to push. Karrah winked at me, Dad pulled out a burrito and offered one to me.

'Dinner of champions,' Karrah said.

'It'll do... I'm ravenous. It's intense in there. Got to keep up my strength.' The midwife poked her head out the door. 'I think we're getting close, so maybe you should save dinner for later,' she said. 'Come on back.'

21

'Would you like to watch?' The midwife asked Dad, but he just swayed and turned a pale shade of green. Karrah nearly bolted out the front door. I followed Dad into the bedroom where Mom was sitting now, panting like a sick dog. 'I'm probably better up here,' he said, grasping Mom's hand, which she violently shook off.

The midwife was telling me to push, after all, I was having daddy baby girl, then hold, then push. 'Go, baby, go, baby, go baby go,' she chanted. 'You're almost there!' she cheered. Mom looked like she wanted to smack her.

No one asked me if I wanted to watch. I just automatically went to stand next to the midwife. It was pretty gross, I'll admit, Lots of Ritalin, I was on during.

And I'd certainly never seen myself so full-on frontal before. Nevertheless, it felt strangely normal for me to be there. Her eyes were open, staring straight at me. She likes held my gaze as the midwife suctioned out her nose, and mouth, and said well she going to be cheap you don't have to cut anything off. 'It's a girl,' she shouted. This is why girls are E_Z!

'I'll do it,' I offered.

The midwife put Naddalin on my belly.

'Do you want to cut the cord?' she asked Daddy he was holding my hand the whole time and kissing my forehead and even my lips. Dad waved his hands no, too overcome or queasy, woozy to speak. When Naddalin slid out, he was head up, facing the ceiling, so that the first thing he saw was me. She didn't come out squalling as you see on TV. She was just noiseless. Up till now, some thought this was wrong yet other not, in the hospital, about me and my daddy. We have a special bond that is all I say and smile nod. The midwife held the cord taut and told me where to cut. Naddalin lay still, his gray eyes wide open, still staring at me. 'Imprinting on a zoologist, not the mama goose, because he was the first one, they saw when they hatched.' I always said that it was because Naddalin saw me first and because I cut her cord, that somewhere deep down he thought I was his mother. 'It's like those goslings,' Mom joked, saying, I knew you to would do this... I knew.

When he was a baby and going through his nightly fussy period, she'd only calm down after I played him a lullaby on my French horn. When he started getting into Neveah, only I could read a chapter to him every night.

And when he'd skin a knee or bump his head, if I was around, he would not stop crying until I bestowed a magic kiss on the injury, after which he'd miraculously recover. She exaggerated. Naddalin didn't really think I was her mother, but there were certain things that only I could do for her.

'Damn...' 'You are the plan, Brooke licks her bee-stung lips, I hadn't really thought beyond you going up to the ICU and making a ruckus.' 'Making a ruckus is one of my favorite things to do. What do you think we should do? Let out a primal scream? Strip? Wait, I didn't bring my guitar, I want to play for the baby. Smash a guitar, you mean, said Mom? 'You could sing something?' someone suggests. Beth blanches at this sudden reality check and Brooke raises her eyebrows in a stern rebuke. Every person goes solemn. 'How about that old Smiths song 'Girlfriend in a Coma'?'

Someone calls...

That might do it if it doesn't, then sing. All we really want is to lure a couple of curious nurses out, and that grouchy head nurse after them. Once she comes out of the ICU and sees all of us in the hall, she'll be too busy dealing with us to notice that Beth has slipped inside.'

Brooke appraises Ana; Ana in her rumpled black pants and unflattering sweater. Then Brooke smiles and links arms with my best friend. 'Sounds like a plan, Let's motor, kids.' Ana clears her throat. 'Um, it doesn't do us any good if Brooke is a diversion in the lobby. We need to go upstairs to the ICU and then maybe someone could shout that Brooke Bogel is here.

Maybe all hospitals should import groups of rabble-raising punk rockers to kickstart the languishing patients' hearts. I lag behind, watching this procession of hipster's barrel through the lobby. I wonder if I will be able to feel his touch on me. While they wait at the elevator banks, I scramble up the stairs.

The sheer noisiness of them, of their heavy boots, and loud voices, buzzed on by their sense of urgency, ricochets through the quiet hush of the hospital and breathes some life into the place.

I, myself recollect watching a TV program once about old-age homes that brought in cats and dogs to cheer the elderly and dying patients, and then stop in front of the elevator, waiting limitlessly for one empty enough to ferry them up as a group. I choose what I want to be next to my body when Beth makes it to the ICU.

A gunshot wound... We get a lot of hunting accidents around here.

One of the other patients, one who was so swaddled in gauze and bandages, that I could not see if it was a man or woman, is gone. I's did not look for the dick - sorry!

I's have been gone from the ICU for more than three hours, and a lot has different.

In its place is a woman whose neck is immunized in one of those collar things.

There is a new patient in one of the empty beds, a middle-aged staff whose face looks like one of those surrealist watercolors: half of it looks normal, handsome even, the other half is a mess of bloody-ness, gauze, and stitching like someone just blew it off.

I stop to check if I feel any different, but I don't feel anything, not physically anyhow. I haven't since I was in the car this morning, listening to Beethoven's French horn Sonata no. 3.

Now that I'm breathing on my own, my wall of machines bleeps far less, so I get fewer visits from the nurses.

Nurse Ramirez, the one with the nails, expressions a look over at me every now and again, but she's busy with the new guy with the half face. 'Holy crud. Is that Brooke Bogel?'

I hear someone ask in a totally flakey melodramatic voice from outside the ICU's automatic doors. I've never ever heard any of Beth's friends talk so PG-13 before. It's their sanitized hospital version of 'holy freaking shit.'

As for me, I'm off my ventilator now. I remember the social worker telling my Grandparents and Aunt Diane that this was a positive step.

'You mean Brooke Bogel of Bikini?

Brooke Bogel, who was on the cover of Spin magazine last month?

Here in this very hospital?' This time it's Ana talking.

Does she sound like a six-year-old reciting line from a school play about the food groups: You mean you are supposed to eat five servings of fruit and vegetables a day?

I hear them muttering, eager to see if it's really Brooke, or maybe just happy for the break in the routine. 'Yeah, that's right,' says Brooke's raspy voice. 'I'm here to offer some rock-and-roll succor to all the people of Rockville and around the county of Dauphin.'

A couple of the younger nurses, the ones who probably listen to the pop radio or watch MTV and have heard of Bikini, look up, their faces excited question marks.

'Yeah. That's right. So, I thought I might sing a little song. One of my favorites. It's called 'Eraser,'' Brooke says. 'One of you guys want to count me in?'

'I need something to tap with,' Maylie answers. 'Anyone got some pens or something?' I'm watching it all play out, like a movie on the screen.

Now the nurses and orderlies in the ICU are very curious and heading toward the doors.

I stand next to my bed, my eyes trained on the double doors, waiting for them to open. I'm itching with suspense.

I think of Beth, of how calming it feels when he touches me, how when he absentmindedly strokes the nape of my neck or blows warm air on my cold hands, I could melt into a puddle.

'What's going on?' the older nurse demands. Suddenly every nurse on the floor is looking at her, not out toward Brooke anymore.

No one is going to try to explain to her that a famous pop star is outside. The moment has broken. I feel the tension ease into disappointment.

The door isn't going to open.

Outside, I hear Brooke start belting out the lyrics to 'Eraser.' Even a cappella, even though the automatic double doors, she sounds good.

'Somebody calls security now,' the nurse growls.

'Beth, you better just go for it,' Maylie screams. 'Now or never. Full-court press.'

23

'Go!' screams Ana, suddenly an army general. 'We'll cover you.'

The door opens. In tumble, more than a half-dozen punkers, Beth, Maylie, Jodi, some people I don't know, and then Ana. Outside, Brooke is still singing, as though this were the concert, she'd come to Dauphin and its towns to give.

As Beth and Ana charge through the door, they both look strong-minded, happy even.

I'm astonished by their resilience, by their hidden pockets of strength.

I want to jump up and down and root for them like I used to do at Naddalin's T-ball games when she'd be circumnavigating third and heading for home.

It's hard to believe, but watching Ana and Beth in action, I almost feel happy, too.

~*~

'Where is she?' Beth yells. 'Where's Earn?'

~*~

'In the corner, next to the supply closet!' Someone shouts- like OMG-ing freaking load. It takes me a minute to reanalyze its Nurse Ramirez.

~*~

'Security...! Get her...! Get her...!' the grumpy nurse shouts.

'Dude, was that Brooke Bogel?' one asks as he snags Jodi and flings her toward the exit.

She has spotted Beth through all the other invaders and her face has gone pink with anger.

Two hospital security guards and two orderlies run inside.

~*~

'Think so,' the other answers, grabbing Sarah and steering her out.

~*~

Ana has spotted me. 'Beth, she's here!' She freaking screams- like a freak, and then turns to look at me, the scream dying in her throat.

'She's here,' she says again, only this time it's a whimper.

~*~

Beth hears her and she is dodging nurses and making her way to me, and then she's there at the foot of my bed, her hand reaching out to touch me; she hands about to be on me.

Unexpectedly, I's think of our first kiss after the gig, how I didn't know how badly I'd wanted his lips on mine until the kiss was looming.

I didn't reanalyze like, um- just how much I was craving his touch, until now that I can almost feel it on me.

Almost... Almost...!

Suddenly, she's moving away from me.

Two guards have him by the shoulders and have yanked her butt. One of the same guards' grabs Ana's elbow and leads her out.

She's limping now, offering no resistance.

Or get detained...' And then she's off down the hall, trailed by a couple of orderlies begging for her autograph... Brooke's still singing in the hallway.

When she sees Beth, she stops. 'Sorry, honey,' she says. 'I got to jet before I miss my show...

'Call the police,' the old nurse yells.

'Have her arrested- do it.'

'We're taking him down to security.

That's the protocol,' one guard says.

'Not up to us to arrest,' the other adds.

'Just get her off my ward.' She harrumphs and turns around.

'Miss Ramirez, that had better not have been you abetting these hoodlums.' 'Unquestionably, not, I's was in the supply closet. I missed all the hullabaloo's,' she replies.

She is such a good liar that her face gives nothing away.

The old nurse claps her hands. 'Okay. The show's over, um yeah it's like back to that place.'

24

I chase after Beth and Ana, who are being led into the elevators.

I jump in with them. Ana looks confused like someone flipped her reset button and she's still is booting up.

Beth's lips are set in a grim line.

I can't tell if he's about to cry or about to punch the guard. For her sake, I hope it's the former. For my own, I hope the latter.

Downstairs, the guards hustle Beth and Ana toward a hallway filled with darkened offices.

They are about to go inside one of the few offices with lights on when I hear someone scream Beth's name. 'Beth. Stop. Is that you?' 'Carrie?' Beth yells.

'Carrie?' Ana mutters.

'Excuse me, where are you taking them?' Carrie yells at the guards as she runs toward them.

'I'm sorry but these two were caught trying to break into the ICU,' one guard elucidates.

'Only because, like- they wouldn't let us in,' Ana explains inadequately.

Carrie catches up to them. She's still wearing her nursing clothes, which is strange because she normally changes out of what she calls 'orthopedic couture' as soon as she can.

Her long, curly auburn hair looks lank and greasy like she's forgotten to wash it these past few weeks. And her cheeks, normally rosy like apples, have been repainted beige. 'Excuse me...'

'Who's she?' One guard asks.

'I'm am a patent over at Cedar Creek. I did my training here, so if you like we can go straighten this out with Dick Caruthers.'

'Director of community affairs,' the other replies. Then he turns to Carrie. 'She's not here. It's not business hours.'

'Well, I have his home number,' Carrie says, brandishing her cell phone like a weapon.

'I doubt he'd be pleased if I were to call her now and tell her how his hospital was treating someone trying to visit his critically wounded girlfriend.

You know that the director values compassion as much as efficiency, and this is not the way to treat a concerned loved one.'

'We're just doing our job, ma'am.

Following orders.'

25

'How about I save you two the trouble and take it from here. The patient's family is all assembled upstairs. They're waiting for these two to join them. Here, if you have any problems, you tell Mr. Caruthers to get in touch with me.' She reaches into her bag and pulls out a card and hands it over. One of the guards looks at it, hands it to the other, who stares at it and shrugs.

'Might as well save ourselves the paperwork,' he says. He lets go of Beth, whose body slumps like a scarecrow taken off his pole. 'Sorry, kid,' he says to Beth, brushing off his shoulders.

'I hope your girlfriend's okay,' the other mumbles. And then they disappear toward the Gallow of some vending machines.

I stared miserably at my plate, looking out at the Galleomy gray evening. I already missed my parents, Ana, and especially Naddalin. He was at that fun stage, wanting to try new things and constantly asking 'What's that?' and saying the most hilarious things. The day before I left, he informed me that he was 'nine-tenths thirsty' and I almost peed myself laughing. Homesick, I sighed and moved the mass of meatloaf around my plate.

'Don't worry, it doesn't rain every day.

Just every other day.'

I looked up. There was an impish kid who couldn't have been more than ten years old. He had a blond buzz cut and a constellation of freckles falling down his nose.

'I know,' I said. 'I'm from the Northwest, though it was sunny where I lived this morning. It's the meatloaf I'm worried about.'

He laughed. 'That doesn't get better. But the peanut-butter-and-jelly is always good,' he said, gesturing to a table where a half-dozen kids were fixing themselves sandwiches. 'Dick. Trombone. Ontario,' he said. This, I would learn, was a standard Naddalinlin greeting.

'Oh, hey. I'm Earn. French horn.

Oregon, I guess.'

Dick told me that he was thirteen, and this was his second summer here; almost everyone started when they were twelve, which is why they all knew one another. Of the fifty students, about half did jazz, the other half classical, so it was a small crew. There were only two other French horn players, one of them a tall lanky red-haired guy named Simon who Dick waved over.

'Will you be trying for the concerto competition?' Simon asked me as soon as Dick introduced me to Earn. French horn. Oregon.

Simon was Simon. French horn. Leicester, which turned out to be a city in England. It was quite the international group.

'I don't think so. I don't even know what that is,' I answered.

'Well, you know how we all perform in an orchestra for the final symphony?' Dick asked me.

I nodded my head, though really - I had only a vague idea. Dad had spent the spring reading out loud from the camp's literature, but the only thing I'd cared about was that I was going to camp with other classical musicians. I hadn't paid too much attention to the details.

'It's the summer's end symphony. People from all over come to it. It's quite a big deal. We, the youngster musicians, play as a sort of cute sideshow,' Simon explained. 'However, one musician from the camp is chosen to play with the professional orchestra and to perform a solo movement. I came close last year but it went to a flutist. This is my second-to-last chance before I graduate. It hasn't gone to strings in a while, and Tracy, the third of our little trio here, isn't trying out. She's more of a hobby player. Good but not terribly serious. I heard you were serious.' Was I? Not so serious that I hadn't been on the verge of quitting. 'How'd you hear that?' I asked.

'The teachers hear all the application reels and word gets around. Your audition tape was apparently quite good. It's unusual to admit someone in year two. So, I was hoping for some Ritalin good competition, to up my game, as it were.'

'Whoa, give the girl a chance,' Dick said. 'She's only just tasted the meatloaf.'

Simon shriveled his nose. 'Beg pardon.

But if you want to put heads together about audition choices, let's have a little chat about that,' he said and disappeared off in the direction of the sundae bar.

'Forgive Simon. We haven't had high-quality cellists for a couple of years, so he's excited about new Ritalin. In a purely aesthetic way. He's queer, though it may be hard to tell because he's English.'

'Oh. I see. But what did he say? I mean it sounds like he wants me to compete against him.'

'Of course- he does. That's fun.

That's why we're all at camp in the middle of a flipping rain forest,' he said, gesturing outside. 'That and the amazing cuisine.' Dick looked at me. 'Isn't that why you're here?'

I shrugged. 'I don't know. I haven't played with that many people, at least that many serious people.'

Dick scratched his ears. 'Really? You said you're from Oregon. Ever done anything with the Dauphin French horn Project?'

'The what?'

'Avant-garde French horn collective, eh. Very interesting work.'

'I don't live in Dauphin,' I mumbled, embarrassed that I'd never even heard of any French horn Project.

'Well then, who do you play with?'

'Other people. Middle School students mostly.'

'No orchestra? No chamber-music ensemble? String quartet?'

I shook my head, remembering a time when one of my student teachers invited me to play in a quartet. I'd turned her down because playing one-on-one with her was one thing; playing with complete strangers was another. I'd always believed that the French horn was a solitary instrument, but now I was starting to wonder if maybe I was the solitary one.

'Hmm. How are you any good?' Dick asked. 'I don't mean to sound like an a**hole, but isn't that how you get good? It's like tennis. If you play someone crappy, you end up missing shots or serving all sloppy, but if you play with an ace player, suddenly you're all at the net, lobbing good volleys.'

'I wouldn't know,' I told Dick, feeling like the most boring, sheltered person ever. 'I don't play tennis, either.'

The next few days went by in a blur. I had no idea why they put out the kayaks. There was no time for playing. Not that kind, anyway. The days were totally grueling. Up at six-thirty, breakfast by seven, private study time for three hours in the morning and in the afternoon, and orchestra rehearsal before dinner.

I'd never played with more than a handful of musicians before, so the first few days in the orchestra were chaotic. The camp's musical director, who was also the conductor, scrambled to get us situated and then it was everything he could do to get us playing the most basic of movements in any semblance of time. On the third day, he trotted out some Brahms lullabies. The first time we played, it was painful. The instruments didn't blend so much as collide, like rocks caught in a lawnmower. 'Terrible!' he screamed. 'How can any of you ever expect to play in a professional orchestra if you cannot keep time on a lullaby? Now again!'

After about a week, it started to gel and I got my first taste of being a cog in the machine. It made me hear the French horn in an entirely new way, how its low tones worked in concert with the viola's higher notes, how it provided a foundation for the woodwinds on the other side of the orchestra pit. And even though you might think that being part of a group would make you relax a little, not care so much how you sounded blended among everyone else, if anything, the opposite was true.

I sat behind a seventeen-year-old viola player named May-Elizabeth. She was one of the most accomplished musicians that have been accepted into the Royal Conservatory of Music in the NY- and she was also model-gorgeous: tall, regal, with skin the color of coffee, and cheekbones that could carve ice. I would've been tempted to hate her were it not for her playing. If you're not careful, the viola can make the most awful screech, even in the hands of practiced musicians. But with all the sound rang out clean and pure and light. Hearing her play, and watching how deeply she lost herself in the music, I wanted to play like that. Better even. It wasn't just that I wanted to beat her, but also that I felt like I owed it to her, to the group, to myself, to play at her level.

'That's sounding quite beautiful,' Simon said toward the end of camp as he listened to me practice a movement from Hayden's French horn Concerto no. 2, a piece that had given me no end of trouble when I'd first attempted it last spring. 'Are you using that for the concerto competition?'

I nodded. Then I couldn't help myself, I grinned. After dinner and before lights-out every night, Simon and I had been bringing our French horns outside to hold impromptu concerts in the long twilight. We took turns challenging each other to French horn duels, each trying to out-crazy-play the other. We were always competing, always trying to see who could play something better, faster, from memory. It had been so much fun and was probably one reason why I was feeling so good about the Hayden.

'Ah-h, someone's awfully confident.

Think you can beat me?' Simon asked.

'At soccer. Definitely,' I joked. Simon often told us that he was the black sheep in his family not because he was gay, or a musician, but because he was such a 'shity footballer.'

Simon pretended that I'd shot him in the heart. Then he laughed. 'Amazing things happen when you stop hiding behind that hulking beast,' he said, gesturing to my French horn. I nodded. Simon smiled at me. 'Well, don't go getting quite so cocky. You should hear my Mozart. It sounds like the Ritalin angels singing.'

Neither one of us won the solo spot that year.

-And-

Though it would take me four more years, eventually I'd nab the solo.

9:06 P.M.

'I've got exactly twenty minutes before our manager has a total shit fit.' Brooke Bogel's raspy voice booms in the hospital's now-quiet lobby. So, this is Beth's idea: Brooke Bogel, the indie-music goddess and lead singer of Bikini. In a trademark punky glam outfit-tonight it's a short bubble skirt, fishnets, high black leather boots, an artfully ripped-up Shooting Star T-shirt, topped off with a vintage fur shrug and a pair of black Jackie O glasses-she stands out in the hospital lobby like an ostrich in a chicken coop. She's surrounded by people: Maylie and Sarah; Dianna and Jodi, Shooting Star's rhythm guitarist and bass player, respectively, plus a handful of Dauphin hipsters who I vaguely recognize. With her magenta hair, she's like the sun, around which her admiring planets revolve. Beth is like a moon, standing off to the side, stroking his chin. Meanwhile, Ana looks shell-shocked, like a bunch of Martians just entered the building. Or maybe it's because Ana worships Brooke Bogel. In fact, so does Beth. Aside from me, this was one of the few things they had in common.

'I'll have you out of here in fifteen,' Beth promises, stepping into her galaxy.

She strides toward him. 'Beth, baby,' she croons. 'How are you holding up?' Brooke encircles him in a hug as if they are old friends, though I know that they only met for the first time today; just yesterday Beth was saying how nervous he was about it. But now she's here acting like his best friend. That's the power of the scene, I guess. As she embraces Beth, I see every guy and girl in that lobby watch hungrily, wishing, I imagine, that their own significant other was upstairs in the grave condition so that they might be the ones getting the consolatory cuddle from Brooke.

I can't help but wonder if I were here if I were watching this as regular old Earn, would I feel jealous, too? Then again, if I were regular old Earn, Brooke Bogel would not be in this hospital lobby as part of some great ruse to get Beth in to see me.

'Okay, kids. Time to rock-and-roll.

Beth, what's the plan?' Brooke asks.

'Why would a janitor be in the ICU?' Ana asks. She's a stickler for these kinds of details.

'Broken lightbulb. I don't know. It's all in how you pull it off.'

'I still don't understand why you don't just go to her family?' Asks Ana, pragmatic as ever. 'I'm sure her Gram's parents could explain, could get you in to see Earn.'

Beth shakes his head. 'You know, when the nurse threatened to call security, my first thought was 'I'll just call Earn's parents to fix this.' Beth stops, takes a few breaths. 'It just keeps walloping me over and over, and it's like it's the first time every time,' he says in a husky voice.

'I know,' Ana replies in a whisper.

'Anyhow,' Beth says, resuming his search for the light switch, 'I can't go to her Gram's parents. I can't add anything more to their burden. This is something I have to do for myself.'

I'm sure my Gram's parents would actually be happy to help Beth. They've met him a bunch of times, and they like him a lot. On Christmas, Gram's is always sure to make maple fudge for him because he once mentioned how much he liked it.

But I also know that sometimes Beth needs to do things in a dramatic way. He is fond of the Gram's Gesture. Like saving up two weeks of pizza-delivery tips to take me to Yo-Yo Ma instead of just asking me out on a regular date. Like decorating my windowsill with flowers every day for a week when I was contagious with the chickenpox.

Now I can see that Beth is concentrating on the new task at hand. I'm not sure what exactly he has in mind, but whatever the plan, I'm grateful for it, if only because it's pulled him out of his emotional stupor I saw in the hallway outside the ICU. I've seen him get like this before, when he's writing a new song or is trying to convince me to do something I won't want to do-like go camping with him-and nothing, not a meteorite crashing into the planet, not even a girlfriend in the ICU, can dissuade him.

Besides, it's the girlfriend in the ICU that's necessitating Beth's ruse, to begin with. And from what I can guess, it's the oldest hospital trick in the book, taken straight from that movie The Fugitive, which Mom and I recently watched on TNT. I have my doubts about it. So does Ana.

'Don't you think that nurse might recognize you?' Ana asks. 'You did yell at her.'

'She won't have to recognize me if she doesn't see me. Now I get why you and Earn are such peas in a pod. A pair of Cassandras.'

Beth has never met Mrs. Schein, so he doesn't get that implying that Ana is a worrywart who is fighting words. Ana scowls, but then I can see her give in. 'Maybe this retarded plan of yours would work better if we could actually see what we're doing.' She fumbles around in her bag and pulls out the cell phone her mother made her start carrying when she was ten-child LoJack, Ana called it and turned on the monitor. A square of light softens the darkness.

'Now, that's more like the brilliant girl Earn brags about,' Beth says. He turns on his own cell phone and now the room is illuminated by a dull Gallow.

Unfortunately, the Gallow shows that the tiny broom closet is full of brooms, a bucket, and a pair of mops, but is lacking any of the disguises that Beth was hoping for. If I could, I would inform them that the hospital has locker rooms, where the doctors and nurses can stow their street clothes and where they change into their scrubs or their lab coats. The only generic hospital garb sitting around are those embarrassing gowns that they put the patients in. Beth probably could throw on a gown and cruise the hallways in a wheelchair with no one the wiser, but such a getup would still not get him into the ICU.

'Shit,' Beth says.

'We can keep trying,' Ana says, suddenly the cheer-leader. 'There are like ten floors in this place. I'm sure there are other unlocked closets.'

Beth sinks to the floor. 'Nah. You're right. This is stupid. We need to come up with a better plan.'

'You could fake a drug overdose or something so you wind up in the ICU,' Ana says.

'This is Dauphin. You're lucky if a drug overdose gets you into the ER,' Beth replies. 'No, I was thinking more like a distraction. You know, like making the fire alarm go off so the nurses all come running out.'

'Do you really think sprinklers and panicked nurses are good for Earn?' Ana asks.

'Well, not that exactly, but something so that they all look away for half a second and I stealthily sneak in.'

'They'll find you out right away.

They'll throw you out on your backside.'

'I don't care,' Beth responds. 'I only need a second.'

'Why? I mean what can you do in a second?'

Beth pauses for a second. His eyes, which are normally a kind of mutt's mixture of gray and brown and green, have gone dark. 'So, I can show her that I'm here. That someone's still here.'

Ana doesn't ask any more questions after that. They sit there in silence, each lost in their own thoughts, and it reminds me of how Beth and I can be together but quiet and separate and I see that they're friends now, friends for real. No matter what happens, at least I have achieved that.

After about five minutes, Beth knocks on his forehead.

'Of course,' he says.

'What?'

'Time to activate the Bat-Signal.'

'Huh?'

'Come on. I'll show you.'

28

When I first started playing the French horn, Dad was still playing drums in his band, though that all started to taper off a couple of years later when Naddalin arrived. But right from the get-go, I could see that there was something different about playing my kind of music, something more than my parents' obvious bewilderment with my classical tastes. My music was solitary. I mean Dad might hammer on his drums for a few hours by himself or write songs alone at the kitchen table, plinking out the notes on his beat-up acoustic guitar, but he always said that songs really got written as you played them. That was what made it so interesting.

When I played, it was most often by myself, in my room. Even when I practiced with the rotating Middle School students, other than during lessons, I still usually played solo. And when I gave a concert or recital, it was alone, on a stage, my French horn, myself, and an audience. And unlike Dad's shows, where enthusiastic fans jumped the stage and then dive-bombed into the crowd, there was always a wall between the audience and me. After a while playing like this got lonely. It also got kind of boring.

So- in the spring of eighth grade I decided to quit. I planned to trail off quietly, by cutting back my obsessive practices, not giving recitals. I figured that if I laid off gradually, by the time I entered high school in the fall, I could start fresh, no longer be known as 'the cellist.' Maybe then I'd pick up a new instrument, guitar or bass, or even drums. Plus, with Mom too busy with Naddalin to notice the length of my French horn practice, and Dad swamped with lesson plans and grading papers at his new teaching job, I figured nobody would even really- um- a that I'd stopped playing until it was already a done deal. At least that's what I told myself. The truth was, I could no sooner quit French horn cold turkey than I could stop breathing.

I might have quit for real, were it not for Ana. One afternoon, I invited her to go downtown with me after school.

'It's a weekday. Don't you have practice?' she asked as she twisted the combination on her locker.

'I can skip it today,' I said, pretending to search for my earth-science book.

'Have the pod people stolen Earn? First no recitals. And now you're skipping out on practice. What's going on?'

'I don't know,' I said, tapping my fingers against the locker. 'I'm thinking of trying a new instrument. Like drums. Dad's kit is down in the basement gathering dust.'

'Yeah, right. You on drums. That's rich,' Ana said with a chuckle.

'I'm serious.'

Ana had looked at me, her mouth agape, like I'd just told her I planned on sautéing up a platter of slugs for dinner. 'You can't quit French horn,' she said after a moment of stunned silence.

'Why not?'

She looked pained as they tried to explain. 'I don't know but it just seems like your French horn is part of who you are. I can't imagine you without that thing between your legs.'

'It's stupid. I can't even play in the school marching band. I mean, who plays the French horn anyhow? A bunch of old people. It's a dumb instrument for a girl to play. It's so dorky. And I want to have more free time, to do fun stuff.'

'What kind of 'fun stuff'? 'Ana challenged.

'Um, you know? Shopping. Hanging out with you...'

'Please,' Ana said. 'You hate to shop. And you hang out with me plenty. But fine, skip practice today. I want to show you something.' She took me home with her and dragged out a CD of Nirvana MTV Unplugged and played me 'Something in the Way.'

'Listen to that,' she said. 'Two guitar players, a drummer, and a French horn player. Her name is Lori Goldston and I bet when she was younger, she practiced two hours a day like some other girl I know because if you want to play with the Philharmonic, or with Nirvana, that's what you have to do. And I don't think anyone would dare call her a dork.'

I took the CD home and listened to it over and over for the next week, pondering what Ana said. I pulled my French horn out a few times, played along. It was a different kind of music than I'd played before, challenging, and strangely invigorating. I planned to play 'Something in the Way' for Ana the following week when she came over for dinner.

But before I had a chance, at the dinner table Ana casually announced to my parents that she thought I ought to go to summer camp.

'What, you trying to convert me so I'll go to your Torah camp?' I asked.

'Nope. It's a music camp.' She pulled out a Gallery brochure for the Valley Conservatory, a summer program in British Columbia. 'It's for serious musicians,' Ana said. 'You have to send a recording of your playing to get in. I called. The deadline for applications is May first, so there's still time.' She turned to face me head-on as if she were daring me to get mad at her for interfering.

I wasn't mad. My heart was pounding as if Ana had announced that my family won a lottery and she was about to reveal how much. I looked at her, the nervous look in her eyes betraying the 'you want to piece of me?' smirk on her face, and I was overwhelmed with gratitude to be friends with someone who often seemed to understand me better than I understood myself. Dad asked me if I wanted to go, and when I protested about the money, he said never to mind about that. Did I want to go? And I did. More than anything.

Three months later, when Dad dropped me off in a lonely corner of Vancouver Island, I wasn't so sure. The place looked like a typical summer camp, log cabins in the woods, kayaks strewn on the beach.

There were about fifty kids who, judging by the way they were hugging and squealing, had all known one another for years. Meanwhile, I didn't know anybody. For the first six hours, no one talked to me except for the camp's assistant director, who assigned me to a cabin, showed me my bunk bed, and pointed the way to the cafeteria, where that night, I was given a plate of something that appeared to be meatloaf.

'It's not like that,' I said, though of course, it was totally like that.

29

'I just don't see why you couldn't tell me sooner,' she said in a quiet voice.

I was about to give her my whole one kiss-not-equaling-a-relationship spiel and to explain that I didn't want to blow it out of proportion, but I stopped myself. 'I was afraid you'd be mad at me,' I admitted.

'I'm not,' Ana said. 'But I will be if you ever lie to me again.'

'Okay,' I said.

'Or if you turn into one of those girlfriends, always ponying around after her boyfriend, and speaking in the first-person plural. 'We love winter. We think the Velvet Underground is seminal.'

'You know I wouldn't rock-talk to you. First-person singular or plural. I promise.'

'Good,' Ana replied. 'Because if you turn into one of those girls, I'll shoot you.'

'If I turn into one of those girls, I'll hand you the gun.'

Ana laughed for real at that, and the tension was broken. She popped a hunk of pie into her mouth. 'How did your parents take it?'

'Dad went through the five phases of grieving-denial, anger, acceptance, whatever-in like one day. I think he's more freaked out that he is old enough to have a daughter who has a boyfriend.' I paused, took a sip of my coffee, letting the word boyfriend rest out in the air. 'And he claims he can't believe that

I'm dating a musician.'

'You're a musician,' Ana reminded me.

'You know, a punk, pop musician.'

'Shooting Star is emo-core,' Ana corrected. Unlike me, she cared about the myriad pop musical distinctions: punk, indie, alternative, hard-core, emo-core.

'It's mostly hot air, you know, part of his whole bow-tie-Dad thing. I think Dad likes Beth. He met him when he picked me up for the concert. Now he wants me to bring him over for dinner, but it's only been a week. I'm not quite ready for a meet-the-folks moment yet.'

'I don't think I'll ever be ready for that.' Ana shuddered at the thought of it.

'What about your mom?'

'She offered to take me to Planned Parenthood to get the Pill and told me to make Beth get tested for various diseases. In the meantime, she ordered me to buy condoms now. She even gave me ten bucks to start my supply.'

'Have you?' Ana gasped.

'No, it's only been a week,' I said.

'We're still in the same group on that one.'

'For now,' Ana said.

One other category that Ana and I devised was people who tried to be cool and people who did not. On this one, I thought that Beth, Ana, and I were in the same column because even though Beth was cool, he didn't try. It was effortless for him. So, I expected the three of us to become the best of friends. I expected Beth to love everyone I loved as much as I did.

And it did work out like that with my family. He practically became the third kid. But it never clicked with Ana. Beth treated her the way that I'd always imagined he would treat a girl like me. He was nice enough-polite, friendly, but distant. He didn't attempt to enter her world or gain her confidence. I suspected he thought she wasn't cool enough and it made me mad. After we'd been together for about three months, we had a huge fight about it.

'I'm not dating Ana. I'm dating you,' he said after I accused him of not being nice enough to her.

'So what? You have lots of female friends. Why not add her to the stable?'

Beth shrugged. 'I don't know. It's just not there.'

'You're such a snob!' I said, suddenly furious.

Beth eyed me with furrowed brows like I was a math problem on the blackboard that he was trying to figure out. 'How does that make me a snob? You can't force a friendship. We just don't have a lot in common.'

'That's what makes you a snob! You only like people like you,' I cried. I stormed out, expecting him to follow after me, begging forgiveness, and when he didn't, my fury doubled. I rode my bike over to Ana's house to vent. She listened to my diatribe; her expression purposefully blasé.

'That's just ridiculous that he only likes people like him,' she scolded when I'd finished spewing. 'He likes you, and you're not like him.'

'That's the problem,' I mumbled.

30

'Well, then deal with that. Don't drag me into your drama,' she said. 'Besides, I don't really click with him, either.'

'You don't?'

'No, Earn. Not everyone swoons for Beth.'

'I didn't mean it like that. It's just that I want you guys to be friends.'

'Yeah, well, I want to live in New York

City and have normal parents. As the man said, 'You can't always get what you want.'

'But you're two of the most important people in my life.'

Ana looked at my red and teary face and her expression softened into a gentle smile. 'We know that, Earn. But we're from different parts of your life, just like music and I am from different parts of your life. And that's fine. You don't have to choose one or the other, at least not as far as I'm concerned.'

'But I want those parts of my life to come together.'

Ana shook her head. 'It doesn't work that way. Look, I accept Beth because you love him. And I assume he accepts me because you love me. If it makes you feel any better, your love binds us. And that's enough. I and he don't have to love each other.'

'But I want you to,' I wailed.

'Earn,' Ana said, an edge of warning in her voice signaling the end of her patience.

'You're starting to act like one of those girls.'

'Do you need to get me a gun?'

Later that night, I stopped by Beth's house to say I was sorry. He accepted my apology with a bemused kiss on the nose. And then nothing changed. He and Ana remained cordial but distant, no matter how much I tried to sell them on each other. The funny thing was, I never really bought into Ana's notion that they were somehow bound together through me - until just now when I saw her half carrying him down the hospital corridor.

I watch Ana and Beth disappear down the hall. I mean to follow them but I'm glued to the linoleum, unable to move my phantom legs. It's only after they disappear around a corner that I rouse myself and trail after them, but they've already gone inside the elevator.

By now I've figured out that I don't have any supernatural abilities. I can't float through walls or dive down stairwells. I can only do the things I'd be able to do in real life, except that apparently what I do in my world is invisible to everyone else. At least that seems to be the case because no one looks twice when I open doors or hit the elevator button. I can touch things, even manipulate door handles and the like, but I can't really feel anything or anybody. It's like I'm experiencing everything through a fish-bowl. It doesn't really make sense to me, but then again, nothing that's happening today makes much sense.

I assume that Ana and Beth are headed to the waiting room to join the vigil, but when I get there, my family is not there. There's a stack of coats and sweaters on the chairs and I recognize my cousin Heather's bright orange down jacket. She lives in the country and likes to hike in the woods, so she says that the neon colors are necessary to keep drunk hunters from mistaking her for a bear.

I look at the clock on the wall. It could be dinnertime. I wander back down the halls to the cafeteria, which has the same fried-food, boiled-vegetable stench as cafeterias everywhere. Unappetizing smell aside, it's full of people. The tables are crammed with doctors and nurses and nervous-looking medical students in short white jackets and stethoscopes so shiny that they look like toys. They are all chowing down on cardboard pizza and freeze-dried mashed potatoes. It takes me a while to locate my family, huddled around a table. Gram's is chatting to Heather. Gramps is paying careful attention to his turkey sandwich.

Aunt Kate and Aunt Diane are in the corner, whispering about something. 'Some cuts and bruises. He was already released from the hospital,' Aunt Kate is saying, and for a second I think she's talking about Naddalin and I am so excited I could cry. But then I hear her say something about there being no alcohol in his system, how our car just swerved into his lane and some guy named Mr. Dunlap says he didn't have time to stop, and then I really- it's not Naddalin they're talking about; it's the other driver.

'The police said it was probably the snow or a deer that caused them to swerve,' Aunt Kate continues. 'And apparently, this lopsided outcome is fairly common. One party is just fine and the other suffers catastrophic injuries...' She trails off.

I don't know that I'd call Mr. Dunlap 'just fine,' no matter how superficial his injuries. I think about what it must be like to be him, to wake up on Tuesday morning and get into your truck to head off to work at the mill or maybe to the feed-supply store or maybe to Loretta's Diner to have eggs over easy. Mr.

Dunlap, who was maybe perfectly happy or perfectly miserable, married with kids or a bachelor. But whatever and whoever he was early this morning, he isn't that person any longer. His life has changed irrevocably, too. If what my aunt says is true, and the crash wasn't his fault, then he was what Ana would call 'a poor schmuck,' in the wrong place at the wrong time. And because of his bad luck and because he was in his truck, driving eastbound on Route 27 this morning, two kids are now parentless and at least one of them is in grave condition.

How do you live with that? For a second, I have a fantasy of getting better and getting out of here and going to Mr. Dunlap's house, to relieve him of his burden, to reassure him that it's not his fault. Maybe we'd become friends.

Of course, it probably wouldn't work like that. It would be awkward and sad. Besides, I still have no idea what I will decide, still have no clue how I would determine to stay or not stay in the first place. Until I figure that out, I have to leave things up to the fates, or to the doctors, or whoever decides these matters when the decider is too confused to choose between the elevator and the stairs.

I need Beth. I take a final look at him and Ana but they're not here, so I head back upstairs to the ICU.

I find them hiding out on the trauma floor, several halls away from the ICU. They're trying to look casual as they test out the doors to various supply closets. When they finally find an unlocked one, they sneak inside. They fumble around in the dark for a light switch. I hate to break it to them, but it's actually backing out in the hall.

'I'm not sure this kind of thing works outside of the movies,' Ana tells Beth as she feels along the wall.

'Every faction has its base in fact,' he tells her.

'You don't really look like the doctor type,' she says.

'I was hoping for orderly. Or maybe a janitor.'

But it's quiet in this room now. So, I'm sitting on the windowsill, staring out at the night. A car screeches into the parking garage, shaking me out of my reverie. I peer down in time to catch a glimpse of the taillights of a pink car disappear into the darkness. Sarah, who is the girlfriend of Maylie, Shooting Star's drummer, has a pink Dodge Dart. I hold my breath, waiting for Beth to appear out of the tunnel. And then he's here, walking up the ramp, hugging his leather jacket against the winter night. I can see the chain of his wallet glinting in the floodlights. He stops, turns around to talk to someone behind him. I see the soft figure of a woman emerge from the shadows. At first, I think it must be Maylie.

But then I see the braid.

I wish I could hug her. To thank her for always being one step ahead of what I need.

Of course, Ana would go to Beth, to tell him in person as opposed to breaking the news over the phone, and then to bring him here, to me. It was Ana who knew that Beth was playing a show in Dauphin. Ana who must have somehow managed to cajole her mother into driving downtown. Ana who, judging by Mrs. Schein's absence, must have convinced her mother to go home, to let her stay with Beth and me. I remember how it took Ana two months to get permission to take that helicopter flight with her uncle, so I'm impressed that she managed this amount of emancipation within the space of a few hours. It was Ana who must have braved any number of intimidating bouncers and hipsters to find Beth. And Ana who must have braved telling Beth.

I know this sounds ridiculous, but I'm glad it wasn't me. I don't think I could have borne it. Ana had to bear it.

And now, because of her, he is finally here.

All-day long, I've been imagining Beth's arrival, and in my fantasy, I rush to greet him, even though he can't see me and even though, from what I can tell so far, it's nothing like that movie Ghost, where you can walk through your loved ones so that they feel your presence.

But now that Beth is here, I'm paralyzed. I'm scared to see him. To see his face. I've seen Beth cry twice. Once when we watched It's a Wonderful Life. And another time when we were at the train station in Seattle and we saw a mother yelling and swatting her son who had Down syndrome. He just got quiet and it was only when we were walking away from what I saw the tears rolling down his cheeks. And it damn near tore my heart out. If he is crying, it will kill me. Forget this my choice business. That alone will do me in.

I'm such a chicken-shit.

I look at the clock on the wall. It's past seven now. Shooting Star will not be opening for Bikini after all. Which is a shame? It was a huge break for them. For a second, I wonder if the rest of the band will go on without Beth. I highly doubt it, though. It's not just that he is the lead singer and the lead guitar player. The band has this kind of code. Loyalty to feel is important. Last summer, when Maylie and Sarah broke up (for what turned out to be all of a month) and Maylie was too distraught to play, they canceled their five-night tour, even though this guy Gordon who plays drums in another band offered to sub for her.

I watch Beth make his way to the hospital's main entrance, Ana trailing behind him. Just before he comes to the covered awning and the automatic doors, he looks up into the sky. He is waiting for Ana but I also like to think he's looking for me. His face, illuminated by the lights, is blank, like someone vacuumed away all his personality, leaving only a mask. He doesn't look like him. But at least he's not crying.

33

That gives me the guts to go to him now. Or rather to me, to the ICU, which is where I know he will want to go. Beth knows Gram's and Gramps and the cousins, and I imagine he'll join the waiting-room vigil later.

But right now, he's here for me.

Back in the ICU time stands still as always. One of the surgeons who worked on me earlier - the one who sweated a lot and, when it was his turn to pick the music, blasted Weezer - is checking in on me.

The light is dim and artificial and kept to the same level all the time, but even so, the circadian rhythms win out and a nighttime hush has fallen over the place. It is less frenetic than it was during the day like the nurses and machines are all a little tired and have reverted to power-save mode.

So, when Beth's voice reverberates from the hallway outside the ICU, it really wakes everyone up.

'What do you mean I can't go in?' he booms.

I make my way across the ICU, standing just on the other side of the automatic doors. I hear the orderly outside explain to Beth that he is not allowed in this part of the hospital.

'This is bullshit!' Beth yells.

Inside the ward, all the nurses look toward the door, their heavy eyes wary. I am pretty sure they're thinking: Don't we have enough to deal with inside without having to calm down crazy people outside? I won't explain to them that Beth isn't crazy. That he never yells, except for very special occasions.

The graying middle-aged nurse who doesn't attend to the patients but sits by and monitors the computers and phones gives a little nod and stands up as if accepting a nomination. She straightens her creased white pants and makes her way toward the door. She's really not the best one to talk to him. I wish I could warn them that they ought to send Nurse Ramirez, the one who reassured my Gram's parents (and freaked me out). She'd be able to calm him down. But this one is only going to make it worse. I follow her through the double doors where Beth and Ana are arguing with an orderly. The orderly looks at the nurse. 'I told them they're not authorized to be up here,' he explains. The nurse dismisses him with the wave of a hand.

'Can I help you, young man?' She asks Beth. Her voice sounds irritated and impatient, like some of Dad's tenured colleagues at school who Dad says are just counting the days until retirement.

Beth clears his throat, attempting to pull himself together. 'I'd like to visit a patient,' he says, gesturing toward the doors blocking him from the ICU.

'I'm afraid that's not possible,' she replies.

'But my girlfriend, Earn, she's-'

'She's being well cared for,' the nurse interrupts. She sounds tired, too tired for sympathy, too tired to be moved by young love.

'I understand that. And I'm grateful for it,' Beth says. He's trying his best to play by her rules, to sound mature, but I hear the catch in his voice when he says: 'I really need to see her.'

'I'm sorry, young man, but visitations are restricted to immediate family.'

I hear Beth gasp. Immediate family. The nurse doesn't mean to be cruel. She's just clueless, but Beth won't know that. I feel the need to protect him and to protect the nurse from what he might do to her. I reach for him, on instinct, even though I cannot really touch him. But his back is to me now. His shoulders are hunched over, his legs starting to buckle.

Ana, who was hovering near the wall, is suddenly at his side, her arms encircling his falling form. With both arms locked around his waist, she turns to the nurse, her eyes blazing with fury. 'You don't understand!' she cries. 'Do I need to call security?' the nurse asks.

Beth waves his hand, surrendering to the nurse, to Ana. 'Don't,' he whispers to Ana.

So, Ana doesn't. Without saying another word, she hoists his arm around her shoulder and shifts his weight onto her. Beth has about a foot and fifty pounds on Ana, but after stumbling for a second, she adjusts to the added burden. She bears it.

Ana and I have this theory that almost everything in the world can be divided into two groups.

There are people who like classical music. People who like pop. There are city people. And country people. Coke drinkers. Pepsi drinkers. There are conformists and free-thinkers. Virgins and nonvirgins. And there is the kind of girls who have boyfriends in high school and the kind of girls who don't.

Ana and I had always assumed that we both belonged to the latter category. 'Not that we'll be forty-year-old virgins or anything,' she reassured. 'We'll just be the kinds of girls who have boyfriends in Middle School.'

That always made sense to me seemed preferable even. Mom was the sort of girl who had had boyfriends in high school and often remarked that she wished she hadn't wasted her time. 'There's only so many times a girl wants to get drunk on Mickey's Big Mouth, go cow-tipping, and make out in the back of a pickup truck. As far as the boys I dated were concerned, that amounted to a romantic evening.'

Dad, on the other hand, didn't really date till Middle School. He was shy in high school, but then he started playing drums and freshman year of Middle School joined a punk band, and boom, girlfriends. Or at least a few of them until he met Mom, and boom, a wife. I kind of figured it would go that way for me.

So, it was a surprise to both Ana and me when I wound up in Group A, with the boyfriend girls. At first, I tried to hide it. After I came home from the Yo-Yo Ma concert, I told Ana the vaguest of details. I didn't mention the kissing. I am a rational the omission: There was no point getting all worked up for a kiss. One kiss does not a relationship make. I'd kissed boys before, and usually by the next day the kiss had evaporated like a dewdrop in the sun.

Except I knew that with Beth it was a big deal. I knew from the way the warmth flooded my whole body that night after he dropped me off at home, kissing me once more at my doorstep. By the way, I stayed up until dawn hugging my pillow. By the way that I could not eat the next day, I could not wipe the smile off my face. I recognized that the kiss was a door I had walked through. And I knew that I'd left Ana on the other side.

After a week and a few more stolen kisses, I knew I had to tell Ana. We went for coffee after school. It was May but it was pouring rain as though it were November. I felt slightly suffocated by what I had to do.

'I'll buy. You want one of your froufrou drinks?' I asked. That was another one of the categories we'd determined: people who drank plain coffee and people who drank gussied-up caffeine drinks like the mint-chip lattes Ana was so fond of.

'I think I'll try the cinnamon-spice chai latte,' she said, giving me a stern look that said, I will not be ashamed of my beverage selection.

34

I bought us our drinks and a piece of marionberry pie with two forks. I sat down across from Ana, running the fork along the scalloped edge of the flaky crust.

'I have something to tell you,' I said.

'Something about having a boyfriend?' Ana's voice was amused, but even though I was looking down, I could tell that she'd rolled her eyes.

'How'd you know?' I asked, meeting her gaze.

She rolled her eyes again. 'Please. Everyone knows. It's the hottest gossip this side of Melanie Farrow dropping out to have a baby. It's like a Democratic presidential candidate marrying a Republican presidential candidate.'

'Who said anything about marrying?'

'I'm just being metaphoric,' Ana said. 'Anyhow, I know. I knew even before you knew.'

'Bullshit.'

'Come on. A guy like Beth going to a Yo-Yo Ma concert? He was buttering you up.'

But I still hated the shows and hated myself for hating them. The clubs were smoky, which hurt my eyes and made my clothes stink. The speakers were always turned up so high that the music blared, causing my ears to ring so loudly afterward that the high-pitched drone would actually keep me up. I'd lie in bed, replaying the awkward night and feeling shittier about it with each playback.

'Don't tell me you're going to back out,' Beth said, looking equal parts hurt and irritated.

'What about Naddalin? We promised we'd take him trick-or-treating-'

'Yeah, at five o'clock. We don't have to be at the show until then. I doubt even Master Ted could trick-or-treat for five solid hours. So, you have no excuse. And you'd better get a good outfit together because I'm going to look hot, in an eighteenth-century kind of way.'

After Beth left to go to work delivering pizzas, I had a pit in my stomach. I went upstairs to practice the Do- Ok-á piece Professor Kristiee had assigned me, and to work out what was bothering me. Why didn't I like his shows? Was it because Shooting Star was getting popular and I was jealous? Did the ever-growing masses of girl groupies put me off? This seemed like a logical enough explanation, but it wasn't it.

After I'd played for about ten minutes, it came to me: My aversion to Beth's shows had nothing to do with music or groupies or envy. It had to do with the doubts. The same niggling doubts I always had about not belonging. I didn't feel like I belonged with my family, and now I didn't feel like I belonged with Beth, except unlike my family, who was stuck with me, Beth had chosen me, and this I didn't understand. Why had he fallen for me? It didn't make sense. I knew it was music that brought us together in the first place, put us in the same space so we could even get to know each other. And I knew that Beth liked how into music I was. And that he dug my sense of humor, 'so dark you almost miss it,' he said. And, speaking of dark, I knew he had a thing for dark-haired girls because all of his girlfriends had been brunettes. And I knew that when it was the two of us alone together, we could talk for hours, or sit reading side by side for hours, each one plugged into our own iPod, and still feel completely together. I understood all that in my head, but I still didn't believe it in my heart. When I was with Beth, I felt picked, chosen, special, and that just made me wonder why me? even more.

And maybe this was why even though Beth willingly submitted to Schubert symphonies and attended any recital I gave, bringing me stargazer lilies, my favorite flower, I'd still rather have gone to the dentist than to one of his shows. Which was so churlish of me? I thought of what Mom sometimes said to me when I was feeling insecure: 'Fake it till you make it.' By the time I finished playing the piece three times over, I decided that not only would I go to his show, but for once I'd make as much of an effort to understand his world as he did mine.

'I need your help,' I told Mom that night after dinner as we stood side by side doing dishes.

'I think we've established that I'm not very good at trigonometry. Maybe you can try the online-tutor thing,' Mom said.

'Not math help. Something else.'

'I'll do my best. What do you need?'

'Advice. Who's the coolest, toughest, hottest rocker girl you can think of?'

'Debbie Harry,' Mom said.

'That's'

'Not finished,' Mom interrupted.

'You can't ask me to pick only one. That's so

Sophie's Choice. Kathleen Hannah. Patti Smith. Joan Jett. Courtney Love, in her demented destructionist way. Lucinda Williams, even though she's country she's tough as nails. Ana Gordon from Sonic Youth, pushing fifty and still at it. That Cat Power woman. Joan Armatrading. Why, is this some kind of social-studies project?'

'Kind of,' I answered, toweling off a chipped plate. 'It's for Halloween.'

Mom clapped her soapy hands together in delight. 'You planning on impersonating one of us?'

'Yeah,' I replied. 'Can you help me?'

Mom took off work early so we could trawl through vintage-clothing stores. She decided we should go for a pastiche of rocker looks, rather than trying to copy anyone artist. We bought a pair of tight, jeans pants. A blond bobbed wig with severe bangs, à la early-eighties Debbie Harry, which Mom streaked with purple Manic Panic. For accessories, we got a black leather band for one wrist and about two dozen silver bangles for the other. Mom fished out her own vintage Sonic Youth T-shirt-warning me not to take it off lest someone grab it and sell it on eBay for a couple hundred bucks-and the pair of black, pointy-toed leather spiked boots that she'd worn to her wedding.

On Halloween, she did my makeup, thick streaks of black liquid eyeliner that made my eyes look dangerous. The white powder that made my skin pale. Redlined gashes on my lips. A stick-on nose rings. When I looked in the mirror, I saw Mom's face peering back at me. Maybe it was the blond wig, but this was the first time I ever thought I actually looked like any of my immediate family.

My parents and Naddalin waited downstairs for Beth while I stayed in my room. It felt like this was prom or something. Dad held the camera. Mom was practically dancing with excitement. When Beth came through the door, showering Naddalin with Skittles, Mom and Dad called me down.

I did a slinky walk as best as I could in the heels. I'd expected Beth to go crazy when he saw me, his jeans-and-sweaters girlfriend all glammed out. But he smiled his usual greeting, chuckling a bit. 'Nice costume,' was all he said.

'Quid pro quo. Only fair,' I said, pointing to his Mozart ensemble.

'I think you look scary but pretty,' Naddalin said. 'I'd say sexy, too, but I'm your brother, so that's gross.'

'How do you even know what sexy means?' I asked. 'You're six.'

'Everyone knows what sexy means,' he said.

Everyone but me, I guess. But that night, I kind of learned. When we trick-or-treated with Naddalin, my own neighbors who'd known me for years didn't recognize me. Guys who'd never given me a second glance did a double-take. And every time that happened, I felt a little bit more like the risky sexy chick I was pretending to be. Fake it till you make it actually worked.

The club where Shooting Star was playing was packed. Everyone was in costume, most of the girls in the kinds of racy get-ups French maids, whip-wielding dominatrixes, slutty Wizard of Oz Dorothys with skirts hiked up to show their ruby garters-that normally made me feel like a big oaf. I didn't feel oafish at all that night, even if nobody seemed to recognize that I was wearing a costume.

'You were supposed to dress up,' a skeleton guy chastised me before offering me a beer.

'I freaking LOVE those pants,' a flapper girl screamed into my ear. 'Did you get them in Seattle?'

'Aren't you in the Crack House

Quartet?' a guy in a Hillary Clinton mask asked me, referring to some hard-core band that Beth loved and I hated.

When Shooting Star went on, I didn't stay backstage, which is what I normally did. Backstage I could sit on a chair and have an uninterrupted view and not have to talk to anybody. This time, I lingered out by the bar, and then, when the flapper girl grabbed me, I joined her dancing in the mosh pit.

I'd never gone into the mosh pit before. I had little interest in running around in circles while drunk, brawny boys in leather trod on my toes. But tonight, I totally got into it. I understood what it was like to merge your energy with the mobs and to absorb theirs as well. How in the pit, when things got going, you weren't so much walking or dancing as being sucked into a whirlpool?

35

When Beth finished his set, I was as panting and sweaty as he was. I didn't go backstage to greet him before everyone else got to him. I waited for him to go to the floor of the club, to meet his public like he did at the end of every show. And when he came out, a towel around his neck, sucking on a bottle of water, I flung myself into his arms and kissed him openmouthed and sloppy in front of everyone. I could feel him smiling as he kissed me back.

'Well, well, looks like someone has been infused with the spirit of Debbie Harry,' he said, wiping some of the lipstick off his chin.

'I guess so. What about you? Are you feeling very Mozart?'

'All I know about him is from what I saw in that movie. But I remember he was kind of a horndog, so after that kiss, I guess I am. Are you ready to go? I can load up and we can get out of here.'

'No, let's stay for the last set.'

'Really?' Beth asked, his eyebrows rising in surprise.

'Yeah. I might even go into the pit with you.'

'Have you been drinking?' he teased. 'Just the Kool-Aid,' I replied.

We danced, stopping every now and again to make out until the club closed.

On the way home, Beth held my hand while he drove. Every so often he'd turn to look at me and smile while shaking his head.

'So, you like me like this?' I asked.

'Hmm,' he responded.

'Is that a yes or a no?'

'Of course, I like you.'

'No, like this. Did you like me tonight?'

36

Beth straightened up. 'I liked that you got into the show and weren't chomping to leave ASAP. And I loved dancing with you. And I loved how comfortable you seemed to be with all us riffraff.'

'But did you like me like this? Like me better?'

'Then what?' he asked. He looked genuinely perplexed.

'Then normal.' I was getting irritated now. I'd felt so brazen tonight, like the Halloween costume had imbued me with a new personality, one more worthy of Beth, of my family. I tried to explain that to him, and to my dismay, found myself near tears.

Beth seemed to sense that I was upset. He pulled the car off onto a logging road and turned to me. 'Earn, Earn, Earn,' he said, stroking the tendrils of my hair that had escaped from the wig. 'This is you I like. You definitely dressed sexier and are, you know, blond, and that's different. But the you who you are tonight is the same you, I was in love with yesterday, the same you, I'll be in love with tomorrow. I love that you're fragile and tough, quiet and kick-ass. Hell, you're one of the most punk girls I know, no matter who you listen to or what you wear.'

After that, whenever I started to doubt Beth's feelings, I'd think about my wig, gathering dust in my closet, and it would bring back the memory of that night. And then I wouldn't feel insecure. I'd just feel lucky.

7:13 P.M.

He's here.

I have been hanging out in an empty hospital room in the maternity ward, wanting to be far away from my relatives and even farther away from the ICU and that nurse, or more specifically what that nurse said and what I now understand. I needed to be somewhere where people wouldn't be sad, where the thoughts concerned life, not death.

So, I came here, the land of screaming babies. Actually, the wail of the newborns is comforting. They have so much fight in them already.

Another nurse comes by. She has dark hair and dark eyes brightened with lots of shimmery eye makeup. Her nails are acrylic and have heart decals on them. She must have to work hard to keep her nails so pretty. I admire that.

She's not my nurse but she comes up to Gram's and Gramps just the same. 'Don't you doubt for a second that she can hear you,' she tells them. 'She's aware of everything that's going on.' She stands there with her hands on her hips. I can almost picture her snapping gum. Gram's and Gramps stare at her, lapping up what she's telling them. 'You might think that the doctors or nurses or all this is running the show,' she says, gesturing to the wall of medical equipment. 'Nuh-uh. She's running the show. Maybe she's just biding her time. So, you talk to her. You tell her to take all the time she needs, but to come on back.

You're waiting for her.'

Mom and Dad would never call Naddalin or my mistakes. Or accidents. Or surprises. Or any of those other stupid euphemisms. But neither one of us was planned, and they never tried to hide that.

Mom got pregnant with me when she was young. Not teenager-young, but young for their set of friends. She was twenty-three and she and Dad had already been married for a year.

In a funny way, Dad was always a bowtie wearer, always a little more traditional than you might imagine. Because even though he had blue hair and tattoos and wore leather jackets and worked in a record store, he wanted to marry Mom back at a time when the rest of their friends were still having drunken one-night stands. 'Girlfriend is such a stupid word,' he said. 'I couldn't stand calling her that. So, we had to get married, so I could call her 'wife.'

Mom, for her part, had a messed-up family. She didn't go into the gory details with me, but I knew her father was long gone and for a while, she had been out of touch with her mother, though now we saw Gram's and Papa Richard, which is what we called Mom's stepfather, a couple of times a year.

So, Mom was taken not just with Dad but with the big, mostly intact, relatively normal family he belonged to. She agreed to marry Dad even though they'd been together just a year. Of course, they still did it their way. They were married by a lesbian justice of the peace while their friends played a guitar feedback-heavy version of the 'Wedding March.' The bride wore a white-fringed flapper dress and black spiked boots. The groom wore leather.

37

They got pregnant with me because of someone else's wedding. One of Dad's music buddies who'd moved to Seattle had gotten his girlfriend pregnant, so they were doing the shotgun thing. Mom and Dad went to the wedding, and at the reception, they got a little drunk and back at the hotel weren't as careful as usual. Three months later there was a thin blue line on the pregnancy test.

The way they tell it, neither felt particularly ready to be parents. Neither one felt like an adult yet. But there was no question that they would have me. Mom was Bethantly pro-choice. She had a bumper sticker on the car that read If you can't trust me with a choice, how can you trust me with a child? But in her case, the choice was to keep me.

Dad was more hesitant. More freaked out. Until the minute the doctor pulled me out and then he started to cry.

'That's poppycock,' he would say when Mom recounted the story. 'I did no such thing.'

'You didn't cry then?' Mom asked in sarcastic amusement.

'I tore. I did not cry.' Then Dad winked at me and pantomimed weeping like a baby.

Because I was the only kid in Mom and Dad's group of friends, I was a novelty. I was raised by the music community, with dozens of aunties and uncles who took me in as their own little foundling, even after I started showing a strange preference for classical music. I didn't want a real family, either. Gram's and Gramps lived nearby, and they were happy to take me for weekends so Mom and Dad could act wild and stay out all night for one of Dad's shows.

Around the time I was four, I think my parents really loved that they were actually doing it-raising a kid-even though they didn't have a ton of money or 'real' jobs. We had a nice house with cheap rent. I had clothes (even if they were hand-me-downs from my cousins) and I was growing up happy and healthy. 'You were like an experiment,' Dad said. 'Surprisingly successful. We thought it must be a fluke. We needed another kid as a kind of control group.'

They tried for four years. Mom got pregnant twice and had two miscarriages. They were sad about it, but they didn't have the money to do all the fertility stuff that people do. By the time I was nine, they'd decided that maybe it was for the best. I was becoming independent. They stopped trying.

As if to convince themselves how great it was not to be tied down by a baby, Mom and Dad bought us tickets to go visit New York for a week. It was supposed to be a musical pilgrimage. We would go to CBGB's and Carnegie Hall. But when to her surprise, Mom discovered she was pregnant, and then to her greater surprise, stayed pregnant past the first trimester, we had to cancel the trip. She was tired and sick to her stomach and so grumpy Dad joked that she'd probably scare the New Yorkers. Besides, babies were expensive and we needed to save.

I didn't mind. I was excited about a baby. And I knew that Carnegie Hall wasn't going anywhere. I'd get there someday.

5:41 P.M.

I am a little freaked out right now. Gram's and Gramps left a while ago, but I stayed behind here in the ICU. I am sitting in one of the chairs, going over their conversation, which was very nice and normal and no disturbing. Until they left. As Gram's and Gramps walked out of the ICU, with me following, Gramps turned to Gram's and asked: 'Do you think she decides?'

'Decides what?'

Gramps looked uncomfortable. He shuffled his feet. 'You know? Decides,' he whispered.

'What are you talking about?' Gram's sounded exasperated and tender at the same time.

'I don't know what I'm talking about.'

'You're the one who believes in all the angels.'

'What does that have to do with Earn?' Gram's asked.

'If they're gone now, but still here, as you believe, what if they want her to join them? What if she wants to join them?'

'It doesn't work like that,' Gram's snapped.

'Oh,' was all Gramps said. The inquiry was over.

After they left, I was thinking that one day maybe I'll tell Gram's that I never much bought into her theory that birds and such could be people's guardian angels. And now I'm surer than ever that there's no such thing.

My parents aren't here. They are not holding my hand or cheering me on. I know them well enough to know that if they could, they would. Maybe not both of them. Maybe Mom would stay with Naddalin while Dad watched over me. But neither of them is here.

-And-

It's while contemplating this that I think about what the nurse said. She's running the show. And suddenly I understand what Gramps was really asking Grams. He had listened to that nurse, too. He got it before I did.

If I stay. If I live. It's up to me.

All this business about medically induced comas is just doctor talk. It's not up to the doctors. It's not up to the absentee angels. It's not even up to God who, if He exists, is nowhere around right now. It's up to me.

How am I supposed to decide this?

How can I possibly stay without Mom and Dad? How can I leave without Naddalin? Or Beth? This is too much. I don't even understand how it all works, why I'm here in the state that I'm in or how to get out of it if I wanted to. If I were to say, I want to wake up, would I wake up right now? I already tried snapping my heels to find Naddalin and trying to beam myself to Hawaii, and that didn't work.

This seems a whole lot more complicated.

But in spite of that, I believe it's true. I hear the nurse's words again. I am running the show. Everyone is waiting for me.

I decide. I know this now.

And this terrifies me more than anything else that has happened today.

Where the hell is Beth?

A week before Halloween of my junior year, Beth showed up at my door triumphant. He was holding a dress bag and wearing a shit-eating grin.

'Prepare to writhe in jealousy. I just got the best costume,' he said. He unzipped the bag. Inside was a frilly white shirt, a pair of breeches, and a long wool coat with epaulets. 'You're going to be Seinfeld with the puffy shirt?' I asked.

'Pff. Seinfeld. And you call yourself a classical musician. I'm going to be Mozart. Wait, you haven't seen the shoes.' He reached into the bag and pulled out clunky black leather numbers with metal bars across the tops.

'Nice,' I said. 'I think my mom has a pair like them.'

'You're just jealous because you don't have such a-rockin' costume. And I'll be wearing tights, too. I'm just that secure in my manhood. Also, I have a wig.'

'Where'd you get all this?' I asked, fingering the wig. It felt like it was made of burlap.

'Online. Only a hundred bucks.'

'You spent a hundred dollars on a Halloween costume?'

At the mention of the word Halloween, Naddalin zoomed down the stairs, ignoring me and yanking on Beth's wallet chain. 'Wait here!' he demanded, and then ran back upstairs and returned a few seconds later holding a bag. 'Is this a good costume? Or will it make me look babyish?' Naddalin asked, pulling out a pitchfork, a set of devil ears, a red tail, and a pair of red footie pajamas.

'Ohh.' Beth stepped backward; his eyes wide. 'That outfit scares the hell out of me and you aren't even wearing it.'

'Really? You don't think the pajamas make it look dumb. I don't want anyone to laugh at me,' Naddalin declared, his eyebrows furrowed in seriousness.

I grinned at Beth, who was trying to swallow his own smile. 'Red pajamas plus pitchfork plus devil ears and the pointy tail is so fully satanic no one would dare challenge you, lest they risk eternal damnation,' Beth assured him.

Naddalin's face broke into a wide grin, showing off the gap of his missing front tooth. 'That's kind of what Mom said, but I just wanted to make sure she wasn't just telling me that so I wouldn't bug her about the costume. You're taking me trick-or-treating, right?' He looked at me now.

'Just like every year,' I answered.

'How else am I going to get candy?'

'You're coming, too?' he asked Beth.

'I wouldn't miss it.'

Naddalin turned on his heel and whizzed back up the stairs. Beth turned to me. 'That's Naddalin settled. What are you wearing?'

'Ahh, I'm not much of a costume girl.'

Beth rolled his eyes. 'Well, become one. It's Halloween, our first one together. Shooting Star has a big show that night. It's a costumed concert, and you promised to go.'

Inwardly, I groaned. After six months with Beth, I had just gotten used to us being the odd couple at school-people called us Groovy and the Geek. And I was starting to become more comfortable with Beth's bandmates, and had even learned a few words of rock talk. I could hold my own now when Beth took me to the House of Rock, the rambling house near the Middle School where the rest of the band all lived. I could even participate in the band's punk-rock pot-luck parties when everyone invited had to bring something from their fridge that was on the verge of spoiling. We took all the ingredients and made something out of it. I was actually pretty good at finding ways to turn the vegetarian ground beef, beets, feta cheese, and apricots into something edible.

But that fall day, we fought with fists. After the last bell, without a word, we followed each other out to the playground, dropped our backpacks on the ground, which was wet from the day's steady drizzle. She charged me like a bull, knocking the wind out of me. I punched her on the side of the head, fist closed as men do. A crowd of kids gathered around to witness the spectacle. Fighting was novelty enough at our school. Girl-fighting was extra special. And good girls going at it was like hitting the trifecta.

By the time teachers separated us, half of the sixth grade was watching us (in fact, it was the ring of students loitering that alerted the playground monitors that something was up). The fight was a tie, I suppose. I had a split lip and a bruised wrist, the latter inflicted upon myself when my swing at Ana's shoulder missed her and landed squarely on the pole of the volleyball net. Ana had a swollen eye and a bad scrape on her thigh as a result of her tripping over her backpack as she attempted to kick me.

There was no heartfelt peacemaking, no official détente. Once the teachers separated us, Ana and I looked at each other and started laughing. After finagling ourselves out of a visit to the principal's office, we limped home. Ana told me that the only reason that she volunteered for team captain was that if you did that at the beginning of a school year, coaches tended to remember and that actually kept them from picking you in the future (a handy trick I co-opted from then on). I explained to her that I actually agreed with her take on To Kill a Mockingbird, which was one of my favorite books. And then that was it. We were friends, just as everyone had assumed all along that we would be. We never laid a hand on each other again, and even though we'd get into plenty of verbal clashes, our tiffs tended to end the way our fistfight had, with us cracking up.

After our big brawl, though, Mrs. Schein refused to let Ana come over to my house, convinced that her daughter would return on crutches. Mom offered to go over and smooth things out, but I think that Dad and I both seed that given her temper, her diplomatic mission might end up with a restraining order against our family. In the end, Dad invited the Schein's over for a roast chicken dinner, and though you could see Mrs. Schein was still a little weirded out by my family - 'So you work in a record store while you study to become a teacher? And you do the cooking? How unusual,' she said to Dad - Mr. Schein declared my parents decent and our family nonviolent and told Ana's mother that Ana ought to be allowed to come and go freely.

For those few months in sixth grade, Ana and I shed our good-girl personas. Talk about our fight circulated, the details growing more exaggerated - broken ribs, torn-off fingernails, bite marks. But when we came back to school after winter break, it was all forgotten. We were back to being the dark, quiet, good-girl twins.

We didn't mind anymore. In fact, over the years that reputation has served us well. If, for instance, we were both absent on the same day, people automatically assumed we had come down with the same bug, not that we'd ditched school to watch art films being shown in the film-survey class at the university. When, as a prank, someone put our school up for sale, covering it with signs and posting a listing on eBay, suspicious eyes turned to Nelson Baker and Jenna McLaughlin, not to us. Even if we had owned up to the prank - as we'd planned to if anyone else got in trouble, we'd have had a hard time convincing anyone it really was us.

40

This always made Ana laugh. 'People believe what they want to believe,' she said.

4:47 P.M.

Mom once snuck me into a casino. We were going on vacation to Crater Lake and we stopped at a resort on an Indian reservation for the buffet lunch. Mom decided to do a bit of gambling, and I went with her while Dad stayed with Naddalin, who was napping in his stroller. Mom sat down at the dollar blackjack tables. The dealer looked at me, then at Mom, who returned his mildly suspicious glance with a look sharp enough to cut diamonds followed by a smile more brilliant than any gem. The dealer sheepishly smiled back and didn't say a word. I watched Mom play, mesmerized. It seemed like we were in there for fifteen minutes but then Dad and Naddalin came in search of us, both of them grumpy. It turned out we'd been there for over an hour.

The ICU is like that. You can't tell what time of day it is or how much time has passed. There's no natural light. And there's a constant soundtrack of noise, only instead of the electronic beeping of slot machines and the satisfying jangle of quarters, it's the hum and whirl of all the medical equipment, the endless muffled pages over the PA, and the steady talk of the nurses.

I'm not entirely sure how long I've been in here. A while ago, the nurse I liked with the lilting accent said she was going home. 'I'll be back tomorrow, but I want to see you here, sweetheart,' she said. I thought that was weird at first. Wouldn't she want me to be home, or moved to another part of the hospital? But then I seed that she meant she wanted to see me in this ward, as opposed to dead.

The doctors keep coming around and pulling up my eyelids and waving around a flashlight. They are rough and hurried like they don't consider eyelids worthy of gentleness. It makes you see how little in life we touch one another's eyes. Maybe your parents will hold an eyelid up to get out a piece of dirt, or maybe your boyfriend will kiss your eyelids, light as a butterfly, just before you drift off to sleep. But eyelids are not like elbows or knees or shoulders, parts of the body accustomed to being jostled.

The social worker is at my bedside now. She is looking through my chart and talking to one of the nurses who normally sit at the big desk in the middle of the room. It is amazing the ways they watch you here. If they're not waving penlights in your eyes or reading the printouts that come tumbling out from the bedside printers, then they are watching your vitals from a central computer screen. If anything goes slightly amiss, one of the monitors starts bleeping. There is always an alarm going off somewhere. At first, it scared me, but now I see that half the time, when the alarms go off, it's the machines that are malfunctioning, not the people.

The social worker looks exhausted as if she wouldn't mind crawling into one of the open beds. I am not her only sick person. She has been shuttling back and forth between patients and families all afternoon. She's the bridge between the doctors and the people, and you can see the strain of balancing between those two worlds.

After she reads my chart and talks to the nurses, she goes back downstairs to my family, who have stopped talking in hushed tones and are now all engaged in solitary activities. Gram's is knitting. Gramps is pretending to nap. Aunt Diane playing sudoku. My cousins are taking turns on a Game Boy, the sound turned to mute.

Ana has left. When she came back to the waiting room after visiting the chapel, she found Mrs. Schein a total wreck. She seemed so embarrassed and she hustled her mother out. Actually, I think having Mrs. Schein there probably helped. Comforting her gave everyone else something to do, a way to feel useful. Now they're back to feeling useless, back to the endless wait.

When the social worker walks into the waiting room, everyone stands up, like they're greeting royalty. She gives a half-smile, which I've seen her do several times already today. I think it's her signal that everything is okay or status quo, and she's just here to deliver an update, not to drop a bomb.

'Earn is still unconscious, but her vital signs are improving,' she tells the assembled relatives, who have abandoned their distractions haphazardly on the chairs. 'She's in with the respiratory therapists right now. They're running tests to see how her lungs are functioning and whether she can be weaned off the ventilator.'

'That's good news, then?' Aunt Diane asks. 'I mean if she can breathe on her own, then she'll wake up soon?'

The social worker gives a practiced sympathetic nod. 'It's a good step if she can breathe on her own. It shows her lungs are healing and her internal injuries are stabbing. The question mark is still the brain contusions.'

'Why is that?' Cousin Heather interrupts.

'We don't know when she will wake up on her own, or the extent of the damage to her brain. These first twenty-four hours are the most critical and Earn is getting the best possible care.'

'Can we see her?' Gramps asks.

The social worker nods. 'That's why I'm here. I think it would be good for Earn to have a short visit. Just one or two people.' 'We'll go,' Gram's says, stepping forward. Gramps is by her side.

'Yes, that's what I thought,' the social worker says. 'We won't be long,' she says to the rest of the family.

The three of them walk down the hall in silence. In the elevator, the social worker attempts to prepare my Grandparents for the sight of me, explaining the extent of my external injuries, which look bad but are treatable. It's the internal injuries that they're worried about, she says.

She's acting like my Grandparents are children. But they're tougher than they look. Gramps was a medic in Korea. And Gram's, she's always rescuing things: birds with broken wings, a sick beaver, a deer hit by a car. The deer went to a wildlife sanctuary, which is funny because Gram's usually hates deer; they eat up her garden. 'Pretty rats,' she calls them. 'Tasty rats' is what Gramps calls them when he grills up venison steaks. But that one deer, Gram's couldn't bear to see it suffer, so she rescued it. Part of me suspects she thought it was one of her angels.

Still, when they come through the automatic double doors into the ICU, both of them stop, as if repelled by an invisible barrier.

Gram's takes Gramps's hand, and I try to remember if I've ever seen them hold hands before. Grams scans the beds for me, but just as the social worker starts to point out where I am, Gramps sees me and he strides across the floor to my bed.

'Hello, duck,' he says. He hasn't called me that in ages, not since I was younger than Naddalin. Gram's walks slowly to where I am, taking little gulps of air as she comes. Maybe those wounded animals weren't such good prep after all.

The social worker pulls over two chairs, setting them up at the foot of my bed. 'Earn, your Grandparents are here.' She motions for them to sit down. 'I'll leave you alone now.'

'Can she hear us?' Gram's asks. 'If we talk to her, she'll understand?'

'Truly, I don't know,' the social worker responds. 'But your presence can be soothing so long as what you say is soothing.' Then she gives them a stern look as if to tell them not to say anything bad to upset me. I know it's her job to warn them about things like this and that she is busy with a thousand things and can't always be so sensitive, but for a second, I hate her.

After the social worker leaves, Gram's and Gramps sit in silence for a minute. Then Gram's starts prattling on about the orchids she's growing in her greenhouse. I notice that she's changed out of her gardening smock into a clean pair of corduroy pants and a sweater. Someone must have stopped by her house to bring her fresh clothes. Gramps is sitting very still, and his hands are shaking. He's not much of a talker, so it must be hard for him being ordered to chat with me now.

I opened my eyes, savoring the warm calm that was sweeping over me. I started to laugh. Beth did, too. We kissed for a while longer until it was time for him to go home.

As I walked him out to his car, I wanted to tell him that I loved him. But it seemed like such a cliché after what we'd just done. So, I waited and told him the next day. 'That's a relief. I thought you might just be using me for sex,' he joked, smiling.

After that, we still had our problems, but being overly polite to each other wasn't one of them.

4:39 P.M.

I have quite the crowd now. Grams and Gramps. Uncle Dan. Aunt Diane. Aunt Kate. My cousins Heather and John and David. Dad is one of five kids, so there are still lots more relatives out there. Nobody is talking about Naddalin, which leads me to believe that he's not here. He's probably still at the other hospital, being taken care of by Carrie.

The relatives gather in the hospital waiting room. Not the little one on the surgical floor where Gram's and Gramps were during my operation, but a larger one on the hospital's main floor that is tastefully decorated in shades of mauve and has comfy chairs and sofas and magazines that are almost current. Everyone still talks in hushed tones, as if being respectful of the other people waiting, even though it's only my family in the waiting room. It's all so serious, so ominous. I go back into the hallway to get a break.

I'm so happy when Ana arrives; happy to see the familiar sight of her long black hair in a single braid. She wears the braid every day and always, by lunchtime, the curls and ringlets of her thick mane have managed to escape in rebellious little tendrils. But she refuses to surrender to that hair of hers, and every morning, it goes back into the braid.

Ana's mother is with her. She doesn't let Ana drive long distances, and I guess that after what's happened, there's no way she'd make an exception today. Mrs. Schein is red-faced and blotchy like she's been crying or is about to cry. I know this because I have seen her cry many times. She's very emotional. 'Drama queen,' is how Ana puts it. 'It's the Jewish-mother gene. She can't help it. I suppose I'll be like that one day, too,' Ana concedes.

Ana is so the opposite of that, so droll and funny in a low-key way that she's always having to say 'just kidding' to people who don't get her sarcastic sense of humor, that I cannot imagine her ever being like her mother. Then again, I don't have much basis for comparison. There are not a lot of Jewish mothers in our town or that many Jewish kids at our school. And the kids who are Jewish are usually only half, so all it means is that they have a menorah alongside their Christmas trees.

But Ana is really Jewish. Sometimes I have Friday-night dinner with her family when they light candles, eat braided bread, and drink wine (the only time I can imagine neurotic Mrs. Schein allowing Ana to drink). Ana's expected to only date Jewish guys, which means she doesn't date. She jokes that this is the reason her family moved here, when in fact it was because her father was hired to run a computer-chip plant. When she was thirteen, she had a bat mitzvah at a temple in Dauphin, and during the candle-lighting ceremony at the reception, I got called up to light one. Every summer, she goes to a Jewish sleepaway camp in New Jersey. It's called Camp Torah Habonim, but Ana calls it Torah Whore because all the kids do all summer is hooked up.

'Just like band camp,' she joked, though my summer conservatory program is nothing like American Pie.

Right now, I can see Ana is annoyed. She's walking fast, keeping a good ten feet between her and her mother as they march down the halls. Suddenly her shoulders go up like a cat that's just spied a dog. She swerves to face her mother.

'Stop it!' Ana demands. 'If I'm not crying, there's no freaking way you're allowed to.'

Ana never curses. So, this shocks me.

'But,' Mrs. Schein protests, 'how can you be so...' -sob- 'so calm when-'

'Cut it out!' Ana interjects. 'Earn is still here. So, I'm not losing it. And if I don't lose it, you don't get to!'

Ana stalks off in the direction of the waiting room, her mother following limply behind. When they reach the waiting room and see my assembled family, Mrs. Schein starts sniffing.

Ana doesn't curse this time. But her ears go pink, which is how I know she's still furious.
'Mother. I am going to leave you here. I'm taking a walk. I'll be back later.'

I follow her back out into the corridor. She wanders around the main lobby, loops around the gift shop, visits the cafeteria. She looks at the hospital directory. I think I know where she's headed before she does.

There's a small chapel in the basement. It's hushed in there, a library kind of quiet. There are plush chairs like the kind you find at a movie theater, and a muted soundtrack playing some New Agey-type music.

Ana slumps back in one of the chairs. She takes off her coat, the one that is black and velvet and that I have coveted since she bought it at some mall in New Jersey on a trip to visit her Grandparents.

'I love Oregon,' she says with a hiccup attempt at a laugh. I can tell by her sarcastic tone that it's me she's talking to, not God. 'This is the hospital's idea of nondenominational.' She points around the chapel. There is a crucifix mounted on the wall, a flag of a cross draped over the lectern, and a few paintings of the Madonna and Child hanging in the back. 'We have a token Star of David,' she says, gesturing to the six-pointed star on the wall. 'But what about the Muslims? No prayer rugs or symbols to show which way is east toward Mecca? And what about the Buddhists? Couldn't they spring for a gong? I mean there are probably more Buddhists than Jews in Dauphin anyway.'

I sit down in a chair beside her. It feels so natural the way that Ana is talking to me like she always does. Other than the paramedic who told me to hang in there and the nurse who keeps asking me how I'm doing, no one has talked to me since the accident.

They talk about me.

I've never actually seen Ana pray. I mean, she prayed at her bat mitzvah and she does the blessings at Shabbat dinner, but that is because she has to. Mostly, she makes light of her religion. But after she talks to me for a while, she closes her eyes and moves her lips and murmurs things in a language I don't understand.

She opens her eyes and wipes her hands together as if to say enough of that. Then she reconsiders and adds a final appeal. 'Please don't die. I can understand why you'd want to, but think about this: If you die, there's going to be one of those cheesy Princess Diana memorials at school, where everyone puts flowers and candles and notes next to your locker.' She wipes away a renegade tear with the back of her hand. 'I know you'd hate that kind of thing.'

Maybe it was because we were too alike. As soon as Ana showed up on the scene, everyone assumed we'd be best friends just because we were both dark, quiet, studious, and, at least outwardly, serious. The thing was, neither one of us was a particularly great student (straight B averages all around) or, for that matter, all that serious. We were serious about certain things-music in my case, art and photography in hers-and in the simplified world of middle school, that was enough to set us apart as separated twins of some sort.

Immediately we got shoved together for everything. On Ana's third day of school, she was the only person to volunteer to be a team captain during a soccer match in PE, which I'd thought was beyond suck-uppy of her. As she put on her red jersey, the coach scanned the class to pick Team B's captain, his eyes settling on me, even though I was one of the least athletic girls. As I shuffled over to put on my jersey, I brushed past Ana, mumbling 'thanks a lot.'

The following week, our English teacher paired us together for a joint oral discussion on To Kill a Mockingbird. We sat across from each other in stony silence for about ten minutes. Finally, I said. 'I guess we should talk about racism in the Old South or something.'

Ana ever so slightly rolled her eyes, which made me want to throw a dictionary at her. I was caught off guard by how intensely I already hated her. 'I read this book at my old school,' she said. 'The racism thing is kind of obvious. I think the bigger thing is people's goodness. Are they naturally good and turned bad by stuff like racism or are they naturally bad and need to work hard not to be?' 'Whatever,' I said. 'It's a stupid book.' I didn't know why I'd said that because I'd actually loved the book and had talked to Dad about it; he was using it for his student teaching. I hated Ana even more for making me betray a book I loved.

'Fine. We'll do your idea, then,' Ana said, and when we got a B minus, she seemed to Gallet about our mediocre grade.

After that, we just didn't talk. That didn't stop teachers from pairing us together or everyone in the school from assuming that we were friends. The more that happened, the more we resented it-and each other. The more the world shoved us together, the more we shoved back -and against each other. We tried to pretend the other didn't exist even though the existence of our nemeses kept us both occupied for hours.

I felt compelled to give myself reasons why I hated Ana: She was a Goody Two-shoes. She was annoying. She was a show-off. Later, I found out that she did the same thing about me, though her major complaint was that she thought I was a bitch. And one day, she even wrote it to me. In English class, someone flung a folded-up square of notebook paper onto the floor next to my right foot. I picked it up and opened it. It read, Bitch!

Nobody had ever called me that before, and though I was automatically furious, deep down I was also flattered that I had elicited enough emotion to be worthy of the name. People called Mom that a lot, probably because she had a hard time holding her tongue and could be brutally blunt when she disagreed with you. She'd explode like a thunderstorm, and then be fine again. Anyhow, she didn't care that people called her a bitch. 'It's just another word for feminist,' she told me with pride. Even Dad called her that sometimes, but always in a jokey, complimentary way. Never during a fight. He knew better.

I looked up from my grammar book.

There was only one person who would've sent this note to me, but I still scarcely believed it. I peered at the class. Everyone had their faces in their books. Except for Ana. Her ears were so red that it made the little sideburn-like tendrils of dark hair look like they were also blushing. She was glaring at me. I might have been eleven years old and a little socially immature, but I recognized a gauntlet being thrown down when I saw it, and I had no choice but to take it up.

When we got older, we liked to joke that we were so glad we had that fistfight. Not only did it cement our friendship but it also provided us our first and likely the only opportunity for a good brawl. When else were two girls like us going to come to blows? I wrestled on the ground with Naddalin, and sometimes I pinched him, but a fistfight? He was just a baby, and even if he were older, Naddalin was like half kid brother and half my own kid. I'd been babysitting him since he was a few weeks old. I could never hurt him like that. And Ana, an only child, didn't have any siblings to the sock. Maybe at camp, she could've gotten into a scuffle, but the consequences would've been dire: hours-long conflict-resolution seminars with the counselors and the rabbi. 'My people know how to fight with the best of them, but with words, with lots and lots of words,' she told me once.

There are so many tubes attached to me that I cannot count them all: one down my throat breathing for me; one down my nose, keeping my stomach empty; one in my vein, hydrating me; one in my bladder, peeing for me; several on my chest, recording my heartbeat; another on my finger, recording my pulse. The ventilator that's doing my breathing has a soothing rhythm like a metronome, in, out, in, out.

No one, aside from the doctors and nurses and a social worker, has been in to see me. It's the social worker who speaks to Grams and Gramps in hushed sympathetic tones. She tells them that I am in 'grave' condition. I'm not entirely sure what that means-grave. On TV, patients are always critical, or stable. Grave sounds bad. The grave is where you go when things don't work out here.

'I wish there was something we could do,' Gram's says. 'I feel so useless just waiting.'

'I'll see if I can get you in to see her in a little while,' the social worker says. She has frizzy gray hair and a coffee stain on her blouse; her face is kind. 'She's still sedated from the surgery and she's on a ventilator to help her breathe while her body heals from the trauma. But it can be helpful even for patients in a comatose state to hear from their loved ones.'

Gramps grunts in reply.

'Do you have any people you can call?' the social worker asks. 'Relatives who might like to be here with you. I understand this must be quite a trial for you, but the stronger you can be, the more it will help Earn.'

I startle when I hear the social worker say my name. It's a jarring reminder that it's me they're talking about. Gram tells her about the various people who are en route right now, aunts, uncles. I don't hear any mention of Beth.

Beth is the one I really want to see. I wish I knew where he was so I could try to go there. I have no idea how he's going to find out about me. Gram's and Gramps don't have his phone number. They don't carry cell phones, so he can't call them. And I don't know how he'd even know to call them. The people who would normally pass along pertinent information that something has happened to me are in no position to do that.

I stand over the beeping tubed lifeless form that is me. My skin is gray. My eyes are taped shut. I wish someone would take the tape off. It looks like it itches. The nice nurse bustles over. Her scrubs have lollipops on them, even though this isn't a pediatric unit. 'How's it going, sweetheart?' she asks me as if we just bumped into each other in the grocery store.

It didn't start out so smoothly with Beth and me. I think I had this notion that love conquers all. And by the time he dropped me off from the Yo-Yo Ma concert, I think we were both aware that we were falling in love. I thought that getting to this part was the challenge. In books and movies, the stories always end when the two people finally have their romantic kiss. The happily-ever-after part is just assumed.

It didn't quite work that way for us. It turned out that coming from such far corners of the social universe had its downsides. We continued to see each other in the music wing, but these interactions remained platonic as if neither one of us wanted to mess with a good thing. But whenever we met at other places in the school-when we sat together in the cafeteria or studied side by side on the quad on a sunny day-something was off. We were uncomfortable. The conversation was stilted. One of us would say something and the other would start to say something else at the same time.

'You go,' I'd say.

'No, you go,' Beth would say.

The politeness was painful. I wanted to push through it, to return to the Gallow of the night of the concert, but I was unsure of how to get back there.

Beth invited me to see his band play. This was even worse than school. If I felt like a fish out of water in my family, I felt like a fish on Mars in Beth's circle. He was always surrounded by funky, lively people, by cute girls with dyed hair and piercings, by aloof guys who perked up when Beth rock-talked with them. I couldn't do the groupie thing. And I didn't know how to rock-talk at all. It was a language I should've understood, being both a musician and Dad's daughter, but I didn't. It was like how Mandarin speakers can sort of understand Cantonese but not really, even though non-Chinese people assume all Chinese can communicate with one another, even though Mandarin and Cantonese are actually different.

I dreaded going to shows with Beth. It wasn't that I was jealous. Or that I wasn't into his kind of music. I loved to watch him play. When he was on stage, it was like the guitar was a fifth limb, a natural extension of his body. And when he came offstage afterward, he would be sweaty but it was such a clean sweat that part of me was tempted to lick the side of his face like it was a lollipop. I didn't, though.

Once the fans would descend, I'd skitter off to the sidelines. Beth would try to draw me back, to wrap an arm around my waist, but I'd disentangle myself and head back to the shadows.

'Don't you like me anymore?' Beth chided me after one show. He was kidding, but I could hear the hurt behind the offhand question.

'I don't know if I should keep coming to your shows,' I said.

'Why not?' he asked. This time he didn't try to disguise the hurt.

'I feel like I keep you from basking in it all. I don't want you to have to worry about me.'

Beth said that he didn't mind worrying about me, but I could tell that part of him did.

We probably would've broken up in those early weeks were it not for my house. At my house, with my family, we found common ground. After we'd been together for a month, I took Beth home with me for his first family dinner with us. He sat in the kitchen with Dad, rock-talking. I observed, and I still didn't understand half of it, but unlike at the shows I didn't feel left out.

'Do you play basketball?' Dad asked. When it came to observing sports, Dad was a baseball fanatic, but when it came to playing, he loved to shoot hoops.

'Sure,' Beth said. 'I mean, I'm not very good.'

'You don't need to be good; you just need to be committed. Want to play a quick game? You already have your basketball shoes on,' Dad said, looking at Beth's Converse high-tops. Then he turned to me. 'You mind?'

'Not at all,' I said, smiling. 'I can practice while you play.'

They went out to the courts behind the nearby elementary school. They returned forty-five minutes later. Beth was covered with a sheen of sweat and looking a little dazed.

'What happened?' I asked. 'Did the old man whoop you?'

Beth shook his head and nodded at the same time. 'Well, yes. But it's not that. I got stung by a bee on my palm while we were playing. Your dad grabbed my hand and sucked the venom out.'

I nodded. This was a trick he'd learned from Gram's, and unlike with rattlesnakes, it actually worked on bee stings. You got the stinger and the venom out, so you were left with only a little itch.

Beth broke into an embarrassed smile. He leaned in and whispered into my ear: 'I think I'm a little wigged out that I've been more intimate with your dad than I have with you.'

I laughed at that. But it was sort of true. In the few weeks we'd been together, we hadn't done much more than a kiss. It wasn't that I was a prude. I was a virgin, but I certainly wasn't devoted to staying that way. And Beth certainly wasn't a virgin. It was more than our kissing had suffered from the same painful politeness as our conversations.

'Maybe we should remedy that,' I murmured.

Beth raised his eyebrows as if asking me a question. I blushed in response. All through dinner, we grinned at each other as we listened to Naddalin, who was chattering about the dinosaur bones he'd apparently dug up in the back garden that afternoon. Dad had made his famous salt roast, which was my favorite dish, but I had no appetite. I pushed the food around my plate, hoping no one would notice. All the while, this little buzz was building inside me. I thought of the tuning fork I used to adjust my French horn. Hitting it sets off vibrations in the note of a vibration that keeps growing and growing until the harmonic pitch fills up the room. That's what Beth's grin was doing to me during dinner.

After the meal, Beth took a quick peek at Naddalin's fossil finds, and then we went upstairs to my room and closed the door. Ana is not allowed to be alone in her house with boys - not that the opportunity ever came up. My parents had never mentioned any rules on this issue, but I had a feeling that they knew what was happening with Beth and me, and even though Dad liked to play it all Father Knows Best, in reality, he and Mom were suckers when it came to love.

Beth lay down on my bed, stretching his arms above his head. His whole face was grinning - eyes, nose, mouth. 'Play me,' he said.

'What?'

'I want you to play me like a French horn.'

I started to protest that this made no sense, but then I seed it made perfect sense. I went to my closet and grabbed one of my spare bows. 'Take off your shirt,' I said, my voice quavering.

Beth did. As thin as he was, he was surprisingly built. I could've spent twenty minutes staring at the contours and valleys of his chest. But he wanted me closer. I wanted me closer.

I sat down next to him on the bed so his long body was stretched out in front of me. The bow trembled as I placed it on the bed. I reached with my left hand and caressed Beth's head as if it were the scroll of my French horn. He smiled again and closed his eyes. I relaxed a little. I fiddled with his ears as though they were the string pegs and then I playfully tickled him as he laughed softly. I placed two fingers on Beth's apple. Then, taking a deep breath for courage, I plunged into his chest. I ran my hands up and down the length of his torso, focusing on the sinews in his muscles, assigning each one a string-A, G, C, D. I traced them down, one at a time, with the tip of my fingers. Beth got quiet then as if he were concentrating on something.

I reached for the bow and brushed it across his hips, where I imagined the bridge of the French horn would be. I played lightly at first and then with more force and speed as the song now playing in my head increased in intensity. Beth lay perfectly still, little groans escaping from his lips. I looked at the bow, looked at my hands, looked at Beth's face, and felt this surge of love, lust, and an unfamiliar feeling of power. I had never known that I could make someone feel this way.

When I finished, he stood up and kissed me long and deep. 'My turn,' he said. He pulled me to my feet and started by slipping the sweater over my head and edging down my jeans. Then he sat down on the bed and laid me across his lap. At first Beth did nothing except hold me. I closed my eyes and tried to feel his eyes on my body, seeing me as no one else ever had.

Then he began to play.

He strummed chords across the top of my chest, which tickled and made me laugh. He gently brushed his hands, moving farther down. I stopped giggling. The tuning fork intensified -its vibrations growing every time Beth touched me somewhere new.

After a while, he switched to more of a Spanish-style, fingerpicking type of playing. He used the top of my body as the fretboard, caressing my hair, my face, my neck. He plucked at my chest and my belly, but I could feel him in places his hands were nowhere near. As he played on, the energy magnified; the tuning fork going crazy now, firing off vibrations all over, until my entire body was humming, until I was left breathless. And when I felt like I could not take it one more minute, the swirl of sensations hit a dizzying crescendo, sending every nerve ending in my body on high alert.

The anesthesiologist has gentle fingers. She sits at my head, keeping an eye on all my vitals, adjusting the amounts of the fluids and gases and drugs they're giving me. She must be doing a good job because I don't appear to feel anything, even though they are yanking at my body. It's rough and messy work, nothing like that game Operation we used to play as kids where you had to be careful not touch the sides as you removed a bone, or the buzzer would go off.

The anesthesiologist absentmindedly strokes my temples through her latex Gloves. This is what Mom used to do when I came down with the flu or got one of those headaches that hurt so bad, I used to imagine cutting open a vein in my temple just to relieve the pressure.

The Wagner CD has repeated twice now. The doctors decide it's time for a new genre. Jazz wins. People always assume that because I am into classical music, I'm a jazz aficionado. I'm not. Dad is. He loves it, especially the wild, latter-day Coltrane stuff. He says that jazz is punk for old people. I guess that explains it because I don't like punk, either.

The operation goes on and on. I'm exhausted by it. I don't know how the doctors have the stamina to keep up. They're standing still, but it seems harder than running a marathon.

I start to zone out. And then I start to wonder about this state I'm in. If I'm not dead - and the heart monitor is beeping along, so I assume I'm not but I'm not in my body, either, can I go anywhere? Am I a ghost? Could I transport myself to a beach in Hawaii? Can I pop over to Carnegie Hall in New York City?

Can I go to Naddalin?

Just for the sake of experiment, I wiggle my nose like Samantha on Bewitched. Nothing happens. I snap my fingers. Click my heels. I'm still here.

I decided to try a simpler maneuver. I walk into the wall, imagining that I'll float through it and come out the other side. Except that what happens when I walk into the wall is that I hit a wall.

A nurse bustles in with a bag of Ritalin, and before the door shuts behind her, I slip through it. Now I'm in the hospital corridor. There are lots of doctors and nurses in blue and green scrubs hustling around. A woman on a gurney, her hair in a gauzy blue shower cap, an IV in her arm, calls out, 'William, William.' I walk a little farther. There are rows of operating rooms, all full of sleeping people. If the patients inside these rooms are like me, why then can't I see the people outside the people? Is everyone else loitering about like I seem to be? I'd really like to meet someone in my condition. I have some questions, like, what is this state I'm in exactly and how do I get out of it? How do I get back to my body? Do I have to wait for the doctors to wake me up? But there's no one else like me around. Maybe the rest of them figured out how to get to Hawaii.

I follow a nurse through a set of automatic double doors. I'm in a small waiting room now. My Grandparents are here.

Gram's is chattering away to Gramps, or maybe just to the air. It's her way of not letting emotion get the best of her. I've seen her do it before when Gramps had a heart attack. She is wearing her Wellies and her gardening smock, which is smudged with mud. She must have been working in her greenhouse when she heard about us. Grams' hair is short and curly and gray; she's been wearing it in a permanent wave, Dad says, since the 1970s. 'It's easy,' Gram's says. 'No muss, no fuss.' This is so typical of her. No nonsense. She's so quintessentially practical that most people would never guess she has a thing for angels.

She keeps a collection of ceramic angels, yarn doll angels, blown-glass angels, you-name-it angels, in a special china hutch in her sewing room. And she doesn't just collect angels; she believes in them. She thinks that they're everywhere. Once, a pair of loons nested in the pond in the woods behind their house. Gram's was convinced that it was her long-dead parents, come to watch over her.

Another time, we were sitting outside on her porch and I saw a red bird. 'Is that a red crossbill?' I'd asked Grams.

She'd shaken her head. 'My sister Galleria is a crossbill,' Gram's had said, referring to my recently deceased great-aunt Galle, with whom Gram's had never gotten along. 'She wouldn't be coming around here.'

Gramps is staring into the dregs of his Styrofoam cup, peeling away the top of it so that little white balls collect in his lap. I can tell it's the worst kind of swill, the kind that looks like it was brewed in 1997 and has been sitting on a burner ever since. Even so, I wouldn't mind a cup.

You can draw a straight line from Gramps to Dad to Naddalin, although Gramps's wavy hair has gone from blond to gray and he is stockier than Naddalin, who is a stick, and Dad, who is wiry and muscular from afternoon weight-lifting sessions at the Y. But they all have the same watery gray-blue eyes, the color of the ocean on a cloudy day.

Maybe this is why I now find it hard to look at Gramps.

Juilliard was Gram's idea. She's from Massachusetts originally, but she moved to Oregon in 1955, on her own. Now that would be no big deal, but I guess fifty-two years ago it was kind of scandalous for a twenty-two-year-old unmarried woman to do that kind of thing. Gram's claimed she was drawn to the wild open wilderness and it didn't get wilder than the endless forests and craggy beaches of Oregon. She got a job as a secretary working for the Forest Service. Gramps was working there as a biologist.

We go back to Massachusetts sometimes in the summers, to a lodge in the western part of the state that for one week is taken over by Grams extended family. That's when I see the second cousins and great aunts and uncles whose names I barely recognize. I have lots of family in Oregon, but they're all from Gramps's side.

Last summer at the Massachusetts retreat, I brought my French horn so I could keep up my practicing for an upcoming chamber-music concert. The flight wasn't full, so the stewardesses let it travel in a seat next to me, just like the pros do it. Naddalin thought this was hilarious and kept trying to feed it pretzels.

At the lodge, I gave a little concert one night, in the main room, with my relatives and the dead game animals mounted on the wall as my audience. It was after that that someone mentioned Juilliard, and Gram's became taken with the idea.

At first, it seemed far-fetched. There was a perfectly good music program at the university near us. And, if I wanted to stretch, there was a conservatory in Seattle, which was only a few hours' drive. Juilliard was across the country. And expensive. Mom and Dad were intrigued by the idea of it, but I could tell neither one of them really wanted to relinquish me to New York City or go into hock so that I could maybe become a cellist for some second-rate small-town orchestra. They had no idea whether I was good enough. In fact, neither did I. Professor Kristiee told me that I was one of the most promising students she'd ever taught, but she'd never mentioned Juilliard to me. Juilliard was for virtuoso musicians, and it seemed arrogant to even think that they'd give me a second glance.

But after the retreat, when someone else, someone impartial and from the East Coast, deemed me Juilliard-worthy, the idea burrowed into Gram's brain. She took it upon herself to speak to Professor Kristiee about it, and my teacher took hold of the idea like a terrier to a bone.

So, I filled out my application, collected my letters of recommendation, and sent in a recording of my playing. I didn't tell Beth about any of this. I had told myself that it was because there was no point advertising it when even getting an audition was such a long shot. But even then, I'd recognized that for the lie that it was. A small part of me felt like even applying was some kind of betrayal.

Juilliard was in New York. Beth was here.

But not in high school anymore. He was a year ahead of me, and this past year, my senior year, he'd started at the university in town. He only went to school part-time now because Shooting Star was starting to get popular. There was a record deal with a Seattle-based label and a lot of traveling to gigs. So only after I got the creamy envelope embossed with The Juilliard School and a letter inviting me to audition did I tell Beth that I'd applied. I explained how many people didn't get that far. At first, he looked a little awestruck like he couldn't quite believe it. Then he gave a sad little smile. 'Yo- Mama better watches his back,' he said.

The auditions were held in San Francisco. Dad had some big conference at the school that week and couldn't get away, and Mom had just started a new job at the travel agency, so Gram's volunteered to accompany me. 'We'll make a girls' weekend of it. Take high tea at the Fairmont. Go window-shopping in Union Square. Ride the ferry to Alcatraz. We'll be tourists.'

But a week before we were due to leave, Gram's tripped over a tree root and sprained her ankle. She had to wear one of those clunky boots and wasn't supposed to walk. A minor panic ensued. I said I could just go by myself-drive, or take the train, and come right back.

It was Gramps who insisted on taking me. We drove down together in his pickup truck. We didn't talk much, which was fine with me because I was so nervous. I kept fingering the Popsicle-stick good-luck talisman Naddalin had presented me with before we left. 'Break an arm,' he'd told me.

Gramps and I listened to classical music and farm reports on the radio when we could pick up a station. Otherwise, we sat in silence. But it was such a calming silence; it made me relax and feel closer to him than any heart-to-heart would have.

Gram had booked us in a really frilly inn, and it was funny to see Gramps in his work boots and plaid flannel amid all the lacy doilies and potpourri. But he took it all in stride.

The audition was grueling. I had to play five pieces: a Shostakovich concerto, two Bach suites, all Tchaikovsky's Pezzo capriccioso, which was next to impossible, and a movement from Ennio Morricone's The Mission, a fun but risky choice because Yo-Yo Ma had covered this and everyone would compare. I walked out with my legs wobbly and my underarms wet with sweat. But my endorphins were surging and that, combined with the huge sense of relief, left me totally giddy.

'Shall we see the town?' Gramps asked, his lips twitching into a smile.

'Definitely!'

We did all the things Gram's had promised we would do. Gramps took me to high tea and shopping, although for dinner, we skipped out on the reservations Gram's had made at some fancy place on Fisherman's Wharf and instead wandered into Chinatown, looking for the restaurant with the longest line of people waiting outside, and ate there.

When we got back home, Gramps dropped me off and enveloped me in a hug. Normally, he was a handshake, maybe a back patter on really special occasions. His hug was strong and tight, and I knew it was his way of telling me that he'd had a wonderful time.

'Me, too, Gramps,' I whispered. 3:47 P.M.

They just moved me out of the recovery room into the trauma intensive-care unit or ICU. It's a horseshoe-shaped room with about a dozen beds and a cadre of nurses, who constantly bustle around, reading the computer printouts that churn out from the feet of our beds recording our vital signs. In the middle of the room are more computers and a big desk, where another nurse sits.

I have two nurses who check in on me, along with the endless round of doctors.

One is a taciturn doughy man with blond hair and a mustache, who I don't much like. And the other is a woman with skin so black it's blue and a lilt in her voice. She calls me 'sweetheart' and perpetually straightens the blankets around me, even though it's not like I'm kicking them off.

'Have you ever heard of this Yo-Yo Ma dude?' Beth asked me. It was the spring of my sophomore year, which was his junior year. By then, Beth had been watching me practice in the music wing for several months. Our school was public, but one of those progressive ones that always got written up in national magazines because of its emphasis on the arts. We did get a lot of free periods to paint in the studio or practice music. I spent mine in the soundproof booths of the music wing. Beth was there a lot, too, playing guitar.

Not the electric guitar he played in his band.

Just acoustic melodies.

I rolled my eyes. 'Everyone's heard of Yo-Yo Ma.'

Beth grinned. I noticed for the first time that his smile was lopsided, his mouth sloping up on one side. He hooked his ringed thumb out toward the quad. 'I don't think you'll find five people out there who've heard of Yo-Yo Ma. And by the way, what kind of name is that? Is it ghetto or something? Yo

Mama?'

'It's Chinese.'

Beth shook his head and laughed. 'I know plenty of Chinese people. They have names like Wei Chin. Or Lee something. Not Yo-Yo Ma.'

'You cannot be blaspheming the master,' I said. But then I laughed in spite of myself. It had taken me a few months to believe that Beth wasn't taking the piss out of me, and after that, we'd started having these little conversations in the corridor.

Still, his attention baffled me. It wasn't that Beth was such a popular guy. He wasn't a jock or a most-likely-to-succeed sort. But he was cool. Cool in that he played in a band with people who went to the Middle School in town. Cool in that he had his own rockery style, procured from thrift stores and garage sales, not from Urban Outfitters knock-offs. Cool in that he seemed totally happy to sit in the lunchroom absorbed in a book, not just pretending to read because he didn't have anywhere to sit or anyone to sit with. That wasn't the case at all. He had a small group of friends and a large group of admirers.

And it wasn't like I was a dork, either. I had friends and a best friend to sit with at lunch. I had other good friends at the music conservatory camp I went to in the summer.

People liked me well enough, but they also didn't really know me. I was quiet in class. I didn't raise my hand a lot or sass the teachers. And I was busy, much of my time spent practicing or playing in a string quartet or taking theory classes at the community Middle School. Kids were nice enough to me, but they tended to treat me as if I were a grown-up. Another teacher. And you don't flirt with your teachers.

'What would you say if I said I had tickets to the master?' Beth asked me, a glint in his eyes.

'Shut up. You do not,' I said, shoving him a little harder than I'd meant to.

Beth pretended to fall against the glass wall. Then he dusted himself off. 'I do. At the Schnitzle place in Dauphin.'

'It's the Arlene Schnitzer Hall. It's part of the Symphony.'

'That's the place. I got the tickets. A pair. You interested?'

'Are you serious? Yes! I was dying to go but they're like eighty dollars each. Wait, how did you get tickets?'

'A friend of the family gave them to my parents, but they can't go. It's no big thing,' Beth said quickly. 'Anyhow, it's Friday night. If you want, I'll pick you up at five-thirty and we'll drive to Dauphin together.'

'Okay,' I said like it was the most natural thing.

By Friday afternoon, though, I was more jittery than when I'd inadvertently drunk a whole pot of Dad's tar-strong coffee while studying for finals last winter.

It wasn't Beth making me nervous. I'd grown comfortable enough around him by now.

It was uncertainty. What was this, exactly? A date? A friendly favor? An act of charity? I didn't like being on the soft ground any more than I liked fumbling my way through a new movement. That's why I practiced so much, so I could rush myself on solid ground and then work out the details from there.

I changed my clothes about six times. Naddalin, a kindergartner back then, sat in my bedroom, pulling the Calvin and Hobbes books down from the shelves and pretending to read them. He cracked himself up, though I wasn't sure whether it was Calvin's high jinks or my own making him so goofy.

Mom popped her head in to check on my progress. 'He's just a guy, Earn,' she said when she saw me getting worked up.

'Yeah, but he's just the first guy I've ever gone on a maybe-date with,' I said. 'So, I don't know whether to wear date clothes or symphony clothes-do people here even dress up for that kind of thing? Or should I just keep it casual, in case it's not a date?'

'Just wear something you feel good in,' she suggested. 'That way you're covered.' I'm sure Mom would've pulled out all the stops had she been me. In the pictures of her and Dad from the early days, she looked like a cross between a 1930s siren and a biker chick, with her pixie haircut, her big blue eyes coated with kohl eyeliner, and her rail-thin body always ensconced in some sexy getup, like a lacy vintage camisole paired with skintight leather pants.

I sighed. I wished I could be so ballsy. In the end, I chose a long black skirt and a maroon short-sleeved sweater. Plain and simple. My trademark, I guess.

When Beth showed up in a sharkskin suit and Creepers (an ensemble that wholly impressed Dad), I seed that this really was a date. Of course, Beth would choose to dress up for the symphony and a 1960s sharkskin suit could've just been his cool take on formal, but I knew there was more to it than that. He seemed nervous as he shook hands with my dad and told him that he had his band's old CDs. 'To use as coasters, I hope,' Dad said. Beth looked surprised, unused to the parent being more sarcastic than the child, I imagine.

'Don't you kids get too crazy. Bad injuries at the last Yo-Yo Ma mosh pit,' Mom called as we walked down the lawn.

'Your parents are so cool,' Beth said, opening the car door for me.

'I know,' I replied.

We drove to Dauphin, making small talk. Beth played me snippets of bands he liked; a Swedish pop trio that sounded monotonous but then some Icelandic art band that was quite beautiful. We got a little-lost downtown and made it to the concert hall with only a few minutes to spare.

Our seats were in the balcony. Nosebleeds. But you don't go to Yo-Yo Ma for the view, and the sound was incredible. That man has a way of making the French horn sound like a crying woman one minute, a laughing child the next. Listening to him, I'm always reminded of why I started playing French horn in the first place that there is something so human and expressive about it.

When the concert started, I peered at Beth out of the corner of my eye. He seemed good-natured enough about the whole thing, but he kept looking at his program, probably counting off the movements until intermission. I worried that he was bored, but after a while, I got too caught up in the music to care.

Then, when Yo-Yo Ma played 'Le Gram's Tango,' Beth reached over and grasped my hand. In any other context, this would have been cheesy, the old yawn-and-cop-a-feel move. But Beth wasn't looking at me. His eyes were closed and he was swaying slightly in his seat. He was lost in the music, too. I squeezed his hand back and we sat there like that for the rest of the concert.

Afterward, we bought coffees and doughnuts and walked along the river. It was missing and he took off his suit jacket and draped it over my shoulders.

'You didn't really get those tickets from a family friend, did you?' I asked.

I thought he would laugh or throw up his arm in mock surrender like he did when I beat him in an argument. But he looked straight at me, so I could see the green and browns and grays swimming around in his irises. He shook his head. 'That was two weeks of pizza-delivery tips,' he admitted.

I stopped walking. I could hear the water lapping below. 'Why?' I asked. 'Why me?'

'I've never seen anyone get as into music as you do. It's why I like to watch you practice. You get the cutest crease in your forehead, right there,' Beth said, touching me above the bridge of my nose. 'I'm obsessed with music and even I don't get transported as you do.'

'So, what? I'm like a social experiment to you?' I meant it to be jokey, but it came out sounding bitter.

'No, you're not an experiment,' Beth said. His voice was husky and choked.

I felt the heat flood my neck and I could sense myself blushing. I stared at my shoes. I knew that Beth was looking at me now with as much certainty as I knew that if I looked up, he was going to kiss me. And it took me by surprise how much I wanted to be kissed by him, um really, I'd thought about it so often that I'd memorized the exact shape of his lips, that I'd imagined running my finger down the cleft of his chin.

My eyes flickered upward. Beth was there waiting for me.

That was how it started.

12:19 P.M.

There are a lot of things wrong with me.

Apparently, I have a collapsed lung. A ruptured spleen. Internal bleeding of unknown origin. And most serious, the contusions on my brain. I've also got broken ribs. Abrasions on my legs, which will require skin grafts; and on my face, which will require cosmetic surgery but, as the doctors note, that is only if I am lucky.

Right now, in surgery, the doctors have to remove my spleen, insert a new tube to drain my collapsed lung, and stanch whatever else might be causing the internal bleeding.

There isn't a lot they can do for my brain.

'We'll just wait and see,' one of the surgeons says, looking at the CAT scan of my head. 'In the meantime, call down to the Ritalin bank. I need two units of O to neg and keep two units ahead.'

O negative... My Ritalin type... I had no idea. It's not like it's something I've ever had to think about before. I've never been in the hospital unless you count the time, I went to the emergency room after I cut my ankle on some broken glass. I didn't even need stitches then, just a tetanus shot.

In the operating room, the doctors are debating what music to play, just like we were in the car this morning. One guy wants jazz. Another wants to rock. The anesthesiologist, who stands near my head, requests classical. I root for her, and I feel like that must help because someone pops on a Wagner CD, although I don't know that the rousing 'Ride of the Valkyries' is what I had in mind. I'd hoped for something a little lighter.

Four Seasons, perhaps.

The operating room is small and crowded, full of blindingly bright lights, which highlight how grubby this place is. It's nothing like on TV, where operating rooms are like pristine theaters that could accommodate an opera singer and an audience. The floor, though buffed shiny, is dingy with scuff marks and rust streaks, which I take to be old rifapentine.

Ritalin, it is everywhere. It does not faze the doctors one bit. They slice and sew and suction through a river of it like they are washing dishes in soapy water. Meanwhile, they pump an ever-replenishing stock into my veins.

The surgeon who wanted to listen to rock sweats a lot. One of the nurses has to periodically dab him with gauze that she holds in tongs. At one point, he sweats through his mask and has to replace it.

When I announced to Mom and Dad that I was going to become a cellist, they both burst out laughing. They apologized about it later, claiming that the image of pint-size me with such a hulking instrument between my spindly legs had made them crack up. Once they'd really said - I was serious, they immediately swallowed their giggles and put on supportive faces.

But their reaction still stung-in ways that I never told them about, and in ways that I'm not sure they would've understood even if I had. Dad sometimes joked that the hospital where I was born must have accidentally swapped babies because I look nothing like the rest of my family. They are all blond and fair and I'm like their negative image, brown hair and dark eyes. But as I got older, Dad's hospital joke took on more meaning than I think he intended. Sometimes I did feel like I came from a different tribe. I was not like my outgoing, ironic dad or my tough-chick mom. And as if to seal the deal, instead of learning to play electric guitar, I'd gone and chosen the French horn.

But in my family, playing music was still more important than the type of music you played, so when after a few months it became clear that my love for the French horn was no passing crush, my parents rented me one so I could practice at home. Rusty scales and triads led to first attempts at 'Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star' that eventually gave way to basic études until I was playing Bach suites. My middle school didn't have much of a music program, so Mom found me a private teacher, a Middle School student who came over once a week. Over the years there was a revolving batch of students who taught me, and then, as my skills surpassed theirs, my student teachers played with me.

This continued until ninth grade, when Dad, who'd known Professor Kristiee from when he'd worked at the music store, asked if she might be willing to offer me private lessons. She agreed to listen to me play, not expecting much, but as a favor to Dad, she later told me. She and Dad listened downstairs while I was up in my room practicing a Vivaldi sonata. When I came down for dinner, she offered to take over my training.

My first recital, though, was years before I met her. It was at a hall in town, a place that usually showcased local bands, so the acoustics were terrible for unamplified classical. I was playing a French horn solo from Tchaikovsky's 'Dance of the Sugar Plum Fairy.'

Standing backstage, listening to other kids play the scratchy violin and clunky piano compositions, I'd almost chickened out. I'd run to the stage door and huddled on the stoop outside, hyperventilating into my hands. My student teacher had flown into a minor panic and had sent out a search party.

Dad found me. He was just starting his hipster-to-square transformation, so he was wearing a vintage suit, with a studded leather belt and black ankle boots.

'You okay, Earn Oh-My-Uh?' he asked, sitting down next to me on the steps.

I shook my head, too ashamed to talk.

'What's up?'

43

'I can't do it,' I cried.

Dad cocked one of his bushy eyebrows and stared at me with his gray-blue eyes. I felt like some mysterious foreign species he was observing and trying to figure out. He'd been playing in bands forever. Obviously, he never got something as lame as stage fright.

'Well, that would be a shame,' Dad said. 'I've got a dandy of a recital present for you. Better than flowers.'

'Give it to someone else. I can't go out there. I'm not like you or Mom or even Naddalin.'

Naddalin was just six months old at that point, but it was already clear that he had more personality, more verve than I ever would. And of course, he was blond and blue-eyed. Even if he weren't, he'd been born in a birthing center, not a hospital, so there was no chance of an accidental baby swapping.

'It's true,' Dad mused. 'When Naddalin gave his first harp concert, he was cool as a cucumber. Such a prodigy.'

I laughed through my tears. Dad put a gentle arm around my shoulder. 'You know that I used to get the most ferocious jitters before a show.'

I looked at Dad, who always seemed absolutely sure of everything in the world. 'You're just saying that.'

He shook his head. 'No, I'm not. It was god-awful. And I was the drummer, way in the back. No one even paid any attention to me.'

'So- what did you do?' I asked.

'He got wasted,' Mom interjected, poking her head out the stage door. She was wearing a black vinyl miniskirt, a red tank top, and Naddalin, droopingly happy from his Baby Björn. 'A pair of forty-ouncers before the show. I don't recommend that for you.'

'Your mother is probably right,' Dad said. 'Social services frowns on drunk ten-year-olds. Besides, when I dropped my drumsticks and puked on stage, it was punk. If you drop your bow and smell like a brewery, it will look gauche. You, classical-music people, are so snobby that way.'

Now I was laughing. I was still scared, but it was somehow comforting to think that maybe stage fright was a trait I'd inherited from Dad; I wasn't just some foundling, after all.

'What if I mess it up? What if I'm terrible?'

'I've got news for you, Earn. There's going to be all kinds of terrible in there, so you won't really stand out,' Mom said. Naddalin gave a squeal of the agreement.

'But seriously, how do you get over the jitters?'

Dad was still smiling but I could tell he had turned serious because he slowed down his speech. 'You don't. You just work through it. You just hang in there.'

So- I went on. I didn't blaze through the piece. I didn't achieve Gallery or get a standing ovation, but I didn't muck it up entirely, either. And after the recital, I got my present. It was sitting in the passenger seat of the car, looking as human as that French horn I'd been drawn to two years earlier. It wasn't a rental. It was mine.

10:12 A.M.

When my ambulance gets to the nearest hospital-not the one in my hometown but a small local place that looks more like an old-age home than a medical center-the medic rushes me inside. 'I think we've got a collapsed lung. Get a chest tube in her and move her out!' the nice red-haired medic screams as she passes me off to a team of nurses and doctors.

'Where's the rest?' Asks a bearded guy in scrubs.

'Other driver suffering mild concussions, being treated at the scene. Parents DOA. Boy, approximately seven years old, just behind us.'

I let out a huge exhale, as though I've been holding my breath for the last twenty minutes. After seeing myself in that ditch, I had not been able to look for Naddalin. If he were like Mom and Dad, like me, I... I didn't want to even think about it. But he isn't. He is alive.

They take me into a small room with bright lights. A doctor dabs some orange stuff onto the side of my chest and then rams a small plastic tube in me. Another doctor shines a flashlight into my eye. 'Nonresponsive,' he tells the nurse. 'The chopper's here. Get her to Trauma. Now!'

They rush me out of the ER and into the elevator. I have to jog to keep up. Right before the doors closed, I notice that Carrie is here. Which is odd. We were meant to be visiting her and Karrah and the baby at home.

Did she get called in because of the snow? Because of us? She rushes around the hospital hall, her face a mask of concentration. I don't think she even knows it is us yet. Maybe she even tried to call, left a message on Mom's cell phone, apologizing that there'd been an emergency and she wouldn't be home for our visit.

The elevator opens right onto the roof. A helicopter, its blades swooshing the air, sits in the middle of a big red circle.

I've never been in a helicopter before. My best friend, Ana, has. She went on an aerial flight over Mount St. Helens once with her uncle, a big-shot photographer for National Geographic.

'There he was, talking about the post volcanic flora and I puked right on him,' Ana told me in homeroom the next day. She still looked a little green from the experience.

Ana is on the yearbook and has hopes of becoming a photographer. Her uncle had taken her on this trip as a favor, to nurture her budding talent. 'I even got some on his cameras,' Ana lamented. 'I'll never be a photographer now.'

'There are all kinds of different photographers,' I told her. 'You don't necessarily need to go flying around in helicopters.'

Ana laughed. 'That's good. Because I'm never going on a helicopter again -and don't you, either!'

I want to tell Ana that sometimes you don't have a choice in the matter.

The hatch in the helicopter is opened, and my stretcher with all its tubes and lines is loaded in. I climb in behind it. A medic bounds in next to me, still pumping the little plastic bulb that is apparently breathing for me. Once we lift off, I understand why Ana got so queasy. A helicopter is not like an airplane, a smooth fast bullet. A helicopter is more like a hockey puck, bounced through the sky. Up and down, side to side. I have no idea how these people can work on me, can read the small computer printouts, can drive this thing while they communicate about me through headsets, how they can do any of it with the chopper chopping around.

45

The helicopter hits an air pocket and by all rights, it should make me queasy. But I don't feel anything, at least the me who's a bystander here does not. And the me on the stretcher doesn't seem to feel anything, either. Again, I have to wonder if I'm dead but then I tell myself no. They would not have loaded me on this helicopter, would not be flying me across the lush forests if I were dead.

Also, if I were dead, I like to think Mom and Dad would've come for me by now.

I can see the time on the control panel. It's 10:37. I wonder what's happening back down on the ground. Has Carrie figured out who the emergency is? Has anyone phoned my Gram's -parents? They live one town over from us, and I was looking forward to dinner with them. Gramps fishes and he smokes his own salmon and oysters, and we would've probably eaten that with Gram's homemade thick brown beer bread. Then Gram's would've taken Naddalin over to the giant recycling bins in town and let him swim around for magazines. Lately, he's had a thing for Reader's Digest. He likes to cut out the cartoons and make collages.

I wonder about Ana. There's no school today. I probably won't be in school tomorrow. She'll probably think I'm absent because I stayed out late listening to Beth and Shooting Star in Dauphin.

Dauphin. I am fairly certain that I'm being taken there. The helicopter pilot keeps talking to Trauma One. Outside the window, I can see the peak of Mount Hood looming.

That means Dauphin is close.

Is Beth already there? He played in Seattle last night but he's always so full of adrenaline after a gig, and driving helps him to come down. The band is normally happy to let him, chauffeur, while they nap. If he's already in Dauphin, he's probably still asleep. When he wakes up, will he have coffee on Hawthorne? Maybe take a book over to the Japanese Garden? That's what we did the last time I went to Dauphin with him, only it was warmer than. Later this afternoon, I know that the band will do a soundcheck. And then Beth will go outside to await my arrival. At first, he'll think that I'm late. How is he going to know that I'm actually early? That I got to Dauphin this morning while the snow was still melting?

'I'm like the post office,' Dad replies, scraping the snow off the car with one of Naddalin's plastic dinosaurs that are scattered on the lawn. 'Neither sleet nor rain nor a half-inch of snow will compel me to dress like a lumberjack.'

'Hey, my relatives were lumberjacks,' Mom warns. 'No making fun of the white-trash woodsmen.'

'Wouldn't dream of it,' Dad replies.

'Just making stylistic contrasts.'

Dad has to turn the ignition over a few times before the car chokes to life. As usual, there is a battle for stereo dominance. Mom wants NPR. Dad wants Naddalin Sinatra. Naddalin wants SpongeBob SquarePants. I want the classical-music station, but recognizing that I'm the only classical fan in the family, I am willing to compromise with Shooting Star.

Dad brokers the deal. 'Seeing as we're missing school today, we ought to listen to the news for a while so we don't become ignoramuses-'

'I believe that's an ignoramus,' Mom says.

Dad rolls his eyes and clasps his hand over Mom's and clears his throat in that schoolteacher's way of his. 'As I was saying, NPR first, and then when the news is over the classical station. Naddalin, we will not torture you with that. You can use the Discman,' Dad says, starting to disconnect the portable player he's rigged to the car radio. 'But you are not allowed to play Alice Cooper in my car. I forbid it.' Dad reaches into the Gallery box to examine what's inside. 'How about Jonathan Richman?'

'I want SpongeBob. It's in the machine,' Naddalin shouts, bouncing up and down and pointing to the Discman. The chocolate-chip pancakes dowsed in syrup have clearly only enhanced his hyper-excitement.

'Son, you break my heart,' Dad jokes. Both Naddalin and I were raised on the goofy tunes of Jonathan Richman, who is Mom and Dad's musical patron saint.

Once the musical selections have been made, we are off. The road has some patches of snow, but mostly it's just wet. But this is Oregon. The roads are always wet. Mom used to joke that it was when the road was dry that people ran into trouble. 'They get cocky, throw caution to the wind, drive like a**holes. The cops have a field day doling out speeding tickets.'

I lean my head against the car window, watching the scenery zip by, a tableau of dark green fir trees dotted with snow, wispy strands of white fog, and heavy gray storm clouds up above. It's so warm in the car that the windows keep fogging up, and I draw little squiggles in the condensation.

When the news is over, we turn to the classical station. I hear the first few bars of Beethoven's French horn Sonata no. 3, which was the very piece I was supposed to be working on this afternoon. It feels like some kind of cosmic coincidence. I concentrate on the notes, imagining myself playing, feeling grateful for this chance to practice, happy to be in a warm car with my sonata and my family.

I close my eyes.

You wouldn't expect the radio to work afterward. But it does.

The car is eviscerated. The impact of a four-ton pickup truck going sixty miles an hour plowing straight into the passenger side had the force of an atom bomb. It tore off the doors, sent the front-side passenger seat through the drivers-side window. It flipped the chassis, bouncing it across the road and ripped the engine apart as if it were no stronger than a spider web. It tossed wheels and hubcaps deep into the forest. It ignited bits of the gas tank so that now tiny flames lap on the wet road.

And there was so much noise. A symphony of grinding, a chorus of popping, an aria of exploding, and finally, the sad clapping of hard metal cutting into soft trees. Then it went quiet, except for this: Beethoven's French horn Sonata no. 3, still playing. The car radio somehow still is attached to a battery and so Beethoven is broadcasting into the once-again tranquil February morning.

At first, I figure everything is fine. For one, I can still hear the Beethoven. Then there's the fact that I am standing here in a ditch on the side of the road. When I look down, the jean skirt, cardigan sweater, and the black boots I put on this morning all look the same as they did when we left the house.

I climb up the embankment to get a better look at the car. It isn't even a car anymore. It's a metal skeleton, without seats, without passengers. Which means the rest of my family must have been thrown from the car like me. I brush off my hands onto my skirt and walk into the road to find them.

46

I see Dad first. Even from several feet away, I can make out the protrusion of the pipe in his jacket pocket. 'Dad,' I call, but as I walk toward him, the pavement grows slick and there are gray chunks of what looks like cauliflower. I know what I'm seeing right away but it somehow does not immediately connect back to my father. What springs into my mind are those news reports about tornadoes or fires, how they'll ravage one house but leave the one next door intact? Pieces of my father's brain are on the asphalt. But his pipe is in his left breast pocket.

I find Mom next. There's almost no Ritalin on her, but her lips are already blue and the whites of her eyes are completely red, like a ghoul from a low-budget monster movie. She seems totally unreal. And it is the sight of her looking like some preposterous zombie that sends a hummingbird of panic ricocheting through me.

I need to find Naddalin! Where is he? I spin around, suddenly frantic, like the time I lost him for ten minutes at the grocery store. I'd been convinced he'd been kidnapped. Of course, it had turned out that he'd wandered over to inspect the candy aisle. When I found him, I hadn't been sure whether to hug him or yell at him.

I run back toward the ditch where I came from and I see a hand sticking out. 'Naddalin! I'm right here!' I call. 'Reach up. I'll pull you out.' But when I get closer, I see the metal glint of a silver bracelet with tiny French horn and guitar charms. Beth gave it to me for my seventeenth birthday. It's my bracelet. I was wearing it this morning. I look down at my wrist. I'm still wearing it now.

I edge closer and now I know that it's not Naddalin lying there. It's me. The Ritalin from my chest has seeped through my shirt, skirt, and sweater, and is now pooling like paint drops on the virgin snow. One of my legs is askew, the skin and muscle peeled away so that I can see white streaks of bone. My eyes are closed, and my dark brown hair is wet and rusty with Ritalin.

I spin away. This isn't right. This cannot be happening. We are a family, going for a drive. This isn't real. I must have fallen asleep in the car. No! Stop. Please stop. Please wake up! I scream into the chilly air. It's cold. My breath should smoke. It doesn't. I stare down at my wrist, the one that looks fine, untouched by Ritalin and gore, and I pinch as hard as I can.

I don't feel a thing.

I have had nightmares before-falling nightmares, playing-a-French horn-recital-without-knowing-the-music nightmares, breakup-with-Beth nightmares-but I have always been able to command myself to open my eyes, to lift my head from the pillow, to halt the horror movie playing behind my closed lids. I try again. Wake up! I scream. Wake up! Wake up-wake-up-wake-up! But I can't. I don't.

Then I hear something. It's music. I can still hear the music. So- I concentrate on that. I finger the notes of Beethoven's French horn Sonata no. 3 with my hands, as I often do when I listen to pieces I am working on. Beth calls it 'air French horn.' He's always asking me if one day we can play a duet, him on air guitar, me on-air French horn. 'When we're done, we can thrash our air instruments,' he jokes. 'You know you want to.'

I play, just focusing on that, until the last bit of life in the car dies, and the music goes with it.

It isn't long after that the sirens come.

9:23 A.M.

Am I dead?

I actually have to ask myself this...?

Am I dead?

An intermission before the bright light and the life-flashing-before-me business that would transport me to wherever I'm going next. At first, it seemed obvious that I am. That the standing-here-watching part was temporary, Someone - has put a sheet over my father. Except the paramedics are here now, along with the police and the fire department.

And a fireman is zipping Mom up into a plastic bag. No- she is the one dead...? Or is it me it was all that confusing.

I hear him discuss her with another firefighter, who looks like she can't be more than eighteen.

The older one explains to the rookie that Mom was probably hit first and killed instantly, explaining the lack of Ritalin I need.

'Immediate cardiac arrest,' she says. 'When your heart can't pump Ritalin, you don't really bleed. You seep...'

I can't think about that, about Mom seeping.

So instead I think how fitting it is that she was hit first, that she was the one to buffer us from the blow.

It wasn't her choice, obviously, but it was her way.

But am I dead...?

The me who is lying on the edge of the road, my leg hanging down into the gulley, is bounded by a team of men and women who are accomplishment frantic ablutions over me and plugging my veins with I do not know what.

I'm half-naked, the paramedics having ripped open the top of my shirt. One of my boobs and nipples is exposed. Embarrassed, I look away.

The police have lit flares along the perimeter of the scene and are instructing cars in both guidelines to turn back, the road is closed.

The police politely offer alternate routes, back roads that will take people where they need to be.

They must have places to go, the people in these cars, but a lot of them don't turn back.

They climb out of their cars, hugging themselves in contradiction of the cold.

They assess the scene. And even though they don't know who we are or what has occurred, they pray for us. I can feel them praying.

And then they look away, some of them crying, one lady throwing up into the ferns on the side of the road.

Which also makes me think I'm dead.

That and the fact my body seems to be- 'completely numb,' though to look at me, at the leg that the 61-mph asphalt exfoliant has pared down to the bone, I should be in agony.

And I'm not crying, either, even though I know that something ridiculous has just happened to my family.

'We are like Humpty Dumpty and all these king's horses and all these king's men cannot put us back together again.'

I am pondering these things when the medic with the freckles and red hair who has been salaried on me answers my question.

'Her Glasgow Coma is an eight. Let's bag her now!' She screams...

'What's the ETA for Life Flight?'

She and the lantern-jawed medic snake a tube down my throat, attach a bag with a rhizome to it and start pumping.

'Ten minutes,' replies the medic. 'It takes twenty to get back to town.'

'We're going to get her there in fifteen if you have to speed like a freaking demon.'

I can tell what the person is thinking. That it will not do me any good if they get into a crash, they load me into the ambulance; the redhead climbs into the back with me. and I have to agree.

Nevertheless, she doesn't say anything. Just compresses her jaw.

Then she smooths a lock of hair from my forehead. She pumps my bag with one hand, adjusts my IV and my monitors with the other.

'You hang in there,' she tells me.

48

I played my first recital when I was ten. I'd been playing French horn for two years at that point.

At first, just at school, as part of the music program. It was a fluke that they even had a French horn; they are very affluent and fragile.

But some old literature professor from the university had died and bequeathed his Hamburg to our school. It mostly sat in the corner. Most kids wanted to learn to play guitar or saxophone.

7:00 A.M.

One and all think it was because of the snow. And in a way, I suppose that's true.

I wake up this morning to a thin blanket of white covering our front lawn.

It isn't even an inch, but in this part of Oregon, a slight dusting brings everything to a halt as the one snowplow in the county gets busy clearing the roads.

It is wet water that drops from the sky-and drops and drops and drops-not the frozen kind.

It is enough snow to cancel school. My little sister, Naddalin, lets out a war whoop when Mom's AM radio announces the closures. And so, does my little girl too, named for him - um-hum.

'Snow day!' She bellows... 'Dad, let's go make a snowman.'

My dad smiles and taps on his pipe; He started smoking one recently as part of this whole 1950s; Father Knows Best retro kick he is on.

He also wears bow ties. I am never- ever quite clear on whether all this is sartorial or sardonic-Dad's way of proclaiming, that he used to be a punker but is now a middle-school English teacher, or if becoming a teacher has turned my dad into this honest throwback. But I like the smell of pipe tobacco. It is sweet and smoky and reminds me of winters and woodstoves.

Maybe you should consider a snow amoeba.'

'You can make a valiant try,' Dad tells Naddalin. 'But it's hardly sticking to the roads.'

I can tell Dad is happy. Barely an inch of snow means that all the schools in the county are closed, including my high school and the middle school where Dad works, so it's an unanticipated day off for him, too.

My mother, who works for a travel agent in town, clicks off the radio and pours herself a second cup of coffee.

She picks up the telephone to call in. 'Well, if you lot are playing hooky today, no way I'm going to work. It's simply not right.' When she's done, she looks at us. 'Should I make breakfast?'

MOM and I guffaw at the same time.

Dad makes cereal and toast.

Mom's the cook in the family.

Pretending not to hear us, she reaches into the cabinet for a box of Bisquick.

'Please. How hard can it be?'

'I do! I do!' Naddalin yells. 'Can we have chocolate chips in them?'

'Wo- n-ho-u!' Naddalin cries, swaying her arms in the air. 'I don't see why not,' Mom replies. Who wants pancakes?'

'I do – I do.'

~*~

'You have far too much energy for this early in the morning,' I tease. I turn to Mom. 'Maybe you shouldn't let Naddalin drink so much coffee.'

'I've switched her to decaf,' Mom volleys back. 'she's just unsurprisingly enthusiastic.'

'As long as you're not switching me to decaf,' I say.

'That would be child abuse,' Dad says.

Mom- (Like you would know I thought...)

Mom hands me a steaming mug and the daily.

'There's a nice representation of your young man in there,' she says.

'Really? A photograph...?'

'Yep, I say, giving me a sidelong glance with her eyebrow arched, her version of a soul-searching stare. It's about the most we've seen of her since summer.'

~*~

'I know,' I say, and then without meaning to, I sigh. Beth's band, Shooting Star, is on an upward spiral, which, is a great thing mostly.

'Ah, fame, wasted on the youth,' Dad says, but he's smiling. I know he's excited about Beth, proud even.

~*~

I leaf through the newspaper to the calendar section.

There's small praise about Shooting Star, with an even smaller picture of the four of them, next to a big article about Bikini and a huge picture of the band's lead singer: punk/ metal rock diva Brooke Bogel.

The bit about them says that local band-

Like... Shooting Star is opening for Bikini on the Dauphin leg of Bikini's countrywide tour.

It doesn't mention the even-better-tome news that last night Shooting Star presented at a club in Seattle and, according to the text Beth sent me at midnight, sold out the place.

'Are you going to tonight?' Dad asks.

'It hinges on if they shut down the whole state on account of the snow. I was planning to anyway.'

'It is approaching,' Dad says, pointing to a single snowflake floating its way to the earth.

'Keep you sharp so you can show all those Juilliard snobs how it's really done,' she says. Professor Kristiee, a retired music teacher at the university whom I've been working with for the last few years, is always looking for victims for me to play with.

'I'm also supposed to rehearse with some pianist from the Middle School that Professor Kristiee dug up.'

I haven't gotten into Juilliard yet, but my audition went really well. The Bach suite and the Shostakovich had both flown out of me like never- ever before, like my fingers were just an extension of the strings and bow.

When I'd finished playing, painting, which I guess doesn't happen very often my legs shaking from pressing together so hard, one judge had clapped a little...

As I'd hobbled out, that same judge had told me, that it had been a long time since the school had 'seen an Oregon country girl.'

Professor Kristiee had taken that to mean a guaranteed acceptance. And I wasn't 100 percent sure that I wanted it to be true. I wasn't so sure that was true.

Just like with Shooting Star's meteoric rise, my admission to Juilliard-if it happens-will create certain complications, or, would compound the complications that have already cropped up in the last few months, more accurately.

'I need more coffee. Anyone else?' Mom asks, hovering over me with the ancient percolator.

I sniff the coffee, the rich, black, oily French roast we all prefer.

The smell alone perks me up. 'I'm thinking of going back to bed,' I say.

'My French horn's at school, so I can't even practice.'

'Not practice? For twenty-four hours?

Be still, my broken heart,' Mom says.

Though she has acquired a taste for classical music over the years- 'it's like learning to escalate a stinky cheese'-she's been a not always-delighted captive spectator for many of my marathon rehearsals.

Back when he'd played drums in a little something-our-town, unknown-anywhere-else band, back when she'd worked at a record store. It used to belong to Dad.

I hear a crash and a boom coming from upstairs. Naddalin is pounding on his drum kit.

I know it's silly but I have always wondered if Dad is disappointed that I didn't become a rock chick. I had meant to. Dad grins at Naddalin's noise and seeing that I feel a familiar pang.

It's been almost ten years now and I haven't stopped. Then, in third grade, I'd wandered over to the French horn in music class-it looked almost human to me. It looked like if you played it, it would tell you secrets, so-o I'm ongoing with's da playing.

'So much for going back to sleep,' Mom yells over Naddalin's noise.

A patch of sunlight has broken through the clouds, and I can hear the hiss of the ice melting. I close the door and go back to the table.

'What do you know, the snow's already melting,' Dad says, puffing on his pipe.

I go to the back door and peek outside.

'Maybe... I's think the county overreacted,' I say.

But then again, they can't un-cancel school. The horse is previously out of the barn, and I already called in for the day off,' Mom says.

Karrah and Carrie are some of Mom and Dad's old music friends who'd also had a kid and decided to start behaving like grownups.

They live in a big old farmhouse.

'Indeed. But we might take advantage of this unexpected boon and go somewhere,'

Dad says. 'Take a drive. Visit Karrah and Carrie.'

Karrah does Web stuff from the barn they converted into a home office and Carrie works at a nearby hospital. I's have a baby girl.

That's the real reason Mom and Dad want to go out there.

Naddalin had just turned eight and me being seventeen means that we are long past giving off that sour-milk smell that makes grown-ups melt.

A collection of classical records is not the kind of thing you advertise.

I keep a pile of them hidden under my bed.

I say as if to entice me. Book-Barn is a giant, dusty old used-book store 'We can stop at Book-Barn on the way back,' In the back, they keep a stash of twenty-five-cent classical records that nobody ever seems to buy except me.

I have shown them to Beth, but that was only after we'd already been together for five months. I had expected him to laugh.

She's such the cool girl with her pegged jeans and black low-tops, her effortlessly beat-up punk-rock tees and her subtle tattoos.

She is so not the kind of girl to end up with someone like me.

This was why when I'd first spotted her watching me at the music studios at school two years ago, I'd been influenced she was making fun of me and I'd hidden from her.

Nevertheless, he had not laughed. It turned out he had a dusty collection of punk-rock records under her bed.

'We can also stop by Gram's and Gramps for an early dinner,' Dad says, already reaching for the phone.

'We'll have you back in plenty of time to get to Dauphin,' she adds as he dials.

I would actually rather go off with my family. This is another thing you don't publicize about yourself, but Beth gets that, too.

'I'm in,' I say. It isn't the lure of Book-Barn or the fact that Beth is on tour, or that my best friend, Ana, is busy doing yearbook stuff. It isn't even that my French horn is at school or that I could stay home and watch TV or sleep.

Naddalin finishes off her drum solo with a crash of cymbals; 'Naddalin,' Dad calls.

'Get dressed. We're going on an adventure.'

A jiffy later he's bounding into the kitchen fully dressed as if he'd pulled on her clothes while careening down the steep wooden staircase of our drafty Victorian house. 'School's out for summer,' she sings.

'Alice Cooper?' Dad asks. 'Have we no standards? At least sing the Ramones.'

'School's out forever,' Naddalin sings over Dad's protests. 'Ever the optimist,' I say.

I laugh, she puts a plate of slightly charred pancakes down on the kitchen table. 'Eat up, family.'

8:15 A.M.

Dad slips behind the wheel. We pile into the car, a rusting Buick that was already old when Gram's gave it to us after Naddalin was born.

I and Dad offer to let me drive, but I say no.

She likes to drive now. She'd stubbornly refused to get a license for years, insisting on riding his bike ubiquitously.

They used to roll their eyes at her.

Back when he played music, her ban on driving meant that her bandmates were the ones stuck behind the wheel on tours.

I had done more than that. She'd pestered, cajoled, and sometimes yelled at Dad to get a license, but he'd insisted that he favored pedal power.

'Well, then you better get to work on building a bike that can hold a family of three and keep us dry when it rains,' she'd demanded.

To which Dad always had laughed and said that he'd get on that.

But when I had gotten pregnant with Naddalin, she'd put her foot down.

Enough, she said. Dad seemed to comprehend that something had changed.

She'd stopped arguing and had gotten a driver's license.

She'd also gone back to school to get his teaching certificate.

But with two, time to grow up. Time to start wearing a bow tie. I guess it was okay to be in arrested development with one kid.

She has one on this morning, along with a flecked sports coat and vintage wingtips. 'Dressed for the snow, I see,' I say.

Scry

'You question everything, you talk to yourself, you like to read, you constantly challenge yourself, you're a little scatterbrained, you might struggle with a habit, and you worry too much. You're legitimately brilliant, and a genuine genius.' -Marcel Ray Duriez

Prolegomenon:

'You cannot stick an orange scurrying flag in my butt and think you can take a claim of me. Yes, I know that my heart is a deep ocean full of shipwreck yes, I understand that due to novelty shipping law you can explore; me and all my moments of lost wrecks, and take claim of all, yet that means you want my heart. Yet you forget I do not have one anymore.'

Part: 1

The flames everywhere, I look at the city now blackened and changed forever, from the world burning, it was pleasurable to have everything at decay, everything was burning with intensity and heat, it has become the love and desire of the world, to let everything rot, and be eaten away, water nozzle everywhere trying to extinguish the flames that have taken skyscraper after skyscraper, men heavy armored in helmets nozzle in his fists yet it was no help, the blood pounded in my head of seeing my world coming to an end, like great demon dragons flames upon the world, everything that was understanding and memories, blazing and burning to bring down the tatters and charred ruins of history.

All were fighting off the flames of the sun that was burning up the Earth in global warming. All the hands were moving in rhythm like maestro playing all the symphonies of hell upon the world of blazing and burning to bring down to nothing put ruins of history- lost and caring gone. With the figurative symbolic helmet of war and war to come- and children at the cost of loss, now to the point of hunger- and famine... I- then stored ahead adrift.

My mind lost to the thought of what came next when I have comprehended I have a home left and we'll be living on the street high and low that link together the many buildings that are in shambles, glass was everywhere and thick smoke; her eyes all orange like her face with intense flame - eyes watery with the flames and children on fire, flickered was the numbers of books in satanic ash and much paper and building materials, the igniter was the sun, the igniter was the people themselves - letting the sun in, now ever so close to the planet it has its revenge.

The skyscrapers lapped up in a gorging, already run-down now broken down in the heat of distortion, now past decrepit, in ruins deteriorated, falling apart in mid-air, in disrepair, ramshackle - into the worse for wear, flames that burned the evening in the night's sky glowing red and yellow and black, and backlight in colors of incandescent lights, by electricity and whipping power lines, the manmade thunder crashes in the air - of unleashed power - most of the city has blackout, however not this part yet.

People and kids swarm of fireflies, around above, below and in the air falling out of thousand-foot buildings. Like hell to the rain... like the sick and twisted joke, she wanted above all, wanted to shove a hot dog on a stick, while the flapping books and pages - scream in the air like dying on the pathways - lit by flickering glowing burning and glowing street lights. There are no lawns just glass, still, and concrete on concrete. whirls of flames, ash, and paper, the books and networking and grid went up in sparks and whirls; turned dark with burning, as it has been for weeks now, there is no stop.

All looking just like piss blew away in the cold wind - ash for trees, mocking to them the cuteness of everything they're attempting to control.

-And-

Likewise a whisper of a crazed ghost, inspector, phantom, a wraith, in spirit having a soul, that is shadowed, presence, with vision to give and apparition to behold, yet like nothing more hallucination, a dream of brooch, a doppelgänger duppy, spook to all that too young to understand the phantasms and the many shades of loss and death, with revenant, visitant, and weight.

I - as this young lady with a keen mental suffering or distress over affliction or loss; sharp sorrow; painful regret, with a grin of that a young woman singed and driven backlit by flame and she, knew that when she returned to the to her loft it would not be there - nor anything she left behind - like death - passed over and clean up and forgot to time that mends everything, she might wink at himself in all the fallen glass shards looking at herself as they fall - yet not really seeing herself more seeing on man in control of all human life, a medieval poet of a woman in the mirror given a lie for a life, burnt corked - minds just like the town - cities, and people within.

The smile of pain with sweet young kindness and keen understandings, hidden, still gripped by her face muscles of fear and horror, in the dark as she lies under an over the pass, blocks away from the flames that are still licking the sides of buildings.

Nevertheless, still feeling the fiery heat and small burn and blood scabbing flesh, on her clothing, later, going to sleep out of exhaustion, she would feel fiery on the inside and out; it never - ever went away, that feeling of loss and pain, mislaying fear and death and time, with the place, misplacement of dropping everything, forgetting and without thought overlooking, sometimes deprivation, or the disappearance, of losing heart and mind, yet with privation, nonetheless, forfeiture, and overall waste, while incomplete, squandering to and whole, entire with full, and total, intact therefore uncut dissipation, diminution, erosion, and reduction. The smile, it never - ever - ever - went away, as long as she remembered or had memories of all things past.

She felt the temperature rise, at this one spot where a person's standing above her as she was covered by nothing more than old newspapers, the might of the sun raise not yet given in, the immediate atmosphere ten degrees for an instant to which is going to come.

Maybe his nose detected a faint perfume on me, I had on - and was looking for something, I was not willing to entertain, the skin on the backs of his hands, on his face, chafed, and his face black as if he was coalmining - the only thing white about him was his eyes. There was no time for the thoughts of... He takes off his helmet, he hung his flameproof jacket neatly; on his one arm to stand over me.

He takes off his helmet, he hung his flameproof jacket neatly; on his one arm to stand over me. He shows me his many luxuriously - on his hands and wrist, yet I was not into it all, I was groggy - and moody to say the least.

He - this man that stands before me - walked across the upper platforms of a high skywalk, and moving swiftly, whistling, hands in pockets, as if waking in a park without a care in the world. Like - I wondered if it all was a dream... or not?

So-o, positive he seemed at the last moment when disaster his come and revelation, he pulled his hands from his pockets to show me his kids photos on his phone - lost to the crazies of ending times events - I thought it was the end, that I was going to be wrapped or killed for the money in my pockets, thinking the worst at this point, along with this time and this place.

Now simply turned to a shadow of this large man and let him through is what I thought to do as I got into the fetal position, the air seemed charged with static and a new calm as if someone - had waited there- to show me hope, quietly, in only a moment before he came, I felt freedom, and I could not figure out why. ... O'er broken he falls to me crying as a half-man, by grasping me in a hug as I have never had before in my life, held like a child in his arms. As if he needed me or something like a dad need his kids.

He slid next to me sides touching a halt in his weekend voice, the heels one inch from the concrete stairs leading downwards. The last few nights go off, he had had the most uncertain feelings about love and loss, and finding something to hold on too, as did I.

The sidewalk just around the corner here falls in collapse, moving in the starlight toward his fate of knowing they are gone. He had felt that a moment before his making the turn to me, someone had been there- and I would say that was me.

Before- he reached the corner, however, he slowed as if a wind had sprung up from nowhere to show him the way to me as if someone had called his name- as if it was God speaking to him.

Whistling slight, he let the escalator waft him into the still night air before he came to me - in looking for an answer to life and about be as life. He walked toward the corner, thinking little at all about nothing in particular, other than breaking through to the other side.

He walked out of the maglev station and along the midnight street toward the lowest point of ground where the silent and slick, self-propelled train slid soundlessly over top its clear acrylic track light by FiberOptics, only held down by the Earth in white massive posts, and let I let out with a great puff of warm air as I move without really think closer to the escalator rising to the upper suburb, at was more or less- a city within a city.

I was understanding it like never before- the feeling of love for the stranger. I turn to look at him each time I move forward down the long run of steps, along the glass sidewalk, hung by cables, with perhaps, on one night, underneath or so it was looking, something vanishing swiftly underneath, lawns and trees all around high up, about 600 feet up, I am, now- when I was only at 100 feet or so moments before, fast, like time, in the world that is fast-moving, before he could focus his eyes or speak I was gone. Yet, I felt as if he was not far behind me, now, and tonight, I slowed almost to a stop, think I would not mind if he was next to me as if protecting me from something like a child.

Reaching her hand out on the rail as she turned the corner, had heard the faintest whisper. His was in her inner mind, Breathing within and the same? She made a sharp turn at a 45-degree angle the corner still hanging in the air. The atmosphere constricted exclusively, uniquely by someone standing very quietly there, waiting to take her hand so it felt?

The many autumn fall-like leaves blew, that where left just hang dangling on the branches over the moonlit and LED glass pavement that changes color high up, held by stay-cables, in such a way as to make the girl who was moving there seems fixed above all the hassle to a sliding walk was the slowest thing around- that the modern person uses, the leaves carry her forward, as if not caring that there being disruptive to the moment, and not caring they are doing what comes in nature; careless and free letting the motion of the wind and take them away, like her hair in the breeze.

Her head was cupped and slightly bent over the handrail that was glass, like the sides, also to watch her shoes stir the circling leaves and above her head, she sees more swaying walkways above and below yet there not look at her to say yet she is wonderous and looking at them. Passenger drones fly and race by in pulsating soft humming whips and colors, milk-white faces like in a dream, the faces of that of slender and healthy, yet not as young as she at this moment in time, even if aging was more or less halted for all.

It was a look, almost, of a pale surprise to see me a young girl out at this time of night by them I am sure of; and in it was a kind of gentle ravenousness, emptiness, and starvation that touched over everything with tireless curiosity- they had towards a young life.

The dark eyes were so fixed on her she felt, as she moved ever so slow to not have the bridge-like walkway move under her light footing, yet fast enough to escape them and the world move to rapidly. She almost thought she heard the motion of her hands as she walked as they did as if all were at the same rhythm, and the infinitely small sound, of the marching in time, to the, strolled step above and below.

-And-

There a man stood in the middle of the glass pavement waiting for the new days to start. Her dress was moving up to the gust of are from the trains below and above it, all whispered yet not as much as her headset that was implanted in her inner ears- that was next to invisible.

The white stir of lights and holograms and screens grabbing advertisements for a moment of useless information whispering in the headset faces turning to look as it incases them when she discovered she was a moment away from suspended willow trees and hydroponic garden overhead made a great sound of letting down their misty lush rain.

I remember saying to this man- moments before and it looked within the brain of the headset- in retravel of thoughts: when people ask my age, I say, always say- 'Young- and insane. Isn't this a nice time of night to even if I have them taking a recording my every moment- even in the bathroom- at home and even the movements in bad it's all held in the database for all to payback- and despite everything that has transpierced? I'm teenaged and I'm mentally deranged, especially as manifested in a wild or aggressive way. Extremely enthusiastic, nevertheless, mad, insane, out of one's mind, deranged, and demented.'

Fingerprints and eyes read and scanned- with invisible beams- in ever steep or everything you touch is like stack charged to the touch- held in a data recovery to understand good and bad, they know you more then you know yourself and that prograded too- if you don't watch your back- and the only ones with guns of mass-distortion are the police officers in full suites. My dad says this to me always that- I am MAD.

At that moment she felt she had said something quite wonderful, that she never felt his love, yet just found what it could be. But instead, he stood regarding her with eyes so dark yet loving and shining in the wild lights around, and alive for the moment- even if feeling dead on the inside, when he felt this she had said something quite wonderful to keep only if it was approved to keep in her own - mind.

The girl stopped and looked as if she might pull back in surprise to see him before her, But he knew his mouth had only moved to say hello, and then when she seemed too fascinated, entrance, beguile, and spellbind by the fallen angel on his arm and the eight-pointed star symbol with three chevrons under on his chest, he spoke again, saying about the war and the hugger.

'Only the youth can save us...' he said already know her name of Millia. A moment has past and under his breath, he said, 'the real youth!' I like you have a child her name is Elody - she is an already a star girl-she is the only one left I have, just like you will be. He said to me, 'I want to give you her memories- keep them locked within as much as you can when the time comes, do as she did as she did when she did and don't ask why, and you make history.'

... As if my life depended on it. 'Of course,' he said, 'you're are my new undertaking, aren't you- the military mind garden?' And I am going to look out for you as if you're my own, and in a way you are. 'You remind me of my own child.' He said.

'And you must be the one to show me the way, this was code for the memories to be placed in my mind forever- of the wars past and to come.' She raised her eyes from his 'Of course,' he said, 'you're are my new undertaking, aren't you?'

-And-

I am going to look out for you as if you're my own, and in a way you are. The masterful symbols, 'Star Warrior.' Her voice trailed off some.

'How oddly you say that he said.' 'I'd have known it with my eyes shut,' he said, slowly. and have a full understanding, yet you don't seem to know what it is I do or have done.

With a smell of- borborygmus activities. 'My late wife always complained about this,' he tittle-tattles, prattle, and jibber-jabbered on. 'You get to the point never-ever wash it off wholly it is within you and it seeps out.'

Yammering, powwowing, and natter- 'No, you don't,' she said, in awe of him. She was emptying her pockets, without once not think about moving away from the tightness that has now made side by side.

He felt she was walking in a circle about him yet only in her mind, that was racing with many thoughts, turning him end for end and inside and back out, likewise shaking him quietly - to see what made him tick, 'coal mining,' he said, that is what I have to do now for work, dirty and not always honorable. For the silence had lengthened, only with her as she felt as if she knew him all her life. As a father... like- a humble man in relation to his child or children in life was in a different- alternative time.

'it's nothing but eau de cologne to me.'

'Of course, was the thought.' 'You do seem like a man to me?' 'Why not I keep this in my mind- yet, I knew he would have in retrieval?' She gave herself time to think about the last thoughts that would be placed into text or stored in the data servers for all time- even if time has come to an end. 'I don't know until this point if it's right or wrong- to have every thought and every moment recorded for history to not understand- or misconstrued.' She then turned her face away from his face to the sidewalk going toward other skyscrapers.

'Do you mind if I walk back with you?' 'No, I don't mind at all! And, I know who you are.' She moves forward are you- come along. What are you doing out so late wandering around I asked? 'I have nothing left' he said along with 'and was looking for well you.' 'How old are you- I asked him?' '51 he said.' I mean I am sure I could have done a lookup with my headset, and phone that is linked, yet that seems less interesting, and I wanted the trust and troth to see- if.

The warm-cool blowing night, they walked in on the glass pavement and there was the faintest breath of fresh strawberries, apricots and all fruits in the air, in artificial gardens that seem to float in mid-air.

So, late in the year and we have fresh fruits, and she looked around and realized this was quite impossible, not so long back in antiquity- that man has come a long way.

There was only the girl walking with him now, her face bright as the fake snow in the moonlight that will fall when- man wants it too by artificial machinery, and she knew she was working his questions around too much in her mind as if she had freedom too, seeking the best answers she could give. 'Well,' she said, walk onward?

Walking now farther than ever with some new, I like to smell things and look at things and enjoy everything that this world has to offer, and sometimes stay up all night until the sun comes up, they walked on again in totally quiet and finally, she said, thoughtfully, 'the sunrise there it is its coming.'

'I'm not afraid of you at all, you know.' 'So many people are, and none of them are like you, he was surprised, in my ways. 'Why should you be like them I asked?' 'Afraid of men and everything and anyone, I mean really. 'But you're just a girl, after all...' 'Right?' I suppose! She said.

He saw himself in her eyes almost looking thought and back again, suspended in two shining drops of bright water, that pass in the air, like as if that have lost gravity. In fine detail and style, the lines about his mouth, she studied, everything about his look, as if his eyes were two supernatural, preternatural, superhuman, inexplicable, unaccountable, and fantastic bits of vibrant marigolds that might capture and hold him intact.

Electricity was in the air and working within them, but what it was not the hysterical light of everything in the time and moments, strangely comfortable and rare and gently flattering light of the towering buildings, cast on her young face as if softly lit by a candle.

Like this one time in a total a power- failure, when he was a child, I recall a light dancing about my face like this; yet power outages are no longer feasible, I thought until now. Now have mass power-failure, my mother had found me and had already given me a nights kiss, and lit the last candle, next to my bed, and I was holding a book and was drawing breath like the book here I was then lost to dreaming were I then became the protagonist to my own story, as if in another time, nested in my newspaper and bundling's of my reassesses, and qualm, misgiving, doubt, reservation, second thought, worry, concern, anxiety, hesitation, hesitance, hesitancy, demur, reluctance, disinclination, and apprehension about the loss of feeling and comforts.

Brief hours of the night, have felt like a spiraling week in another time... of rediscovery like I feel you will have, soon so you know- I feel it in my bones; dimensions and drew comfortably around them, of such illumination that space lost its vast like, mother and son, alone, transformed, and fixed hoping that the power might not come.

... And, I would see my mother on again too soon... like you- you are having this moment I just know it. 'Do you mind if I ask' 'How long have you worked at being a coal miner?'

Her body was twitching and squirming like her mind, in the throes of wonder. The need to quench the fire raging in her brain was almost driving her crazy, to understand the pictures she was receiving in his thoughts of wisdom.

Where can- I purchase a copy of this then called a book- on history or remembrances of all past? I see them within this dream, of the past yet there not a thing any, more are they?

Why?

Slowly dips beyond the horizon is a room full of them with pulp drapers, and the clocks were become as if on rhythm to my mind and head which was ache; I've searched everywhere online and they all seem to be in any language. Any suggestions would very be appreciated.

'Ever since I was ten, I wondered about everything past and history and knowledge.'

'Did you ever read any of the books, there was gone to technologies elimination?' Yes, but only in this dream of being lost within I was once the writer of the longest in the world, yet I never saw it to completion, I dyed in the end in the dream and walk up here to give you this massage. He laughed and looked around- speaking softly about- joking that cars were like being shot out of a canon in his dream of living in remembrances, and the love of life and one woman.

'The law and governments, has past bands on information, in the young mind of mind!' 'Oh, of course- freedom has been taken as it was then as it is now.' 'It's fine to work to lay day in and day out and hold thoughts that hold thoughts that give thoughts and want thoughts to be hand.'

Ashes angels- flying about, all the books have become, as they all went up years ago, around the year 3,000, the dream I am in is of 1913, as if I was to hold this for- you to have and pass on; why I cannot say- you have to find that out on your own and your own way. Ashes to dust- of the work and the words slaved to make, for the dumb of kids, to keep- that is our official slogan 'ASH ANGELS.'

They walked still further in the modern ideas of life and garden, and the girl said, 'Is it true that long-ago writers made stories and recorded history and not electronic brain retrieval of taken without well- by the governments?'

'No, let's keep walking on. Home to go to she said.' Along with saying moments after- 'not everything thing to this is fireproof, take my word for it.' 'Oddly strange.'

He laughed, a long time ago houses used to burn to the ground and were on one to two stories, by accident, and sometimes not, and they needed many men to stop the flames, it was done by hand, not robotics or animated systems to do the world for them without thinking.

I heard once that about not putting out a flame; in carelessness, she gazed over to look at him as if not of this world. I don't know.

The flame of light that gives life could end it, 'Why are you laughing?' He asked. 'And, I am the one that would be called dumb.'

That's the rose-garden over there that is where I want to spend the morning! 'White blurs are houses- he called them the transportation capsules.' Smudged blur in the sky in the yellow haze, as homes- or those that don't have them come to places to sleep in 3 foot by 7-foot casket like rent rooms.

'Sickness to humanities- I feel, like dog hoses...!' My uncle drove slowly on a highway once I remember, yet more like these people of today- crazy- MAD- ill-tempered.

'I don't know.' He started to laugh again and peter out, along with fade away, 'Why the rush to dye young?' Then- I get the time and the laps of time, and time is less or more in one day or moment.

I have not even said anything that would be considered humorous and you answer right off as if there is sarcasm, ridicule, satire, irony, scorn, sneering, and scoffing to everything that was said.

He rambled on, He drove 25 miles an hour, and they jailed him for two days for being a MAD man- pulling my hair to for fun. 'So, it's not a dream you are from another time, aren't you? 'Isn't that funny, and sad, too?' 'You think too many things,' said the girl, uneasily about his racing mind.

'You never- ever stop to think about this until now, what I've asked you to recall why I am here.' 'Why do you think?' He stopped walking, to look down at her young sweet face, like a child, looking for candy, 'You are the oddball, she whispered under her breath.' 'I would imagen I would be if 1,084 years have passed, and 395,660 days.'

'You did mathematics- like- in your head?' Along with saying- 'How did you do that?' He said, looking at her, start doing sums any numbers, in here he pints to her head- like computers, in your mind the numbers and the way to do them are now there, he was wisdom.

'You were to first in the world.' 'A pink blur the I am to you? No, you're more than that, you should know!' He tapped the numerals on his nameplate on his chest, next to all the meatless in all colors stitched on his chair colored sleeve.

'Well, does this mean anything to you,' he asked her. 'Haven't you any respect, for me this is rude?' 'Oh child, wake up!' 'I don't mean to be insulting.' 'You are...' she said. It's just, I love to watch people too much, I guess, and help them understand, that you are the hope.'

'Yes,' she whispered; I will well be the one that stands in all-time like you.' She slowed her pace, walking past all the roses. 'Look the jet cars racing on the elevated boulevards and hovering over our heads.'

'You're changing the subject, think about your life, and the ones to come!' He said patting her on the head. 'From time to time, think drivers don't know what grass is anymore, or flowers because, they never see things slowly,' He said. 'If you showed a driver a green blur then yes maybe,' she said, '...Yes, sir, that's Earthy plant-life- who cares!'

'I would say find your family, and start over, you're a child, yet, and that will change soon, there is no need to live on the street or live in rent rooms.'

'I will never go back!'

I am not into their lifestyle...

~*~

I am not into killing things, and ending life, even of that of plants, I like to smell things and look at things. I stay up all night, sometimes just looking is that odd for someone like me. 'I would think not.' 'Watch the sunrise and just walking.'

Thoughtfully, thinking about other people; showing much kind thoughts, care and consideration; considerate, you say this even forgiveness, now, and that is your type so why not forgive and forget, and find them, someday you may not have them to go too, they walked on again in silence and finally, she said, 'you know, this already, don't you.' 'Sorry for everything has become your life.'

'I'm not afraid of you at all, I think- I know what is coming.' He was surprised by me saying that, being kind of smart and kind of dumb.

'Why should you anyway?' 'You will be a star, in more ways than one!' 'So many people are born to do this and you are. I believe in you!' I am frightened of change and revelation, and this all coming to a fast end. 'I am just a woman, after all...' No, a woman can be more than that, and show them all!

Tears- now falling suspended in two shining drops of bright water, she saw herself in his eyes, dark and tiny, in fine detail, looking back she could see the child within that she would become, the lines about his mouth- in grief and sorrow, everything there, as if her eyes performed by or involving a supernatural power to see beyond or operation bits of amber glowing within as if pulled out of time and space to see the dream inside the mind in positive and death, that might capture and hold her to see the light- in a new time.

He said- Children like you, in a power-failure, a rediscovery, of such illumination, to space lost its vast dimensions and drew comfortably around them, look deep into my past- see my life- see how it was, see my child life, and her life, she is, after all, you, now- you have taken her mind over- you now have her soul. transformed are you now- unlike any other around you- you have the remembrances of all that is past they don't want kids like you to evoke, hoping that the power- can be held over you- so there is no resistance, be the fight, the might come on, all too soon... again this will come.

She said to him you- ponder, reflect, deliberate, meditate, contemplate, muse, and cogitate saying this, 'you think too many things, it is not safe to think for yourself.' 'I rarely watch 'covering screens television,' or stay indoors. She said 'some call me old-fashioned.' I guess that is right, along with crazy, 'MANNESS' is my claim to fame; nevertheless, too much time on my hands for crazy thoughts. 'Have you seen hologram- billboards in the suburbs beyond the cities?

Everywhere you look screens are screaming for your attention, all you see, are kids with see - through phones, and faces smashed into a fantasy world, linked to their headset. 'I remember when newspapers would do the trick,' he said.

Nonetheless, cars started flying by so rapidly they had to stretch the images to go along with the speed, the advertising is so out there and outlandish, so it would last when in the mind when it ripped into it by our overseers. 'I didn't know that!' 'I do, and its sickness, and 'MADNESS' they have done to you, you're not the CRAZY one,' he said.

He laughed suddenly and unexpectedly, rudely or curtly, steeply; precipitously. 'I- bet, I know something else you don't know, what if I knew this would happen?' 'They made the grass grow this morning just to cut it down by night, yet not by man.' Like they would even care to look at grass. When most of life is up in the air 200 feet on skywalks, and skyscrapers, with plant-like intermediate open spaces of negative spaces seeming to just hang as if flitting about, like the trees- also in the floating lands masses at all points in the air.

She suddenly couldn't remember, her true life, she was now - 'not,' if she had known this or not she was now his child's soul, and it made him quite cantankerous as if the life had come back to him from the heavens or favor from purgatory as if all sins were forgiven and she would not need to linger in hells purgatory.

'And if you look, the days are slowing now,' She nodded at the sky- there's a moon, I know, yet I don't remember- that it should be to me anymore like days are changed to me now - and the time in one day.'

She hadn't looked for a long time, to see what the moon has become. It was just too sad, and sad only. They walked in silence, looking at all the stars, none the sun, they knew. Thoughtful, yet with an uncomfortable, along with clenching quite which he shot her accusing gazes.

When they reached the end of the city lines all its lights were blazing behind- and the lay of the land ahead- of mountains.

'What's going on, you can see the sun, and miles ahead- what going to happen?' It is before all the smog starts, that's why. He had rarely seen that many house lights, at this time before. it was awe-inspiring, to say the least.

'Oh, just my mother and father and uncle sitting around, all day doing nothing there is no work you see, talking about death, and wanting death to come, to be out of the pain of life, and they drug up. To kill the pain and themselves slowly it's like being a pedestrian, only rarer.' My dad, had me arrested when, I wanted to help, times before and I am the criminal- for reporting this... did I tell you, that I have a record? 'Also arrested by a cop that called himself a 'DICK-' for being a pedestrian.' Oh, we're most peculiar these days with the CRAZY AND RETARDED, like me - I suppose!'

He just looked at me, with a quirked smile. 'Talking about it what do you think?' 'We live in mad times, mad times I say!' He said back blisteringly. 'Crap- laughed at this. 'Goodnight, he said walking away!' She started up yet another higher walk - as he seemed to vanish to the clouds below starting to form. Then she seemed to remember everything with curiosity and much wonder.

'Are you truly happy, she looked into the girl's memories, that she became?' She was in the past but not now, 'Am I what- now?' She started to cry out. But she was gone- running in the moonlight as if the guns of wartime girls wanted her dead, it was hard to breathe, she was lost in the visions.

Her eyes shut gently as the bullets fly by her face and body in the heat of battle. 'Happy, far from it! Of all the nonsense, this was unfair to say the last.' She stopped feeling at that moment the pain- in her mind as she was ripped back to her opened eyes and time.

He put his hand into the hole of the -glove holding them were they buckle on his fingers- then his one finger exposed is pressed down- on a plat, of his front door and let it know his touch to open into his apartment. The glass front door slid open, behind all the other glass walls, that also reflect the tv channels. This is private he said to today's standers I think not. He thought to himself, quietly.

Of course, I'm not happy, for what I have done to that little girl, yet it has to be that way- she is the future of life as we once knew it. What she thinks right now is not what I wanted - yet what is needed. All the death and distortion all at once. I'm not pleased with myself at this point?

I feel like a dad that has left his child gets slotted. He asked the quiet rooms, to speak up, and play the news of the day and world- and also the inner-city limits. Wall to glass wall, of coverage of death and misrepresentation, perversion, twisting, falsification, and misreporting.

He stood looking up at an appliance, hanging from the open rafters for artificial respiration; trelliswork and network along with wires and pipes, in the hall and quickly and unexpectedly remembered that something lay hidden behind the espalier, filigree, plexus, and something that seemed to peer down at him now- was what looked to be an eye, tracing his every move- even the bathroom where open and glass-walled, like some of the floors.

Quickly moving away, along his eyes, yet they got them anyways, quick- not quick enough, it called out his name in face recognition. What a strange meeting on a strange night, and what a strange place this is.

He recalled nothing, after that point when the eyes linked, his mind was whipped of all thoughts, until approved, like it saves one afternoon a year ago, and the rest is replaced with dream-like subconscious when he had met an old man in the park and they had talked... and that was okay to keep, shaking his head, he thought wrong, and the voice in his mind to him to stop. He looked at a blank wall, also now updating like him in a way, as the forces over him reset.

Astonishing, the young girl's face was there it was kept, really quite beautiful in memory. As if hacked to be lasting, he knew his next thought would say that anyway, thought of mind cannot be stopped. Yet maybe, if disciplined.

She had a very thin face seen faintly in a dark room in the middle of the night, lasting in his mind, dream-like. While thee that is left that is you- rouse to see clock telling the time and see the face a-glow, and the hour and the minute and the second- still- calm -tranquil dreamlike, and the ticking is all the remains?

'Whatever he thought,' valued himself- of that separate self, the unconscious nincompoop that operated ranting at moments, entirely autonomous of the mind, costume, and morals.

He peeped behind at the wall. Whereby like a scry- mirror, besides, her silhouette like a ghost, with hair covering the face. Objectionable; for how many personalities did you grasp that refracted your sunrise to thou?

Spirits moved beside often- he sought for an analogy, gained item in his work-torches, flaming away continuously they sniffed out. Whence unusually did different spirits' faces take of you - moreover remainder to you your composition, your private trembling solicitude?

What unimaginable strength concerning description the daughter had; she transpired like the keen spectator of a puppet show, awaiting specific glint of an eyelid, respectively gesticulation of his hand, per flick of a digit, the time ere it originated. Whereby long-spun became they strolled contemporaneously? Three minutes? Five?

Yet, wherewith great that season seemed immediately. Whereby gigantic a figure she held on the scene before him; everything was like a shadow she cast on the wall with her slight dainty body! He perceived that if his eye yearned, she might blink.

Furthermore, if the fibers of his jaws stretched gradually, she would divide long before he would. Why he recollected, immediately that I remember of it, she essentially resembled to be arranging for me there, in the street, so damned late at nighttime.

... He inaugurated the bedchamber door. It was like developing into the chilly marble room of a crypt subsequent the moon had set. Thoroughgoing eclipse, not a trace of the lustrous globe outward, the glasses tightly sealed, the antechamber a vault world where no note from the numerous cities could comprehend. Every chamber was not empty. He admitted. The little mosquito- dainty dancing hum in the draft, the electrical murmur of a mysterious wasp snug in its unique flushed warm incubator.

Some tune was relatively powerful just so-o, he could grasp the piece. He underwent his simpler slide away, decrease, laminate above, furthermore resting on itself like a wax skin, same the essence of a fabulous candle burning exceedingly long plus now deflating and now gone out. Twilight.

Seclusion. Darkness. He was not satisfied. He was not comfortable. He said the statements to himself. He acknowledged this as the valid nature of rendezvous.

He diminished his optimism- like a veil and the girl had run off beyond the garden with the veil and there was no way of maintaining to tap on her door-way and supplicate for it following- like moonlight.

Internally turning on the light with his thoughts of mind he believed how this room would look, as if would change color to his mood. His companion stretched on the bed, as before like canvas.

Exposed and aloof, as a body illustrated on the hood of an automobile, her eyes fixed on this young lady, to the canopy by ghostly threads of steel that was the bed frame, harmonized. To the lights and the sounds, affinity, magnetism, and sensuality. The thought was love, relish and embrace needed for contentments.

Including in her ears the minute mind taking earplugs, the thimble radiotelephony links to everything and everyone tamped securely- never coming out, furthermore, an electronic sound or the wireless world, of music and talk, TV and dialogue and a translator to all languages, coming in on the border of her inactive spirit and sleep. The chamber was indeed hollow. Each and every midnight the tides came in and transported her off on their great tides of sound or other places, floating her off, as if wide-eyed, approaching morning.

There had existed no blackness of full night in the last two years that Melissa, had not bathed that the other pools, ought not enthusiastically to go down in it concerning the thread time. The chamber was freezing though he perceived he could not recuperate.

He prepared not to yearn to destroy the screens and crack the sliding window panes, for he did not want the moon to come into the room, a first in years it was to see a full bright moon.

Consequently, with the soul of a guy who will depart in the next hour for lack of oxygen, He welcomed his way toward his open, cool bed, next to this young female child. A moment ere his foot hit the target on the rug, he knew he would hit such an article.

It was not unlike the atmosphere he had encountered before applying the monopolization and nearly hitting the girl down. His foot, emitting fluctuations ahead, held back imitations of the tiny wall beyond its pathway-level as the foot swung.

His foot-propelled. The article furnished a faint jingle and started off near the night. He reached extremely snug and welcomed to the personality on the shaded bed in the utterly featureless duskiness. Relishing to the submissive lover. The breath coming out of her and him was the equivalent, of the nostrils was so faint it agitated only the most distant fringes of life, a petite leaf, a black feather, a singular thread of young girls' hair.

He still did not want outside information. He stretched out his hands to the air, world, and heavens above considered removing the star-carved silver plate from his uniform, gave it a flick to close the latch in the back... In his mind- a pair boys glanced up at him in the nightlight, the ghost of his other kids- one his miniature hand-held a ball of fire; each with a combination of pale moon-stones aglow next to the man-made river- that ran of clear water over which, run past his apartment window, as the life of the world, running along with, not touching them.

'The young girl in his bed!' Her appearance was like a snowflake coated bar upon which rainfall might fall, however, it underwent no storm; above which clouds sway relinquish their emotional shadows, but she perceived no umbra. There survived simply the chanting of the thimble wasps in her tamped-shut ears, and her eyes all glass, and whiff going in and out, softly, faintly, in and out of her nostrils, she was perfect, lost in a dream that I was in reading ever chapter like a book of the past is now not. Moreover, her not worrying whether it came or went, went or came, or came-out.

The article he had sent tumbling with his foot now glinted beneath the frame of his bed. The small crystal necklace, of a girl that was his relative, of sleeping pills which briefly today had been charged with 10 medicines of lack of air to the lungs including which presently lolled uncapped and abandoned in the light of the tiny beacon.

While he stood yonder the heaven protecting the dwelling shrieked. There was an enormous ripping vibration as if two giant palms became torn thousands of drops fall from above like black sheeting coming down the inseam. To wake up and have it been a real, and not a dream. The Rains have come at last.

He was done in half. He felt his chest hacked down and split apart, like the young girl beneath. The jet-bombs performing over, spreading over, going over, one two, one two, one two, then five of them, nine of them, twelve of them, all with water spraying- individual and 1 and 1 and extra and another and extra, did all the screaming for him- of: 'OH- MY- YES, as the young woman, was thrashing also to the thundering storms- in squeezing with her hands with her palms the bed sheets.' Was it running, or the man-made water controlling- to make it happen as the jets when past? After it was like a hurricane, like never-seen-before to all of us of the modern city.

She withdrew her mouth like a child, and let their shriek come down and out between her bared teeth, of the feelings of fulfillment. The house shook to the pounding of the thundershowers. Occasional thundering- then built of light went out in his and her head. Exquisite...!

The dream vanished, and it was all true, it was a reality. He felt his hand plunge toward the mouthpiece of his headset. The jets were gone, as the storm continued. He considered his lips touch, brushing the mouthpiece of the receiver.

I treasure back to when, in a past life when I was a rail worker- before the time travel, I like many other guys on one side and guys on the other with the hope of meeting up in the middle... slaved, to do what couldn't be achieved. Braking rock and make toenails they did it all fast, at the station is the start, come on and lest go on this trip... all the people and all the kids, as they see the train steam near them as it comes ever so closer, as they stand with their boxes and cases, do you see them holding their tickets ready for their trip of a week and a day? Hoping to see it all on the day that goes to night's moon to sun, it was all fun and yet a new start, in a new world for them.

Bell ringing out... do you hear it? Do you see the puff-puffs of the steam- as it moves past the water tower, do you see the flagman, braking jumping cars? Clouded puff- do you see- wooooo- woop! How trains have changed, I have seen the piston pushing hard, the wheels turn not fast, and not yet slow, do you see them moving with all the weight, they have to pull? Red- white and blue she is the locative No. 19 that is, they call her a girl- do you know why? She pulls her coal behind, and the people cars to in red do you see, the coal care is blue, heat- with tons of smoke and nose fells the air, do you see what it's doing?

The steam is spraying as it rushes past and stops, with a sequel, huff- huff- huff- it puffs, as we step on, brakeman, engineer, and conductor, and the one that runs it all is the engineer the train driver. Hard and hot work don't you see, as the man sweats for doing this non- stop. This makes the steam did you know that? Sure, you did... two blasts of the horn and where are on are way thinks to the engineer. The driver- you remember what he is called? Has his head out the window must of the time... do you know why? To see what is up and coming his way, do you see the animals on the tracks getting out of the way too?

To what color the car in the back and what is it called? I remember times past, as we make a stop for water, do you see the man turn the wheels from car to car what is he called and what is he doing to remember? New places cities and towns, all the places around, and look at what was found, with the sound? Of the huffing and puffing- and the wheels shaving forward on the ground. I remember how my little girl loved trains, and where ever she is I hope she runs, some kind of magical railroad. Those are my wishes for her in her time of death- to the other side.

‘The same yet different. Different yet the same in so many ways, this world to the past!’ From one Marcel to another, he thought, and giggled in his mind to the craziness of that thought, to think I was only a writer for amusement with a story about a girl, in times of both feel much discomfort, never thinking it was all going to become true.

(Back)

‘Crisis infirmity.’ A terrifying whisper. He responded that the stars had been crushed by the character of the black jets furthermore that in the daylight the Earth would be resolved as he attained trembling in the dark and let his mouth go on traveling and moving.

They had this device. They had two computers. One of them slid feathers into your stomach like a black cobra underneath an echoing well watching for all the beloved liquid and the obsolete assumed yonder. It swallowed up the inexperienced material that proceeded to the summit in a gradual boil.

Prepared gulps of the darkness? Did it engulf out all the germs gathered with the years? It served in stillness with an uncommon note of essential suffocation including blind searching. It became an Eye.

The indifferent administrator of the device could, by wasting a unique optical headgear, stare into the soul of the character that he was tapping out.

Something did the eye witness? He did not reply. He accompanied but did not see what the eye examined. The intact method was not unlike the digging of a hollow in one's garden.

The gal on the bed was no more mysterious than a dense layer of lustrous rock, all must be entered. Travel on, anyhow, elbow the nuisance down, slush up the vacuum, if such a person could be transported out in the beat of the pull serpent. The engineer reached smudging a tobacco pipe. The significant- device of others was operating exceedingly. The separate device was operated through an equivalently disinterested peer in non-stainable reddish-brown overalls.

This device drew all of the plasma of the frame of the torso furthermore substituted it with fresh lifeblood and immunotoxin. 'Prepared to flush 'em out both ways,' said the laborer, being over the soundless gentlewoman.

'End this!' He said, along with- 'never- ever use preparing the belly if you don't clean the blood. Omit that essence in the blood moreover the blood spreads to the brain like a hammer, smack, several times into the brain, just quits- and let her go, and it's all over.'

'I was simply telling,' said the laborer. 'Are you prepared?' Said the man in health uniform. They shut the computers uptight. 'We are finished.' His rage did not even brush them - with their cold feelings- in not caring to care. Others stood with the fag- fume curling throughout their noses including into their eyes without giving them nictitate or peeps.

'This's fifty bulls.' 'Chief, why don't you narrate to me if she'll be all right- or this was all a waste?' 'Sure, she'll be okay- here memories were kept- and that is all that truly matters after all. He said. This was nothing more than mind retrieval- and fast death.

We the traditional essence fit in our case here- you can receive the life in the database, it can't perceive her immediately. As I said, you take out the old and put in the novel and you're okay, that is life after all.' 'Sick is what it is!' He said.

This was here planed death, at this time at this moment, governed, by the people for the people. She was not of worth. 'Go-F*CK- Yourself!' He screeched. 'Neither of you are M. D's. HOW- IS THIS LAWFUL? Didn't they send an M.D. from Crisis?' 'Hell! they send two- jack ass retard's, the laborers just winked and walked past saying take it up with the courts- of the county. 'She died; I don't think that is needed...'

'Pity then is it not? He whispered, 'doing my job.' Said the other to the worker, as to take out boxes of junk for a home in the past. An in that box was a story- lost and never read, in the front part of the high-rise- she was lit aflame with kerosene- pumped from a red-first responder-truck with the number 450 on the sides, the bodies like this girl- just like a book of no worth, with nothing, said, nothing to give, like so many others most children under 10, estimated.

'We understand these quandaries nine or ten an evening. Got so many, beginning a few years ago- we need the room for the ones that have something to give the world, we had the extraordinary line-ups developed. With the visible spectacles, of passage, that was original; the bottom is ancient. Y'all don't need an M.D., in a state- like this; all you require is two jacks-of-all-trades, cleaning up the PULL OF ~~-Heifer-~~ SHIT- dilemmas in less than a half an hour- to 15 minutes.

'Look you Jackoff's 'Get,'" he stood by the door- 'we got to go.' Recently had another call on a 4-year old that was let go. 'Like pages to burn, he said, just like books... a waste of time.' One block from here.

The view of the girl- child in a cardboard shoe-box was a pain to his mind, he could see them dumping, out the door too- and lit up- like paper- at 450 degrees- Kelvin. 'No space to have them placed, is the slogan.' You could move them if you have the money- to outside, yet that is too costly, for most in poverties. Cry if you need. Keep quiet, it's all the same.

Just before with the child- the eyes of puffadders regarded up their quantity of computer and tubes, their cause of water grief and the slow dark residue of anonymous tissue, and strolled out the door- and lit up- like wasted varmint and pus. Nothing was placed in the database for her- not even an ID number. He then at that moment at that time dropped into a chair and looked at this little lady of the glass walls in hologram for the last time like all. Never to be remembered again, and discharged from all minds.

Her discriminations to her eyes- stayed closed now, mildly, and he put out his hand to hold the warmth of inspiration on his palm. 'A - Child' he said, at the end- before a start. There are likewise many of us, he deemed. There are billions of us and that's exceedingly numerous. Nobody perceives anyone. Guests arrive and defile you. Strangers proceed and separate your heart, mind, and soul out with tubs and fling you to the insinulators.

Guests come and take your blood. F*ck- God for this, who were those chaps? I never perceived them before in my experience! Moiety an hour passed. The bloodstream recovered to give to others, and it seemed to have done a new thing to him. Life for the life he said. 'Okay then...' That was the day he started the rebellion of the star.

Her cheeks were pretty pink and her lips were very fresh- eyes once blue, and wondrous and full to the many colors- other than gray- and they looked soft and relaxed, even in seeing the light. The girl's name was Steffanie, now only someone else's blood and transplants, and DNA exchange. If only someone else's flesh and brain and consciousness.

If simply they could have exercised her wisdom along to the dry-cleaner's moreover drained the pockets and cooked and washed it furthermore deblocked it plus brought it after in the morn. If barely... He got up and placed back the shades and started the windowpanes far-flung to let the midnight air inside.

It was two o'clock in the A.M. Was it only an hour ago, I was in the sky walkway, and him coming in, as she lay in her miniature coffin-like rent room, and the darkroom and her foot kicking the side and top the little a little ship in a bottle? The air was tight yet clean. the dome light above not all that bright, when on. Only room to roll from side to side in the same place your body lay before. She was sick of this life. Hardly an hour, although the world had decreased down including sprung up into a unique and neutral application.

Chuckling left beyond the moon- the melanistic lawn of the apartment of she smiled so modestly and so-o solemnly. Above all, their laughter was relaxed and hearty and not forced in any way, coming from the house that was so brightly lit this late at night while all the other houses were kept to themselves in darkness.

She heard the voices talking in her mind, chatting, telling, addressing, informing, weaving, reweaving their anodyne network.

He walked out within the portholes doors and divided the garden, outwardly still deeming of it. He endured outside the eloquent horse in the adumbrations, considering he sway even tap on their entry and murmur, 'Let me come inside.'

I won't speak anything. I simply want to overhear. What it is you're saying?' However alternatively he stood there, very raw, his face a hood of ice, harking to a little voice (the girl?) moving along at an easy pace: 'Well, following all, this is the age of disposable membrane. Blow your nose on a body, plug them, rinse them away, lead for different, go, back, wash. Everyone practicing everyone other's coattails.

How are you thought to root for the homestead organization meanwhile you don't also have a business or know the names?

For that affair, what shade pullovers are they diminishing as they amble out on to the courts?' He walked back to his own dwelling, left the glass wide, reviewed everything back to him they have taken as data, tucked the blankets about his thoroughly, yet this time all alone, with only the memories, and sad masturbation of going lefty. Furthermore, suddenly lay down with the moonlight on his cheek and nude body with his firm grip of himself pointed like a projectile to space above - bones and on the grim ridges in his brow, amidst the moonlight infused in each eye to form a silver torrent there. One dab of the tempest.

One, the young girl. Two, the love of his life, three, the war for life. Four, fire, One, the girl, two, sex. One, two, three, four, five, need air, girl, child, fire, sleeping-tablets, being a man, disposable tissue, coat-tails, blow, wad, flush, her, the child, the young girl, my children, the fire, tablets, membranes, blow, wad, color. One, two, three, one, two, three! Thundershower. The mind spins and pounds- like the hand he has no authority of a child has been the hands that move his, all in his head, a match said hospice- replacement, yet she is new to me in my head and a child of fourteen years. She the same age as my kids, I said- out of exhaustion.

Different drop then sprays about his face. Prefer a third. The young woman. A fourth. The young woman- the warmth of temptations and thoughts at cold tonight. The hurricane winds- her orgasms of many- in my head and see through to the other side. The relative laughing about me feeling shy with his child that was matched to me as if I am wrong for thinking too much in modesty.

Thunder tumbling all around me inside and out. The complete world streaming down. The fire welling up in a volcano-like-a special child at lust. Total speeding on down encompassing in a spouting roar furthermore revering stream toward daylight. 'I don't remember anything anymore,' he said, and let a sleep-lozenge dissolve on his tongue. At nine in the morn, his bed was empty- yet she this new love felt as by his side- a new feeling of comfort.

He then got up immediately, his spirit pumping- moreover ran underneath the hall and ended at the galley door. Some toast jumped out of the silver toaster- from the wall itself, moved followed by a spidery alloy helper that flooded it with melted butter-and jelly in the wall then out to him.

The eyes of the new lover girl within his and in his head- ever-so- strong and kind- more than loving as she watched the toast delivered to her plate. The fourteen-year-old child was in- madding love with her new man.

She had both ears plugged with electronic bees that were humming the hour away. She looked up suddenly, saw him, and nodded. 'You all right?' She asked, within his mind thanks to the electronics. The girl was an expert at lip-reading from 14 years of apprenticeship at head-inserted ear-thimbles.

She bowed again- and he can see as if there inside her body. She set the toaster snapping away at an extra piece of bread- again by the thought of his mind. He sat down, with the force of her inside him to do it. His partner said, 'I don't apprehend how? I should be so hungry.' 'You -?' 'I'm Starving.' 'The last twilight,' he started. 'Didn't nap well. Feel lousy,' she said. M-mm he said back to the young lover. 'God, I'm starved. I can't comprehend this.'

'Last night-' he said repeatedly. She saw his lips casually. 'What about last night?' 'Don't you remember?' 'Oh, do and you were wonderful, she said sweetly.'

'Something? Concluded we have a wild appetite or something? Appear like I have got an aftereffect. God, I'm craving. What was here?' 'A few characters,' he said. 'That's what I imagined took place yet, I am sure you will have no understanding of that.'

She nibbled her toast as if she was doing it for him and the other way 'round. 'Sensitive abdomen and lowers, but I'm ravenous as all-get-out. Suppose I didn't do anything unwise at the gathering.' 'No,' he said, unostentatiously. The toaster speared out a bit of buttered bread for him. He squeezed it in his hand, seeming grateful for this new desire, worship, passion, and devotion. 'You really don't seem so hot yourself,' said his newfound crush. In the late evening, it drizzled and the whole world was dim grey.

He held in the gallery of his apartment, placed on his material with the star flashing across it. He stood peering up at the air-conditioning vent- and said 'so odd,' in the lobby for a long time. His love in the salon left him behind- in his mind until his return delayed long enough from studying her dialogue to glimpse up.

'Say,' she said and come back to bed with me. 'The man's logic about this!' 'Yes,' he said. 'I needed to talk to you, anyway.' He hesitated. 'He grabbed some capsules in the bottle see you tonight.' 'Oh, I wouldn't do that,' she said, surprised. 'You could overdose.' 'The bottle was empty.' 'I wouldn't do a thing like that, she said. Why would I do a thing like that?' He had not a clue until remembering the men, and what he said.

'Possibly you took pills and to forgot and took two more-to sleep and five more to remember to get up, and forgot again- that you needed to do all, and took two more- to not feel the way you do- now, and remained so dopy you cached right on continuously you should see the physician.' 'Heck,' she replied, 'what would I order to go furthermore do such a goofy thing like that for?' 'I don't know,' he announced.

She remained quite unmistakably encouraging for him to go. 'I didn't do such,' she said. 'Nevermore in a billion years.' 'All correct if you say so,' he answered. 'That's everything the young lady replied.' She transformed back into her scenarios of life. 'What's on this midday?' He urged tiredly.

She didn't glance up from her lines again. 'Well, this is a play begins on the wall-to-wall circuit within ten seconds. All sent me my share this daylight.

I threw in some box-tops. They write the dialogue including one element desiring. It's a unique approach. The home-maker, that's me- the little girl thought, is the lacking piece. He needs what was taken. I will be there. Meanwhile, it gets time for the removed lines, all gaze at me out of the three walls plus I say the lines: Here, for example, the gentleman says, 'What do you believe of this complete plan, girl- Kasandra Natalie?'

Furthermore, he glances at me loafing here mid-stage, discern?

-And-

'I say- I tell' She interrupted and ran her finger below a line in the text. 'I presume that's accurate!' Furthermore, suddenly they go on by the entertainment continuously he says, 'Do you agree to that, Ms. Natalie!' ... And I say, 'I certainly do!' Isn't that the game, Bud?'

He stood in the passage gazing at her. 'It's certainly fun,' she answered. 'Whichever's the performance about?' 'I plainly stated to you. There are these people named, and there reading from the memories.' 'Yes.' 'It's entertaining- remembering what was read. It'll be also more pleasure meanwhile we can allow having the fourth wall hologram connected to the apartment glass walls. Wherewith long spun you terminate before we save up and get the fourth surface screen shredded out and a fourth wall-TV put in?

It's only two thousand bucks.' 'That's one-third of my annual monthly pay.' 'It's only two thousand bucks,' his sweet young lover responded.

-And-

'I should imagine you'd examine me seldom. If we must have a fourth glass wall hologram TV, why it would be simply like this room wasn't ours at solely, but all kinds of extrinsic people's rooms- in here with us at all times- that would be great- no?

We could obey without a few things. 'We're previously doing externally a few items to pay for the third surface screen. It was put in barely two months ago, remember?' 'No, you would not remember, you're not her- this is all about them making you spend money, you don't have.'

'Is that all it was?' It was not even a day later that she sat looking at him for a long moment, saying she was his new partner. 'Well, good-bye, dear.' 'Good-bye, baby,' he said. He paused and swung around.

'Makes it have a felicitous conclusion?' 'I haven't seen that far.' He strolled over, read the last page, bent, collapsed the dialogue, and returned it back to her.

The thundershower was decreasing away and the girl continued exercising in the center of the sidewalk looking at him getting ever-so smaller as he made his way down to the ground leaves, with her head looking downwards, and the few drops falling on her face - mixing with her tears of missing him already- she was in love yet, she wondered if he was back.

He marched out of the dwelling into the torrents- spring debris. She smirked when she saw Bud. 'Say Love you- in his mind back looking up blowing a kiss to her as he did every day before, as nothing changed- between the woman!' 'Move on' he said to himself- 'by not.'

He said love and then said, that is when he ran in to- whom he thought was his child Elody, then she said- 'I'm still insane you know.' The storm feels so-o good. I fancy walking the rain. 'I don't believe I would like that,' he said as you do- I get wet enough in the mines. 'You sway if you tried.' 'I never-ever have.' She licked her lips to the wetness running down her face. 'The shower is savory- good.' She looked at something in her hand- saying I want you to keep this. 'What've you got there?' He replied. 'I suppose this is the last of the dandelions this age.'

I didn't believe I'd obtain one on the yard this late. Have you ever heard of rubbing it under your jawbone? Look. 'She felt her chin with the rose, laughing. 'Why?' 'If it rubs off, it suggests I'm in love.' Has it- or now feel it?' He could hardly do anything else but stare at her eyes. 'Well?' The girl answered.

'You're yellowish beneath there.' 'Excellent! Let's try YOU now.' 'It won't work for me.' 'Here.' Before he could leave, she had put the dandelion beneath his chin. And said thank you- giving a side hug, he drew back and she smiled. 'Hold still- the self-developing and printing and web downloading camera to a photograph- as it loved into view for an awe moment!' She peered under his chin and frowned.

'Well?' He answered. 'What a stigma,' she responded. 'You're not in love with me I know- or her ether.' 'You're a broken man!' Along with saying- 'And- working to death.' 'Yes, I am!' 'It doesn't show, though right?' 'I am very much in love with you she said!' He tried to charm up an expression to fit the words, but there was no presentation.

'I am!' She said again, 'Yes, please don't look that way- I love you.' You a child he said. 'YOU NO NOTHING OF LOVE. and you do, I have seen.'

'It's that dandelion,' he answered. 'You've practiced it all up on yourself. That's how it won't work for me.' 'likewise, that must be this.

Oh, promptly I've flustered you, I can see I have; I'm sad, really I am.' She rubbed his nose to his chin and said its fine. 'Neither,' he said, hurriedly, 'I'm all right.' 'I've got to be working soon, so say you pardon me. I don't want you annoyed with me for feeling what is human nature.' 'I'm not offended. Shocked, certainly.' 'I've got to go to see my shrink now for this I am sure- love is also crazy to feel for someone you don't really know.

They obtain me to go to work after all they own my home. I surrendered up something to say. She thought- I don't understand what he thinks of me.

He says I'm a normal onion! I hold him busy stripping away the stories.' 'I'm likely to understand you need the therapist yet not for loving someone,' said Bud. 'Then what?' He took a gasp and let it out and at last said, 'No, more like PTSD.'

'Life is like a game of cards, even when you don't have the best of hands, you have to play the game the best you can- and see what happens.'

'The therapist wants to know-how, like- I go out and explore nearby in the elevated parks and view the birds and accumulate butterflies, and flowers and even grass.'

'I'll bestow you my gathering someday to him.' 'Good.' 'They require to understand something I do with all my time. I inform them that seldom- I just sit and think. Although I won't explain to them what. I've got them moving.

Furthermore seldom, I perceive them, I prefer to put my energy terminal, same this, and let the drizzle into my mouth. It undergoes just like wine. Ought you to ever try this?' 'No, I- love living like this' 'You should have forgiven me, haven't you?' This all took place in the mind in conversations. 'True.' He imagined this. 'Okay, I have. God grasps why I need too. You're uncommon, you're provoking, yet you're easy to forgive- you're a child of wonder. You say you're fourteen?' 'Well-next month I will well be for sure.'

'How strange. How unusual. Including my companion thirty years was her end, furthermore yet you appear so much older at times. He said when now home with his new partner. I can't get over it, how much you remind me of her.' 'You're wonderful yourself, Mr. Bud.

Sometimes, I even forget you're a coal-miner. Now, may I make you angry again?' 'Go onward.' 'How did it begin? How did you get into this? How did you choose your profession and how did you happen to remember to take the position you hold?

You're unlike the others. I have seen a few; I grasp. If I talk, you look at me. Meanwhile, I spoke something about the moon, you glanced at the moon, last bedtime.

The next day he sees the same girl before him, and she is- still very much in love, the others would never- ever do that.

-And-

Like before on his way to work the girl- 'The others would wander off and leave me speaking, yet not you.' You are my beget, aren't you? That is this love I feel?

'Maybe so-o.' He said.

Part: 3

Astir warn me. No individual has time any more for anyone else. You're one of the few who settle for me? Elody he called her, mistakenly- as if his child, you understand this, 'I am not who you think I am.'

The girl- When she kissed him it was all wrong, yet sweet. That's why I think it's so strange you're a coal miner, it just doesn't appear right for you, anyhow.' Who are you really? A time traveler he said. I am not your dad, yet I know him and this family line well. Let us just say where are related, and I can never have a make love partnership with you.

He knew his body divide itself into hotness plus an understanding of her lust, a softness, and a weakness, a trembling including a not trembling, the two moieties crushing one upon the other. Wrong yet right.

'You'd better run on to your profession,' she said. And she ran off and left him standing there in the sunshine. I need to see where I going to be sleeping tonight anyway, and if I well have the money to say where I was at. Only after a long time did he move.

Plus, then, very gradually, as he walked, he dipped his head back in the rain that sprang up yet again, for just a few seconds and opened his lips... The Mechanical Cat rested but did not nap, existed but did not live in its gently whispering, softly fluctuating, softly ornamented enclosure behind in a dark corner of the apartment.

These faint glimmer of one in the aurora, the moonlight from the expansive atmosphere composed for the great windowpane, stirred here and beyond on the alloy and some copper and the iron of the faintly quivering creature.

Each radiance shone on pieces of ruby glass including on fine-tuned slender hairs in the fiber whisked noses of the creation that shuddered mildly, its legs speared under it on rubber-padded paws. Bud touched the cat... she growled. Bud jumped back.

She rose in its enclosure and gazed at him with green-blue neon light glittering in its abruptly aroused eyeballs.

It grumbled repeatedly, a strange harsh sequence of electrical hissing, a frying din, a scraping of alloy, a turning of gears that seemed worn and old-fashioned including mistrust. 'Neither, no, girl,' said Bud, his heart pounding- at the thing. He observed the silvery awl extended against the air an inch, pull back, stretch, pull back.

Bud pushed down the alloy ramp up and down floors of his home. He went out to look at the city out the glass doors and the mists had realized aside entirely, furthermore, he took a hit off his E-cigarette and came back to bend down and look at the cat missing his wife.

It was like a numerous bee come homeward of some field anywhere the honey is full of poison wildness, of madness and horror, its trunk jammed with that over-rich nectar and presently it was sleeping the evil out of itself.

'Hi,' whispered Bud, excited as forever with the still beast, the existing beast. At evening when things got sullen, which was every evening, the kids slid and play in the parks over the way with no care in the world and I would think of my own childhood, including established the ticking combinations of the olfactory system of the cat and let loose rats in the dwelling I call home behind me, and sometimes fowls, and sometimes dogs that would have to be asphyxiated anyway, and burning buildings- blocks away.

Nevertheless, there would be betting to see which the cat would clinch first. The creatures were turned loose- to run in packs in the streets, on the lowest leaves of the grounds with the low life- were trash and lost cars of the past are- on Earth first levels- and past roads that endured dialect.

Three moments later the game was done, the rat, cat, or chicken caught half across the areaway, seized in gentling paws while a four-inch arched steel syringe fell from the proboscis of the cat to introduce massive jolts of morphine or procaine. The cat's-paw remained then flung in the incinerator-or eaten by poverty. A new star famine game has begun- and I already knew how what going to be the leader of the pack. Bud stayed upstairs most evenings when this went on.

~*~

The girl- There should remained a time a couple of years ago while she had bet with the best of them, and lost a week's wages and faced her violent hatred towards the world and her parents, which manifested itself in veins and blemishes on her skin and arms.

Solely now at nightfall she rested in his berth, performance changed to the wall, monitoring to whoops of roaring below and the piano-string hasten of rat feet below, the violin squeaking of rodents, moreover the fabulous shadowing- of creeps- looking for hits and quiet's- woman, and drugs- motioned silence of the things leaping out like a miller's in the virgin light, finding, taking its victim, interpolating the needle and going back to its den to departs as if a switch had stayed fixed.

The howl stewed in the creature also it glanced at him- all the way down where it was. Bud stiffened up. The cat took a move from its enclosure. Bud grasped the glass handrail with one hand. The handrail, finding, thrust upward furthermore took him through the ceiling, quietly- to a new room.

He walked off in the moiety lit floor that would glow within the glass of the floor of the upper level. He was quivering and his face was extremely-white.

Hereinafter, the impressions cat had settled back down upon its legs unbelievable mighty legs and was whispering to itself again, its multi-faceted eyes at peace. Bud stood, engaging the fears pass, by the ramp.

Behind him, four men at a card table under a burgeoning mixed colored light in the corner glimpsed momentarily but said zilch.

Only the man with the back hardhat plus the sign of the star- seraphim on his hat, at last, unusual, his playing cards in his thin hand, talked across the long room. 'Bud...?' 'It doesn't like me,' said Bud. 'What, the Cat?'

The other men studied his cards of knowing what was to come next. 'Come off it- the girl said this don't do anything. It doesn't tell you anything other than what you want to believe is true. It just `performs- a piece of mind.' It's like a lesson in ballistics. It has a trajectory we settle for it. It follows through. It targets itself, places itself, and cuts off. It's only copper wire, storage batteries, and electricity.' Bud swallowed. 'It's really just like computers can be set to any sequence, so many amino acids, so many Sulphur, so much butterfat, and alkaline.'

'Right?' 'We all comprehend that.' 'All of those chemical insights and discounts on all of us here in the residence are read in the control file downstairs. Of this new partnership.

It would be secure for someone to fasten up a partial sequence on the cat's 'consciousness,' a touch of amino acids, perhaps. That would estimate for what the creature did just now.

Reciprocated himself toward me.' 'Holy Hell,' 'Annoyed, though not totally angry. Just enough 'mindfulness' set up in it by someone, therefore, it crumbled- when I touched it.' 'I would not do a thing like that?'

The next day he runs into the same young girl. All the same questions- all the same things said, 'you haven't any enemies here, yet.' 'None that I know of.'

'We'll have the cat checked by our specialists tomorrow.

'This isn't the first time it's warned me,' said Bud.

'Last month it happened twice.' 'We'll fix it up. Don't worry' But Bud did not move and only stood believing of the air-conditioner grille in the hall at home and what lay hidden behind the grille.

If someone here in the home identified about the vent then mightn't they 'perceive' the cat...? The girlfriend came over to the glass ramp and gave Bud a questioning glimpse. 'I was just guessing,' said Bud, 'what does the kitty think about down there nights? Is it coming alive on us? It makes me shiver.'

'It doesn't believe anything we don't want it to imagine.' 'That's sad,' said Bud, quietly, 'because only we put into it is seeking and obtaining and destroying. What a disgrace if that's all it can ever comprehend.' Kasandra, she breathed, lightly. 'Hell! It's a little bit of craftsmanship, a reliable rifle that container fetches its purpose and ensures the bull's-eye every time.'

'That's why,' said Bud. 'I wouldn't need to be its next prey. 'Why? You got a guilty moral about something?' Bud glimpsed up quickly. Kasandra stood there gazing at him steadily with his eyes, while his jaw cracked and began to laugh, rather softly.

One two three four five six seven days- all the same. Plus, as many times he came out of the dwelling and his woman was there somewhere in the memory only nagging or wanting him for something.

Once he saw her squatting peeing next to a hickory tree like a dog and not caring what others thought, once he saw her sitting on the lawn naked knitting a sweater, three or four times he found a perfume of late flowers on his porch, or a handful of chestnuts in a little sack- all from the girl, or some fall leaves easily bound to a sheet of white paper and thumb-tacked to his door- safe to say she was a little mad. 'Maybe she is crazy he questioned.'

Every day the girl walked him to the corner- asking for his love. They marched still further and the girl said, 'Is it accurate that long-ago firemen put fires out instead of going to start them?' 'Negative- Dwellings have always been fire-resistant, take my account of this.' 'Strange is it not?' 'I discovered already that a large time past residence used to burn by misfortune and they needed ladder man to stop the flames with trucks you had to drive.' He chuckled, yet this is so-o. She peeped over.

'Why are you giggling?' 'I love how dumb they have made you all!' 'I don't understand.' 'Living in the past.' He said.

He began to giggle repeatedly and held- 'Why?' 'You grin if I haven't done entertaining things and you respond right off. You never quit thinking about what I've asked you.'

He finished walking, 'You are a unique one,' he said, gazing at her. 'Haven't you any honor?' 'I don't anticipate to be insulting. It's just, I love to watch characters too much, I suppose.'

'Well, doesn't this suggest anything to you?' He rapped the digits sewed on his chair stained sleeve. 'Aye,' she murmured. She doubled her step. 'Become you eternally observed the jet automobiles racing on the avenues above and below.'

'You're developing the topic!' 'I seldom think drivers don't know what lawn are, or flowers because they nevermore see them casually,' she said.

'That's a rose-garden! White blurs are houses. Brown blurs are heifers. If you conferred a driver a flourishing blur, oh yes! he'd say, that's lawn! A pink blur? My uncle drove slowly on a highway once. Isn't that funny, and sad, too?' 'You think too many things,' uneasily you are just like Elody. She knocked some oranges that had fallen off the tree in the front courtyard. 'Or talking about how strange the world is- to how it was and we have no understanding as if it never was anything other than we know now.'

Being with people is nice. Although- I don't think it's social to get a bunch of people collectively and then not let them communicate, do you? Then an hour of basketball or baseball or running an hour of TV schooling class in front of the smart wall.

Then yet the extra hour of transcription history or painting pictures with more depth than I have ever seen in real life, and more sports, simply do you know, we never ask inquiries, or at least most don't; they just run the results at you, bing, bing, bing, and us sitting there for four more hours of web professor.

(Living life on repeat- just in a new body. Back to destiny.)

3001- When I wake up it was cold like the haunting type of day with low light and the feeling of fog. The other side of the bed in her rent room that was 3-foot-high and 7-foot-long is cold like me inside and this world that I live in. Her fingers spring out, and then tighten, seeking Elody's tempers, and, finding only the rough canvas cover of the mattress, I am there by her side she is afraid, that she is going to be the one, the one that is chosen to combat.

'It was a yearning to burn.' The computers and robots have taken over the world, nobody needs to read any of that shit, or think. Everything is at our fingertips with cell phones, iPads, and PCs, without looking through old dusty pages, plus it's against the law to think for yourself, and read any books. We burn books like most have the burning itch to have unprotected sex.'

Like me she was thinking about how she might be the one girl in our town, that has to give her freedom up to fight in this war, like all of us girls in our bunker, a girls school if you will, we all are having this like bad dream all the same dream how does that work? No mom's or dad's no boys, so not cool for a girl that is a pre-teen yet want to feel what love is- we were all ripped away for how we are the girls with the stars on our arms, and known by a number.

Unquestionably, she did- thinking she would be the one called out to do this task, yet so did I- like so did all of us. This is the day of the acquiring of being a woman of my type, a girl that is not what is called the right race.

Were we having to go down in our numbers of what is not permitted to the troopers want and that man that has power over us all?

She pulls the covers back over and I am now in the same bed with her not allowed yet she is my little sister... what are they going to do, drag me out of the room and put a gun in my hand and kill me like they did my other older sister, last night? Just kill me, and get it over with... to I said, I live in a room with 100 girls, where you can even shit without a man or them looking at you are doing just that. Sleeping with one open, to say the least... I have to which what I say now, or... (You're not prompted to say what go on within the walls.)

The voice in the air said. I fear they could kill me for that also! I want to see her maybe for the last time before we're off... before the round is chosen. I am here to see the look in her eyes of bloody fear, as she is me... we all feel this way... for the next day. She hugs me knowing that is safe.

I prop myself up on one elbow. There's enough light in the bedroom to see them. My little sister, Elody curled up on her the little side she is no more than four feet, brown hair green eyes, sheltered under the privacy of the covers, uptight body and nightgown were there that was all we had on all that is allowed at night, short and loose-fitting.

Her left side of her face forced to my chest some of it showing yet I did not care, you stop caring about that with a girl doing what she next to us, you're going to die anyway why not have your fantasy lover in your head.

Hugged tighter- and tighter together, before dawn where we are going to be ripped apart for what we may not know- being forever. She is now asleep, not me- she looks like me- Likewise, younger, the brown hair is what they really odium about she and I. Look at us worn Likewise, not so beaten- down, me more than her... for I am older, I think. My sister's face is as rosé as raindrops fall hard out the windows with the bars being all that keeps the cold out, as lovely as my sister- rose- for which she was named- on a day like this when she was born.

My mother was very beautiful once, too. Or so they tell me... (You can say that I hear the voice say out yet this time it was in my mind, they have found a way to do that too.)

She wakes up to go pee, and they would not let her so she goes off on the floor by the bed, she could be killed for that... I say she going to go... you can stop her. Now she is sitting on her knees, yet I am guarding her like I am the world to her and the other way around. Pulverized-in muzzle up faces her lips like touching mine her nose on mine, wimping in her ear I was saying- words that would help or so I thought- missing was her mom- someone that was killed in front of her eyes seven days years ago, eyes color faded like when you lose life and pass on she had that feeling I am sure of that fact.

She was talking about being a kid, and what that was like before all this bull shit happened. Elody named her Punches, maintaining that she black, brown, and white like a coat that I have that is full of holes, she was bright and blooming like a bright flower in spring at home, in France.

That cat dislikes me, yet I don't mind her, or at least distrusts me, that something I have felt a lot in my life, not being liked. Unlike my sister, even though it was years ago, I think he still remembers how I tried to drown her in a pot for something to eat we were that poor thinks to the troopers, that took all that we are and were away from us.

And even then, my sister still loved me- she knew I was doing what I had too. I recall when she brought him home, as a pet and not something that was food on the table - hell we didn't even have that... Just a kitten, belly puffy with maggots, crawling with fleas.

The last thing I needed was another mouth to feed. Likewise, Elody begged so hard, cried even, I had to let him stay. It turned out okay, even the maggot off of cats... and so well she - I have even eaten the occasional rat run up my leg in my bed - raw.

Sometimes, when I clean a kill, I feed Likewise, Teacup the entrails. He has stopped hissing at me. The hair on my legs keep us girl worm- looks good now to be all hair? No hissing... I well bit you back and not even think about it... I loved cats, Likewise, food is food. I feel one day, I'll come upon a loved one of mine motionless against a wall or lying in the Grazing land, you hear the wails from a house, and the X armed forces are called in to repossess the body. Malnourishment is never the cause of death officially. It's always the flu, or exposure, or pneumonia.

Likewise, then again that fools no one...

Starvation Isn't all that rare of fate in these parts of 14. Who hasn't seen the dupes? Older people who can't work. Children from a family with too many to feed. Those injured in the mines are left on the mud outside the shaft to pass on. Struggling through the streets, are ended with warfare.

This is the gigantic chamber we will ever come to love, for the love of die is less painful than living in the camp. I swing my legs off the bed reaching for my issued boots. Lithe leather that has molded to my feet. I pull on trousers, a dress, tuck my hair up and out, my long 2 drown braid down my chest, and grab my silage bag. I was asked to do what I have to so we last until were called out - I think back on days that pass - On the table before it was blown up - under a wooden bowl to protect it from hungry rats and cats alike, sits a perfect little rabbit shit balls wrapped in rosemary leaves.

Elody gift to me on earning a day. I put the cheese carefully in my pocket as I slip outside, that was on the rat tarp hoping not to snap it down on my middle finger, and I need that as a girl - you know.

My father had been killed in the mine accident three months earlier in the bitterest February anyone could remember this if they wanted- Likewise, they don't care. The numbness of his loss had passed, and the pain would hit me out of nowhere, photocopying me over, racking my body with sobs. Where are you? I would cry out in my mind all the time - it was harder for her being so young. My mom was lost in space for days after... not saying anything to anyone... or us so Elody and I were taking care of ourselves. When all she did was lay in bed with vibrations pulsating going on, her thoughts they said were with him.

The community had given us a small amount of money as compensation for his death, enough to cover one month of grieving at which time my mother would be expected to get a job. Only she didn't.

She didn't do anything Likewise, sitting propped up in a chair or, more often, huddled under the blankets on her bed, eyes fixed on some point in the distance. Once in awhile, she'd stir, get up as if moved by some urgent purpose, only to then collapse back into stillness. No amount of pleading from My sister seemed to affect her.

Our part of region 14, nicknamed the purlieu, is usually crawling with coal miners heading out to the morning shift at this hour. Men and women with bent over shoulders, swollen knuckles and skinned backs and knees, many who have long since stopped trying to scrub the coal dust out of their broken nails, the lines of their sunken faces.

Nonetheless today the gloomy streets are empty and barren. Shutters are a brown window, row homes on the squat and now graying color houses closed shop underneath. The earning of who is chosen isn't until five P.M. May as well sleep in the only day now being here where we were allowed to do as we wanted, a reward they called it for knowing that we are brave enough today for our area.

Mom is only nineteen... just so you know, we all have kids young... for some man take us as there's. It's just how it works here. I have already been had. Yet my dad killed him for this... there is no law saying you can or cannot.

Our house is almost at the edge of the Ridge. I only have to pass a few towns to reach the unkempt field called the Grazing Lands. Separating the Grazing land from the woods that are all burnt for the warfare, in fact circling all of quarter 14, is a high wood cladding fence topped with barbed-wire loops. In theory, it's supposed to be electrified twenty-four hours with which man on towers, train dropping off more girls, girls-only here and man that wants us to be dead, a day as a deterrent to the predators that live in the woods- packs of wild dogs want to lick and bit at are hills- streets are like infertile.

Even so, I always take a moment to listen carefully for the hum that means the fence is live, I sometimes try to see the boy's side, over there if I can, some of us girl try to run the face, there are ways. Right now, it's silent as a stone and some of us went for it, all we could do is be killed- so what- I don't want to die a virgin. Hidden by a clump of bushes, we dash, I flatten out on my belly and slide under a two-foot stretch that's been loose by the time before.

There are several other weak spots in the fence that have been penetrated, Likewise, this one is so close, out of the bathroom showers were the girls made a way out, I almost always enter the woods here, not caring if I have anything on or not.

We girls clam trees, to see if we can see into the boys' rooms, and then they give us a wavy saying it all clear and we make the run for it, sometimes- I feel like why do they risk their lives for us- just once, maybe a girl just needs it in more.

I re-claim a bow, which I have made to fight them off me, I had it headend, so if I take on fire, I have something to send back, behind hollow log we wait it out. The Electrified fence in the way or not we were getting there and getting a boy tonight- it was the last time we might, the fence has been up- and-coming at keeping the carnivores out of quarters of 14.

Inside the timbers, they roam freely, and there are added concerns like venomous snakes, rabid animals, and no real paths to follow of deer and bear. The boys also give us the thing we need other than love in the night- food is a big thing for where we are as thin as could be.

Good, my sister had to suck on my own nipple just for something to eat... that how bad things are here... were not allowed to have a baby, mine killed the day I came here when I was kicked in the gut, saying we don't need any more of your kind. It was for nine months.

Look at that place over there- like Eblock no running water just a trickle, out of a hand pump no lights- nothing Likewise, your thoughts of the girls on the other side, and betting it is their life, and working as slaves for the troopers. Then again there's also food if you know how to find it.

My father knew this was all going to happen, I recall them rushing in, we were in the addict with a trap door, I flashback about how he taught me some before he was blown to bits by a pistol go at his had in a bang. There was nothing even to bury. I was eleven then and still am. Five years later, I still wake up screaming for him to run.

So- my sister is ten, I worry if a ten-year-old could fight till death in this war as a young girl, and then I look at me and know; I am not as strong. I keep having been feeling that she or I would be called out- and I really don't know why- like, it's my destiny- to be the- chosen one.

Even though trespassing in the woods is illegal and I could be slaughtered and eat for it I don't care, and poaching carries the severest of consequences, more people would jeopardies it if they had weapons.

Nonetheless, most are not bold enough to venture out with just a homemade knife, I made mine for a food tray the tray they give you only once a day with roadkill on it. The water they give is the color of piss... some say they would eat their shit- I would not go that far, Likewise, crazy will get to you.

My bow is an infrequency as I go under the wall, tagged along with a few other body parts- few others keep well hidden in the woods as I am the first to make the running leaps over all the traps and snags, carefully wrapped in waterproof covers. Only 10 of us girl made this run, there were so that just stayed in the big room and playing with themselves- why? You're going to die anyway.

Why? Why- not make this last run for food and sex and maybe a way out of this all. If a boy can buy you out in a mirage. My father could have made good money selling us to a man or husband, yet it is common for us girls to be a tramp at our age if mommy and daddy have the bucks to do it. No gold band just someone that takes you for a possession... something to beat on and beat off on, they're playing thing... I feel.

On the other hand, if the troopers found out I was doing this like all these girls, like Alijah, Jania, Samee, Martah, Trace, and Majia- and so on... the other four I hardly know other- then seeing the nude in their bad and in the shower rooms, or eating their rations next to me... I would have been publicly executed for rabbleroxing at this point I feel too; I am the girl her with gut or so the others say.

My sister is the shy one of us all not even gone through the woman change is not bleeding if you don't get that, I just started like a week ago- that would not even kill a cockroach to eat it, I had to do that for her too, yet she is young sweet and innocent.

Most of the armed forces turn a blind eye to the few of us who are hunting to give to them or to the whole group, for this is what they want, us to fight for it so they don't have to kill, so they can kill us for doing what they want.

Confusing? Nope- not to them... For the reason that they're as hungry for fresh meat as anybody else is where what they want and what we want is not another human life to be killed yet they do. In fact, they're among our best trades- us- killing for the hell of it like a sick twisted sport- see the mass graves and the body braining like all the books. Then the idea that someone might be arming the ridge would never have been allowed.

All that was wisdom was dejected and seen as not to be useful in our lives it has been a band. There are a lot of things that are forbidden to me, yet that does not stop me from doing it anyways - unlike my reluctant sister that fears everything and everybody.

In the fall, a few brave souls sneak into the woods to harvest apples us girl climbing trees. Nevertheless- always in sight of the Grazing land with the eyes of at least one trooper looking up the dress, you get what I am saying there never not there. Always close enough to run back to the safety of neighborhood 14 if distressed arises. 'Areas of fourteen.' Where you can starve to death in safety, 'I mumble out yet I was the only one to hear or so I thought when the girl next to me was rolling her eyes. Then I glance quickly over my shoulder and she was like up my Likewise, even here, even in the middle of nowhere, you worry someone might overhear you, she said not wanting me to say a word. The number on her jacket (G- S- 08976457544) was shining now in the spotlight of the guards' tower, we're going to get busted she said, as we were crawling to the boys' room. G for girl S for the star and the number ID.

Where are the star girls... that what they all call us here?

I think they all no were out I hear the click of the guns, it's just target practice for them just a hunt, they want us to do this!

When I was younger, I scared my mother to death that I would look out for my sister, the things I would blurt out about Area 14, about the people who rule our country, Paris was overrun and now there are 15 parts, from the remote city called the Capital up to us the little unsolicited parts.

Eventually, I understood this would only lead us to more trouble, doing this so we go in and out fast with more than just a kiss- I had my I on Blazie, I was going to have this one thing- before I was axed off with my head. So-o I learned to hold my tongue and to turn my features into an indifferent mask so that no one could ever read my thoughts. On the other hand, unlike my sister, I do say way too much.

(Back)

Do my work quietly in school, was my life before this place, and being ripped out of reality. Make only polite small talk in the public market that was my sister-, not me. You can see us all there in this one-room schoolhouse. She is the good girl, not me- I deliberate little more than trades in the hot plate at my desk, the bell rings out free to go- to the market where I make most of my money giving up my food for the day.

Even at home there is nothing, I have on long white T-shirt ripped up showing my all of my one side that was dads, that I wear as my dress, where I am less pleasant, I avoid discussing tricky topics. Like the reaping, or food shortages, or the war kill. Elody might begin to repeat my words, she looks up to me for everything, where would she be without me behind her? They know this they all do...

I wear this all the time even in the rain, where you can see it all yet no one care about, that when all they want to do is live on another day sex is not some we care about when kids are run around naked- like a tribe around a fire wild looking like revenues animals with look in their eyes for the test of blood.

The boy the sight of him waiting there brings on a smile to my face until he is shot right in front of me and all of us girl run back to are badly scared, and in far that we were seen, some girl still doing their thing... they ask question seeming at white looks on our faces, One looked at me I said I never smile except in the when I see him now I will never- I was in love with that boy. It not like I wanted to be held or anything Likewise, she could attest took her hand off it to feel my pain.

No, her boy was in her hand only- that what I'll have to do now- hers was killed off the night before. Killing is the sport they love and I hate it!

My real name is Emalie, Likewise, that not what I am remembered as just a number is all; I had barely whispered it and they say you're only allowed to give out your number to outsiders. So-o I thought what the hell they going to kill me for this little thing I think not- so.

(Back)

Of on the hunt- 'Look what I shot, I said to my sister too young to have a gun-' she holds up a loaf of bread with the burl stuck in it, and I laugh hard. It's real bakery bread how did she get that? Not the flat, dense loaves we make from our grain provisions.

She never said how she got it yet I had my thought about it, as a boy gave it to her, which made it to her bedside... at home. I take it in my hands and we share it, pull it to bits, and hold the wound in the crust to my nose, inhaling the fragrance that makes my mouth flood with drool. Fine bread like this is for special junctures. The boys seem to have more for they are boy's worth something, unlike girls that have no value other than that of passing on this race they don't want.

'Mum, still warm,' I say. She must have been at the bakery at the crack of dawn with some run-away boy to trade for it, she gives him a kiss and a huge and her body she'll it whatever she wants. For that is all girls are good for in these municipalities- 'What did it cost you?' I asked- Just the kiss good night. I giggle think sure- I know- yet it was food, right?

'Well, we all feel a little closer today, don't we as we all look at the family for what may be the last time?' I say fastly, not even bothering to roll my eyes. 'Elody left us a slice of cheese on the traps saying this as a joke.' I pull it out. 'We also shared a cuddly squirrel- I got the ass. Think the old man was feeling sentimental this morning,' says that he would stay with us and not work for the day - there are just sealing shafts off- no money in that for them to take so why did it he felt.

'Even wished me luck.' I look at the blue star glowing etched into my skin on my arm. Like the Blue Bird nickels, that I will certainly not- interminably give up.

Her expression brightens at the treat as I hug her for what I thought maybe the last time. 'Thank you, I said to her for being in my life. We'll have a real feast to more before we are either executed in a line or have to fight for life as the chosen girls to keep our race going- they did as some not all.'

There we all are all ganged up in rows, like little toy soldiers we fall in these lines it was what was said for us to do in our thinking, as we all march into a Capitol agent our well or life, accent as she mimics

Effie Trinket, the maniacally upbeat woman who arrives once a year to read out the names at the jumping.

'I almost disremembered! Blissful Starvation Stars!'

Her determination a few blueberries from the bushes around us.

'Besides- May you're yearning for the balances of life always be in your erranding.' The confetti goes off... as we await our fate, yet she the right bitch we'll live on for the rest of her days, yet we with the state may not... just for being not... what they want us to be... who are they? The backs were all murder in front of us, so we could see what maybe be in this battle coming up. They're not good enough to scrub the fools are troopers say giggling amongst themselves. There we'll one is one black girl and one black boy fight in this upcoming event. They want less... us too...

The sweet from fingers going down my hand's sourness detonates across my tongue. 'I no-win situation it in my mouth, as well as break the delicate skin with my teeth biting my nails. May you're yearning for the balances of life always be in your erranding!'

I arrived in my mind like us all that are made to think is what has to be - with equal verve... we have to put on it for the reason that the unconventional is to be scared out of your intelligence. As well, the Capitol pronunciation is so la-di-da, almost anything sounds funny in it, and I look for her and see her knees are even knocking as she looks frightened. Like a lost little girl on her way to school in the dark mooring woods.

I watch as the woman we call Miss.

Lorde Dio pulls names, with her hand.

Straight black hair, olive skin, gray eyes she is the head of the girls or so were tooled.

Likewise, we're not related any- of the star girls are the mix of them that is why we're being killed, burnt, and gassed, at least not closely. It was that moment of the families never to be also one again, we're living in are yearning would change for their wants, for those that worked would go on without their kids, like my dad who works the mines resemble one another this way. Were one if not both of his offspring would die in this event.

That's why my mother and Elody, with their light hair, braided and have bright haunting spooky-looking blue eyes, always look out of place in all the others, not something common. They are... amazing to me... My mother's parents were part of the small Kidd's class that outfits to troopers. X armed forces, and the occasional Ridge purchaser. They ran an apothecary shop in the nicer part of Area 14. Since almost no one can afford doctors or an RN, apothecaries are our healers or crunch heelers. My father got to know my mother, for they were in the same groping she was not all X you see, she was upper in her class for part 2.

She was banished from her mom and dad doing this and having kids not married. She is like one present of us- comparable to what is in his bloodline. She must have really loved him to leave her home for the Ridge. For the reason that on her hunts she would occasionally collect medicinal herbs, Elody is good with her hands, even the boys say that when we were all together living free, to a point, and sell those to her shop to be brewed into medications.

All she ever wanted was a lover and she has even tool me what was in her romantic dreams, like walking through them, with her, their race. Loads of kissing, fleshly playing, and lusting! I never had anything like that... thus far I want too. I try to evoke that when all I can see is the lady who sat by, blank and out-of-the-way, while her children turned to the skin, bones, and rot. I try to excuse her for my father's wishes. Nevertheless, to be truthful, I personally not the merciful type, on like my sister.

My sister's day in the days before this- bathing in a tub of warm water waits for me. and I scrub off her off all the dirt, water hard to find so I would have to be in there with her, and to get all the sweat from the woods of all with all the grim, and even wash my hair and her which only happens once a week. Let's put your hair up, too,' she says. I let her towel-dry it and two braids it up around head back into a ponytail. I can hardly recognize myself in the cracked mirror that leans against the wall. To my surprise, my mother has laid out one of her own lovely sundresses for me and one for her with soft pink matching shoes- new there were days where we did not have anything on is feet.

Plus, that was the same day they kick down the doors and said- we belong to them. You look beautiful, she was not a little girl with this look. And nothing like myself,' I say. I hug her because I know these next few hours will be terrible for her.

Her first reaping. She's about as safe as you can get since she's only entered once. I wouldn't let her take out any tesserae. Likewise, she's worried about me. That the unthinkable might happen. I protect Elody in every way I can she knows that, Likewise, then I'm immobilized against the earning. The tormented I always feel when she's in pain or fearful, she balls up lags to her chest and threatens to register the bad thoughts.

Nocked like in the rocks up and over.

Starting this place, we are invisible Likewise, have a clear view of the valley over to the tower, which was is teeming with summer life even if we were regulated, the girl in summer was socking sunlight dance in the streets with fire-higdon's blasting water.

The day's war glorious before all hell was unleashed on my mind, with a blue sky like my sister's eyes and soft breeze like her hair tickling my face.

There's never been anything romantic between her and a boy until this last week unlike me. And although he was only two years older, so I feel like it was harmless for what I would and she would get out of it, he already looked like a man strong in all the places. It took a long time for us to even become friends, not for her she was swooning fast, to stop haggling over every trade and begin helping each other out.

When they came up with a more efficient system that transported the coal directly from the mines to the trains, we get on to go to this place up at the capital.

Were up to the now- where it's- tonight. After the earning, where everyone is supposed to celebrate and love to hate and love to die with fate. As well as a lot of people do, out of relief that their children have been spared for another year. Likewise, at least two families will pull their shutters, lock their doors, and try to figure out how they will survive the painful weeks to come.

At six o'clock, we head for the quadrangular. Presence is mandatory except you are on death's back door. This evening, officials will come around and check to see if this is the case. If not, you'll be imprisoned. People file in silently and sign in and go to their seats. The evening is an awesome occasion for the Capitol to keep tabs on the population as well. Seven - through pre-teen year-olds are herded into roped areas marked off by ages, the oldest in the back, the young ones, like Elody, toward the front.

Dad and mothers- and teens or family members line up around the boundary where they have to say or be shot on the spot and some are and there are cheers, holding tightly to one another's hands.

Likewise, there are others, too, who have no one they love at stake, or who no longer care, who slip among the crowd, taking bets on the two kids whose names will be drawn. Balances are given on their ages we have too many we need to way out the overloads, were tipping the scales - if you will, the movie plays out about the story of how this all came to be...

These same people tend to be informers, and who hasn't broken the commandment laws? I could be shot on a daily basis for hunting, Likewise, the appetites of those in charge protect me. Not everyone can claim the same. Whether they're Ridge or merchant, if they will break down and weep. Most refuse to deal with the racketeers Likewise, carefully, prudently. The pre-teen that is here is the one that has already done this and live to tell about it, yet that doesn't stop them from killing you if you fight them also.

The four commandments of stars pre-teens:

A star person may not injure a human being or, through inaction, allow a human being to come to harm unless it is given the order.

A star person must obey orders given it by human trooper's beings excluding orders that would conflict with the First Law.

A Star person must protect its own existence as long as such protection does not conflict with the First or Second Law.

No sex of any nature or style identified in the populations with same-sex without given rights to pass on your race.

Yet in this tournament, all laws are off!

That's what makes this so much fun- no- Miss Lorde Dio said, sipping on her mixed drink.

As we walk, I notice Elody blouse has pulled out of her skirt in the back again and force myself to stay calm. 'Tuck your tail in, little girl to you look cute and all grown up,' I say, smoothing the blouse back in place. I glance overall face in there wholly school uniforms all unique to their parts in this parcel, yet the same with their likewise, tons on the one side how we all have to be equal, still smoldering underneath his stony expression. Sitting next to each other at assemblies, partnering for sports activities. We rarely chat, which suits- some just like us both just fine to me if you are or not- you have to give it to get it- no? The girl is calling out one she's in my year at school. Being the mayor's daughter of all things- no one is excluded if you have some star in you, you'd expect her to be a snob, Likewise, she's all right. She just keeps to herself. Like me. Yet she may have the cone to get her replaced with someone like me.

Elody, this calling of all nights- her drab school outfit has been replaced by an expensive white dress, were the girl all have to strip in front of us boy's girls everyone sees this, seeing these girls all become what they're going to be when they change. Then her dark hair is done up with a pink ribbon by an older girl that has sieved the last war stars. Reaping clothes of per white show innocents- you have to tournament your colors and your place in this world. The boy forms the head down shaved... and made flawless... they say it the only time is a race would look worthy.

I read into my sister's thoughts- she was thinking about her boy- Does she mean it? I question- know they were hearing this too when a thought like this was not permitted. Or is she messing with him, for the love and lust? I'm guessing the second. At the Capitol arena looking like the warrior playground in Roman times just art-deco- white glassy and modern, yet it is the 2040's.

His eyes land small on her I see the puppy love, circular pin at her before she took foot in her dress. Real silver Likewise, tons and add-ons... Attractively crafted. 'What can you have other than your thoughts at this point when all you are in front of all of them, sure you're going to think? Five entries? The interplanetary gets tighter, more enclosed as individuals reach. The square's quite large, Likewise, not enough to hold Area 14th populace of about ten thousand.

Stragglers are directed to the adjacent streets, where they can watch the event on screens as it is televised live by the state. I had six when I was just twelve years old.'

Her face becomes closed off and is looked drop like her eyes in shame when she was not a woman there was nothing to take off- the people giggled saying she still a baby. The bets are on her is she is picked- that she would die fast, boys put the money on her to not last, just like they did with me and a girl named Illiah 'Good fortune, I hear from the girl next to me - she said my this be in your erranding's.' 'You, too,' I say, and the door closed and the light change form intense when on our nude bodies change to now blue. Showing is the color of whom we are... and the color we're going to die for.

The rules of the Starvation Stars are simple. In chastisement for the revolt, each of the 15 districts must provide one girl and one boy, called Likewise, to participate. The twenty-four try- Likewise, will be imprisoned in a vast outdoor arena that could hold anything from a burning desert to a frozen wasteland. Over a period of several weeks, the competitors must fight to the death. The last try Likewise, standing wins.

The result was France, a shining Capitol ringed by thirteen districts, which brought peace and prosperity to its citizens. Then became the dim days, the revolting of the neighborhoods in contradiction of the Capitol and their headmaster.

15 were defeated for this out of all of us, yet this a yearly thing the other is just knocked off my well of the powers at be, the thirteenth obliterated. The Treaty of Treason gave us the new laws to guarantee peace and, as our yearly reminder that the Dark Days must never be repeated; it gave us the Starvation Stars. I ask why not just kill us all and be done with it, they say what is the fun in that not seeing the pain and famine for life. Taking the kids from our districts, forcing them to kill one another while having no say at all.

This is the Capitol's way of reminding us how totally we are at their sympathy and lack of it. How little unplanned we would stand of enduring another revolt. To make it embarrassing- as well as torturous, the Capitol requires us to treat the Starvation Stars as an entertainment, a sporting event pitting every community against the others. The last honor guy alive receives a life of ease back home, and their community will be showered with awards and the right to pass on his spermatozoa and pop as many kids as he wanted with whatever preteen girl he wanted, largely consisting of food. All year, the Capitol will show the winning community gifts of grain and oil and even delicacies like sugar while the rest of us battle starvation.

The mayor steps up to the platform and begins delivering... It's the same story every year. He tells of the history of us and is parts of France, the country that rose up out of the ashes of and blood were every inch is covered. She lists the disasters, the droughts, the storms, the fires, the violating seas that swallowed up so much of the land, the brutal war for what little sustenance lingered. 'Look how they take our children away and demean them like this naked, and afraid, they kill off babies like changing underwear, if there are twins one is killed off, and sacrifice them and there's nothing you can do. If you lift a finger, we will destroy every last one of you. Just as we did in Community Thirteen.'

Then she reads the list of past Neighborhood 14 victors. In 200 years, we have had exactly three. Only one is still alive and he stands before us for two years back. A paunchy, young man -aged man, never a girl, that is the win for the girls this year to kick ass. A girl doing this they say is impossible. Maybe so...? What would you say as a girl? Are we that weak and worthless? The crowd responds with its token applause, Likewise, he's confused and tries to give Effie Trinket a big hug, which she barely manages to fend off. Them- whatsoever words they use, the real message is clear we want to see you fight till death for us to see if you want to live on and pass your blood down, yet you'll have to lose some. 'Look how we take your children and sacrifice them and there's nothing you can do. If you lift a finger, we will destroy every last one of you. Just as we did in Neighborhood Thirteen.'
